The object of section 2 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1866, is plain enough; it is simply to relieve a husband or a wife against whom a petition was presented from the necessity of presenting a petition for cross-relief. Under the old practice if a husband was assailed by his wife he could put in a defence, but could not without a cross-petition obtain any relief against her. It was felt that it would simplify matters if the defence were treated as a cross-petition, and the object of the section was to provide for that. The section says: "If the respondent shall oppose"—that must, I suppose, mean by putting in a defence in the ordinary way—the court may "on his or her application," give the same relief to which he or she would have been entitled in case he or she had filed a petition seeking such relief. When is the application to be made? The expression "on his or her application" is ambiguous. If the constructi n put upon it is that which has always been put upon it by the Divorce Court, if it is read literally, everyone knows that all the husband has to do is to apply for the relief he seeks, and in that case the section has full effect given to it. If, on the other hand, the husband chooses not to take advantage of the section, no injustice is done at all. That is to say, if, when he puts in his defence, he asks the court to treat it as a cross-petition, it will be so treated; but if he does not ask that, and says nothing at all about it, it is treated as an ordinary defence, and he cannot ask for it to be treated otherwise. I do not mean to say that the court could not give leave to amend, but I cannot conceive that it would listen to an application for leave to amend after the trial. That could not have been intended. It would be opposed to all the principles of justice. Before trial the court could give leave to amend up to the last moment.

The practice has always been to treat the defence simply as a defence unless and until it is amended, or unless it is so worded as to show that the husband wished it to be treated as something more. If we were to accede to the argument of counsel for the applicant, we should compel the husband to embark on a much wider inquiry. He need not ask for any relief at all. Why should the court force his hands and say he must? To do that does not strike me as good sense at all. It comes to this, therefore: If a husband puts in a defence, and does not ask by that defence for any relief further than the dismissal of the petition, he is at liberty to do so, and no one can force him to do more. But if, on the other hand, as in the case of Wheeler v. Wheeler and Rhodes, he draws his defence in such a way that it can be fairly construed as asking for some relief further than the dismissal of the petition, the intervention of a third party can be allowed.

When we look into the authorities, and notwithstanding the ambiguous expressions in "Shelford on Marriage" which have been alluded to, I prefer to follow the recent decisions, including Harrop v. Harrop, before Barnes, J. I think that Jeune, P., was right, and that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

RIGBY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion.

COLLINS, L.J.—I am of the same opinion, and I have nothing to add to the reasons already given.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the applicant, Walters, Deverell, & Co.

Solicitors for the respondent, Janson, Cobb, Pearson, & Co.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. Stirling, J. } Feb 15, 16, 22; April 19.

BOOSEY v. WHIGHT & CO. (a.)

Copyright—Infringement—"Book"—"Sheet of Music"—Perforated sheets for use in a mechanical musical instrument—Copyright Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 45), ss. 2, 15.

Rolls of perforated sheets were used as parts of a machine sold by the defendants for the production of musical sounds. It was possible, with considerable trouble, to read the notes denoted by the perforations.

Certain words (indicative of pace and expression) which were found in the sheets of music published by the plaintiffs were also printed on some of the defendants' rolls.

Held, that the Copyright Act, 1842, did not prevent the defendants from making or selling the rolls so far as they contained perforations, but that there ought to be an injunction to restrain them from adding the words taken from the plaintiff's music sheets.

This was an action by the proprietors of the copyright in the music of three songs, known as "My Lady's Bower," "The Better Land," and "The Holy City," to restrain an alleged infringement. No question was raised as to the plaintiffs' title to the copyright, or to their right to sue for infringement. The sole question in the action was whether the copyright had or had not been infringed.

The facts as stated by Stirling, J., were as follows: "The acts complained of consist in the sale by the defendants of perforated sheets of paper for use in an instrument called the Æolian, which externally bears a considerable resemblance to a piano, but is a wind instrument worked mechanically, but furnished with stops, swells, and pedals, by means of which changes in time and expression are effected. It contains forty-six pipes and reeds, each of which sounds a particular note. The sheets in question are made in the form of rolls, and when placed in the instrument are unrolled by its action. They are so prepared that whenever a perforation passes under a particular pipe and reed the appropriate note is sounded. The perforations are made in straight lines parallel to the edges of the rolls, so that all perforations in the same line give the same note. The perforations are of different lengths, so that if the same time be kept, as would be the case if the machine is left to itself, the length of the perforation indicates the duration of the note. At the beginning of each roll is printed a statement as to the key in which the piece of music is written. The object of this is stated to be, and I see no reason to doubt it, to enable a person desirous of so doing to obtain the vocal music to which the instrumental music is an accompaniment. The rolls contain no indications of any change of key which may occur. There are, however, printed on some of them, though not on all, certain words which are found in the sheets of music published by the plaintiffs, such as andante, moderato, piano, crescendo, indicating the pace and expression at and with which the music ought to be played. These words are visible to the player, and, indeed, are obviously intended for his guidance. If one of these rolls be introduced into the instrument, the music will in ordinary course be produced at the same pace and with the same degree of loudness; these are altered by the use of the stops; and the skill of the player appears mainly to consist in availing himself of these aids so as to produce the best effect. The Æolian is made in two sizes. The rolls used in both are constructed on the same principle; the only difference appears to be that in one case they are about an inch broader than in the other. It was admitted by the defendants' counsel that it is quite possible to prepare a key by which the notes corresponding to the perforations can be copied down, and, in fact, such a key has been prepared and applied to one of the pieces of music in question. No witness was called who professed to be able to read these rolls in the same way as an ordinary sheet of music, and, indeed, all that is said by Mr. Boosey, one of the plaintiffs, was that 'any person acquainted with the perforation of the sheets sold by the defendants could write out the music in the ordinary notation therefrom.' The defendants' witnesses said that these rolls conveyed no idea of music to them; but they were accustomed to the ordinary notation, and all, or most of them, admitted on cross-examination that they would be able to say the same thing of music written in the tonic sol-fa notation or that used by the blind. I think it is possible that with considerable trouble a person might so far master the scheme according to which the perforations are made as to be able to read the notes thereby denoted, but no one is shown ever to have done so. The result of the evidence appears to me to be that the information conveyed by the rolls to the mind of the reader would, to a substantial degree, be the same as that afforded by a sheet of music in the ordinary notation, but would be in various ways less complete. It also appears to me that for this purpose the rolls constitute an extremely cumbrous system of writing music, hardly available without the use of some mechanism which at present does not exist. I think it is improbable that anyone would ever go to the trouble of acquiring the art of reading these rolls."

(a.) Reported by PAUL STRICKLAND, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The Copyright Act, 1842, s. 2, provides: "That in the construction of this Act the word 'book' shall be construed to mean and include every volume, part, or division of a volume, pamphlet, sheet of letterpress, sheet of music, map, chart, or plan separately published; . . . that the word 'copyright' shall be construed to mean the sole and exclusive liberty of printing or otherwise multiplying copies of any subject to which the said word is herein applied; . . ."

Butcher, Q.C., and Scrutton, for the plaintiffs.—This is a question of infringement of copyright. These rolls amount to a system of notation, and can be reproduced in ordinary notation. The right conferred by the Copyright Act, 1842, ss. 15, 17, is to prevent any form of multiplication of copies: Novello v. Sudlow, 12 C. B. 177; Warne v. Seebohm, 36 W. R. 686. 39 Ch. D. 73; Nicols v. Pitman, 32 W. R. 631, 26 Ch. D. 374. These cases show that the symbols used are of little importance. The real question is whether you are multiplying copies. The particular notation or form of symbols used is immaterial. There is more than one system of notation, and these sheets merely amount to a new system of notation: Hanfstaengl v. Empire Palace Co., 42 W. R. 681, [1894] 3 Ch. 109. The object of all copyright is to prevent anyone stealing the brains of the author: Hollinrake v. Truswell, [1894] 3 Ch. 420, 43 W. R. Dig. 350; Bach v. Longman, Cowp. 623; D'Almaine v. Boosey, 1 Younge & Coll. Ex. 288.

They also referred to Wall v. Taylor, 31 W. R. 712, 11 Q. B. D. 102.

E. Cutler, Q.C., Moulton, Q.C., T. Terrell, Q.C., and Eustace Smith, for the defendants.—These rolls or sheets are purely mechanical. They do not represent music, but cause it. They are not intended to be, and cannot be, read. The Act only grants copyright in a book which is there defined so as to include a piece of music. The author of a piece of music has also a right to restrain public performances, but the question of public performance is not raised here. No one could believe that the word "book" includes a barrel organ, but that case is practically identical with the present. Reproduction of musical sounds by mechanical methods was purposely omitted from the scope of the Act: Maple v. Junior Army and Navy Stores, 31 W. R. 70, 21 Ch. D. 369; Dicks v. Brooks, 29 W. R. 87, 15 Ch. D. 22; Davis v. Comitti, 54 L. J. Ch. 419, 33 W. R. Dig. 54. The last case cited governs the present case. These rolls are of no use without the machine. This is a question of interpretation of the section. At the time the Copyright Act of 1842 was passed mechanical methods of reproducing tunes were well known. These rolls are part of a machine, and are not included in the Act.

They also referred to Scott v. Stanford, 15 W. R. 757, L. R. 3 Eq. 718.

Butcher, Q.C., in reply.—The main question is what is a sheet of music. The sheet need not be of paper, it may be of metal. The sheet may be of any form; it includes a sheet of any material or shape. It is such as includes any record of notes that can be reproduced as music. Something is required to intervene between symbols and sounds—it need not necessarily be a human intelligence. The record itself is not of importance, but its capacity to be reproduced into sound. The precise notation of the record is not of importance, or the means by which it is done. The copyright is not in the symbols but in the air.

STIRLING, J., stated the facts as above, and continued: No question arises as to the right of performance of these pieces under section 20 of the Copyright Act of 1842. What is in dispute is whether the sale of these rolls constitutes an infringement of the copyright vested in the plaintiffs under the earlier part of the Act. This turns on the construction of section 2, by which the word book is to be construed to mean and include (amongst other things) every sheet of music separately published, and the word copyright is to be construed to mean "the sole and exclusive liberty of printing or otherwise multiplying copies of any subject" to which the word is applied in the Act, including, therefore, a sheet of music. The contention of the plaintiffs is that the rolls are copies of a substantial part of what is found in the sheets published by them, though expressed in a somewhat unusual and difficult form of notation, and consequently that the sole and exclusive liberty of multiplying copies is infringed, just as the publication in shorthand of an ordinary piece of letterpress would be an infringement of the copyright therein: see Nicols v. Pitman. For the defendants it is urged that the rolls really form parts of machines for the production of musical sounds, and that the Legislature in passing the Copyright Act shows no intention of interfering with such mechanism. In my opinion the latter view is in the main to be preferred. It was decided in Bach v. Longman that the copyright conferred by the statute 8 Anne, c. 19, on the authors of printed books extended to printed music. This decision has been embodied in section 2 of the Act of 1842, as quoted above. The copyright conferred by that Act appears to me to be the exclusive liberty of multiplying copies of something in the nature of a book. The rolls, so far as they contain perforations, are, in fact, used simply as parts of a machine for the production of musical sounds, not for the purpose of a book. They are used as a means of appealing to the mind directly through the ear; not, as in the case of a book, through the eye of an ordinary reader, or through the sense of touch in the case of a blind person. Some mechanical instruments for the production of musical effects, as, for example, the musical-box and the barrel-organ, seem to have been well known in the last century, long prior to the passing of the Act of 1842. It was admitted by Mr. Scrutton in his able argument for the plaintiffs that, if the construction sought to be placed by them on the Act be correct, the cylinder of a musical-box is a sheet of music within the statute. If this had been within the contemplation of the Legislature I cannot but think that the framers of the Act, who were careful to point out what the word "book" was to mean and include, would have been no less careful to explain that the term sheet of music was to mean and include something which would not fall within the ordinary acceptation of the words. There is no decision in this country precisely in point. In Hollinrake v. Truswell it was held that a cardboard pattern sleeve containing on it scales, figures, and verbal directions for adapting it to sleeves of any dimensions was an instrument or tool incapable of copyright under the Act of 1842, though possibly the subject-matter of a patent. In the statutes relating to copyright in paintings and engravings limitations of various kinds have been placed on the meaning of the word "copy": see Dicks v. Brooks; Hanfstaengl v. Empire Palace Co.; and Hanfstaengl v. Baines, [1895] A. C. 20, 43 W. R. Dig. 52. In my judgment the Act of 1842, fairly construed, does not prevent the defendants from making or selling these rolls so far as they contain perforations. I think, however, that in adding to them words, taken from the plaintiffs' music sheets, for the purpose of indicating to the player on the instrument the pace and expression at and with which the music ought to be played, the defendants have gone beyond their rights, and that there ought to be an injunction to restrain them from so doing. Under all the circumstances I propose to make no order as to costs.

Solicitors, Howlett & Wilkinson; Maples, Teesdale, & Co.

Q. B. Div.
(Darling and Channell, JJ.) May 16.

THE EQUITABLE LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY OF THE UNITED STATES v. BISHOP (SURVEYOR OF TAXES) (a.)

Inland Revenue—Income tax—Life Assurance company—Annual profits and gains—Mutual assurance—Returns of premium as "rebate or discount"—Income Tax Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 34), Sched. D.

A life assurance company by its charter limited the interest payable to the holders of its capital stock to 7 per cent., and the earnings and receipts of the company over and above this fixed dividend, and the losses and expenses on the year's trading were to be accumulated. The insurance business of the company was expressed to be conducted upon the mutual plan, and every five years each policy-holder was to be credited with a share of the accumulated surplus to be applied by him either in the purchase of an additional amount of insurance payable at his death, or at his option to the purchase of an annuity in reduction of his future premiums. The amount of the surplus funds to be so divided at these quinquennial distributions was to be entirely a matter for the discretion of the directors of the company.

Held, that the accumulated funds of the company were not the property of the policy-holders, and that the returns from surplus did not pass to them by the constitution of the company, but were payments made them arising out of the "profits" earned by the company, and the money so to be divided had rightly been assessed to income tax under Schedule D.

Last v. London Assurance Co., 34 W. R. 233, 10 App. Cas. 438, followed; New York Insurance Co. v. Style, 14 App. Cas. 381, 38 W. R. Dig. 89, approved and distinguished.

Case stated by the Commissioners for the General Purposes of the Income Tax Acts for the City of London, after meetings held on the 6th of August, 1896, and the 6th of May, 1897, when the Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States appealed against three assessments made upon them under Schedule D of the Act 16 & 17 Vict. c. 34, for the years ended the 5th of April, 1895, 1896, and 1897. The assessments were in respect of what were said to be "profits" for the three years in question at the rate of £80,000 a year, but it had been agreed that if the society were held liable there should be an inquiry into the exact figures.

The facts were thus stated: The company was established by charter under the insurance laws of the State of New York. The principal office for the transaction of business was located in the city of New York.

Article 3 of the charter provided that the capital of the company should be 100,000 dols. in cash divided into 1,000 shares of 100 dols. each, which should be personal property transferable only on the books of the company in conformity with its bye-laws. The holders of the capital stock might receive a semi-annual dividend on the stock so held by them not to exceed 3½ per cent. of the same, such dividends to be paid at the time and in the manner designated by the directors of the company. The earnings and receipts of the company over and above the dividends, losses, and expenses were to be accumulated.

By article 4 it was provided that the corporate powers of the company should be vested in a board of directors and should be exercised by them and by such officers and agents as they might appoint.

By article 5 the directors were empowered to elect annually a president and vice-president, and to appoint a secretary and other officers, and to determine the rates of premium and the amounts to be insured on any one life, and the terms of such insurances.

Article 6 was as follows: "The insurance business of the company shall be conducted upon the mutual plan. . . . The officers of the company within sixty days from the expiration of the first five years from the 31st of September, 1859, and of every subsequent period of five years, shall cause a balance to be struck of the affairs of the company, which shall exhibit its assets and liabilities, both present and contingent, and also the net surplus after deducting a sufficient amount to cover all outstanding risks and other obligations. Each policy-holder shall be credited with an equitable share of the said surplus, and such equitable share, after being ascertained, shall be applied to the purchase of an additional amount of insurance (payable at death or with the policy itself) expressing the reversionary value of such equitable share at such interest as the directors may designate, or, if any policy-holder so direct, such equitable share of surplus shall be applied to the purchase of an annuity to be applied in the reduction of his or her future premiums. In case of death the amount standing to the credit of the party insured at the last preceding striking of balance shall be paid over to the person entitled to receive the same, and the proportion of surplus equitably belonging to him or her at the next subsequent striking of balance shall also be paid when the same shall have been ascertained and declared."

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

It was also provided that the officers of the company every five years were to cause a general balance statement of the affairs of the company, which should show the amount received during the preceding five years for premiums, interest, and annuities, and the amounts paid for losses, expenses, and otherwise, and the balance remaining in the treasury, together with the manner in which the same is invested. A share capital of 100,000 dols. was required to be subscribed by every insurance company by the laws of the State of New York (being chapter 463 of the year 1853), and the capital was always invested in United States Government bonds and deposited with the Controller of the State of New York. A branch or department of the company for Great Britain and Ireland had been established, and carried on business at No. 6, Prince's-street, in the City of London, under the management of a London board of directors, with a chairman, secretary, general manager, and trustees. It was admitted that the board of directors alone by their officers manage the affairs of the company. They declared the amount that should be divided amongst the policy-holders, who had no power to interfere in the management, and the amount to be set aside for the reserve. The undivided surplus over and above the company's liabilities amounted to £7,787,458 for the year 1894, £8,442,502 for 1895, and £8,995,245 for 1896. Policies were also granted by the company to persons without right of participation in the profits of the company. It was not contended, on behalf of the company, that they were exempt from income tax in respect of this source of profit. The net premiums and interest after provision for liabilities, including death claims, &c., are applied to pay expenses, as determined by the directors in their discretion, and to provide a reserve as required by the regulations of the Insurance Department of the State of New York, then a dividend not exceeding 7 per cent. is paid to the shareholders on their capital, then the balance, as the directors may determine, is invested to provide for a division amongst the participating policy-holders of the company by way of bonus on or increase to the amount insured according to such principles as may from time to time be adopted by the society (through the directors) for such distribution.

The contentions on the part of the Inland Revenue were that the company and its assets were not the property of the policy-holders, and that they have neither control, power, liability, nor right except such as the shareholders by their directors choose to give them; that the policy-holders were not members of the company, but were third persons who contract with the company. That the accumulated funds of the company were not the property of the policy-holders, but were accumulated profits, and that the company could not properly claim to be a mutual insurance company; that the provision of article 6 of the charter that the insurance business of the company should be conducted upon the mutual plan could only relate to the division of such portion of the profits as the directors might determine; that the division of a portion of the profits over and above the fixed dividend payable to the shareholders did not alone make the company a mutual insurance company; and that the net surplus so far as the same was derived from premiums received in the United Kingdom was a profit or gain of the company liable to be assessed to income tax under Schedule D to the Act 16 & 17 Vict. c. 34.

The company cited the case of New York Life Insurance Co. v. Styles, 14 App. Cas. 381, 38 W. R. Dig. 89, and thereupon contended that premiums paid to the company were contributed as an estimated amount required to cover the risks for the year and the necessary expenses, and that any surplus or balance is not profit or gain liable to assessment, but is merely an excess of contribution over expenditure, which they contended would be ultimately returned to the contributors.

The Commissioners of Taxes were of opinion that the company was not a mutual insurance company within the meaning of the case above cited and was liable to be assessed to income tax on profits or gains made in the United Kingdom, and they confirmed the assessments.

From that decision the company appealed.

Sir Robert Reid, Q.C. and C. H. Neish (with them Foote, Q.C.).—We submit that premiums paid to the company are contributed as an estimated amount required to cover the risk for the year and the necessary expenses; they appear in the balance-sheet as "profits" because there is a statutory duty to return them in the credit account, but it does not follow that any surplus or balance which appears in the balance-sheet under this head is a profit and gain liable to assessment, for it may be merely an excess of contribution over expenditure which, as we contend is the case here, will ultimately be returned to the contributors. These return of premiums or bonuses, call them by what name you like, are in the nature of a discount or rebate—in fact, an inducement offered to get persons to deal with the company—and the company making no "profit" therefrom, these sums have been improperly included in the assessment. A close examination of the judgment given in the House of Lords in the cases of the New York Life Insurance Co. v. Styles and Last v. The London Assurance Corporation, 34 W. R. 233, 10 App. Cas. 438, shows this, and decides that where such surplus over expenditure has been contributed by the policy-holders and is disposed of by the constitution of the company itself, such assets are not profits. We agreed for the purpose of deciding and shortening the argument in this case, although we believe the point is open to argument, that if such assets are held by the court in fact to be disposed of by this society by the shareholders then that they are "profits" of the company in such a sense that they are liable to be assessed.

Cripps, Q.C., and Danckwerts, for the commissioners.—The true distinction to be drawn between the two cases cited—the judgments in which appear at first to be at conflict, as the facts in both are almost identical—is this: in Styles' case the articles of the company affected only the policy-holders, and the surplus was rightly held to be not profits in which the shareholders of the company participated or had any control over; whereas in Last's case, there being shareholders as well as policy-holders interested, it was held, and rightly, that the surplus was "profit," and the company in respect therefor was properly assessed to income tax. We say the facts in this case are shown to be the same as in Last's case, and the assessment ought therefore to stand. The decision given in the Mersey Dock and Harbour Board v. Lucas, 32 W. R. 34, 8 App. Cas. 891, supports our contention.

DARLING, J.—In this case I think there must be judgment for the surveyor of taxes. Here there was an independent distinct body, which was the company, independent of and distinct from the policy-holders. Whether that distinguishes this case from Styles' case I will not say as a fact, but to my mind it certainly does distinguish it from the reasoning of the majority of the learned lords who have given judgment in Styles' case, because over and over again there are such expressions as this of Lord Macnaghten, "I do not think that that decision"—i.e., the decision in Last's case—"compels your lordships to hold in a case like the present, where the business is a mutual undertaking pure and simple, that persons," and so on. Whatever may have been the facts in Styles' case—whether it was, as they assumed, a mutual undertaking pure and simple—I do not think it can be contended that the present case is that of a mutual undertaking, and it was conceded that if it were, and that the people had merely agreed to assure one another, and had overpaid in the matter of insurance, they could from time to time, by some process of re-adjustment, give back to one another, in equitable shares, what they had overpaid—that is perfectly plain—and what they received back could not in any sense be called profit, and would not be assessable to income tax. But here there are two distinct bodies, and I think this case is governed by Last's case, which was so much discussed during the argument. Here there was a surplus which was paid by the policy-holders to the company as distinct from the policy-holders themselves. When that was done I think that was the profits, and I think the surplus was the profits in the hands of the company. It was true that the company, having got it, chose to pay it back, or to pay a certain portion of it back—not all of it—because there always is something accumulating in the hands of the company; but they paid back a portion of it—as I say, not all of it—which is perhaps worth observing. They paid some of it back to the policy-holders who were outsiders, but that fact did not prevent it from remaining profit; it was a surplus which became profits in the hands of the company. The fact that they chose to pay away their profits in order to extend their business I do not think entitles them to say that they never were profits at all. Sir Robert Reid, on behalf of the company, argued that because this was done to attract business, and by virtue of particular contracts, that therefore the things, even if they had once been profits, could not properly be considered as profits any longer. That would lead to this kind of argument—that even realized profits in any business if, having been decided to be realized profits, the company, whatever it was, decided, or any business person decided to employ a certain part of his profits not in living on them or distributing them, but in enlarging his business with them, then at once they could be said to be not profits at all, but capital in the business. I cannot think so. It seems to me that the surplus became profits. What was done with it did not prevent it from being profits, even although it was done by virtue of a prior agreement that it should be done; and this case therefore is indistinguishable from Last's case. Whether Last's case was indistinguishable or not from Styles' case, certainly the learned lords who gave judgment in Styles' case do affect to distinguish it, and I must say that it seems to me that the judgments in these two cases are perfectly distinguishable one from the other. I think that the conclusion I have come to in the case we are now considering is consistent with the decision in Last's case, and certainly with the reasoning of the majority of the House of Lords in Styles' case.

CHANNELL, J.—I am of the same opinion. I think we must assume that both the cases in the House of Lords which have been cited are right, and that there is a real distinction between them. Then the House of Lords point out what that distinction is, and I cannot help thinking that the judgment that throws most light upon the whole matter is that of Lord Bramwell in the second case, because he tells us there, he being the dissenting judge in Last's case, what was the principle of Last's case, and he says: "I understand the principle of that decision to be that there was a company making profits, meaning to make profits, not from its own members, but from those it dealt with, that although it returned two-thirds of those profits to those it dealt with they were not the less profits, and that therefore income tax was payable on them. I thought and still think that wrong; I thought that the profits were only what remained after the return they had agreed to make on what was divisible among the shareholders. But whichever opinion is right . . ." and so on. Now he tells us what that principle was, and assuming that to be the principle of Last's case it seems to me quite clear that the present case now before us, comes within that principle. Here was a body of shareholders—true, very small in number and with very small capital in proportion with the business which they did, but they associate themselves for the purpose of carrying on the business of life insurance, and carrying it on in this way. They say: "We will limit our profits to 7 per cent. upon the capital which we put into it. By offering to divide all profits over 7 per cent. we shall no doubt do a very large business, and although we shall never make for ourselves more than 7 per cent., we shall make our 7 per cent. very secure. It will be a portion of a very large income," and so it is in this particular case. "We shall be absolutely secure upon it, and we shall give away all our profits beyond it." Now, it might well be said before Last's case, as Lord Bramwell there pointed out, that the sums which they had contracted with the people with whom they did business to give back to those persons were business outgoings and must be taken into account before you arrive at any profits at all. The House of Lords said that was not so. Having regard to that, it seems to me the present case comes within the principle of that decision. The subsequent decision in Styles' case simply said that where, as they assumed was the fact in that case—and whether they were right or wrong is quite immaterial to us—it was the case of a mutual insurance pure and simple, where parties agreed to do business insuring themselves and nobody else, the sums that they in a certain sense divided among each other, not divided by taking them in cash necessarily but by adding them to their policies or by altering the proportion which was to be contributed during the next year, are not to be taken on their part to be profits. I assume that to be correct; if so it does not govern the present case. The present case comes within the first decision and not within the second. On those grounds I think the judgment must be for the Crown.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellants, Nelsh, Howell, & Macfarlane.

Solicitor for the respondent, The Solicitor of Inland Revenue.

Q. B. Div.
(Darling and Channell, JJ.) May 15.

CAMERON (TRADING AS THE CO-OPERATIVE COAL CO.) v. TYLER. (a.)

Weights and measures—Sale of coal—Ticket or note—Seller's name—Weights and Measures Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 21), s. 21; Schedule III.

In the ticket or note required by section 21 of the Weights and Measures Act, 1889, to be delivered by the seller of coal to the purchaser, the name under which the seller trades may be inserted instead of his real name.

Case stated by justices of Middlesex.

An information was laid against the appellant under section 21 of the Weights and Measures Act, 1889, charging him with causing to be delivered a quantity of coal exceeding 2cwt. to a purchaser by means of a vehicle and unlawfully neglecting to deliver or cause to be delivered a ticket or note according to the form in the third schedule of the Act.

The following facts were proved:

On the 18th of November, 1898, one of the appellant's carmen delivered to a purchaser in the parish of Old Brentford a quantity of coal exceeding 2cwt.—to wit, one ton—by means of a vehicle on which the defendant's name, Cameron, appeared. The carman, before any of the coal was unloaded, delivered to the purchaser a ticket, partly in writing and partly in print, wherein the seller of the coal was described as the Co-operative Coal Co. Before the ticket was so delivered to the purchaser the name of the person in charge of the vehicle had been inserted thereon.

The appellant had for several years before the 18th of November, 1898, carried on business as a coal merchant on his own account at 107, Pancras-road, Ealing Dean, and at other places in London under the name of the Co-operative Coal Co., and four other different names. There was, in fact, no company limited in existence.

Shortly before the 18th of November, 1898, the purchaser had ordered from an office where the appellant was trading under the name of the Co-operative Coal Co., at Ealing Dean, one ton of coal.

The justices, being of opinion that in order to satisfy the requirements of section 21 and of the third schedule of the Act the real name of the appellant, Frederick Brough Cameron, ought to have appeared on the ticket, convicted the appellant.

Kershaw, for the appellant, was stopped.

Earle, for the respondent.—The statute was passed for the protection of purchasers. That would not be effectually accomplished if a coal dealer could put a name other than his own upon the ticket. If that were so, a person trading under several different names, as the appellant did in this case, if he had been convicted under one name, would be able to use afterwards one of the other names, and so avoid the extreme penalties usually imposed upon second offenders. The proper name to be inserted on the ticket is the seller's own name, and, in the case of a firm, the names of all the partners should be inserted.

DARLING, J.—This conviction was wrong. When the statute says that the name of the seller must be put upon the ticket, that is sufficiently complied with when the name under which the seller carries on business is inserted. It would be equally correct to insert the seller's own name—in this case, Cameron.

CHANNELL, J.—I am of the same opinion. The general law is that a man may adopt any name he chooses in which to carry on his business. I do not think that any alteration is intended to be introduced into the law in that respect in this Act of Parliament.

Conviction quashed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Woodbridge & Son.

Solicitor for the respondent, Sir R. Nicholson.

(a.) Reported by C. G. WILBRAHAM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Q. B. Div.
(Darling and Channell, JJ.) May 3.

MATHER v. LAWRENCE. (a.)

Education—Employment of child—Purposes of gain—Domestic work—Elementary Education Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 79), s. 47.

A child aged thirteen, who had not obtained the certificate mentioned in section 5, sub-section 2, of the Education Act, 1876, and who did not come within the exemption in section 9, was kept at home by her father and employed in household work, whereby the child's mother was enabled to go out to work and to earn a weekly wage.

Held, that the father had not employed his child in any labour for the purposes of gain within the meaning of section 47 of the Act, and was not liable to conviction under that section.

Case stated by two justices of the County of London.

The respondent was charged with an offence under section 6 of the Elementary Education Act, 1876, which provides that "every person who takes a child into his employment in contravention of this Act shall be liable on summary conviction to a penalty not exceeding 40s."

The following facts were proved: The respondent worked as a venetian blind painter. His family consisted of his wife; two sons, aged respectively twenty-one and eighteen years, who lived at home with their parents and went out to work; a daughter, Edith, between thirteen and fourteen years of age; and two younger children. The respondent's wife at times went out to work, for which she received an average wage of 10s. a week, and in order to enable her to do so, the respondent kept his daughter Edith at home, during the whole of the day, from the 7th of November to the 16th of December, 1898, and during such time she was occupied under the respondent's directions in doing the housework and in preparing the meals of the family. Edith Lawrence had not obtained a certificate as provided by section 5, sub-section 2, of the Act, nor did she come within the exception in that sub-section or in section 9 of the Act.

It was contended for the appellant that the respondent employed his daughter for the purposes of gain, inasmuch as he made use of her services at home for the purpose of enabling his wife to earn money, and that he came within section 47 of the Act.

The justices dismissed the information.

The Elementary Education Act, 1876, provides:

Section 4.—It shall be the duty of the parent of every child to cause such child to receive efficient elementary instruction in reading, writing, and arithmetic, and if such parent fail to perform such duty he shall be liable to such orders and penalties as are provided by this Act.

Section 5.—A person shall not after the commencement of this Act, take into his employment (except as hereinafter in this Act mentioned) any child—(2) Who, being of the age of ten years or upwards, has not obtained such certificate either of his proficiency in reading, writing, and elementary arithmetic, or of previous due attendance at a certified efficient school, as is in this Act in that behalf mentioned, unless such child, being of the age of ten years or upwards, is employed and is attending school in accordance with the Factory Acts or of any bye-law of the local authority (hereinafter mentioned) made under section 74 of the Elementary Education Act, 1870, as amended by the Elementary Education Act, 1873, and this Act, and sanctioned by the Education Department.

(a.) Reported by F. O. ROBINSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Section 6.—Every person who takes a child into his employment in contravention of this Act shall be liable, on summary conviction, to a penalty not exceeding 40s.

Section 47.—A parent of a child who employs such child in any labour exercised by way of trade or for the purposes of gain shall be deemed for the purposes of this Act to take such child into his employment.

Marchant (Ram with him), for the appellant.—The justices ought to have convicted the respondent. The child was employed by him "for the purposes of gain" within the meaning of section 47, because by reason of the child being employed in the household work the mother was enabled to go out to work and so earn wages The fact that the gain to the husband was only obtained indirectly, does not prevent the case from coming within section 47. The section makes a distinction between employing a child in labour exercised by way of trade, and for the purposes of gain. The object of this distinction was to prevent children being kept from school by such employment as occurred in this case.

The respondent did not appear.

DARLING, J.—In this case the justices have found that the respondent kept his child at home and employed her to do household work so that his wife might be free to go out to work by which she was enabled to earn 10s. a week. If the child had not been kept at home to do the household work, the respondent's wife could not have earned this money. The summons against the respondent was taken out under section 6 of the Elementary Education Act, 1876, which says that every person who takes a child into his employment in contravention of the Act shall be liable on summary conviction to a penalty not exceeding forty shillings, section 5 having said that a person shall not take a child into his employment except under the conditions specified. Then, in section 47 the Act goes on to provide that a parent who employs his child in any labour exercised by way of trade or for the purposes of gain shall be deemed for the purposes of the Act to take such child into his employment.

The magistrates refused to convict the respondent, and I think they came to a right decision. The employment of children—that is to say, real, definite employment—is forbidden by sections 5 and 6. Then it was thought, probably, that those sections could be evaded by a father employing his child in his own factory, and therefore section 47 was enacted to meet that case. But in order to come within the section the child must be employed in some trade or for the purposes of gain. There must be some direct employment resulting in direct gain to the employer. It does not make any difference whether, in reading the section, the words "for the purposes of gain" are read with "employs" or with "labour," for it cannot be said that in this case the labour of the child was labour for gain, or that the child was employed for gain. It is true that the result of what the child did was that someone else—namely, the mother, was enabled to be employed for gain, but that does not cause it to be the child who was employed for the purposes of gain.

It is to be remarked that the respondent could have been made liable to penalties for not sending his child to school. It is said that those penalties are inadequate, and that that is why proceedings were taken under section 47. That may be so, but that is not a matter which the court can take into consideration.

CHANNELL, J.—I am of the same opinion. I think section 47 was expressly framed to exclude the domestic employment of children. The real offence committed by the parent was the not sending of the child to school. If the fine which can be imposed for that is not large enough to meet the case any alteration must come from the Legislature.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the appellant, C. E. Mortimer.

Q. B. Div.
(Darling and Channell, JJ.) April 13.

SYKES & SON v. SOWERBY DISTRICT COUNCIL. (a.)

Local government—Sewer constructed by landowner for his own profit—Vesting in local authority—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 13, sub-section 1.

By section 13 of the Public Health Act, 1875, "all existing and future sewers within the district of a local authority . . . except (1) sewers made by any person for his own profit . . . shall vest in and be under the control of such local authority."

Held, that a sewer constructed by quarry owners for the purpose of preventing surface water entering their quarry was not a sewer made by them for their profit.

Appeal by the defendants in an action for an injunction tried in a county court.

The plaintiffs, who were quarry owners, laid down a pipe to carry off water which formerly flowed down a lane situated above their quarry and found its way into the quarry. The pipe was connected with the main sewer belonging to the defendants. Some time afterwards the defendants redrained some cottages which stood close to the pipe laid down by the plaintiffs and connected the drains with the pipe. The result was that in times of flood the pipe was unequal to the task of carrying off both the surface water and the drainage of the cottages, and a portion of the water flowed back again into the plaintiffs' quarry.

The plaintiffs thereupon, brought this action for an injunction to restrain the defendants from draining the cottages into their pipe. The defendants pleaded that the pipe was vested in them by virtue of section 13 of the Public Health Act, 1875. The plaintiffs admitted that the pipe was a sewer within the meaning of section 13, but contended that it was laid down for their profit within the meaning of the first exception.

The county court judge granted the injunction.

Lawson Walton, Q.C. (Waugh with him), for the defendants.—The sewer does not come within the exception to section 13 as being made for profit. It was not made for profit, but merely for the purpose of getting rid of water, just as the drains of a house are made for the purpose of getting rid of sewage and urface water. If by draining off the water and preventing it entering the quarry the value of the quarry was increased, such increase of value is only equivalent to the increase in the value of a house when it is properly drained. The line of pipes, consequently, vested in the defendants: see Acton local Board v. Batten, 28 Ch. D. 283, 33 W. R. Rep. 128; Bonella v. Twickenham Local Board, 35 W. R. 578, 18 Q. B. D. 577; Ferrand v. Hallas Land and Building Co., 41 W. R. 580, [1893] 2 Q. B. 135.

(a.) Reported by C. G. WILBRAHAM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Butcher, Q.C. (Byrne with him), for the plaintiff.—This sewer was made for the profit of the plaintiffs, and therefore comes within the first exception to the vesting clause: see Minehead Local Board v. Luttrell, 42 W. R. 667, [1894] 2 Ch. 178, and Croysdale v. Sunbury-on-Thames Urban District Council, 46 W. R. 667, [1898] 2 Ch. 515.

DARLING, J.—After some hesitation I have come to the conclusion that this appeal must be allowed. I have a difficulty in reconciling some of the decisions with the words of the Act. I have come, however, to the conclusion that this sewer was not one made for profit, using the word as it is intended to be used in the Act.

It appears to have been a sewer made in the first instance to prevent surface water which came down a lane from running into a quarry. If the water were to run into the quarry it would cost more to work the quarry than if it were excluded. That the sewer was not directly profitable is apparent because nothing was brought by it on to the land which could be sold at a profit; but that it would be detrimental to the quarry to allow the water to enter it there can be no doubt. What the plaintiffs did was to prevent the water entering the quarry. Suppose that instead of preventing the entrance of the water they had allowed it to enter and had used a pumping-engine to pump it out again, it would be difficult then to say that the pumping-engine was not used for profit, and it is difficult to see how what is true in the one case is not also true in the other. I can only say that it is not true of the sewer because a restricted meaning has been put upon the meaning of the word "profit" by the cases. In Ferraud v. Hallas Land and Building Co., Smith, L.J., said that if a sewer made for the purposes of draining houses, and for no other purpose (as in the case before him), were to be held to be an exception to the provisions of section 13, the result would be that the exceptions would eat up the rule. So here, if we were to hold that this sewer came within the exception, the exception would eat up the rule. Therefore, a more restricted meaning must be given to the word "profit." In Minehead Local Board v. Luttrell Romer, J., says: "This is a case where the defendant has laid out money for the purpose of making sewers, intending to be compensated and paid directly for his expenditure on the sewers by receiving payments from all persons, whether they are his tenants or not, who avail themselves of the benefit of his sewers, and where he intended to receive, and did receive, payment direct to him from the persons using his sewers for the benefit of his sewers, and where he has, by reason of his expenditure, received direct remuneration for the expenditure in the way I have indicated." Thus a distinction is drawn between a direct and an indirect benefit. If that doctrine is applied to this sewer it will be seen that this sewer did not yield a direct profit, but only an indirect one. So that the case is not covered by Minehead Local Board v. Luttrell.

The decision mostly in favour of the plaintiffs' contention is Croysdale v. Sunbury-on-Thamas Urban District Council. Stirling, J., in giving judgment in that case, says: "When the object of making the sewer is not sanitary or ordinary drainage purposes, but to enable the land to be occupied more profitably, or to avoid an expenditure which would otherwise be incurred in order that the occupation might be equally beneficial, it seems to me that the sewer is made for the profit of the occupier." If those words are taken alone they are amply wide enough to cover the present case. The sewer was not made for a sanitary or ordinary drainage purpose. It was made in order to avoid an expenditure which would otherwise have been incurred. But the learned judge was dealing with a case where a man conveyed water by means of a pipe, not in order to get rid of it, but in order to form a pond to water his cattle, thereby obviating the expense of supplying his cattle with water in other ways. Having regard, therefore, to the facts of the case under the consideration of Stirling, J., in that case, I do not think that the language used by him can be held to cover the present case.

CHANNELL, J.—I am of the same opinion, and I agree with what my brother has said. I think that the cases have decided that in this exception to section 13 "profit" means not necessarily a money profit, but some advantage other than that which is derived from using a drain or sewer as a drain or sewer simply. To take away sewage and to take away water so that it may not interfere with the use of land or premises—these are the ordinary purposes of a sewer. The cases seem to say that if a sewer is made for any of the ordinary purposes it does not come within the exception as being made for profit. It is clear that the cases have decided that a sewer constructed to carry away sewage is not within the exception; but it is suggested that that is because there is a duty to carry away sewage. But the term sewer applies equally to pipes which carry off water as to those which carry off sewage, and I can therefore see no distinction between this case and the cases referred to.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the defendant, Jubb, Booth, & Helliwell, Halifax.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Longbotham & Sons, Halifax.

Court of Appeal.

From Q. B. Div. (Bkcy.) (Lindley, M.R., Jeune, P., and Romer, L.J.) — June 2, 9.

In re RHOADES.

Ex parte THE OFFICIAL RECEIVER (TRUSTEE). (a.)

Bankruptcy — Insolvent estate — Executor's right of retainer—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 125.

The executor of an insolvent testator, against whose estate an order for administration in bankruptcy has been made, is entitled to exercise his right of retainer, notwithstanding that, in ignorance of his rights, he has paid over to the official receiver all the assets he has collected, and has put in a proof (afterwards withdrawn) for the amount of the debt due to him.

Judgment of Wright, J., ante 432, affirmed.

(a.) Reported by R. C. MACKENZIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Appeal from a decision of Wright, J. (ante, p. 432, where the facts are sufficiently stated).

Levett, Q.C., and F. Whinney, for the official receiver, who appealed, referred to 1 Williams on Executors (9 ed.), p. 885; Wilson v. Coxwell, 23 Ch. D. 764, 32 W. R. Dig. 82; Burge v. Brutton, 2 Hare, 373; In re Williams, Ex parte Lewis and Evans, 8 Morrell 65; In re Gilbert, Ex parte Gilbert, 46 W. R. 351, [1898] 1 Q. B. 282.

[LINDLEY, M.R., referred to 1 Williams on Executors, p. 891.]

Herbert Reed, Q.C., and J. Rolt, for the executrix, referred to section 10 of the Judicature Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 77); Woodward v. Darcy, Plowden 184; Davies v. Parry, ante p. 429, [1899] 1 Ch. 602; Croft v. Pyke, 3 P. Wms. 180, at p. 184*n*; Hasluck v. Clark, ante p. 471, [1899] 1 Q. B 699; and In re May, Crawford v. May, 38 W. R. 765, 45 Ch. D. 499.

[ROMER, L.J., referred to 2 Williams on Executors, pp. 1180-81.]

Levett, Q.C., in reply, cited Sander v. Heathfield, 23 W. R. 331, L. R. 19 Eq. 21; and Lee v. Nuttall, 27 W. R. 805, 12 Ch. D. 61.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 9.—LINDLEY, M.R., read the judgment of the court as follows: This appeal raises the important question whether an order made under section 125 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, for the administration of the estate of a deceased person in bankruptcy deprives his executor of his right to retain out of assets in his hands a debt due to him from the deceased. Wright, J., has held that the section has not deprived the executor of his right of retainer in such a case, and we have arrived at the same conclusion.

The testator in this case died in April, 1898. His widow was his executrix, and she proved his will. She was a creditor of his for £600 odd. She opened an account in a bank in her own name, and she got in assets to the amount of about £1,100, and this amount, representing the assets got in, was standing to her credit in July, when an order was made for the administration of the deceased's estate in bankruptcy under section 125 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883. The official receiver claimed the money in the bank, and she paid it over to him, not knowing she had any right of retainer. She proved for her debt in the bankruptcy, but she afterwards withdrew this proof, and then demanded back the £600 paid over in ignorance of her rights. Two questions therefore arise. The first and most important is whether she had a right to retain her debt as against the trustee in bankruptcy. The second is whether, if she had, she lost this right by paying the whole £1,100 over to the trustee and by afterwards proving for her debt.

It is not denied that she had a right to retain, and might have exercised it before the order was made, or, to be more accurate, before she knew that an application for such an order had been made. In re Gilbert, Ex parte Gilbert, settled this; but it is contended that as she had not exercised this right before that date she could not do so afterwards. The older common law authorities go far to show that if an executor was a creditor of his deceased testator and had assets in his hands sufficient to pay his debt (and all others of a higher degree, if any) such debt was treated as extinguished. Sufficient assets to pay his own debts and properly applicable thereto being in the executor's hands, such assets were treated, without more, as applied by him to such payment. Blackstone says so distinctly: vol. 3, p. 18. His words are, "So much as is sufficient to answer his own demands is by operation of law applied to that particular purpose." Plowden goes further, and says that the property in the assets is changed: see Woodward v. Darcy, Plow. 184, at p. 186. But this can only be true if the assets spoken of can be identified and appropriated to the debt which they have satisfied, and this presupposes the exercise of the right in fact, and in the case in Plowden it had been so exercised: see p. 184. The facts in the case of Woodward v. Darcy were as follows: Luttrell, obligor; Woodward, obligee, and plaintiff; Windham, Luttrell's executor; Windham was was dead, and defendant was Windham's executor; Windham was a creditor of Luttrell, and had retained assets sufficient to pay himself, leaving nothing for Woodward; the debts were all specialty debts; held that the defendants were entitled to judgment.

Until the executor does some act to show which assets he retains it is obvious that the property in them cannot be changed. This has been noticed before: see In re Gilbert, Ex parte Gilbert, [1898] 1 Q. B. at p. 286; Wentworth's Office of Executor, cited in the margin of Plowden, p. 185. But it was settled that an executor sued by a creditor could give a retainer by himself in satisfaction of his own debt in evidence under a general plea of plene administravit, and that he need not plead a retainer specially: 1 Wms. Saund. 333, n. 6. The extent to which the doctrine that his debt was extinguished was carried is further illustrated by the cases collected in 2 Williams on Executors, 1180, and which show that an executor having assets sufficient and properly applicable to pay a debt due to him from his testator could not sue the testator's heir, nor any third person who might be liable with the testator, for the debt in question. It is quite plain from these authorities that the executor's right to retain assets in his hands was as against him treated as enforced as soon as he could properly enforce it. It would be very strange if it were held that he had lost his right because he had done nothing to assert it before there was any occasion to do so. It is only when someone seeks to take assets out of the executor's possession that it becomes necessary for him to assert his right of retainer; and if he asserts it then his right must be protected, unless, of course, he has released it, or done something to deprive himself of it.

In the present case, when the order for the administration of the testator's estate was made, his executrix had assets in her hands to the value of £1,100. This sum was standing to her credit at her bankers. We attach no importance to the fact that the account was not in form opened in her name as executrix. The £1,100 represents the assets of the testator, and if the executrix had herself become bankrupt the whole of this sum would not have passed to her trustee and been distributable as her property amongst her creditors. She, however, was a creditor of the deceased for £600. This is admitted. She had a right to retain this sum out of the £1,100 as against the other creditors of the deceased. This is quite clear. If it were to the interest of other people to say she was paid, as it might be if she were claiming interest on the £600 after she had assets sufficient to pay it, the authorities show that she could be treated as having paid herself, but then only the balance of £1,100 could be treated as the testator's assets. On what principle can the trustee in bankruptcy claim more than the balance? We can discover none. The question is, What property vested in him by virtue of section 125, sub-section 5? His only claim is as trustee for the testator's creditors. The property vested in him by section 125, sub-section 5, has to be distributed amongst them. What they have no right to he has no right to: see section 44 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883. Section 125 does not enlarge the property in be distributed or deprive third parties of any right which they have acquired to withdraw from distribution assets in their possession which they have a right to retain: Hasluck v. Clark shows this.

It is true that an executor with a right of retainer has not all the rights of a secured creditor: see Lee v. Nuttall. He has no right of retainer against creditors of a higher degree than himself, but his right to retain is a right to withdraw from the assets in his hands, and distributable amongst himself and other creditors of equal degree, enough to pay himself in full. His right to retain does not extend to assets which he has not got in, and which are not in his possession, nor to equitable assets; but no question as to them arises here. His right extends, both at law and in equity, to all legal assets which he has in his hands; and there is nothing in section 125 to deprive him of this right. The judgment of Vaughan Williams, L.J., in the case of In re Williams, Ex parte Lewis and Evans, supports this conclusion. Mr. Levett relied on authorities which are collected in 1 Williams on Executors 885, and which show that if an executor dies without having exercised his right his executor cannot exercise it, unless he also represents the testator. But, whatever difficulty there may be in reconciling these cases with Blackstone's statement above referred to, they are quite consistent with the right of this executrix to retain her debt as against the trustee claiming her testator's assets. A similar observation applies to Wigram, V.C.'s, judgment in Burge v. Brutton. The only person who has a right of retainer is the legal personal representative of the testator, and if such representative is dead his representative cannot himself first exercise the right unless he also represents the testator: In re Compton, Norton v. Compton, 30 Ch. D. 15. This doctrine has no application to this case. There is no analogy between death and an order for administering assets in bankruptcy under section 125 of the Bankruptcy Act. For these reasons we have come to the conclusion that the executrix in this case had a right to retain her debt out of the assets in her hands as against the appellant, and that only the balance of those assets vested in him under section 125, subsection 5.

The second question presents no real difficulty. The executrix, not knowing her rights, paid the whole £1,100 over to the trustee. He, however, has not distributed the assets, and no injustice will be done to him or to anyone if he is ordered to repay her the amount which she was entitled to retain. Ex parte James, In re Condon, 22 W. R. 937, L. R. 9 Ch. App. 609, and Ex parte Simmonds, In re Carnac, 34 W. R. 421, 16 Q. B. D. 308, are distinct authorities to show that mistakes of this kind, although attributable to ignorance of law, can and will be set right by the court so long as the officer of the court still has the money in his hands. Still less can the proof by the executrix in the bankruptcy, withdrawn as it was when she discovered her error, deprive her of her right to have her money back.

The judgment appealed from is right on all points, and the appeal, therefore, must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, Adams & Adams; Thomson, Brooks, & Danby.

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, M.R., Jeune, P., and Romer, L.J.) June 6.

In re WALLER.
WHITE v. SCOLES. (a.)

Will — Construction — Misdescription of legatee — Extrinsic evidence—Former wills.

A testator by his will bequeathed legacies to such of the daughters of his late friend, I. S., as should survive the testator and be unmarried. The testator's friend, I. S., survived the testator, and had never been married. I. S. had five unmarried sisters, daughters of J. J. S., deceased.

Held, on the construction of the will and on the evidence of a previous will of the testator, which gave legacies to the daughters of J. J. S. by a correct description, that those daughters were entitled to the legacies.

Decision of Kekewich, J. (ante, p. 182), reversed.

Appeal from a decision of Kekewich, J. (ante, p. 182, where the facts are sufficiently stated).

P. F. S. Stokes, for the daughters of J. J. Scoles, who appealed.

Stewart Smith, for the British Home for Incurables, contended that the legacies were void, and referred to 1 Jarman on Wills (5th ed.), p. 412, and Drake v. Drake, 8 H. L. Cas. 172, 9 W. R. H. L. Dig. 18.

G. W. Brabant, for the trustees.

No reply was called for.

LINDLEY, M.R.—I cannot bring my mind to entertain any doubt about this case. I have not the slightest doubt about the true construction and effect of this will. There is really no room for doubt about the meaning of the language used. The testator has given a legacy to "such of the daughters of my late friend Ignatius Scoles, deceased, as shall be living and unmarried at my decease." Now, it so happens that there was at the date of the will no person answering the description of "my late friend Ignatius Scoles, deceased." The testator had a friend or acquaintance named Ignatius Scoles, but that friend was not "late" but living, had no daughters, because he was a bachelor, and could not very well have any, because he was a Roman Catholic priest. So, when you come to try to apply that description "my late friend Ignatius Scoles," you find that there was no man whom it really fitted. What, then, is to be done? Are we to cast about and see who was known to this testator whose name could have been mistaken and called Ignatius? The difficulty caused by the introduction of the name Ignatius sets you upon inquiry. There was a gentleman named Scoles—Joseph John Scoles—the father of Ignatius Scoles. Joseph John Scoles had a number of daughters. This testator had been placed, shortly after the death of the father Scoles, with his widow and family, and had lived with them until his death. They were Roman Catholics, and the testator knew of the existence of daughters of the late Scoles (the father of Ignatius). Apparently Scoles, the father, was a friend of the testator. The evidence is not very explicit on that point; but at all events it seems that Scoles the father might not unnaturally be described by the testator as his "late friend Scoles," deceased. The testator had shown by former wills that he not only knew of the existence of those daughters, but knew who their father was. In one of those former wills—all of which are perfectly legitimate evidence of his knowledge and state of mind—we find that he described them, not as daughters of Ignatius, but by a correct description as daughters of one Scoles, an architect, who was deceased, but who had formerly lived at Crofton Lodge, Hammersmith. Now, the question is, are we to say that because there is no person (and never was any person) who answers completely to the description, "daughters of my late friend Ignatius Scoles," we cannot by legitimate methods find out who the intended legatees were? The introduction of that evidence is legitimate, not to show what was the testator's intention, but to show what he knew of the state of the Scoles family. I have not the slightest doubt myself that, according to the authorities and according also to commonsense, when you find a description which will not accurately apply to anybody, and you are placed in the position of having either to say that it means nothing or to find to whom it was probably meant to apply, you ought to admit evidence of the testator's knowledge to assist you in finding out what he meant. I think, therefore, that the decision of the learned judge in the court below was wrong owing to too much caution. Because he cannot find anyone named Ignatius Scoles who can be meant, he calls it guessing to put in the name of Joseph John instead. I do not think it is guessing at all, and, moreover, I do not care whether the actual name Joseph John is assumed to be in the will or not.

(a.) Reported by R. C. MACKENZIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The appeal, therefore, must be allowed.

Sir F. H. Jeune, P.—I entirely agree with the judgment just delivered by the Master of the Rolls. It appears to me that this is a very simple case, and, indeed, I am surprised that it is not still more simple, because I should have thought it an extremely likely thing that the persons interested would apply to the Probate Court on granting probate to leave out the word "Ignatius." I am very much inclined to think that that application would have been successful, and that the word "Ignatius" would have been left out as having been inserted by mistake. Then the gift in the will would have run, "daughters of my late friend, — Scoles," and there could not in the circumstances have been any dispute about the meaning of that. But even as the matter stands it appears to me that this case is clear. The evidence which has been let in was admitted in accordance with the very well known principle of law, that when you have to construe a document you are entitled to look at the surrounding facts. When you look at the surrounding facts, you find that there is no class of persons in existence who could have been correctly described as "the daughters of my late friend Ignatius Scoles." Such a class of persons does not exist. But you find that there is a class of persons consisting of the daughers of Joseph John Scoles, and that Joseph John Scoles was, or may have been, properly described as the "late friend" of the testator. Those daughters, at any rate, are persons whom the testator knew and regarded in at least a friendly spirit. Having regard to those facts, I think there is no difficulty in applying the description, though it is an inaccurate description, to the daughters of Joseph John Scoles.

Romer, L.J., concurred.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors, A. C. Scoles; Devonshire, Monkland, Davies, & Sanders; Caprons, Hitchins, Brabant, & Hitchins.

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, M.R., and Rigby and Collins, L.JJ.) — May 11, 13, 15.

In re An Arbitration between F. Baring-Gould and The Sharpington Combined Pick and Shovel Syndicate (Limited). (a.) Company — Winding up—Purchase of undertaking—Dissentient shareholder — Arbitration — Award of umpire—Validity of award—Arbitration Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 49), First Schedule (c) (d)—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), ss. 161, 162.

The articles of association of a company do not constitute an agreement within section 162 of the Companies Act, 1862.

The appointment of an umpire by arbitrators constitutes an act in the arbitration within the meaning of clause (c) in the First Schedule to the Arbitration Act, 1889.

Decision of Stirling, J. (ante, p. 23, [1898] 2 Ch. 633), reversed.

Appeal by the company from a decision of Stirling, J. (ante, p. 23, [1898] 2 Ch. 633).

Baring-Gould also gave a cross-notice of appeal.

The facts are fully set out in the report in the court below.

Mattinson, Q.C., and Beddall, for the company.—Article 128 constitutes a contract within the meaning of section 162 of the Companies Act, 1862. Gould having induced the company to accept him as a shareholder is bound by the articles of association (Isaacs' case, 40 W. R. 518, [1892] 2 Ch. 158; Cotton v. Imperial, &c., Corporation, [1892] 3 Ch. 454, 41 W. R. Dig. 36); and since he has asked for the award to be remitted on the ground that it is invalid he cannot now appeal. Eley v. Positive Government Security Life Assurance Co., 24 W. R. 338, 1 Ex. D. 88, and Browne v. La Trinidad, 36 W. R. 289, 37 Ch. D. 1, were not intended to lay down that the articles were not a contract between the member and the company.

[Lindley, M.R., referred to Welton v. Saffery, 45 W. R. 508, [1897] A. C. 299.]

Buckley, Q.C., and Gore-Browne, for the respondent.—The necessary parties to such an agreement as is required by section 162 of the Companies Act, 1862, would be the member and the liquidator. We contend that it is not possible before a dispute has arisen to decide what is to happen when a dispute shall arise. Article 128 is res inter alios acta so far as section 162 is concerned. No set of articles can be an agreement between parties who are disputing about them, because when they sign the articles there is no dispute. The agreement under the section must be between the disputants. Cotton v. Imperial, &c., Corporation merely decided that if the memorandum gives power to sell or divide shares then section 162 need not be applied; but here, whether the company has the power or not, it has not used it, and therefore the aid of the section is required. Any such provision as article 128 is therefore ultra vires; but if that is not so, it has really nothing to do with this case.

Lindley, M.R.—One question of considerable importance was raised and another not of so great importance, but they both require attention. The first question was whether clause 128 of the articles of association can be regarded as an "agreement" within section 162 of the Companies Act. I think that by an agreement was meant something very different from articles of association. It meant, I think, an agreement between the dissentient member and the liquidator. It was attempted by means of section 16 of the Companies Act to establish that clause 128 was an agreement between the company and the dissentient member. Section 16 has given rise to a great deal of difficulty, but it has been held in several cases that it does not mean that the articles are to be treated as an agreement between the company and the members. On the other hand, articles have been treated as expressing the terms upon which the directors became such. The effect of section 16 has not been clearly laid down, but I do not understand that the company could sue a member upon the articles as an agreement. But treating the articles as some sort of an agreement between the members, they are not such an agreement as is meant by section 162. In my opinion the true construction of the section denotes an agreement between the liquidator and the dissentient member. To say that means a clause binding en bloc all members, assenting or dissenting, would be an unwarrantable construction. On the other point I cannot agree with Stirling, J. In my opinion the appointment of an umpire is an act in the arbitration within clause (c). Consequently the three months had expired, and the jurisdiction of the umpire had arisen.

(a.) Reported by J. F. Iselin, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

RIGBY and COLLINS, L.JJ., concurred.

The court dismissed the appeal with costs, and allowed the cross-appeal with costs, giving the shareholder leave to enforce the award with costs, he having already received the £100 payable under it.

Solicitors, Booth & Smee; S. S. Seal.

From Q. B. Div.
(A. L. Smith, Vaughan Williams, and Romer, L.JJ.) } May 4.

PENNY v. WIMBLEDON URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL. (a.)

Negligence—Principal and agent—Contractor, negligence of—Paving road—Liability of local authority—Practice—Payment into court by one defendant—Verdict against both for smaller sum—Ord. 22, rr. 1, 6.

A district council employed a contractor to make up a road, which was being used by the public, under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875. In the course of the work the contractor negligently left a heap of earth unfenced and unlighted on the road, over which one of the public, while passing along the road at night, fell and was injured. In an action against the district council and the contractor to recover damages for the personal injuries so sustained, Held, that as the work which the contractor was employed to do would, unless precautions were taken, cause danger to the public passing along the road, an obligation was thrown upon the district council to see that the necessary precautions were taken, and they were therefore liable for the negligence of their contractor in not taking proper precautions, such negligence not being merely a casual or collateral act of negligence.

The defendants delivered separate defences, both denying liability. The contractor, with a denial of liability, paid £75 into court. The district council did not pay money into court, but pleaded that their co-defendant, while denying liability, had paid £75 into court, and that sum was sufficient to satisfy the plaintiff's claim. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff for £50.

Held, that as the district council had not paid money into court, the plaintiff was entitled to judgment against them; but, as the £50 had been recovered from their co-defendant, the judgment must be limited to costs.

Judgment of Bruce, J., [1898] 2 Q. B. 212, affirmed.

Appeal from the judgment of Bruce, J., in an action to recover damages for personal injuries caused by the negligence of the defendants: reported [1898] 2 Q. B. 212, 46 W. R. Dig. 138.

The defendants, the Wimbledon Urban District Council, preparatory to taking over a road in their district, entered into a contract with the defendant Iles, who was a contractor, by which Iles agreed to make up the road under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, the owner of the adjoining land having failed to comply with a notice requiring him to execute the works.

By the contract Iles was to provide all materials, plant, labour, watching, lighting, fencing, and everything necessary for the speedy and effectual completion of the work.

Iles, in the preliminary process of "cleaning up" the road, trimmed the surface and put the surface soil and grass in heaps on the road. The plaintiff, while walking along the road after dark, fell over one of the heaps and was injured. There was no light or protection near the heap, but the day after the accident lights were placed on some of the heaps by order of the district council's surveyor.

The defendants delivered separate defences. Both denied liability, and Iles with a denial of liability paid £75 into court. The district council pleaded that Iles was an independent contractor and not their servant; they did not pay any money into court, but pleaded that "the defendent Iles, while denying liability, has paid into court £75, and these defendants say that sum is sufficient to satisfy the plaintiff's claim." The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff for £50 damages.

Bruce, J., entered judgment for the defendant Iles; and upon further consideration he held that the district council were liable for the negligence of Iles, and that, having put in a separate defence, they could not avail themselves of the payment into court by Iles, and that therefore the plaintiff was entitled to judgment for £50 and costs. As, however, the £50 had been recovered from Iles the judgment against the district council was confined to costs only.

The district council appealed.

Macmorran, Q.C., and C. T. Giles, for the district council.—There was only one cause of action against both defendants, who were in the same position as joint tortfeasors. The cause of action was the right to recover damages for the injuries sustained. As soon as there was a payment into court in respect of the one cause of action, the question was whether the sum paid in was sufficient. If the plaintiff had taken the £75 out of court in satisfaction, the district council could have pleaded accord and satisfaction. If £25 or more had been paid in by each of the defendants, the defendants would have been entitled to judgment, as the jury found that £50 was sufficient. They referred upon this point to Brinsmead v. Harrison, 20 W. R. 784, L. R. 7 C. P. 547; Duck v. Mayeu, 41 W. R. 56, [1892] 2 Q. B. 511. Secondly, the district council are not responsible for the negligence of their contractor. To make a principal liable for the act of a contractor, the work contracted to be executed must in itself be a source of danger to the public unless proper precautions are taken: Hardaker v. Idle District Council, 44 W. R. 323, [1896] 1 Q. B. 335; Pickard v. Smith, 10 C. B. N. S. 470; Black v. Christchurch Finance Co., [1894] A. C. 48. Here the contractor was employed to make up a road, which could be done without any danger to the public at all. The contractor chose to leave heaps of earth at the side of the road and so caused the plaintiff's injuries, but that need not have been done. It was a casual or collateral piece of negligence, like leaving a pickaxe in the road over which one of the public might stumble. The manner in which the work was done was dangerous, not the work itself. Gray v. Pullen, 13 W. R. 257, 5 B. & S. 970, was also referred to.

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Lord Coleridge, Q.C., and A. W. Dunn, for the plaintiff, were not called upon.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—The jury have found that there was negligence on the part of the defendant Iles, and returned a verdict for the plaintiff for £50 damages. I will first deal with the question as to the form of the pleading. It seems to me to be a novel form of pleadings. Iles paid £75 into court with a denial of liability. The district council set up, in addition to a denial of liability, a totally different defence from that set up by Iles. They set up the defence that the negligence, if any, causing the accident was that of an independent contractor, and that they were not, therefore, liable. They further pleaded that Iles, while denying liability, had paid £75 into court, and that that was sufficient to satisfy the plaintiff's claim. The jury found that there had been negligence on the part of Iles, and assessed the damages at £50. As Iles had paid £75 into court, judgment was entered for him. The question then arose as to the position of the district council. The question whether they were responsible for the negligence of Iles remained to be argued, and the learned judge held that the defence, that Iles was an independent contractor for whose negligence the district council were not responsible, failed. The position, therefore, of the district council was this, the special defence of non-liability for the negligence of Iles had failed, and they had not paid any money into court. That being so, they had no answer to the plaintiff's claim. As, however, the plaintiff had recovered the £50 from Iles, he cannot get it twice over. The learned judge was therefore right in entering judgment against the district council for costs only.

The second question is whether the district council are responsible for the negligence of their contractor. In my opinion Bruce, J., arrived at a right conclusion. He first stated his finding of fact as follows: "The district council employed the contractor to do work upon the surface of a road which they knew was being used by the public, and they must have known that the works which were to be executed would cause some obstruction to the traffic, and some danger unless means were taken to give due warning to the public." He then laid down the law applicable to that state of facts thus: "The principle of the decision in Pickard v. Smith I think is this, that when a person employs a contractor to do work in a place where the public are in the habit of passing, which work will, unless precautions are taken, cause danger to the public, an obligation is thrown upon the person who orders the work to be done to see that the necessary precautions are taken, and that, if the necessary precautions are not taken, he cannot escape liability by seeking to throw the blame on the contractor." That seems to me to be a sound proposition of law, though I would add this qualification to it: except in the case of acts of negligence which are merely casual or collateral acts—such as the dropping of a hammer on a person passing along the highway, or leaving a pickaxe in the road over which a passer-by might stumble. I cannot think that leaving a heap of earth on the highway, which would necessarily be done in the execution of the work, unlighted and unfenced is a casual or collateral act of negligence. For these reasons I think that both points fail, and the appeal must be dismissed.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I entirely agree. With regard to the first point, the fallacy of the defendants' contention seems to me to lie very much in assuming that the payment of money into court, with a defence denying liability, under ord. 22, r. 1, is itself a defence. When money is paid into court with a defence denying liability, the defence is the denial of liability. The importance of that here is that both defendants have put in separate defences denying liability. One of them chose with that denial to pay money into court. He did so for the sake of peace, and as the jury awarded the plaintiff less than the amount which that defendant paid into court, though defeated upon the question of liability, he is not by the rules placed in the position of a defeated party. By that payment into court he improved his position and reaped the benefit of it when the question of costs came to be dealt with. I see no reason why his fellow defendants should have a similar benefit when they have not paid money into court. The authorities, where there has been an accord and satisfaction, have no application.

As regards the second question, it is very rare indeed to find the course of the authorities upon a question of law so uniform and clear as it is on the question of the liability of the district council for the negligence of its contractor. The principle is laid down in Pickard v. Smith, where Williams, J., in delivering the judgment of the court, said: "Unquestionably no one can be made liable for an act or breach of duty, unless it be traceable to himself or his servant or servants in the course of his or their employment. Consequently, if an independent contractor is employed to do a lawful act, and in the course of the work he or his servants commit some casual act of wrong or negligence, the employer is not answerable. To this effect are many authorities which were referred to in the argument. That rule is, however, inapplicable to cases in which the act which occasions the injury is one which the contractor was employed to do; nor, by a parity of reasoning, to cases in which the contractor is entrusted with the performance of a duty incumbent upon his employer, and neglects its fulfilment, whereby an injury is occasioned." That principle was applied in Gray v. Pullen; Bower v. Peate, 1 Q. B. D. 321, 24 W. R. Dig. 226; Dalton v. Angus, 30 W. R. 191, 6 App. Cas. 740; Hughes v. Percival, 31 W. R. 725, 8 App. Cas. 443; and quite lately by this court in Hardaker v. Idle District Council. When a statutory authority are by their contractor doing work on a road under their statutory powers which will be a source of danger to the public unless precautions are taken it cannot be doubted that it is the duty of the statutory authority to take care that the public are not injured by the carelessness of the contractor in the execution of the very work which he was, as contractor, employed to do. Apply that principle to the present case. The road had to be made up. It was obvious that the time would arrive when it would become a source of danger to the public using it by reason of the digging on its surface. It would be the duty of the district council to fence the dangerous spots or otherwise to warn the public against the danger. I agree entirely with the judgment of Bruce, J., who has stated the law so accurately and tersely that I do not think I can add to it.

ROMER, L.J.—Having regard to the present state of the authorities, I think that the following is a correct statement of the law on the subject: When a person through a contractor does work which from its nature is likely to cause danger to others, there is a duty on his part to take all reasonable precautions against such danger, and he does not escape from liability for the discharge of that duty by employing the contractor if the latter does not take these precautions. I desire to point out that accidents arising from what is called casual or collateral negligence cannot be guarded against beforehand, and do not come within this rule. Applying the above statement of the law to the facts of the present case, it is clear that the work of making up this road, frequented as it was by the public, would be likely to cause danger to the public, because it was almost inevitable that, in doing the work, inequalities in the level of the road must arise, and heaps of earth be placed on the road. It is usual in such cases to guard the dangerous places by putting up lights or proper fencing. In my opinion it is unreasonable not to take those precautions, and the passages contained in the contract show that this is so.

Upon the other point I have nothing to add except to say that the case before us is not one in which the district council have adopted the defence of their co-defendant, and have treated the payment into court as made on their behalf, and have offered to abide by all the consequences of so doing.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the plaintiff, S. A. Jones.

Solicitor for the district council, W. H. Whitfield.

From Q. B. Div. (A. L. Smith, Collins, and Romer, L.JJ.) — April 12.

REG. v. COMPTROLLER-GENERAL OF PATENTS. (a.)

Patent — Opposition to grant — Right to be heard as opponent — Person having no interest — Application by comptroller to Attorney-General for directions — Mandamus to comptroller — Patents, &c., Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), ss. 11, 95 — Patents, &c., Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 50), s. 4.

Opposition to the grant of a patent under section 11 of the Patents, &c., Act, 1883, on the ground that the invention has been patented in this country on an application of prior date, can only be made by a person having an interest in the earlier patent.

Where, on an application by the Comptroller of Patents to the Attorney-General for directions in a matter of doubt or difficulty under section 95 of the Patents, &c., Act, 1883, the Attorney-General directs that the comptroller shall not hear a particular person as an opponent to the granting of a patent, the court will not grant a mandamus to the comptroller to hear such person.

Appeal from an order of a Divisional Court (Grantham and Kennedy, JJ.) discharging a rule nisi for a mandamus to the Comptroller-General of Patents to hear and determine the matter of an opposition by the prosecutor, John D. Tomlinson, to the grant of a patent on an application by Felix Meyer.

The prosecutor gave notice at the Patent Office of opposition to the grant on the ground that the invention had been patented in this country on an application of prior date. The prosecutor had no interest in the prior patent.

The comptroller applied to the Attorney-General under section 95 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883, as to whether he should hear the prosecutor in opposition to the grant. The Attorney-General directed that the prosecutor should not be heard, and the comptroller accordingly declined to hear him.

By section 11, sub-section 1, of the Patents, &c., Act, 1883, as amended by section 4 of the Patents, &c., Act, 1888, "Any person may at any time within two months from the date of the advertisement of the acceptance of a complete specification give notice at the Patent Office of opposition to the grant of the patent on the ground of the applicant having obtained the invention from him, or from a person of whom he is the legal representative, or on the ground that the invention has been patented in this country on an application of prior date, or on the ground that the complete specification describes or claims an invention other than that described in the provisional specification, and that such other invention forms the subject of an application made by the opponent in the interval between the leaving of the provisional specification and the leaving of the complete specification, but on no other ground."

The question was whether the prosecutor was entitled to oppose the grant on the ground that the invention had been patented in this country on an application of prior date, he himself having no interest in that prior patent.

There were a series of decisions by the law officers of the Crown that persons who admitted that they had no interest in the alleged anticipating patent were not entitled to be heard as opponents: Glossop's Patent, Griffin's Pat. Cas. 285; Heath & Frost's Patent, Griffin's Pat. Cas. 288; Stewart's case, 13 Rep. Pat. Cas. 627.

C. A. Russell, Q.C., and E. A. Parkin, for the prosecutor.

The Attorney-General (Sir R. E. Webster, Q.C.), and H. Sutton, for the comptroller.

W. F. Hamilton, for the applicant, Meyer.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—In this case a rule nisi was obtained by the prosecutor, Tomlinson, for a mandamus to the Comptroller of Patents, who had declined to hear an objection on the part of the prosecutor to the granting of a patent which had been applied for. The Divisional Court discharged the rule. Two facts are undisputed. The first is that Tomlinson had no interest whatever in the subject-matter of the patent, but was merely one of the public. The second is that the comptroller was in doubt whether Tomlinson had any locus standi to oppose the application. Under these circumstances the comptroller brought into play the provisions of section 95 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883, which says that "the comptroller may, in any case of doubt or difficulty arising in the administration of any of the provisions of this Act, apply to either of the law officers for directions in the matter." With regard to the position of the Attorney-General, I wish to point out that, besides being the head of the bar of England, he has had from the earliest times to perform high judicial functions, as to which he has an absolute discretion. For instance, if a man who has been tried for his life and convicted is in a position to allege that there is error on the record, he cannot take advantage of it unless he first obtains the fiat of the Attorney-General, and no court has any jurisdiction to review the discretion of the Attorney-General in such a matter. Again, the Attorney-General, and he alone, has power to enter a nolle prosequi, and that power is not subject to any control. Again, the filing of a criminal information is a thing which is done by the Attorney-General proprio motu, and which is entirely within his discretion. Coming now to the Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Acts of 1883 and 1888, it seems to me that throughout those Acts the ultimate court of appeal in matters relating to the granting of patents is the Attorney-General or Solicitor-General. In the present case a matter has come before the Attorney-General, and we are asked to overrule it. I find that in the case of In re Van Gelder's Patent, 6 Rep. Pat. Cas. 22, Bowen, L.J., dealing with the position of the Attorney-General under these Acts, said: "At common law the Attorney-General is, when he is exercising his functions as an officer of the Crown, in no case that I know of, a court in the ordinary sense." Here the Comptroller, being in doubt whether he ought to hear the prosecutor, who desired to oppose this patent, applied under section 95 to the Attorney-General for directions. The Attorney-General answered that if the prosecutor was merely a member of the public and had no interest in the subject-matter of the patent, the comptroller ought not to hear him. We are now asked to grant a prerogative writ to order the comptroller to do what the Attorney-General has said he ought not to do. In my opinion we ought not to grant a mandamus contrary to the determination of the Attorney-General, who is the tribunal appointed by the Act to determine such a question. That alone is a sufficient ground for discharging the rule for this discretionary writ. But I am also led to the same conclusion from the consideration of the true construction of section 11 of the Act of 1883, as amended by section 4 of the Act of 1888. I am of opinion that the true meaning of the enactment is that a mere member of the public who has no interest in the subject-matter of a patent is not entitled to be heard in opposition to the grant. I think that the words "any person," with which the section commences, must, when the whole section is read as amended, be construed as limited to any person having an interest in the subject-matter of the patent, and that a mere member of the public having no such interest has not a right to intervene. I therefore think the rule was rightly discharged, and the appeal must be dismissed.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

COLLINS and ROMER, L.JJ., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the prosecutor, Radford & Frankland.

Solicitor for the comptroller, Solicitor to the Board of Trade.

Solicitors for the applicant, Wilson, Bristows, & Carpmael.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. } Kekewich, J. } May 9, 10.

ALLEN v. GOLD REEFS OF WEST AFRICA (LIMITED). (a.)

Company—Deceased member—Notices—Service—Calls—Forfeiture—Special resolutions.

Where the articles of association of a limited company define "member" as "a registered holder of any stock or share of the company," and provide that the company may serve notices "upon any member, either personally or by sending the notice prepaid by post addressed to such member at his registered address as appearing in the register of the company," but make no provision as to the service of notices in the case of a deceased member, notices relating to calls, forfeiture, and special resolutions affecting a deceased member's shares, will not be effectively served by being sent by post addressed to such member at his registered address, if the company, at the time of sending the same, know that such member is already dead.

Where one of the articles of association provides that the company "shall have a first and paramount lien for all debts, obligations, and liabilities of any member to or towards the company upon all shares (not being fully paid) held by such member," and there are calls upon partly-paid shares due from a member who is also the only holder of fully-paid shares in the company, the other members cannot by special resolution alter the article by striking out the words "not being fully paid" so as to retrospectively affect, to the prejudice of the non-consenting holder of such fully-paid shares, his rights already existing under the said article.

New Zealand Gold Extraction Co. v. Peacock, [1894] 1 Q. B. 622, and James v. Buena Ventura Nitrate Grounds Syndicate (Limited), 44 W. R. 372, [1896] 1 Ch. 456, considered.

Action.

The plaintiffs were the executors of one Emilio Zuccani, who, at the time of his death, on the 5th of February, 1897, held 27,885 fully-paid shares, and also 36,435 partly-paid shares in the defendant company. Previous to E. Zuccani's death the defendant company had from time to time made calls upon him in respect of his partly-paid shares, and the sum remaining unpaid in respect of the balance of payments due upon allotment and calls amounted at the time of his death to £6,072 10s.

The company's articles of association defined "member" as "a registered holder of any stock or share of the company," and article 170 provided that a notice might be served by the company "upon any member either personally or by sending it prepaid by post addressed to such member at his registered address as appearing in the register of the members of the company."

The articles of association further provided that the executors or administrators of a deceased member (not being one of several joint holders) should be the only persons recognized by the company as having any title to the shares registered in the name of such member, and that any person becoming entitled to a share in consequence of the death of any member might elect either to be registered as the holder or to have some person nominated by him registered as the transferee, and that a person so becoming entitled should be entitled to receive dividends, bonuses, or other moneys payable in respect of the share, but should not be entitled to receive notices of, or attend or vote at any meeting of the company, or, save as aforesaid, to any of the rights or privileges of a member unless and until he should have been registered as a member in respect of such share.

The executors of E. Zuccani had not been registered as the holders of his shares.

Article 29 of the articles of association provided that the company should have "a first and paramount lien for all debts, obligations, and liabilities of any member to or towards the company upon all shares (not being fully paid) held by such member."

E. Zuccani was the only holder of fully paid-up shares in the defendant company.

By a special resolution passed and confirmed at general meetings of the company held in the months of February and March, 1897, article 29 was altered so as to omit the words "not being fully paid," and subsequently thereto the defendant company claimed to have a lien on the 27,885 fully paid-up shares in respect of what was due on the 36,435 partly paid-up shares. Notice that these meetings were about to be held had been sent by registered letter to E. Zuccani's registered address, after his death was known to the company.

(a.) Reported by R. J. A. MORRISON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Article 74 of the articles of association provided that notices of general meetings should be given to such members as were, under the provisions therein contained, entitled to receive notices, but the accidental omission to give such notice to, or the non-receipt of such notice by, any member should not invalidate any resolution passed at such meeting.

After the defendant company had notice of E. Zuccani's death they issued a notice dated the 29th of March, 1897, demanding payment of the unpaid calls due in respect of his shares, and threatening forfeiture in the event of non-payment. The plaintiffs thereupon commenced an action claiming relief against the company. The company, however, gave up the notice of the 29th of March, 1897, and no longer relied upon it, but subsequently issued another notice dated the 4th of June, 1897, demanding payment of £6,876 16s. 11d., being the £6,072 10s. then due, together with £804 6s. 11d. interest on the same as from the 16th of August, 1895, and stating that unless the amount due was paid on or before the 21st of June then next the shares in respect of which the same was demanded would be liable to be forfeited. Copies of this notice were sent by registered letter to the deceased member's registered address, and to his executors collectively, and to each of them separately.

The articles of association further provided that if any member failed to pay any call, instalment, or interest, the directors might serve a notice, on such member requiring him to pay the same with further interest from the date of the notice, and that the notice should state that in the event of non-payment the shares would be liable to be forfeited, and that if the requisitions of the notice were not complied with any share in respect of which such notice was given might be forfeited by a resolution of the directors to that effect.

No payment was made in respect of the sum demanded by the notice of the 4th of June, and at a board meeting, held on the 23rd of July, 1897, the directors of the defendant company, in exercise of the power in that behalf conferred on them by the articles of association, purported to forfeit the 36,435 partly paid-up shares for noncompliance with the said notice. As a result of these proceedings on the part of the company, the plaintiffs commenced a second action claiming relief against the company.

The two actions now came on for trial as a consolidated action, and the plaintiffs' claim was as follows: (1) a declaration that the partly paid-up shares had not been forfeited; (2) an injunction to restrain the defendant company from treating or dealing with the said shares as forfeited; (3) damages for conversion; and (4) a declaration that the defendant company were not entitled to a lien upon the said fully paid-up shares.

At the trial a dispute arose between the parties as to the day from which interest on the moneys due began to run. The defendant company contended that the allotment was complete on the 9th of August, 1895, and that therefore interest began to run from the 16th of August, 1895, seven days' grace being allowed; on the other hand, the plaintiffs alleged that the allotment was not complete till the 31st of August, 1895, and that consequently the interest did not begin to run till the 7th of September following. Evidence was produced in support of each contention.

On the further questions raised by the action the following arguments were delivered.

Renshaw, Q.C., and Kerly, for the plaintiffs.—The provisions of the articles require that before a member's shares can be forfeited notice must be given to that member; but a deceased member's executors, who have not been registered, are not members within the definition clause. After the company knew of the death of Zuccani, notice sent by them to his registered address is not sufficient: New Zealand Gold Extraction Co. v. Peacock, [1894] 1 Q. B. 622; James v. Buena Ventura Nitrate Grounds Syndicate (Limited), 44 W. R. 372, [1896] 1 Ch. 456; In re Bowling and Welby's Contract, 43 W. R. 417, [1895] 1 Ch. 663. The company can have no lien over the fully-paid shares. That is a matter of contract. The company cannot alter the vested rights of a member retrospectively, though they may be able to do so prospectively: James v. Buena Ventura Nitrate Grounds Syndicate (Limited), per Rigby, LJ., [1896] 1 Ch., at p. 466. Moreover, no notice of the proposed special resolution dealing with the alteration in the articles was given to the executors, notwithstanding that the company knew that Zuccani was dead.

Warrington, Q.C., and Dunham, for the defendant company.—The notice was properly served by being sent addressed to the deceased at his registered address. We rely upon that as a proper service. Until there has been a change in the register, the deceased member was the only person to be served with the notice: James v. Buena Ventura Nitrate Grounds Syndicate (Limited). Lord Herschell says ([1896] 1 Ch.) on p. 464 that "member" as used in some of the articles of the company must be held to include those whose names are on the register, though they are no longer living. This is an instance in point. If in this case such a service is not good, then the whole of the business of the company might be brought to a standstill. Notice of the special resolution was also sent to the registered address, and article 74 provides that the non-receipt of such a notice should not invalidate the meetings. This was not a special resolution which was to fundamentally alter the company, and it is valid: Andrews v. Gas Meter Co., 45 W. R. 321, [1897] 1 Ch. 361. It was part of Zuccani's contract with the company that the articles might be altered: Pépé v. City and Suburban Building Society, 41 W. R. 548, [1893] 2 Ch. 311.

Renshaw, Q.C., replied.

KEKEWICH, J., after reviewing the facts of the case, came to the conclusion that the allotment was not complete until the 31st of August, 1895, and that interest did not begin to run until the 7th of September; that the company were wrong in charging interest from the 16th of August; that their power to forfeit for non-payment of interest depended on an erroneous calculation; and that therefore the forfeiture was invalid. On the remaining questions raised, his lordship continued as follows: Now as to the question of notice. Before this notice of forfeiture was issued—that is to say, the notice of the 4th of June, 1897—Zuccani was dead. The company served the notice by sending it in a registered letter to him at his registered address; they also served a copy of the notice on all the executors jointly and on each of them severally. Mr. Warrington was content to rely only on the notice to the dead man. The service on the executors shows that the company knew that Zuccani was dead. Now, the question is this, Was the notice to the dead man sufficient? In the interpretation clause of the articles there is an interpretation of a "member." "Member" is stated to mean "a registered holder of any share or stock of the company." To my mind it is a mischievous practice to try to define any word like "member," which is already defined by section 23 of the Companies Act, 1862. The word does not mean anything more than a registered holder of a share in the company, and Zuccani was on the register though he was dead, and for some purposes he continued to be a member through his estate. But then, can you treat him as being a member so as to give him notice? To a certain extent you can. The case of James v. Buena Ventura Nitrate Grounds Syndicate (Limited) settles that, for very many purposes, the estate of a dead member is entitled to the privileges and subject to the liabilities of membership. That seems to me to go a very little way towards deciding this question. Can a company give a dead man notice so as to alter his rights and otherwise impose, not a new liability, but a liability arising out of the articles of association so as to be able to enforce it against his estate? The Court of Appeal in New Zealand Gold Extraction Co. (Limited) v. Peacock showed the importance of holding that a notice to a dead man was good if there was not anyone else to whom notice could be given—that is, if the company at the time had not had notice that he was dead. The present Master of the Rolls says ([1894] 1 Q. B.) on p. 631, "The articles are so drawn that they do not provide for dead men, nor for notice to dead men, nor for notice to anybody in the place of dead men. It is said that it is part of the bargain between the shareholders and the company that if a member dies and the company are going on and have no notice of his death, his estate cannot be called upon to pay calls. On the construction of the articles I think it obvious that no such bargain was intended. We must put a reasonable construction on the articles, and I have no doubt that the key to the difficulty is to be found in the suggestion made by Mr. Buckley, and that until notice of his death reaches the company calls may be made in respect of his shares by notice sent to his registered address just as if he were still a member. I have no doubt at all that that is the true construction of the articles. In order not to make these articles absurd, we must hold that a deceased member remains a member until notice is given." The Master of the Rolls does not say whether, if the company had notice of the death, a notice sent to the deceased's registered address would be sufficient; but he implies that in that event such a contention would be no longer tenable, and later on Lord Davey supplies the omission, for on p. 632 he says, "I do not think that if they had notice of the death of the member they could rely on service upon him at his registered place of address, and nothing that we say in this case touches that question," and further on he says, "I am prepared to adopt Mr. Buckley's suggestion and to hold that a deceased member or his estate remains a member for the purpose of the articles so long as his name remains on the register without notice to the company of his death." I see that, on p. 633, Lord Davey says, "It is the duty of the representatives of a deceased member to give notice of his death to the company at the earliest possible opportunity; and, if they wish the company not to go on treating him as still on the books, it is the duty of the executors to give notice to the company of their desire to become members in his place." I am not sure that I quite appreciate the full meaning of that, but it does not alter what I have read, and I take this to be the decision and the expression of the Court of Appeal, that when once the company have notice of the death of the member, they cannot serve notice of calls on him so as to bind his estate. Then there was the case of James v. Buena Ventura Nitrate Grounds Syndicate (Limited), and the case with which I have just dealt was there referred to in the arguments of counsel for both the appellants and respondents, and by the learned judges. Lord Herschell says, on p. 464: "It is, no doubt, the fact that, strictly speaking, although Mr. James's name was at the time of the resolution of April, 1893, still on the register, he was not, being dead, a member of the company. It seems to me, however, perfectly clear that the word 'member,' as used in some of the articles of the company, must be held to include those whose names are on the register, though they are no longer living." That has been quoted to me as meaning that the deceased shareholder was still a member for all purposes; but Lord Herschell expressly confines it to some purposes. Rigby, L.J., also deals with the point, for on p. 467 he says: "The liability for calls exists notwithstanding the fact that the required notice cannot be given to a dead man, because it may be given to his representatives; though, if the company is not aware of his death, notice served at his registered address is sufficient when the articles provide for such service upon members"; and he cites the case of New Zealand Gold Extraction Co. v. Peacock. Therefore I think I may say that the Court of Appeal not only did not mean to depart from the prior case, but they adopted it, and I take those two cases as saying that a company cannot, after they have notice of the death, effectively serve a notice of call on the deceased member, and the same proposition seems to me to apply equally well to a notice of forfeiture for non-payment of calls. In this case the articles provide for what is to be done on the death of a shareholder by his executors. It sometimes happens that the executors do not want to be registered. Mr. Buckley, in his comments on article 12 of Table A, points out the necessity of carrying the article further, and on p. 497 (7th ed.) he says: "To escape the disadvantage under which the company is thus placed in having for holders of its shares merely representative members, whose liability is limited by the amount of the assets of their testator, provisions have been commonly introduced into articles of association putting upon executors a pressure either to transfer their testator's shares or to become in their own persons proprietors in respect of them, by attaching the penalty of forfeiture to a neglect to do either one or the other within a limited time." My recollection of the old chartered companies is that there was a very special clause always inserted providing that the executors must come in within a certain time, and there was a strong power given to the company not to pay dividends to those who did not come in. But there is no special clause here, and its absence puts the company in a considerable difficulty. If they cannot call on the executors to come in and they cannot give notice to the dead man, there is a deadlock, but I cannot help that. I think it would be wrong for me to say that because the company are brought to a deadlock by their constitution, therefore the company can give notice to a dead man. I am of opinion, therefore, that this notice is bad, both for this reason and for the reason with which I have already dealt.

Now as to the question of lien. It has been argued that Zuccani had fully-paid shares which by contract were excepted from the lien which the company otherwise would have, and that he could not be deprived of the benefit of that exception by special resolution. Article 29 provides for that. That defines his right; but it was also his right—or rather his liability—to have the articles altered by special resolution. I think that Pépé v. City and Suburban Building Society shows that the liability to have the articles altered by a special resolution cannot be got rid of by calling it a contract. Notice of the intended alteration was given to Zuccani after he was dead, and after the company knew that he was dead. What I have already said when dealing with the notice of forfeiture applies also to this notice. But there is another consideration, and that is that Zuccani was the only holder of fully-paid shares, and he owed the company money in respect of shares which were not fully paid. It appears that the only object of passing this special resolution was to get payment of what was due on the shares not fully paid up by a lien on the fully paid-up shares, and that this resolution was aimed at that object and no other. I think there is a good deal of substance in the question whether you can alter the articles in such circumstances. In his judgment in James v. Buena Ventura Nitrate Grounds Syndicate (Limited) Rigby, L.J., says: "But even if this were not so, no majority of the shareholders, even by special resolution purporting to alter the regulations of the company, could retrospectively affect, to the prejudice of non-consenting owners of paid-up shares, the rights already existing under article 27" (i.e., article 27 of Table A). I take the liberty of saying that the remarks of the learned lord justice commend themselves to my views of justice. This part of the case has not been so fully argued before me as the rest of the case, and I have come to my decision on other grounds, but I think it would be a monstrous injustice to the circumstances to say that all the other members of the company can meet and decide that the article can be altered, and that the fully paid-up shares, which one, and only one, member holds, shall from a certain day be held as a security for what is due from that one member in respect of his other shares which are not fully paid up. However, I have said enough on other grounds to come to a conclusion in this case.

Solicitors, Kerly, Son, & Verden; Mayo & Co.

Chan. Div.
Bozens-Hardy, J. } June 7, 14.

VIDITZ v. O'HAGAN. (a.)

Infant—Marriage articles—Covenant to settle after-acquired property—Married woman—Repudiation—Reasonable time—Austrian law—Post-nuptial settlement—Rectification.

Marriage articles entered into by the intending wife, an Irish woman), the intending husband (an Austrian), the father of the lady, and English trustees, drawn up English form, but executed in Switzerland, will be treated as governed by English law as regards property in this country.

Marriage articles of the above kind cannot be revoked by a post-nuptial document executed by the husband and wife in conformity with the law of Austria, where both parties were domiciled, although the document is by that law valid and effective.

A covenant in marriage articles by the intending wife, an an infant, to settle after-acquired property is as against her voidable, not void, and binds her after the marriage, unless repudiated within a reasonable time after coming of age.

Cooper v. Cooper, L. R. 13 App. Cas. 88, 36 W. R. 98, explained.

To repudiate such a covenant upon becoming entitled to property many years after coming of age is not repudiating within a reasonable time.

Smith v. Lucas, 30 W. R. 451, L. R. 18 Ch. D. 531, considered.

Semble, that repudiation of such a covenant must be made once for all.

Action.

This was an action by a married lady, her husband, and children (who were all of age), to obtain payment from the trustees of her marriage settlement of certain sums of money which the trustees considered were part of the settled funds under a covenant on the part of the lady to settle her after-acquired property. The trustees were defendants. The lady, Mrs. Viditz, the only child of an Irish peer and an infant of eighteen years, married her husband, the plaintiff Charles Viditz, who was a domiciled Austrian, on the 24th of November, 1864. Shortly before the marriage, articles were entered into at the British Embassy at Berne, between Charles Viditz of the one part, Mrs. Viditz, then a spinster, of the second part, certain trustees of the third part, and the lady's father of the fourth part, and it was thereby declared and agreed, and Mr. Viditz covenanted with the trustees, that in case the intended marriage should take place all such personal property as Mrs. Viditz was then entitled to in possession, reversion, remainder, or expectancy, and also all such sums of money, stocks, funds, or other personal property, whether in possession, remainder, or expectancy, as might at any time during the joint lives of the husband and wife come to the wife or to her and her husband in her right under any will, settlement, or by gift or otherwise (save and except pecuniary legacies), should be assured to and vested in the trustees upon the usual trusts for the benefit of the wife for life for her separate use, with a restraint upon anticipation, and after her death upon certain trusts for the issue of the marriage, with an ultimate trust for her father absolutely. There was a provision empowering the father to alter and vary any of the provisions, clauses, matters, or things therein contained, and to add or supply any other provisions, clauses, matters, or things which might be deemed necessary or proper. These articles were duly executed by the lady, who attained twenty-one in 1867. In 1870, on the death of the lady's mother, she became entitled to a sum of money which was paid over to the trustees of the deed of 1864 and invested in Consols. In 1880 a deed in English form was executed in Paris, and it purported to be a settlement in pursuance of the articles. Mr. and Mrs. Viditz and the trustees and her father were all parties. It recited the investment of the Consols and declared trusts of that sum similar, so far as material, to the trusts in the articles, and it contained a covenant to settle after-acquired property different from the covenant in the articles, inasmuch as pecuniary legacies were not excepted. In 1882 the father died, and Mrs. Viditz thereupon became entitled in possession to a sum of about £2,000, which was received by the trustees of the settlement and invested. The two sums above mentioned were sums to which Mrs. Viditz was at the date of her marriage entitled in reversion contingently upon attaining twenty-one. The father by his will left all his property to charity. Litigation ensued, and Mrs. Viditz sought to set aside the will. The result was that a compromise of the probate action was effected in March, 1884, under which a sum of £13,000 was to be settled upon her and her children, and a sum of £5,000 was to be paid to her. No part of this sum had been received, however. In 1892 Mrs. Viditz became entitled under the will of an aunt to a legacy, which also had not yet been received. In the same year the trustees informed Mrs. Viditz that the £5,000 expressed to be payable to her under the compromise would have to be paid to the trustees of her marriage settlement. This led to advice being taken, and on the 18th of November, 1893, a document was executed by Mr. and Mrs. Viditz in Austria by which they purported to annul and put an end to the settlement. It was proved that according to Austrian law it was competent to a husband and wife to revoke a marriage contract, notwithstanding the birth of issue.

(a) Reported by NEVILLE TEBBUTT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The plaintiffs Mr. and Mrs. Viditz and others now asked in this action a declaration that the settlement created by the deeds of 1864 and 1880 had been got rid of by the transaction of 1893, or, alternatively, they asked for the rectification of the settlement so far as it went beyond the articles, and in particular they asserted that the settlement, if binding at all, was only b nding to the extent of the funds actually in the hands of the trustees, and that it was competent to the lady to repudiate the settlement so far as the £5,000 and the legacy were concerned.

Eve, Q.C., and Micklem, for the plaintiffs.—Mrs. Viditz being an infant when she entered into the articles, they would not bind her until ratification: Cooper v. Cooper, L. R. 13 App. Cas. 88, at p. 106, 36 W. R. Dig. 98; Smith v. Lucas, 30 W. R. 451, 18 Ch. D. 531. In 1880, when Mrs. Viditz ratified the articles by the settlement of the 12th of June, her domicil was Austrian, and consequently the ratified contract would be governed by Austrian law. According to that law a husband and wife can revoke the marriage contract, and consequently the notarial act of the 18th of November, 1893, annulled the marriage articles and the settlement of 1880. Ratification of a contract by a married woman does not operate once and for all, but pro tanto as regards property to which the lady becomes for the time being entitled: Smith v. Lucas. Even if the trustees were right in retaining the funds already in their hands, they are bound to pay over the £5,000 and the legacy to Mrs. Viditz.

Hughes, Q.C., and Ingpen, for the trustees.—The articles being in English form are governed by English law: Van Grutten v. Digby, 11 W. R. 230, 31 Beav. 561. They are voidable, but not void, as against Mrs. Viditz: Edwards v. Carter, [1893] A. C. 360; In re Hodson, 42 W. R. 531, [1894] 2 Ch. 421; In re Vardon's Settlement, 33 W. R. 297, 28 Ch. D. 124. In Smith v. Lucas the settlement was post-nuptial, and therefore executed while the lady was under coverture: see observations of Pearson, J., in Burnaby v. Equitable Reversionary Interest Society, 33 W. R. 639, 28 Ch. D., 416, at p. 423.

They also cited Seaton v. Seaton, 36 W. R. 865, 13 App. Cas. 61; Sottomayor v. De Barros, 26 W. R. 455, 27 W. R. 917, 3 P. D. 1, 5 P. D. 94; Harvey v. Farnie, 31 W. R. 433, 8 App. Cas. 43; and Udney v. Udney, L. R. 1 H. L. Sc. 441, 17 W. R. H. L.

G. D. Lynch, for other defendants (mortgagees of a share of one of the children).

Cur. adv. vult.

June 14.—COZENS-HARDY, J.—The articles before marriage were obviously drawn up in English form, and must be treated as governed by English law, without reference to the formalities or the substantial provisions which would have been required either by the law of Austria or that of Switzerland: Van Grutten v. Digby. The first question which arises for my decision is this—What was the effect of the deed of 1864 executed by Mrs. Viditz while a spinster and a minor? So far as I am concerned this is settled by authority which is binding upon me. In Edwards v. Carter it was decided by the House of Lords that a covenant in a marriage settlement by a male infant is voidable and not void, that it is not necessary to show ratification or confirmation by the infant after attaining majority, and that unless he repudiates within a reasonable time he is absolutely bound. In In re Hodson Chitty, J., applied this doctrine to the case of a covenant by a female infant. In the present case it is clear that, if actual intention to ratify or confirm was necessary—although I hold it to be unnecessary—such intention is abundantly proved. In my judgment it is wholly unnecessary to consider whether, according to the law of Austria, Mrs. Viditz could have made a new disposition of her property at the time when she ratified and confirmed. The question is, Was there repudiation within a reasonable time, and not, has there been ratification or confirmation? To the extent, therefore, of the sums of money received by the trustees in 1870 and 1882, I think the settlement of 1864 is binding, and the attempted revocation in 1893 is inoperative. It remains to consider whether the £5,000 payable under the compromise and the legacy under the will of 1892 are or whether either of them is bound by the settlement. As to the £5,000 it is urged that Sir George Jessel in Smith v. Lucas held that the right to repudiate exists during the coverture, and may be exercised from time to time in respect of any property which may fall in. But this seems to me to be inconsistent with the decision of the House of Lords in Edwards v. Carter—see especially the observations of Lord Herschell at p. 365. It is not a covenant by an infant married woman, which would be void—Seaton v. Seaton—but a covenant by an infant spinster, which is no longer voidable. I must treat the case just as if the lady had attained twenty-one when she executed the articles. I am not sure that it is necessary to add that, according to Austrian law, Mrs. Viditz has absolute power to dispose of all her property, notwithstanding coverture.

I prefer to treat the £5,000 as bound in equity by the covenant in the deed of 1864. Reliance was placed by counsel for the plaintiff on the case of Cooper v. Cooper, and especially upon a passage in the judgment of Lord Watson at p. 106. In that case an Irish lady, while an infant, was married in Dublin to a Scotchman. A deed was executed by her in 1846 by which the husband covenanted to pay her £80 a year, in the event of her surviving him, during life, and by which she accepted that provision in full satisfaction of all terce of lands, half or third of movables, and every other thing that she jure relictæ or otherwise could ask, claim, or demand from the husband in case she should survive him. On the husband's death the widow sought to reduce the contract of 1846, and it was held by the House of Lords that she was entitled to this relief. It is to be observed that this was not a contract disposing of her property, and probably was not a contract for her benefit, and that it may well have been held that it was time enough for her to repudiate when her husband had died, for, had she predeceased him, there would have been nothing to repudiate. Lord Watson says at p. 106, "I agree with your lordships that the discharge which she seeks to set aside cannot stand in the way of her claiming her legal rights as a Scotch widow. The rule seems to be clear that an infant cannot, during minority, effectually subject herself to any contractual obligation which cannot be shown to have been for her benefit. She may ratify the contract after attaining twenty-one and so become liable to implement it, but in the circumstances of the present case any such ratification of the contract would, according to the law of Scotland, have been revocable by her as a donation inter virum et uxorem." These observations may have had reference to a transaction between the husband and wife in 1863, but in any event they were not necessary for the decision of the case. As Lord Macnaghten observed at p. 108, "Primâ facie, Mrs. Cooper was not bound by the settlement. Primâ facie, it was voidable by her, and she is elected to avoid it. It is not alleged that she has done any act to confirm it, if not binding upon her at the time of its execution." I do not think there is any inconsistency between Cooper v. Cooper and Edwards v. Carter. I may add that Lord Watson was a party to the decision in Edwards v. Carter.

As to the legacy, different considerations apply. It is expressly excepted from the covenant to settle after-acquired property in the articles of 1864. It is only covered by the wider covenant in the settlement of 1880. At that date Mrs. Viditz was a married woman. The deed of 1880 was invalid according to Austrian law and according to French law. And according to the law of England at that date it was also inoperative as to future separate estate. The deed of 1880 goes beyond the articles of 1864 in a material respect. [His lordship had intimated during the argument that the clause in the articles enabling the father to alter the provisions would not enable him to enlarge the scope so as to bring in fresh property.] Rectification was asked at the bar, though this relief is not distinctly included in the claim. I do not understand that, assuming the articles of 1864 to bind Mrs. Viditz, any objection is raised to the terms of the deed of 1880 except in respect of the covenant. I therefore propose to rectify the settlement of 1880 by expressly excluding all pecuniary legacies. I think I shall be justified in directing the trustees to pay the costs of the plaintiffs as between solicitor and client and to retain their own costs and costs, charges, and expenses properly incurred out of the trust estate standing in their names.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Kearsey, Hawes, & Walsh.

Solicitors for the defendants, Blount, Lynch, & Petre.

Chan. Div.
Cozens-Hardy, J. } May 10, 11, 16.

HARTLEY v. MADDOCKS. (a.)

Deed—Construction—Feoffment—Rent-charge—Eviction from part of land—Apportionment of rent-charge—Distinction between grant and reservation of rent.

By a deed of feoffment made in 1840 A., in consideration of the rent thereinafter reserved, enfeoffed land to B. and his heirs, to the use that A. and his heirs should receive thereout the said rent, and subject to and charged as aforesaid, to the usual uses to bar dower in favour of B.; and, by the same deed, for the consideration aforesaid, B. granted to A. and his heirs the above-mentioned rent and covenanted to pay the same rent. Part of the land having been recently recovered by title paramount, a question arose whether the rent-charge ought to be apportioned or still continued to be payable in full.

Held, that, a rent-charge being reserved to A. on the face of the deed in priority to B.'s estate in fee, no effect could be given to B.'s grant to A. of the same rent.

Held, therefore, according to the distinction drawn in Co. Litt., p. 148b, between the grant of a rent and the reservation of a rent in respect of apportionment, that the above-mentioned rent, being a rent reserved, was apportionable.

(a.) Reported by J. F. WALEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Action.

The substantial claim in this action was for a declaration apportioning a chief rent created by means of a limitation taking effect under the Statute of Uses as the consideration for a feoffment of land of the 29th of September, 1840, part of the land having been recently recovered by title paramount. This part of the land enfeoffed was, in fact, leasehold, held under an old lease for years, on the expiration of which the reversioner brought ejectment. The terms of the feoffment are sufficiently stated in the judgment.

Methold, for the plaintiff.—Co. Litt. 148*b* distinguishes between the reservation and the grant of a rent, and shows that rent reserved is apportionable on eviction of part of the land by title paramount, but secus where there is a grant of the rent.

Hugo Young, Q.C., and Clare, for the defendant.—Rent reserved out of freehold and leasehold land is charged on the freehold only (Co. Litt. 147*b*, Butt's case, 7 Rep. 23*a*), so the rent now in question was never charged on anything but the freehold portion, of which there has been no eviction. [COZENS-HARDY, J.—Was not this a tortious conveyance of the whole fee?] Moreover, this rent is granted as well as reserved, and the defendant is entitled to rely on the grant. The grantor would be estopped from denying that he had the land on which he had charged the rent-charge, and so are his successors. The passage on apportionment cited from Coke refers to common law reservation, and does not apply to reservation by the Statute of Uses.

They also referred to Davidson's Precedents, vol. 2, part 1, and to Burton's Real Property (ed. 1850), 349.

Methold replied.

COZENS-HARDY, J.—By a feoffment dated the 29th of September, 1840, and made between George Bramwell of the first part, John Bailey of the second part, and Thomas Mycock of the third part, it was witnessed that in consideration of the rent thereinafter reserved and limited in use, and of the covenants thereinafter contained on the part of Bailey, Bramwell granted, bargained, sold, enfeoffed, and confirmed unto Bailey and his heirs certain property at Stockport to hold to Bailey, his appointees, heirs, and assigns, to the use, intent, and purpose that Bramwell, his heirs and assigns, should for ever receive and take thereout one clear yearly rent of £12 1s. 2½d., and there were the ordinary legal powers to enter and distrain and receive the rents and profits; and the deed proceeded: "And subject to and charged as aforesaid" to the usual uses to bar dower in favour of Bailey. By a second witnessing part "for the consideration aforesaid" Bailey granted to Bramwell, his heirs and assigns, for ever, "the clear yearly rent of £12 1s. 2½d. hereinbefore mentioned to be issuing out of and payable from the land hereby enfeoffed," and Bailey covenanted to pay the clear yearly rent as and in manner thereinbefore appointed. Part of the property comprised in the conveyance has been recovered by title paramount, the interest of Bramwell in 1840 in this part having been in truth only for the residue of an expired term of years. In these circumstances the question which arises for my decision is whether the rent-charge ought to be apportioned, or whether it still continues to be payable in full, although the purchaser or persons claiming through him have been deprived of part of the land. In my opinion this is a case in which the rent is apportionable. In Co. Litt., p. 148*b*, a distinction is drawn between the grant of a rent and the reservation of a rent, it being pointed out that in the former case the rent will continue payable notwithstanding that the grantor may not have a title to the whole of the land "for against his own grant he shall not take advantage of the weakness of his own estate in part," but in the latter case "seeing the rent is reserved out of and for the whole land it is reason that when part is evicted by an elder title that the donee should not be charged with the whole rent but that it should be apportioned rateably according to the value of the land." And a little further down Coke says: "If the king gave two acres of land to another in fee, reserving a rent, and the one acre is evicted by a title paramount, the rent shall be apportioned." It was argued that the doctrine thus laid down by Coke applies only where the rent is strictly reserved, and not to a case where the rent is created by means of a limitation taking effect under the Statute of Uses. I think, however, this is too narrow a view. On the face of the deed of 1840 the rent is treated as "reserved or limited in use." The rights of the parties ought not to depend upon the mode in which, that which in effect is a reserved rent-charge, was created. It took effect out of Bramwell's estate in fee by virtue of his own assurance, and Bailey took nothing except subject to and charged with the rent. It was further argued that the second witnessing part operated as a grant by Bailey, so that the passage quoted from Coke was really an authority against the apportionment. I am unable, however, to give any meaning or effect to this second witnessing part. The rent-charge was prior to Bailey's estate in fee. Bramwell already had that rent-charge, not by virtue of any grant from Bailey, but by means of Bramwell's own conveyance to uses. It was absurd for Bailey "for the consideration aforesaid" to grant that which was already vested in Bramwell. The result is that, in my opinion, the rent must be apportioned. The apportionment ought to be, not according to acreage, but according to the respective values of the properties at the date of the eviction.

Solicitors, Rowcliffes, Rawle, & Co., for Oliver Coppock, Stockport; Arnould & Son, for Henry Maddocks, Coventry.

Q. B. Div.
(Day and Lawrance, JJ.) } May 31.

BREARLEY v. MORLEY. (a.)

Licensing law—Public entertainment—Singing and music—Pianoforte in hotel smoking-room—User by customers—Public Health Act Amendment Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 59), s. 51.

The appellant, who was the occupier of a fully-licensed inn, kept a pianoforte in the smoking-room of the inn. Pianoforte music and singing was frequently performed in the room, the performers being the ordinary customers of the inn giving their services gratuitously, and performing for the entertainment of their friends and the other customers of the inn then using the smoking-room. No charge was made for admission to the room. The room was not licensed for public singing or music.

Held, that the room had not been "kept or used" for public singing or music within the meaning of section 51, sub-section 1, of the Public Health Act Amendment Act, 1890.

Case stated by justices for the borough of Batley, in the West Riding of Yorkshire.

An information was preferred by the respondent against the appellant charging that the appellant, on the 17th of December, 1898, was the occupier of a certain room situate and forming part of a house known as the West End Hotel, in Upper Commercial-street, Batley, which room was then unlawfully kept and used for public singing and music without a licence. The justices convicted the appellant, and fined him five shillings.

The following facts were proved at the hearing: Part IV. of the Public Health Act Amendment Act, 1890, had been adopted and was still in operation in the borough.

The appellant was a licensed victualler and the occupier of the fully-licensed inn, alehouse, or victualler's house and premises known as the West End Hotel. No licence for public singing and music or for any other public entertainment of the like kind had been granted to the appellant for the house or any room or part thereof pursuant to Part IV. of the Public Health Act Amendment Act, 1890. The appellant, at the date in question and for some time past, kept a pianoforte in one of the rooms of the hotel, which room was used by the public, being the smoking-room of the hotel.

At 10.25 p.m. on the 17th of December, 1898, being an hour at which the house and premises were open to the public for the sale of intoxicating liquor, a number of men were assembled in the room; one man was playing on the pianoforte an accompaniment for another man who was singing a song, and the other men were sitting round the room apparently listening, though some of them may have been talking. The performers were ordinary customers at the house, and were not servants of the appellant or paid or in any way remunerated by him for their performance, and they performed quite gratuitously and of their own free will and accord. Pianoforte music and singing of the same nature by customers for the entertainment and amusement of themselves and their friends and the customers present in the said room was performed almost always on Saturday evenings, and sometimes on Friday evenings and generally at feast times and holidays. No charge was made for admission to the room when such music and singing took place; the usual charge being made for the actual refreshments ordered by, and supplied to, the customers. The appellant knew of the facts and knowingly permitted the room to be used in the manner stated. It was contended for the appellant that the room was not kept or used for public singing and music within the meaning of the Act of 1890.

The justices were of opinion that the user of the room for singing and music had been and was so frequent and regular that it was in fact ordinary and habitual; that it formed a substantial part of the entertainment for which the room was used; that the music and singing were open freely and without restrictions to such of the public as were customers at the inn. The justices on these grounds convicted the appellant of the offence charged.

The Public Health Act Amendment Act, 1890, section 51.—For the regulation of places ordinarily used for public dancing or music or other public entertainment of the like kind the following provisions shall have effect—namely,

(1) After the expiration of six months from the adoption of this part of this Act, a house, room, garden, or other place whether licensed or not for the sale of wine, spirits, beer, or other fermented or distilled liquors, shall not be kept or used for public dancing, singing, music, or other public entertainment of the like kind without a licence for the purpose or purposes for which the same respectively is to be used first obtained from the licensing justices of the licensing district in which the house, room, garden, or place is situate, and for the registration thereof a fee of five shillings shall be paid by the person applying therefor:

(a.) Reported by F. O. ROBINSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

(5) Any house, room, garden, or place kept or used for any of the purposes aforesaid without such licence first obtained, shall be deemed a disorderly house, and the person occupying or rated as occupier of the same shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding five pounds for every day on which the same is kept or used for any of the purposes last aforesaid.

Beverley, for the appellant.—It was not necessary for a licence to be obtained for this room. The room was not kept or used for music or singing, and no public entertainment took place.

Roskill, for the respondent.—The justices have rightly found on the facts proved that the room was kept and used for the purpose of public singing and music within the meaning of the Act of 1890, and the appellant was therefore rightly convicted. The publicity of the entertainment was the gist of the offence. It is immaterial that the customers themselves performed the music, provided that the entertainment was public, as it was. It is to be observed that the language of the former Act (25 Geo. 2, c. 36, s. 2) was merely "kept," whereas in the Act of 1890 the words "or used" are added, and the effect of this is to enlarge the scope of the enactment considerably, for the occupier may now be be convicted, although the user may have been not by him, but by other persons.

He cited Marks v. Benjamin, 5 M. & W. 565; Bellis v. Beal, 2 Esp. 592; Bellis v. Burghall, 2 Esp. 722; Shutt v. Lewis, 5 Esp. 128; Hall v. Green, 9 Ex. Ch. 247, 2 W. R. Dig. 175; Gregory v. Tavernor, 6 C. & P. 280; Gregory v. Tuffs, 6 C. & P. 271; Archer v. Willingrice, 4 Esp. 186; Guaglieni v. Matthews, 13 W. R. 679, 6 B. & S. 474.

DAY, J.—I am of opinion that this conviction cannot be supported. The facts do not show that the room was "kept or used" for public singing or music. There was no providing of a public entertainment in any shape or form. All that happened was that the appellant kept a piano in the smoking-room, and the customers who came to his house used the piano. They were, in my opinion, entitled to do so, just as much as they were entitled to use the chairs and stools. There was not, however, anything in the nature of a public entertainment of any sort or kind, and the case does not come within the statute.

LAWRANCE, J.—I am of the same opinion.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Ullithorne & Co., for James Law, Batley.

Solicitors for the respondents, Badham & Williams, or Trevor Edwards, Wakefield.

Q. B. Div.
(Wills and Kennedy, JJ.) April 12, 14.

In re AN APPLICATION UNDER THE SOLICITORS ACT, 1843. (a.)

Solicitor—Certificate—Suspension of solicitor—Application after suspension for certificate—Discretion of Incorporated Law Society to refuse—Solicitors Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 73), ss. 23, 24.

A solicitor was suspended from practice for professional misconduct, and during the period of suspension he became bankrupt. After the period of suspension had expired, he—being an undischarged bankrupt—applied, under section 23 of the Solicitors Act, 1843, to the registrar of the Incorporated Law Society for a certificate, but the registrar refused to grant the certificate upon the ground that the applicant was an undischarged bankrupt; the applicant thereupon applied under section 24 to the court for an order that the certificate should be granted.

Held, that the registrar was not bound under section 23 to issue a certificate, but had a discretion to refuse to issue the same, and that, upon application to the court under section 24, the court were not bound to make an order for the issuing of the certificate, but could make such order "as shall be just"; and that in this case the discretion of the registrar should not be interfered with.

Application under section 24 of the Solicitors Act, 1843, for an order directing the Incorporated Law Society to issue a certificate to the applicant enabling him to practise as a solicitor.

On the 3rd of August, 1896, the applicant, a solicitor, was suspended from practice for two years as from the 3rd of November, 1896. He was so suspended for professional misconduct, and during the time of his suspension he became a bankrupt. At the time when his suspension expired he applied to the Incorporated Law Society for the renewal of his certificate. At the time when he so applied he was an undischarged bankrupt, and the registrar refused to issue the certificate to him upon the ground that he was then an undischarged bankrupt. He then made the present application to the court under section 24 of the Solicitors Act, 1843, and at the date of the application he was still an undischarged bankrupt.

The Solicitors Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 73), provides—section 23: "For the purpose of obtaining such registrar's certificate as aforesaid, a declaration in writing, signed by such attorney or solicitor or by his partner . . . shall be delivered to the said registrar . . . and the said registrar shall, after the expiration of six days after the delivery of such declaration (unless he shall see cause and have reason to believe that the party applying for such certificate is not upon the said roll of attorneys or solicitors), deliver to the said attorney or solicitor, or to his agent, on demand, a certificate, &c."

Section 24: "In case the said registrar shall decline to issue such certificate as he is hereinbefore directed and required to give, the party so applying for the same, if an attorney, shall and may apply to any of the said courts of law at Westminster, or to any judge thereof, or if a solicitor, to the Master of the Rolls, who are hereby respectively authorized to make such order in the matter as shall be just, and to order payment of costs by and to either of the parties, if they shall see fit."

Robson, Q.C., and C. E. Jones, for the applicant.

Hollams, for the Incorporated Law Society.

Cur. adv. vult.

April 14.—WILLS, J.—An application has been made to us in this case under section 24 of the Solicitors Act, 1843, to make an order in the following circumstances: The Incorporated Law Society, acting as the Registrar of the Roll of Solicitors, has refused to deliver to the applicant the certificate the delivery of which is provided for by section 23 of the Act, the result of which is that he cannot practice. The application is made under section 24, which says that if the registrar shall decline to issue a certificate the solicitor may apply to any of the courts of common law at Westminster—now to the High Court—who are authorised to make such order in the matter as shall be just. It has been suggested that that section is no longer operative. I need not go through the sections of subsequent Acts which were relied upon as supporting that proposition, as I have no doubt that the section is still operative. Then we have section 25 of the same Act which refers to cases where a solicitor neglects, for more than the prescribed time, to take out a certificate, and provides that in those circumstances the registrar shall not issue his certificate except upon the order of the Master of the Rolls, or of the court. That section has been repealed by subsequent legislation, and the substituted sections now provide that if the certificate is not taken out for more than twelve months it shall be necessary, if the registrar refuse to grant it, to apply to the Master of the Rolls for an order that the solicitor shall be allowed to take out his certificate afresh. That, however, is now immaterial. What is material to the present purpose is that the Act of 1843 contained both the provision under which the application is now made to us and a provision substantially the same as that which is now in force—namely, that where there was a neglect on the part of the solicitor to take out his certificate within the specified period, then it should not be granted by the registrar without the leave of a court or a judge and without the leave of the Master of the Rolls. It has been argued that under section 23 the only case in which the registrar is at liberty to refuse to deliver a certificate is where there is a question as to the identity of the person applying with somebody who is on the rolls, and that the registrar has an absolute statutory duty, if there be no difficulty of that kind, to deliver the certificate; and the tenour of the argument has rather been that under section 24 the jurisdiction of the judge or of the court is limited to dealing with that question. I cannot take that view. It would be as absurd and unsatisfactory a piece of legislation as one could imagine that where a man has simply failed at the proper time to take out his certificate he should not be allowed to do so without inquiry and without satisfying the court that there is no reason against his being re-admitted, where there is nothing known against him, and where he has only failed to take out his certificate within the proper time, and yet that in a case in which he has been guilty of grave offences which have brought upon him the serious consequence of suspension from practice, he should have an absolute unqualified right upon the expiration of the period of suspension to go back to practice. The proposition answers itself, and nothing but the strongest words in an Act of Parliament could induce a court to take such a view of the legislation. Is there anything in sections 23 and 24 which requires us to take such a view? I think not. The two sections must be looked at together, and although section 23, if it stood by itself, and were not supplemented in any way by section 24, might well be invoked as casting upon the registrar a positive statutory duty—except in the cases there provided for—to deliver a certificate, yet when we take section 24 in conjunction with it that cannot possibly have been the intention of Parliament. If section 23 had stood by itself, and if the registrar had failed to fulfil his statutory duty, he would have been liable to an action, or to proceedings by way of mandamus to compel him to perform his statutory duty. But under section 24, if the registrar fail to deliver a certificate, application is to be made to the court or judge, who is to make such order as seems just. It seems to me that that was intended to substitute section 24 for that which would otherwise be the remedy—namely, a mandamus to compel him to perform his statutory duty—and I cannot suppose that the Legislature ever intended that the courts should, under the Solicitors Act, 1843, part with the jurisdiction which they have always exercised of superintending the rolls of those who are entitled to practise in their own courts, or that it was intended to remove from them the original jurisdiction to see that these important functions were not entrusted to persons who presumably were not fit to exercise them. I think the meaning of the sections, taking the two together, is clear—namely, that primâ facie it shall be the duty of the registrar, except in cases of disputed identity, to deliver the certificate as a matter of course, but that if circumstances are brought to his knowledge which, in his opinion, render it necessary or desirable that the jurisdiction of the court or judge under section 24 should be invoked before he performed that which was primâ facie his duty in the regular course of things, then he should be at liberty to bring the matter before the court or a judge, and that the court or judge, having all the circumstances brought before them, should say whether or not it was a proper thing to do, and should make such order as should seem to them to be just. I have been assuming that a failure to apply for or to take out a certificate in circumstances like the present is not what is meant by "neglect" in section 25, and in those sections which have been substituted for it. It is not necessary to decide that specifically in this case; but that is my impression, and that impression is not qualified by what we are told has been the course pursued by the Master of the Rolls when applications have been made in circumstances like these under the sections of the Solicitors Act of 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 65) which undoubtedly give to the law society in the first instance, and to the Master of the Rolls afterwards on appeal from them, jurisdiction to entertain questions of this kind. Whether or not such cases strictly fall within the section, the only cases in which there can be an appeal to the Master of the Rolls are cases where the solicitor, as the applicant, has invoked the assistance of the law society under those sections and has failed there, and when he himself is the appellant to the Master of the Rolls. Naturally in such a case the Master of the Rolls, without going into the question whether it was originally a proper application or not under the section having reference to neglect, would say that it was an appeal and that being an appeal to him to exercise his jurisdiction he should impose such conditions as seemed to him to be proper. It is to be observed, also, that under section 19 of the Solicitors Act, 1888, the general inherent jurisdiction of the Master of the Rolls and of the judges of the High Court in respect of their control of the conduct of solicitors is expressly preserved. Therefore their general disciplinary jurisdiction remains exactly what it was before, and it has always been exercised to prevent improper persons from coming upon the rolls, and to see that improper persons upon proper application are removed from the rolls. I cannot doubt that that jurisdiction must also extend to seeing that, when the occasion has arisen for invoking the assistance of the court on behalf of the applicant, a proper case is made out for their interference. That brings me to the question of what is meant by the words that "the court shall make such order as shall be just." Here there is no controversy between the parties, and the interests which are at stake are those of the public. Due consideration has to be paid to the interests of the applicant on the one hand, but the due considerations which are to be required on the other hand, are not those with regard to some other person with whom the applicant has a controversy as to disputed legal rights, but they are those which concern the public generally and the important body to whom the applicant seeks to be restored. Therefore in those circumstances and with reference to the only class of cases which can come under this section, the expression "just" cannot be restricted to the narrower meaning it would have if the controversy were as to private rights between parties; and it must mean that which is right and fitting with regard to the public interests. With regard to the public interest there is no doubt what our answer ought to be. All that we know of the applicant in this case is that he was suspended for what must have been grave misconduct, because he was suspended for two years, and also that he has since that time become bankrupt and is at the present moment an undischarged bankrupt. When those facts are brought before us it seems to me it would be monstrous to say that any case has been made out which would make it just that we should give the assistance of the court to replace the applicant on the rolls. The result is that in a case of this kind where a solicitor has been suspended the same class of inquiry should be entered into, and that the court should require the same sort of security to guard themselves against making a mistake and allowing an improper person to get back into practice, as is required if he has failed for any reason which may involve no kind of imputation upon him to take out his certificate within the period mentioned in the statutes. It seems to me, therefore, that there cannot be any doubt that it is our duty to decline to accede to the application in the present case.

(a.) Reported by Sir SHERSTON BAKER, Bart., Barrister-at-Law.

RIDLEY, J.—I entirely agree. The application was made under section 24 of the Solicitors Act, 1843, requiring the court to do that which is just in the shape of ordering that a certificate should be issued to the applicant. The first answer to the application was that that section has been in effect repealed by subsequent legislation. I cannot accede to that proposition. I think that the subsequent sections that have been referred to are simply in addition to the sections in question, and in point of fact they do preserve section 24 with the same force and effect as it always has had. The next answer was that the application ought to have been made under the substituted section—section 16 of the Solicitors Act, 1888, which has been substituted for section 25 of the Solicitors Act, 1843, and that in point of fact this solicitor had neglected for twelve months after the expiration of his certificate to apply for a fresh certificate, and that therefore he ought to have proceeded under section 16 and gone to the Master of the Rolls to obtain his certificate. I think he cannot be said to have "neglected" to take out his certificate. The applicant being under a sentence of suspension could not neglect to take out his certificate. I do not therefore accede to either of the arguments put forward for the law society, and I think it is open to the court to entertain the application under section 24, this not being a case in which there has been neglect which would send the applicant under section 16 of the Act of 1888 to the Master of the Rolls. I think it is a case in which the applicant may come to the court and ask for such an order as shall be just under section 24 of the Act of 1843. What is the effect of section 24? It deals with a different matter to section 25. It deals with the refusal of the registrar to do the duty imposed on him by section 23—namely, the duty of granting the certificate unless he shall see cause for believing that the party applying is not upon the roll of solicitors. It has been argued by the applicant that because section 24 deals with that matter, therefore the words "as shall be just" must have reference to the precise duty which is placed upon the registrar, and that if the registrar fails to grant a certificate for any other reason than that specified in section 23, it would be the duty of the court to grant a certificate because that would be just. I cannot accept that argument because section 24 is really not required in the Act at all, as section 23 places upon the registrar a plain and precise duty, and if he fail to perform it he could be compelled to do so by mandamus, or proceedings might be taken against him. It is apparent, therefore, that the Legislature were considering that there might be other circumstances in the mind of the registrar that might make it desirable that he should not perform merely as a duty the obligation put upon him by section 23, as, for instance, if there were anything in the nature of misconduct, or anything that might make it undesirable that a person entitled primâ facie to his certificate should obtain it without being brought before the court. It is in that way, as I think, that the words "as shall be just" are to be construed, and that view is in accordance with the practice. There has been a discretion in the court over the admission of solicitors and over the renewal of certificates. I do not find any case to show that any application has been made under that section; but there is a case of Ex parte Grey, 5 Dow. & L. 275, which is to some extent a confirmation of that view. That was an application not under section 24, which we are now considering, but under section 25, because the solicitor had in point of fact failed to renew his certificate. Not having suffered any sentence of suspension he was in a position to apply for a certificate, and he had neglected to do so. The court refused the application simply in the exercise of its discretion. It would be impossible for us to say that it would be a just order for us to make in these circumstances that this certificate should now be granted. If proper materials were furnished it might be right that this application might be granted, and that the certificate might be renewed, but we have not got these materials before us. In this case I think we ought to come to the conclusion that it would not be just to make the order asked for. The court has a discretion over all such matters, and we ought not to exercise it unless we are clearly of opinion that it would be just to do so, and in order to see that it would be just we ought to have materials to guide us to the conclusion that the applicant has been, and is, a fit and proper person to have the certificate granted to him. That has not been done in this case, and I agree that we ought not to make the order asked for.

Application refused.

Solicitors for the applicant, E. C. Rawlings & Butt.

Solicitor for the Incorporated Law Society, S. P. Bucknill.

Court of Appeal.

From Q. B. Div. (Lindley, M.R., and Romer, L.J.) — June 16, 20.

PRITCHETT AND YOUNG v. ENGLISH AND COLONIAL SYNDICATE (LIMITED). (a.)

Practice — Garnishee order, action upon—Judgment—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 42, r. 24; ord. 45, rr. 1, 2, 7; Appendix K., Form 40.

Though a garnishor who has not received payment from the garnishee, a limited company, is not thereby entitled to petition for a winding up, he can bring an action under order 14 on the garnishee order, and obtain a judgment against the garnishee which may be made the foundation of winding-up proceedings.

(a.) Reported by R. C. MACKENZIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

In re Combined Weighing and Advertising Machine Co., 38 W. R. 67, 43 Ch. D. 99, discussed.

Appeal from Phillimore, J., at chambers.

The plaintiffs, who were judgment creditors of one Holdsworth for the sum of £3,459 9s. 4d., had obtained a garnishee order absolute in the usual form against the defendants, the English and Colonial Syndicate (Limited), for the sum of £99 6s. 7d., due by the defendants to Holdsworth. The garnishee order was not complied with, and it was found that the defendant syndicate had no property which could be reached by execution, but had property abroad out of which it could pay the amount, and which would become available if a winding-up order were made. The decision of the Court of Appeal in In re Combined Weighing and Advertising Machine Co., 38 W. R. 67, 43 Ch. D. 99, settled that a winding-up order could not be made on the petition of a garnishor as such; but it was sought by this action to obtain, by suing on the garnishee order, a judgment upon which, if necessary, winding-up proceedings could be taken against the syndicate. The action was commenced by a specially-indorsed writ, and the plaintiffs then applied for judgment under order 14. The defendant syndicate applied by summons under ord. 25, r. 4, that the plaintiff's statement of claim might be struck out as disclosing no cause of action. The master refused to strike out the statement of claim, and gave the plaintiffs judgment; and on an appeal Phillimore, J., at chambers affirmed the master's decision, but gave leave to appeal. The defendant syndicate appealed accordingly.

Llewelyn Davies, for the appeal, referred to R. S. C., 1883, ord. 45, r. 2; In re Combined Weighing and Advertising Machine Co.; Ex parte Chinery, In re Chinery, 32 W. R. 469, 12 Q. B. D. 342; Chatterton v. Watney, 29 W. R. 573, 17 Ch. D. 259; R. S. C., 1883, ord. 42, r. 24; Bailey v. Bailey, 32 W. R. 856, 13 Q. B. D. 855; and Westmoreland Green and Blue Slate Co. v. Feilden, 39 W. R. 379, [1891] 3 Ch. 15. [LINDLEY, M.R., referred to R. S. C., ord. 45, r. 4. ROMER, L.J., referred to Jones v. Farrell, 1 De G. & J. 208.]

Montague Lush, for the plaintiffs, referred to Godfrey v. George, 44 W. R. 245, [1896] 1 Q. B. 48; Kerr v. Kerr, 46 W. R. 46, [1897] 2 Q. B. 439; Hutchinson v. Gillespie, 4 W. R. 302, 11 Ex. Ch. 798; and R. S. C., 1883, ord. 3, r. 6 (c).

Llewelyn Davies, in reply, cited Walker v. Witter, 1 Doug. 1; Philpott v. Lehain, 35 L. T. Rep. 855, 24 W. R. Dig. 134; In re Boyd, Ex parte McDermott, [1895] 1 Q. B. 611, 43 W. R. Dig. 13; and Norton v. Gregory, 73 L. T. Rep. 10.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 20.—LINDLEY, M.R.—The question raised by this appeal is not free from difficulty. It is whether an action can be supported by a garnishee order previously obtained against the defendant. It appears that Pritchett and Young obtained judgment in the ordinary way against Holdsworth for a large sum of money—£3.459 9s. 4d.—and that the English and Colonial Syndicate (Limited) owed Holdsworth a smaller sum—£99 6s. 7d.—and that Pritchett and Young have obtained, in the ordinary way and in the ordinary form, a garnishee order upon the syndicate. That order is in the common form in the words of Appendix (K), Form 40, "it is ordered that the said garnishees do forthwith pay the said judgment creditors £99 6s. 7d., the debt due from them to the said judgment debtor, and that in default thereof execution may issue for the same." There is no doubt whatever that that is an order upon them to pay to the plaintiffs the money due to the judgment debtor. It is quite true that before that order was made there was no debt owing by the syndicate to Pritchett and Young; the debt was owing by Holdsworth, and the order is in substance not an order against the syndicate to pay a debt due by it, but a handing over to the plaintiff of something due by the syndicate to Holdsworth.

In order 45 of the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, the order which deals with garnishee proceedings, there is a series of rules stating what the procedure for attaching a debt shall be (rule 1), and what shall be the consequence of attaching a debt (rule 2); and there is a complete code for enforcing by this method a judgment obtained by the garnishor against the creditor of the garnishee. The form given in the appendix shows that it is an order on the garnishee to pay a debt due by him, not to the garnishor, but to somebody else. Obedience to the order is to be a complete discharge to the garnishee as against the judgment debtor—that is to say, he is not to be liable to be attacked again in respect of the same debt.

In this case it is found that Pritchett and Young cannot get their £99 6s. 7d. out of the company by issuing execution in the ordinary way. The company have no assets in this country which can be taken, although they have property abroad which can be made available if the company is wound up; and the action, which is a very unusual one, is brought with the avowed object of getting a judgment against the company for the amount of the debt which has been attached, and availing themselves of that to obtain a winding-up order. It has already been decided that a winding-up order cannot be made upon the ordinary garnishee order itself, and this is an attempt to get a judgment on which it can be made.

We have looked into the cases on the subject, and the conclusion at which we have arrived is this. Ord. 42, r. 24, on which the plaintiffs rely, runs thus: "Every order of the court or a judge in any cause or matter may be enforced against all persons bound thereby in the same manner as a judgment to the same effect." The plaintiffs rely on that rule, and say that they want to enforce this garnishee order by means of an action, as if the order was a judgment. If this were res nova, which it is not, I should have thought that order 42 referred to enforcing orders by writ of execution, and to nothing else, and that rule 24 was put in to enable an order, as distinguished from a judgment, to be enforced by execution. I should have doubted whether it applies to the question before us. But it has been decided in In re Boyd, Ex parte McDermott and Godfrey v. George that the word "enforced" in rule 24 includes enforcing by action as well as enforcing by execution.

The rule has been construed in that way, and we cannot go behind those decisions. I do not, therefore, see how we can say that the present action will not lie. We cannot differ from the cases to which I have referred without construing the rule more narrowly than it has been construed previously. Those decisions and this decision will not be inconsistent with other cases which have been referred to. It was said that they were inconsistent with the decisions which show that an action will not lie on a balance order—e.g., Westmoreland Green and Blue Slate Co. v. Feilden. But a balance order is merely an order for the collection of assets—i.e., to pay a debt due to a company to its liquidator, and it may well be that an action will not lie upon that, but that the only way to enforce it is by execution in the ordinary way, and that it is not such an order as is contemplated by ord. 42, r. 24. The decisions of the court that garnishee orders and balance orders are not final judgments, and therefore are not alone foundations for bankruptcy notices, are not inconsistent with our decision, for they turn upon the true construction of the Bankruptcy Act and the technical meaning of the words "final judgment." It is pointed out in In re Combined Weighing and Advertising Machine Co. that a garnishee order absolute is not a final judgment. The obvious conclusion is that this action will lie, and that we cannot order the statement of claim to be struck out, or say that the decision appealed from is wrong.

But although an action will lie, if a person who has obtained a garnishee order brings an action upon it without any necessity he will run the risk of having his action stayed as an abuse of the process of the court, and of being ordered to pay all the costs of the proceedings. It is obvious that if the amount to be paid can be obtained by execution, but instead of that he incurs the expense of an action, it is an abuse of the process of the court. That does not apply in this case, for the plaintiffs cannot obtain payment without an action, and that is their justification. The only further remark I will make is that, having regard to ord. 45, r. 7, it is plain on the language of the rule that if a plaintiff does obtain payment in obedience to a judgment, or under execution on it, the payment will discharge the garnishee as if the payment had been made without action, so that the syndicate will be protected from having to pay twice over.

ROMER, L.J.—I agree that this appeal shall be dismissed, for the reasons stated by the Master of the Rolls. In this ord. 42, r. 24, as interpreted by Godfrey v. George acts beneficially, and enables the court to remove some of the difficulty caused by the decision In re Combined Weighing and Advertising Machine Co. That decision is binding on us. But seeing that in garnishee proceedings the order absolute contains an order that the garnishee do pay direct to the garnishor, the judgment creditor, I am surprised that the court in the last-mentioned case did not see its way to hold that the judgment creditor there was entitled to petition to wind up the company.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, Sutton, Ommanney, & Rendall; Spyer & Sons.

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, M.R., Jeune, P., and Romer, L.J.) — May 30, 31.

In re HALE.
LILLEY v. FOAD. (a.)

Mortgage — Receiver — Appointment by mortgagee of receiver—Extent of agency—Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 24—Management of business—Payment of mortgagor's debts—Statute of Limitations.

A receiver appointed under the terms of a power in a mortgage deed which extends the powers conferred by the Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 24, to manage and carry on a business, is authorized to pay business debts of the mortgagor. This authority is not affected by the death of the mortgagor, and payment by the receiver of an instalment of a business debt contracted by the mortgagor operates as an acknowledgment of the whole debt by the executrix of the mortgagor, and prevents time running under the Statute of Limitations.

Decision of Byrne, J., ante, p. 174, affirmed.

Whether a receiver having no powers except those conferred on him by section 24 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, could pay off an unsecured debt, quære.

This was an appeal from a decision of Byrne, J. (reported ante, p. 174), which raised the question whether a receiver appointed by a mortgagee under a power in the mortgage deed becomes the agent of the mortgagor so that by paying an instalment of a debt due from the mortgagor he prevents the operation of the Statute of Limitations.

The facts are fully stated in the report of the case in the court below, but may be summarized as follows:

By an indenture of the 13th of December, 1886, a certain business was assigned by one Jennette von Swartwout to F. W. Hale, to be considered as belonging to him during the life of the said J. von Swartwout, and after her death to his wife, charged with an annual sum of £520, payable without any deduction during five years from the date thereof to J. von Swartwout, her executors and administrators (whether she should survive for that period or not), by equal weekly payments of £10 each.

Then by clause 9, "In case the said J. von Swartwout shall at any time become entitled to enter into possession of the business as aforesaid, the powers conferred by the Conveyancing Act, 1881, upon a mortgagee when the mortgage money has become due shall, so far as the same are applicable to the terms and conditions of these presents, become exercisable. And it shall be lawful for the said J. von Swartwout, either by herself or by her agents or attorney, in lieu of taking possession, or before or after taking possession of the business, to exercise the power of appointing a receiver conferred by the said Act. And by way of extension of the provisions of the said Act it is hereby also agreed that any receiver appointed under any power in that behalf shall be at liberty if so directed in writing by the said J. von Swartwout, her agents or attorney, to manage and carry on the business as he may think fit, and that any moneys he or the said J. von Swartwout, her agents or attorney, may pay or expend for that purpose, and whether before or subsequent to redemption by the said F. W. Hale or other the person entitled to the business as aforesaid, shall be considered as charged on the business with interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum." Hale, in carrying on the business, became indebted to the plaintiff to the extent of £1,000.

In October, 1888, it was arranged that this debt should be paid off by instalments of £25 each, and these instalments were paid by Hale down to his death on the 16th of June, 1891. The defendant Miss Foad was Hale's executrix under his will. At the date of Hale's death the annuity was in arrear to the extent of £1,000, and by a document under her hand dated the 29th of July, 1891, J. von Swartwout appointed F. Johnson "as receiver of the said business with full power to manage and carry on the same as he may think fit."

On the 6th of August, 1891, Johnson paid an instalment of the plaintiff's debt.

In October, 1891, a fresh receiver was appointed by the annuitant who declined to make any further payments. The plaintiff then took out an originating summons on behalf of himself and all other creditors of Hale for the administration of Hale's estate, and the following issues were tried before Byrne, J.: (1) Whether there was a debt due to the plaintiff or not; (2) whether, if there was debt, it was barred by the Statute of Limitations. Byrne, J., held that the payment by Johnson on the 6th of August, 1891, prevented the operation of the statute.

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The defendant appealed.

Astbury, Q.C., and Montague Lush, for the appeal.

Eve, Q.C., and Younger, for the plaintiff, were not called on.

LINDLEY, M.R.—This case has been well argued and the difficulties in it have been ably put forward. I will state at once that I think the case has some novelty in it and requires some care. The important question is whether the payments made by the receiver as agent for the mortgagor to the plaintiff, who is an undoubted creditor of the deceased, of monthly instalments of £25 on account of his debt, are sufficient to enable the plaintiff, whose claim would otherwise be barred by the Statute of Limitations, to prove for the balance of his debt against Hale's estate. It is important, and to my mind all important, to ascertain the extent of the receiver's authority. That authority was conferred by Hale when alive under the deed of the 13th of December, 1886. Hale owed the plaintiff in respect of business transactions £1,000, and there was an arrangement between the plaintiff and Hale to pay off this sum by instalments of £25 each. Hale did that as long as he lived, and on the 1st of June, 1891, he paid the instalment then due. Hale died on the 16th of June, 1891, and the defendant Miss Foad became his executrix. She was in this position. She could pay off the mortgage created by Hale if she had assets, but if not, she was bound by the stipulations in the mortgage deed and, whether she liked it or not, a receiver appointed by the mortgagee would become her agent to the extent of Hale's assets. That would be her true legal position. Hale's death did not operate as a revocation of the mortgagee's power to appoint a receiver, and the defendant could not help herself if a receiver was appointed. Now, what happened then? I turn to the power to appoint a receiver. [His lordship read the clause down to the words "conferred by the said Act."] Pausing there for a moment, I doubt whether it would be right to determine this question in favour of the plaintiff if no power had been given to the receiver except in the terms of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, because though a receiver appointed under that Act is the agent of the mortgagor the Act says what he is to do with the money he receives, and amongst the matters enumerated there is not any power to pay off a debt which does not affect the mortgaged property. I very much doubt whether a receiver under the Act could pay off an unsecured debt. He could keep down the interest on the mortgage debt and so on, but I should be in considerable difficulty in saying that under the Act the receiver had power to pay off an unsecured debt, if the deed contained nothing more than a power for the mortgagee to appoint a receiver under the Act. But the deed of December, 1886, does not stop there. [His lordship read the rest of the clause, and continued:] That is, the receiver has not only to receive, but to manage and carry on the business as he thinks fit. Now, the mortgagee having the power in her hands of appointing a receiver and manager did by the document of the 29th of July, 1891, appoint Johnson a receiver with full power to manage and carry on the business as he might think fit. I think Byrne, J., was perfectly warranted in calling attention to this extension of the statutory powers of the receiver, and this extension is all important. Johnson's position was this. Hale had died and Miss Foad was his executrix, but that did not affect the powers in the mortgage deed, for Miss Foad could not help herself. Then, Johnson having been thus appointed by the mortgagee, receiver and manager of the business, what does he do? He is informed of this debt and he goes on paying the instalments. Can it be said that he was exceeding his authority in so doing? I think not. What was he authorized to do? He was authorized to go on paying the debt if he thought right. It is true he was not authorized by the defendant, but he was by her testator, and that bound his executrix. That is the consequence of the powers contained in the mortgage deed. Now what is the legal effect of his acting on his authority as he did? When he did make the payment in respect of the instalment then due he knew that there was a balance still owing of the original debt, and he made the payment in respect of the original debt. Can it be said that he had not authority even to promise that the testator's assets should be liable in future for the instalments and that the balance of the debt should be paid out of those assets. I think not. I rather demur to the distinction which was drawn between promises and acts. In my opinion if an agent has authority to make payments on account of a debt, it may be inferred that he has authority to make a promise to pay the remainder of the debt, and if he makes a payment on account of the debt and nothing more is said or done, the payment is good pro tanto, and a promise to pay the whole may be inferred. The authority to promise, therefore, appears to me to exist, and it appears to me to have been pursued, and that is the key to the whole case. The extent of the receiver's authority is all important. Though I should feel some difficulty if the case turned on section 24 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, I feel none on the authority which the receiver actually had. The decision of Byrne, J., was quite right, and this appeal must be dismissed, with costs.

JEUNE, P.—I agree with the judgment that has just been delivered, and I agree that the whole question in the case, and the only one, is what was the authority of Johnson. A promise need not be made by the debtor himself: it is enough if it is made by an agent or a person representing him. To take the common case of an executor, if he makes a promise of this kind by making part payment, either personally or by his agent, there is no doubt that he binds the estate to pay the remainder of the debt, because it is his duty to pay his testator's debts. It is similar in the case of a receiver. The case of Chinnery v. Evans, 13 W. R. 20, 11 H. L. Cas. 115, does appear to me to go so far as to show that a receiver acting within the scope of his authority and dealing with a matter within the mortgage can prevent the operation of the Statute of Limitations by part payment of interest on the mortgage debt. The reason is that he is acting within the scope of his authority. The question therefore comes back to this, Whether the receiver in the present case was acting within the scope of his authority? I agree with what the Master of the Rolls has said as to the importance of the terms of the power under which the receiver was appointed. I also agree that there is a difficulty in seeing how, having regard to the provisions of sub-section 8 of section 24 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, and the mode in which money coming to the hands of a receiver is to be dealt with, a payment of this kind could be properly made by him. It is difficult I will only say to see how any receiver appointed under that Act could conduct a business and deal with the assets in the way in which the receiver has done here, because the sub-sections of section 24 seem to refer to the different duties of a person appointed to receive money, not of a person appointed to carry on a business, while here there is a person who has been expressly empowered to carry on a business and whose duty it is to carry it on. If we get as far as that we find, in my opinion, that it was the duty of the receiver to do what this receiver has done. He had power to pay debts connected with the business, and it is not shown that this was not a debt connected with Hale's business. At any rate it was clearly one which Hale was paying off by instalments, and the receiver thought it was part of his duty to pay it off in the same way. There was good reason for its being paid in that way, and I am far from saying that it was not in the interest of Hale's business that the debt should be so paid because the payments by monthly instalments of £25 each prevented the creditor, from coming down on the debtor for the whole sum at once, which might have been disastrous. It was, in my opinion, in accordance with the duty of the receiver in managing the business to pay this debt as he did. In these circumstances it seems to me that Byrne, J., was perfectly right in finding, as he did, that this receiver in making these payments was acting properly—i.e., within the scope of his authority. Thus the difficulty in the case vanishes. We cannot distinguish between a payment and a payment from which a promise is to be inferred, as it is a legal inference. Payment of part of a debt is an acknowledgment that it is part of a debt which has to be paid, and it seems to me to be quite impossible to draw any distinction between the payment as a payment and the payment as an act from which the legal inference of a promise to pay the whole debt follows, when once we have got the fact that the payment was within the duty of the receiver. I think, therefore, that the appeal fails.

ROMER, L.J.—I also think that, by virtue of the powers conferred by the deed under which the receiver was appointed, he had power on behalf of his principal, the mortgagor, to pay the instalment of £25 on the 6th of August, 1891, as also the two subsequent instalments which he seems to have also paid in the same way; and the legal result of that payment is the same as if it had been made by the executrix herself. He was, in my opinion, authorized to make these payments in such a way as to acknowledge that the balance of the debt was due from Hale's estate, and should be paid. Therefore the payments that he made were duly and properly made, and take the case out of the Statute of Limitations.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, Graham Gordon; J. B. & F. Purchase.

From Q. B. Div.
(A. L. Smith, Vaughan Williams, and Romer, L.JJ.) — May 3.

NORTH-EASTERN RAILWAY CO. (Appellants) v. OVERSEERS OF DALTON (Respondents). (a.)

Highway — Rate — Exemption — Liability to repair ratione tenuræ—Order making highway a parish highway—Continuance of exemption—Highway Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50), s. 33—Highway Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 61). s. 35.

Where, by an order of justices under section 35 of the Highway Act, 1862, a highway repairable ratione tenuræ is made a parish highway, and a sum is fixed to be paid to the highway board by the person previously liable to repair, "in full discharge of all claims thereafter in respect of the repair and maintenance of such highway," the exemption conferred upon such person by section 33 of the Highway Act, 1835, continues, and he is discharged not only from liability to repair ratione tenuræ, but also from liability to pay highway rates.

Judgment of Wills and Kennedy, JJ. (46 W. R. 582, [1898] 2 Q. B. 66), reversed.

Appeal from the judgment of a Divisional Court (Wills and Kennedy, JJ.) upon a special case stated by quarter sessions (46 W. R. 582, [1898] 2 Q. B. 66).

The case was stated by the quarter sessions for the North Riding of the County of York upon the hearing of an appeal by the North-Eastern Railway Co. against a rate made for the relief of the poor in the parish of Dalton and for other purposes chargeable thereon on the 7th of June, 1897.

Prior to the making of an order by the quarter sessions for the North Riding at Michaelmas, 1880, constituting the hamlet of Islebeck a separate highway parish, and annexing such parish to the Birdforth highway district, that hamlet formed part of the township of Bagby in the said district, and was a place in which all the highways were repairable by the occupiers of land ratione tenuræ, and in which no highway rates were leviable by reason of the exemption contained in section 33 of the Highway Act, 1835. Islebeck continued to form part of the township of Bagby until June, 1886.

The appellant company was at all material times in occupation of lands in Islebeck, and was prior to the 11th of April, 1881, liable ratione tenuræ to repair part of a highway in Islebeck.

On the 11th of April, 1881, an order was made at petty sessions, notwithstanding the opposition of the appellant company, under section 35 of the Highway Act, 1862, whereby it was ordered that all the highways within Islebeck should become, and for ever thereafter be, parish highways, and be repaired and maintained by the Birdforth Highway Board, and whereby the sums to be paid by the respective occupiers of lands in Islebeck previously liable to repair the highways in full discharge of all claims thereafter in respect of the repair and maintenance of the highways were fixed. Such sums were duly paid in accordance with the order.

In June, 1886, the hamlet of Islebeck was detached from the township of Bagby, and amalgamated with the township of Dalton in the Birdforth highway district.

On the 7th of June, 1897, a rate for the relief of the poor in the parish of Dalton was made, in which the appellant company was rated and assessed in respect of its occupation of its lands in Islebeck. Such rate was levied (inter alia) in respect of expenses incurred, or to be incurred, by the Rural District Council of Thirsk (the successor of the Birdforth Highway Board) in respect of the repair and maintenance of the highways within the said rural district, including the portion of the parish of Dalton which was comprised in Islebeck.

The appellant company appealed against this rate to quarter sessions.

On behalf of the appellant company it was contended:

That the company, having been liable to maintain the highways in the hamlet of Islebeck ratione tenuræ, was exempted by section 33 of the Highway Act, 1835, from liability to rates levied in respect of the repair and maintenance of such highways, and had continued to be exempt ever since;

And that the company, having complied with the requirements of the order of quarter sessions of the 11th of April, 1881, was, by section 35 of the Highway

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Act, 1862, discharged of all claims thereafter in respect of the repairs and maintenance of any highways in Islebeck, and was, therefore, not liable to pay the rate in question.

On behalf of the respondents it was contended:

That the exemption from the payment of highway rates conferred by section 33 of the Highway Act, 1835, continued only so long as the liability of the company to repair a highway ratione tenuræ lasted, and that therefore the exemption determined on the 11th of April, 1881, when by virtue of the order of that date the highway became a parish highway;

And that the order of the 11th of April, 1881, only operated to discharge the appellant company from all claims from that date by the Birdforth Highway Board or its successors in respect of the repairs and maintenance of the highway then ordered to be made repairable by the parish, and in no way affected the liability of the appellant company, in respect of its occupation of property within the district of the Thirsk Rural District Council, to pay rates for expenses incurred by the council in respect of the repair and maintenance of highways within the rural district.

The court of quarter sessions held that the appellant company was not exempt from payment of any portion of the rate, and dismissed the appeal.

The question for the opinion of the court was whether the appellant company was exempt from payment of so much of the rate as was levied in respect of the repair and maintenance of the highways in the hamlet of Islebeck.

Section 33 of the Highway Act, 1835, is as follows: "When property, or the owner or occupier in respect thereof, has previous to the passing of this Act been legally exempt from the performance of statute duty, or from the payment of any composition in lieu thereof, or of highway rate, the said property, and the owners and occupiers thereof, shall be exempt from the payment of the rate hereby imposed."

Section 35 of the Highway Act, 1862, is as follows: "Where any person or corporation is liable, by reason of tenure of lands or otherwise, to repair any highway situate in a highway district, the person or corporation so liable may apply to any justice of the peace for the purpose of making such highway a highway to be repaired and maintained by the parish in which the same is situate . . . and the justices at . . . petty sessions . . . shall, if they think fit, make an order under their hands that such highway shall thereafter be a highway to be thereafter repaired and maintained by the parish, and shall in such order fix a certain sum to be paid by such person or corporation to the highway board of the district, in full discharge of all claims thereafter in respect of the repair and maintenance of such highway."

The Divisional Court affirmed the decision of the quarter sessions.

The appellant company appealed.

A. T. Lawrence, Q.C., R. Cunningham Glen, and A. A. Bethune, for the appellants.

Macmorran, Q.C., and H. Gawan Taylor, for the respondents.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—In this case a railway company appeal against a highway rate on the ground that they are by statute exempt from liability to such a rate. The railway company are the occupiers of land in a hamlet in the parish in question, and as such were formerly liable ratione tenuræ to repair a portion of a highway, and it is found in the case that the inhabitants of the parish were not liable to any highway rates in respect of the highways in the hamlet, because all such highways were repairable by the occupiers of lands ratione tenuræ. The railway company accordingly claim to be exempt by virtue of section 33 of the Highway Act, 1835. Section 27 of that Act gives power to levy a rate for the purposes of the Act on all property liable to be rated to the relief of the poor. The effect of that section read together with section 33 seems to me clearly to be that all occupiers of land are liable to such rate except in the case of property which was before the Act legally exempt from the performance of statute duty, or from the payment of any composition in lieu thereof, or of highway rate, all of which property is to be exempt from payment of the rate imposed by the Act. The rating authority contends that the railway company's exemption has ceased by virtue of section 35 of the Highway Act, 1862. I will first refer to section 62 of the Highway Act, 1835, which provides that any person liable to repair a highway ratione tenuræ may apply to have the highway made a parish highway, and the justices may make an order to that effect, and, if they do, they shall fix the proportion of the expenses of repairing the said highway to be annually paid by such person to the surveyor of the parish, or, instead of so doing, they may fix a certain sum to be paid by such person to the surveyor in full discharge of all claims thereafter in respect of the repairs of such highway. It seems to me clear that the meaning of that is that where a sum is so paid it is paid in full discharge of all liability for the repair of the highway. Then we come to section 35 of the Act of 1862, which says that, on the application of any person liable to repair a highway ratione tenuræ, justices may make an order that such highway shall thereafter be a highway to be repaired and maintained by the parish, and shall in such order fix a certain sum—which in my opinion means a capital sum—to be paid by such person to the highway board in full discharge of all claims thereafter in respect of the repair and maintenance of such highway. It is now argued that, though the railway company were before exempt from highway rates under section 33 of the Act of 1835, and have paid a capital sum under section 35 of the Act of 1862 in full discharge of their liability ratione tenuræ, they are yet liable to pay highway rates from which they were before exempt. I cannot so read the section. I do not think it has the effect of imposing upon the railway company a liability from which they were exempt. The question was considered in Reg. v. Heath, 14 W. R. 383, L. R. 1 Q. B. 218, when the Court of Queen's Bench took the same view which I am taking now.

The rating authority also take another point. They argue that by reason of the Local Government Act, 1894, there is now no such thing as a highway rate under the Highway Act, 1835, and that the exemption does not apply to the rate in the present case. It is true that alterations have been made in the rate, as regards the area over which it is imposed, the persons on whom it is imposed, and the machinery for levying it, but I think it is still a highway rate and is imposed by the Highway Act, 1835. I am therefore of opinion that the appeal must be allowed.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I entirely agree. Wills, J., began his judgment by dealing with the words at the end of section 35 of the Highway Act, 1862, "a certain sum to be paid by such person or corporation to the highway board of the district in full discharge of all claims thereafter in respect of the repair and maintenance of such highway," and he thought that those words meant a discharge only from liability to repair ratione tenuræ, and not a discharge from liability to pay rates as an inhabitant. He then went back to the words at the beginning of the section, and construed them as meaning that a person liable to repair a highway ratione tenuræ might apply to justices for an order to make such highway a highway to be repaired and maintained by a rate to be levied on all the owners of property in the parish, including himself. If this were the true view, the sum to be paid ought not to be a sum representing the total amount of his liability, present and future, in respect of the highway ratione tenuræ, but simply the difference between the sum representing his past obligation to repair the highway and the sum representing his liability as a ratepayer. This view, however, seems to me to give the go-by to section 33 of the Highway Act, 1835, which expressly exempts persons in the position of this railway company from liability to highway rates. I think that the judgment of the Divisional Court fails to give effect to the exemption created by that section, and also disregards the authority of Reg. v. Heath.

ROMER, L.J.—I also agree. In my opinion, when section 35 of the Highway Act, 1862, is put in force, and a sum is fixed to be paid by the person previously liable to repair the highway ratione tenuræ in full discharge of all claims thereafter in respect of the repair of the highway, that sum ought to be fixed at such an amount as shall be equivalent to his liability to repair the highway taken over, and not upon the footing that he will become liable to pay highway rates from which he has been previously exempt. I do not think it was the intention of the Act that a person who had paid such sum should incur a fresh liability to highway rates. The case of Heath v. Weaverham Overseers, 42 W. R. 478, [1894] 2 Q. B. 108, seems to me to be distinguishable from this case.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitor for the appellants, A. Kaye Butterworth.

Solicitors for the respondents, Robbins, Billing, & Co., for Swarbreck & Rhodes, Thirsk.

High Court of Justice.

Q. B. Div.
(Darling and Channell, JJ.) May 9.

WHITE (Appellant) v. MORLEY (Respondent). (a.)

Metropolis—Management—County council—Bye-law—Gaming—Betting—Repugnancy between bye-law and statute—Metropolitan Streets Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 134), s. 23—Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, s. 23.

A bye-law made by the London County Council prohibiting under a penalty any person from frequenting and using any street or other public place for the purpose of bookmaking, betting, or wagering, is a reasonable bye-law, and one that can properly be made under section 23 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, for the good rule and government of the district; and there is no inconsistency or repugnancy between the bye-law and the statutory provision contained in section 23 of the Metropolitan Streets Act, 1867, which says that "any three or more persons assembled together in any part of a street within the Metropolis for the purpose of betting shall be deemed to be obstructing the street," and shall be liable to a penalty.

Case stated by Mr. Bros, Metropolitan police magistrate sitting at the Clerkenwell police court, raising a question as to the validity of a bye-law made by the London County Council in reference to betting in any public street.

A complaint was made by the respondent Morley, who was an inspector of the Metropolitan police, against the appellant for that he (the appellant) on the 2nd of December, 1898, at Palmer-place, near the Holloway-road, did unlawfully frequent and use the said place for the purpose of betting, contrary to the bye-laws of the London County Council.

The bye-law, which came into force on the 1st of October, 1898, was as follows: "No person shall frequent and use any street or other public place on behalf either of himself or of any other person for the purpose of bookmaking or betting or wagering, or agreeing to bet or wager with any person, or paying or receiving or settling bets," under a penalty not exceeding £5.

The bye-law was made by the London County Council in pursuance of their powers under section 16 of the Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), which gave to county councils the same power of making bye-laws in relation to their county as the council of a borough have, under section 23 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), which section provided that: "The council may, from time to time, make such bye-laws as to them seem meet for the good rule and government of the borough, and for prevention and suppression of nuisances not already punishable in a summary manner by virtue of any Act in force throughout the borough, and may thereby appoint such fines, not exceeding in any case five pounds, as they deem necessary for the prevention and suppression of offences against the same."

At the hearing the following facts were proved: On the 2nd of December, 1898, the appellant was standing at about 1.45 p.m. on the footway of Palmer-place, which is a street and a public place. He stood there for about ten minutes, and during that time was approached successively by four persons, who handed to him slips of paper and money, and then walked away. They approached him singly, and there was never more than one person with him at any one time. On the 3rd of December a similar occurrence took place.

On behalf of the appellant it was contended that the bye-law was ultra vires and invalid, on the ground that the bye-law was repugnant to the statutory enactment already in force in the Metropolis—namely, section 23 of the Metropolitan Streets Act, 1867, relating to betting in the streets.

The magistrate found as a fact that the appellant was frequenting and using the said Palmer-place for the purpose of betting and receiving bets in the manner described on the 2nd and 3rd of December, 1898; and he found, and it was not in dispute, that the appellant was thereby guilty of a breach of the bye-law, assuming it to be valid; and he was further of opinion that the appellant's contention was wrong, and that the bye-law was a valid bye-law.

The question for the opinion of the court was whether the bye-law is a valid bye-law in the Metropolis.

Section 23 of the Metropolitan Streets Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 134), provides: "Any three or more persons assembled together in any part of a street within the Metropolis for the purpose of betting shall be deemed to be obstructing the street, and each of such persons shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding five pounds; and . . . a constable . . . may take into custody, without warrant, any person who may commit such offence in view of such constable."

Joseph Walton, Q.C. (H. Avory with him), for the appellant.—The bye-law is bad upon two grounds—in the first place as being unreasonable, and in the second place as being repugnant to the statutory enactment in section 23 of the Metropolitan Streets Act, 1867. The bye-law is bad as being unreasonable. In Johnson v. Mayor, &c., of Croydon, 16 Q. B. D. 708, 34 W. R. Dig. 129, a bye-law prohibiting the sounding or playing upon any musical instrument in the streets on Sunday, was held to be unreasonable and ultra vires; and in Strickland v. Hayes, 44 W. R. 398, [1896] 1 Q. B. 290, a bye-law prohibiting generally singing and playing in the street, was held to be bad. These two cases are in our favour. The case against us is Burnett v. Berry, 44 W. R. 512, [1896] 1 Q. B. 641, where a bye-law prohibiting any person from frequenting and using a street or other public place for the purpose of bookmaking or betting, was held to be valid. These cases have all been considered in Kruse v. Johnson, 46 W. R. 630, [1898] 2 Q. B. 91, where it was held that the bye-law in question was valid, but there is nothing in that decision which conflicts with Strickland v. Hayes. This bye-law is also bad upon the second ground that it is inconsistent with and repugnant to section 23 of the Metropolitan Streets Act, 1867. The very same matter which is dealt with in the bye-law is dealt with in that statute. Section 23 deals with the very same subject-matter—namely, frequenting the streets for the purpose of betting, and says that three or more persons so frequenting the streets shall be guilty of the offence. The bye-law alters that statutory enactment and says that one person so frequenting the streets shall be guilty of the offence. Where the Legislature has dealt with a certain subject-matter in a certain way—as it has done here with street betting—then a bye-law which alters that and deals with the same subject matter in a different way is repugnant to the statute, and therefore unreasonable and void: Bentham v. Hoyle, 26 W. R. 314, 3 Q. B. D. 289. This also distinguishes the present case from Kruse v. Johnson.

(a.) Reported by Sir SHERSTON BAKER, Bart., Barrister-at-Law.

Dickens, Q.C. (Daldy with him), for the respondent.—With regard to the first point, the case of Burnett v. Berry is conclusive, With regard to the second point, a bye-law is not necessarily repugnant to or inconsistent with a statute because it forbids that which the statute does not forbid. The mere fact that the bye-law forbids that which the Act does not forbid does not make the bye-law a bad bye-law, but if the bye-law forbids something which the Act specifically allows, then it would be bad. Section 23 of the Metropolitan Streets Act was aimed chiefly against obstruction in the streets; there was then no question of good rule and government, but a question of the obstruction of the streets only. The section said that three or more persons shall not assemble together in the streets for the purpose of betting; but it does not say that one person may frequent and use the street for that purpose. The bye-law, therefore, forbids a thing which is not dealt with by the statute at all, and which consequently the statute does not specifically allow. There is no inconsistency, therefore, between the provision in this bye-law and the provisions contained in section 23 of the Metropolitan Streets Act, 1867. There is therefore nothing in section 23 of the Act to make this a bad bye-law, and apart from that, the bye-law is in almost the same terms as the bye-law in Burnett v. Berry, which was held to be a valid bye-law, and one that could properly be made for the good rule and government of the place. The question of a bye-law being bad as being repugnant to the provisions of a statute is dealt with in the case of Edmonds v. The Master, &c., of the Company of Watermen and Lightermen, 24 L. J. M. C. 124.

Joseph Walton, Q.C., in reply.

Daldy referred to the case of Jones v. Walters, 62 J. P. 374, 46 W. R. Dig. 98.

DARLING, J.—I think in this case the appeal must be dismissed. The first question is whether the bye-law would be good if it were not for the Metropolitan Streets Act, 1867. I think, putting that Act out of the question, the bye-law would be a good bye-law for the good rule and government of this district. It is obviously a bye-law intended to prevent the use of the streets for something for which they are not intended. They are intended for use as highways for people to pass and repass along them; and this bye-law is aimed against persons who frequent and use the streets or any other public place for the purpose of betting. It is obvious that the persons who frequent and use streets and public places for making bets with people who choose to come and bet with them, prevent the natural use of the streets and public places as places of free passage; but I am also inclined to think that after what was said by Lord Russell, C.J., in Kruse v. Johnson, the bye-law would be good on quite a different ground—namely, that it would be good as preventing that being done in the streets which the Legislature has said shall not be done in places kept for the purpose, such as betting houses. I think the Chief Justice meant to say that it would be perfectly right in a local authority to prevent their streets being used for the same purpose for which the Legislature had said that houses should not be used—namely, for betting. Therefore I think, putting the Metroplitan Streets Act out of the question, that the bye-law is a good one; and I think so for this further reason, that since Kruse v. Johnson the court will not in any case of a bye-law made by a local authority—a popularly-elected body—look so strictly to see whether it is reasonable or unreasonable as they would be disposed to do in the case of a bye-law made by railway or other such companies. I think that since Kruse v. Johnson we must take it that the view of the court is that there is a larger discretion confided to elected bodies than was given to dock and railway companies and so on, and that the courts will not scrutinize so strictly the bye-laws of public bodies as they would the bye-laws made by trading corporations.

Now, with regard to the Metropolitan Streets Act, it is said that the bye-law is repugnant to that Act. If the bye-law and the Metropolitan Streets Act prohibited the same thing and provided different penalties, or if they prohibited the same thing, one with a condition and one without it, and the bye-law removed a condition, I should then say that the bye-law was repugnant to the Metropolitan Streets Act. The law on this point is laid down by Cockburn, C.J., in Bentham v. Hoyle thus: "Where the Legislature itself has taken the initiative and has superseded the necessity of making any bye-law by a statutory enactment applicable to the very case in respect of which the company have taken upon themselves to make a bye-law," then the bye-law would be repugnant to the statute. Applying that here, do the Metropolitan Streets Act and the bye-law deal with the same case? I do not think they do. Undoubtedly they both deal with betting, and with what in the statute is said to be an obstruction, and what in the bye-law may be an obstruction in the streets; but I do not think they both deal with the same thing. What is punished in the one is not forbidden in the other. The bye-law does not prohibit the same thing as the statute prohibits, and the statute does not punish the same thing as the bye-law punishes. The statute prohibits three persons from meeting together and making bets and punishes them, but it does not say that one person may stand about in the street and make bets. The bye-law says that one person shall not stand about the street and make bets, but the statute has not said that he may. Further, the bye-law does not deal with a person doing that only once; the bye-law does not say that if any person makes a bet in the street with any other person he shall be liable for it; but it says that if any person shall frequent and use a street or public place, for the purpose of betting, then it shall be an offence against the bye-law. That is quite a different thing to what the statute deals with. The statute punishes three persons who once bet in the street; it does not punish two persons who once bet there, nor one person who once bets there. The bye-law does not wait for two or three people to come together, but it says that if any person frequents and uses the street—that is, does it more than once—for the purpose of betting, he shall be guilty of an offence and be liable to a penalty. There is, therefore, no inconsistency between the bye-law and the provisions of the statute, and the bye-law is not rendered invalid by any such inconsistency or repugnancy. The bye-law being in other respects a reasonable bye-law, there is nothing in the Act of 1867 to render it unreasonable or repugnant to that Act.

CHANNELL, J.—I am of the same opinion. Apart from the Metropolitan Streets Act, 1867, the case of Burnett v. Berry is expressly in point, and I think it is binding on us, even if we did not agree with it; but personally I do agree with it. I think, however, it would not be open to us now to question it. In point of fact it has already been followed in the case of Jones v. Walters. Consequently that must be taken to be settled, and it settles that this bye-law is within the powers under which it purports to be made, unless, of course, the Metropolitan Streets Act affects the question. It further precludes the question of its reasonableness; and since the decision of that case (Burnett v. Berry) the case of Kruse v. Johnson has been decided, and that case has thrown a good deal of new light on the extent of the doctrine about the reasonableness of bye-laws, and, so far as I understand that decision, the main point of it is this—that where a thing is of a character that it can be a nuisance and an annoyance, then it is almost always for the local authority which has the power to make the bye-laws to say whether it shall be considered to be a nuisance and an annoyance in their particular locality. The court will say if the bye-law is unreasonable, if they think the act forbidden could not be a nuisance; but if they think that it could be a nuisance, they will not as a rule interfere with the discretion of the local authority as to whether or not it should be forbidden in that particular locality. That is the main point in Kruse v. Johnson, and it seems to me, if anything were necessary to add to Burnett v. Berry, it would show that this bye-law would not be interfered with by the court on the ground of its being unreasonable.

Then it remains to consider the question about the Metropolitan Streets Act, 1867. I take it that that must arise under the doctrine of the law that bye-laws must be not only reasonable, but that they must not be repugnant to the general law. The power to make bye-laws is a power to make local laws which may be supplementary to the general law. It does not make the bye-law bad because it forbids something which does not happen to be forbidden by the general law. That is settled by several of the cases. That is not the meaning of repugnancy; but the local law may not alter the general law; it may not take away a qualification or condition which makes an act wrong under the general law, or it may not make unlawful an act which is expressly authorized by the general law. That would be repugnant. There must be some inconsistency in the bye-law other than that the local law goes on and forbids something which is not forbidden by the general law. My brother has pointed out the distinction between these two things, and I have not anything to add to that. Assuming that the only head of good government of the Metropolis under which this can come is the head of prohibiting the misuse of the streets, I still think that these two things, the bye-law and the Metropolitan Streets Act, are not repugnant to each other or inconsistent. The Metropolitan Streets Act makes the accidental assembling together of three persons for the purpose of doing something which goes beyond the ordinary use of the highway to be an obstruction of the highway and the matter of a fine. This bye-law makes a different thing altogether an offence. It makes the frequenting of the place unlawful, and a man would not frequent the place for the purpose of betting unless he could get persons to come there and bet with him. The result of his frequenting there would be to make people assemble there, and if the only thing were to prevent the misuse of the streets, it would result in that. The reason these things are not inconsistent or repugnant is that the gist of the offence in the two cases is entirely different. The gist of the offence under the Metropolitan Streets Act is the three people getting together, whether intentionally or not, and the gist of the offence under the bye-law is the frequenting and resorting and doing it habitually. They are two different things. One is forbidden by one law and one by the other, and there seems to be no inconsistency between them. If, therefore, the only head of good rule and government under which this comes is the head with reference to the preventing misuse of the streets, I still think they are not repugnant. I am also strongly inclined to think that in the expression of Lord Russell of Killowen, C.J., in Burnett v. Berry, the Lord Chief Justice meant to go beyond the mere misuse of the highway, and meant to say that it was within the power of the local authority to apply to the streets within their jurisdiction something that was already forbidden in a different way in different places. I think he meant to say that; and Wright, J., has said the same in Jones v. Walters; and if that be right, there is no inconsistency here. It seems to me on either ground it may be said there is no repugnancy. If the first point were not sufficient I should want further time to consider the latter point. I feel no doubt that the bye-law is a good one.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Lewis & Lewis.

Solicitor for the respondent, W. A. Blaxland.

House of Lords.

From C. A. (England). March 14.

POWELL v. KEMPTON PARK RACECOURSE CO. (a.)

Gaming—Betting—Reserved enclosure on racecourse—"Using a place" for betting purposes—Betting Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 119), ss. 1, 2, 3.

The keeping an enclosure at a racecourse, to which bookmakers and others resort, and in which betting takes place, with the knowledge and without the interference of the owners of the racecourse, is not contrary to the provisions of the Betting Houses Act, 1853. What is prohibited is the opening, keeping, or using of a place for a betting business.

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Hawke v. Dunn, 45 W. R. 359, [1897] 1 Q. B. 579, overruled.

Decision of the Court of Appeal, 46 W. R. 8, [1897] 2 Q. B. 242 (Lords Hobhouse and Davey dissenting), affirmed.

This was an appeal from an order of the full Court of Appeal (reported 46 W. R. 8, [1897] 2 Q. B. 242).

The material facts are as follows: At Kempton Park Racecourse there is a piece of ground (about one-quarter of an acre) known as the Reserved Enclosure, which is enclosed by iron rails. Persons are admitted to this enclosure on race-days, varying in number from 500 to 2,000, amongst whom there are always professional bookmakers from 100 to 200 in number. These bookmakers are admitted to this enclosure as members of the general public, and have no rights, interest, or control in or over the enclosure, nor have they any special rights or privileges therein. The bookmakers do not confine themselves to any fixed spot in the enclosure, nor do they use any desk, stool, umbrella, or tent, though any particular bookmaker is usually to be found in or near the same spot of the enclosure. In this enclosure these bookmakers carry on business in competition with each other, betting with those of the public who are within the enclosure and who may be desirous of betting with them, whether upon credit or by way of ready-money betting.

The appellant brought this action as a shareholder against the Kempton Park Racecourse Co., asking for an injunction to restrain them from permitting the enclosure to be illegally used within the meaning of the Betting Houses Act, 1853.

It was admitted that for a long time before the passing of the Betting Act of 1853 betting transactions of the same character had been carried on in enclosures at racecourses, and also that the respondents knew and permitted the use which was made of the enclosure.

Lord Russell of Killowen, C.J., before whom the case was tried, held that the case was not distinguishable from Hawke v. Dunn, 45 W. R. 359, [1897] 1 Q. B. 579, and granted an injunction, but the Court of Appeal (Rigby, L.J., dissenting) held that the enclosure was not a "place used" by the bookmakers for the purpose of betting with persons resorting thereto, and that the company did not permit the same to be so used within the meaning of section 3 of the Act.

The plaintiff appealed from this decision.

Asquith, Q.C., and Cautley, for the appellant.

Joseph Walton, Q.C., and Stutfield (C. W. Mathews with them) for respondents.

Earl of HALSBURY, L.C.—The statement of claim in this case sets forth that the plaintiff is a shareholder in a company incorporated to carry on the business of a racecourse company, and it asks that an injunction may issue to restrain the use of a part of the company's premises for what is alleged to be an illegal purpose.

If the purpose for which the part of the premises in question is to be used is illegal, the injunction ought to be granted; if not, the action ought to be dismissed.

Before dealing with the substance of the question which comes up on appeal from the Court of Appeal to your lordships, I think it right to say that in my view it is absolutely immaterial what motive has induced the plaintiff to bring this action. Once it is brought, the court before whom it comes must decide according to law, and the construction of the Act of Parliament is a pure question of law, and must be decided according to its legal construction, whatever may be the motives and wishes of the respective litigants. The form in which the question arises and the facts proved or admitted may affect the determination of the particular case and its consequent authority as governing other transactions, but the construction of the Act of Parliament must be the same upon whatever facts the question of its construction arises.

It has, indeed, been argued that the history of the legislation and of the facts which gave rise to the enactment may, in view of the preamble, affect the construction of the Act itself; but though I do not deny that such topics may usefully be employed to interpret the meaning of a statute, they do not, in my view, afford conclusive argument here. Two propositions are quite clear—one that a preamble may afford useful light as to what a statute intends to reach, and another that, if an enactment is itself clear and unambiguous, no preamble can qualify or cut down the enactment; and in this case it appears to me that the question must be decided upon the words of the statute, and upon the facts which are not and never have been contested. Indeed, apart from the historical questions which, for the reasons I have given, I dismiss from my consideration for the present, it would be idle indeed for anyone to contest what I suppose is true of every race-meeting in the country, and not only applicable to this particular case.

In saying this, however, I think it is right to add that I do not see the least foundation for the suggestion that any fact or argument has been kept back or misrepresented. The argument has certainly been conducted with great ability and earnestness, as indeed was to be expected, considering who were the learned counsel who argued it.

Now, the words which it appears to me your lordships have to construe are these: (1) no house, office, room, or other place; (2) shall be opened, kept, or used; (3) for the purpose of the owner, occupier, or keeper thereof, or any person using the same, or any person procured or employed by or acting for or on behalf of such owner, occupier, or keeper, or person using the same; or of (4) any person having the care or management, or in any manner conducting the business thereof; (5) betting with persons resorting thereto.

I will discuss presently the rest of the section, and in discussing this part of it I will postpone for the moment all the words except "owner" or "occupier" in order to make clear what, in my view, is the substantial sense of the enactment. I will, of course, deal with the other words in detail, and particularly with the words "person using the same"; but let us first see what is the substance of the enactment. It prohibits opening a house, &c., for the purpose of the owner or occupier betting with persons resorting to the house so opened. It does not prohibit betting. It does not affect to deal with the betting of people unconnected with the house, betting inter se; and it is obvious that unless some of the words which I have omitted can be held to enlarge the nature of the offence created by the words I have quoted, none of the facts proved shew the owner or occupier of the place in question to be betting or ready to bet with the persons resorting thereto. The owner or occupier has no interest in any bet, and is in no way concerned with any bet, and whatever may be the nature of the place, which to my mind is another question, the transactions described in the case are in no sense bets with the owner or occupier of the place in question. They are bets inter se by a great many people who resort to the place, but have, as I have said, no relation at all to the owner or occupier thereof.

This appears to me so plain that I think, but for the words "or person using the same," no question would ever have arisen, and it is material to see what these words import. It will be observed that these words occur as an alternative to the owner of the place—I supply the words "of the place" by necessary construction—the "occupier" of the place, the "keeper of the place, or any person using the place": these are all put in one category. Then comes another enumeration of persons employed, and again language is exhausted to fix responsibility upon caretakers, managers, or other persons in any manner conducting the business thereof.

I think it is clear that what the statute is dealing with here is the case of persons who are in control and occupation of the place which is assumed to be the betting establishment. The conducting of the business, whether as master or servant, is the thing made unlawful, and the business is that of a betting house or place to which people can resort for the purpose of betting, not with each other, but with the betting establishment.

It is the employment of the words "using the same" which to my mind has led to the difference of opinion. Those words, unless explained by the context, are necessarily ambiguous. In one sense every person who enters the enclosure uses it; but he does not use it in the character of owner, keeper, manager, or conductor of the business thereof. The betting man in his use of the place differs in this respect in no way from any other member of the public who enters it, and who neither does nor intends to bet. It is the personality of the betting man and not his being in any particular place which affords the opportunity of betting, and a man who walked along a public road shouting the odds in the way here described would be doing exactly the same thing.

It is nothing to the purpose that there are a great many of them who may be found in this enclosure; there is no business being conducted by a keeper, owner, &c., in the enclosure. Each betting man is himself conducting his own business of a betting man, and, as I have said, his betting is in no way connected with the place, except that he, as well as other people not betting men, are there.

It is here that I am unable to follow the reasoning of my noble and learned friends Lord Hobhouse and Lord Davey. They both, if they will forgive me for saying so, employ the word "use" in a double sense. My noble friend Lord Hobhouse admits the word "use" is ambiguous, and limits it by such words as "deliberate, designed, and repeated"; but to my mind these words miss the point. It is not the repeated and designed, as distinguished from the casual or infrequent, use which the employment of that word imports here, but the character of the use as a use by some person having the dominion and control over the place, and conducting the business of a betting establishment with the persons resorting thereto.

My noble and learned friend Lord Davey gives as the prohibited purpose, "using," without any such qualification as I have been endeavouring to explain —using a house for the purpose of betting with persons who resort thereto. It is upon this point that I think the whole question turns, and I think here there is no such betting establishment at all as is aimed at by the Legislature, and no keeper, owner, &c., who bets with anyone. As I have said, I can understand no one of these bettors to be different from any other class of bettors. They do not in any sense own or keep the enclosure differently from the persons resorting thereto. In truth they are all persons resorting to this place, and the other class aimed at by the statute do not exist at all in these transactions. The man who takes the admission fee neither knows nor cares whether the man who pays for his admission bets or no.

I am not certain that I appreciate the distinction which I observe is sought to be drawn between what are called professional betting men and other men who bet. In respect of games which people play for amusement or pay, the distinction is intelligible enough; but all people who bet for money mean to win money, and whether it is for the sake of a living or for the sake of adding to money which the bettor already possesses seems to me an altogether illusory distinction.

The second part of the section is in strict accordance with what I have suggested as the meaning of the statute. It assumes a place or establishment for receiving money or some valuable thing being received by or on behalf of an owner, occupier, keeper, or person; here the statute uses the words "as aforesaid," "that is person using the same," for the consideration for any assurance, undertaking, promise, or agreement, express or implied, to pay or give thereafter any money or valuable thing on any event or contingency of or relating to any horse-race or other race, fight, game, sport, or exercise. Then every house, office, room, or other place opened, kept, or used for the purposes aforesaid, or any of them, is hereby declared to be a common nuisance, and contrary to law.

It seems to me clear that the thing against which the enactment is levelled is any place used in the sense I have explained. There must be a business conducted, and there must be an owner, occupier, manager, keeper, or some other person who, if these designations do not apply, must nevertheless be some other person who is analogous to and is of the same genus as the owner, keeper, or occupier, who bets or is willing to bet with the persons who resort to his house, room, or other place. In this view it is not an offence under this Act of Parliament to allow persons to assemble for the purpose of betting with each other; there is, upon this hypothesis, no business being conducted at all. The different betting people, or each individual bettor, is conducting his own business, and doing it in a house used indeed, but only used, just as he might do it on the racecourse or on the high road. There is no betting establishment at all, and there is no keeper of one.

I do not think, therefore, that the important question is, What is a "place"? I think in this respect with Rigby, L.J., that any place which is sufficiently definite, and in which a betting establishment might be conducted, would satisfy the words of the statute. But I think not only that this is the construction of the words to which, of course, we must apply the meaning which the Legislature has intended, if we can find it out, but I think it is reasonable and in accordance with good sense that the words should be so construed and so limited. Every game, sport, or exercise is included in the section, and I suppose there is hardly any uncertain event which is of great public interest on which bets are not frequently made.

Take a boat-race. Everyone who has a field, or garden, or house, or room and lets it for the day of the race may be perfectly certain that some of the people who go there, if they go in any considerable numbers, will bet, not indeed with the owner or occupier, &c., but with some one or more of the people who are there. Is each of such places a common gaming house, and subject to the provisions of the law recited in section 2, and a common nuisance under section 1? It seems to me that such a construction would subject a great many perfectly innocent people to great inconvenience and danger when they neither had nor intended to have any connection with betting houses or anything analogous to betting houses.

I have used the phrase "innocent people," by which I mean people who neither bet nor wish to bet; but it is obvious that the Legislature has not prohibited betting at all, but prohibited keeping a house for betting. I do not again go through the list of words which follow "house," because I have already sufficiently explained the construction I place upon them all.

It is not very obscure why the Legislature has used so many words to express its meaning, and I have divided the words into five paragraphs to show what has been the cause of this multitude of alternatives. Suppose the thing intended to be prohibited is what in my construction of the section it is, and suppose the Legislature had not provided for all the alternatives, and the section had run thus, "No house shall be kept for the purpose of the owner betting with persons resorting thereto": the Legislature of course had to provide for the place not fulfilling the legal meaning of a house; so follow the words, "office, room, or other place." It had to provide for any evasion of the word "kept"; so we have the words "opened, kept, or used."

Then, in like manner, the person betting is to be got at, whatever form he assumes, betting on behalf of the betting establishment; so we then get "owner," "occupier," "keeper," "person using." Then another evasion occurred to the mind of the draftsman, and he proceeds to deal with any person employed by or acting on behalf of the classes previously described, or any person having the care or management of, or in any manner conducting, the business thereof; so that all through there must be a business conducted, and a place so connected with that business that the person owning it is betting with the persons resorting thereto.

I do not think it is important to go through all the cases which have been brought before the courts upon this subject, partly because so many of them have been decided on the special facts, which have not rendered it necessary to decide the exact question now before your lordships, and partly because I think A. L. Smith, L.J., has succeeded, in his luminous judgment, in showing that no less than eight very learned judges have construed the statute in the way that it appears to me it should be construed, and the case now comes before your lordships in a form that undoubtedly demands the decision in favour of one view or the other; but as the case of Hawke v. Dunn is said to have given rise to this litigation, I wish to examine the grounds of that decision.

I am unable to accept the reasoning in that case (Hawke v. Dunn), nor do I think it is consistent with the previous authorities or with itself.

In the first place, I find that reliance is placed upon the fact that the bookmakers who bet are professional bookmakers.

I know of no canon of construction which can introduce such words into an Act of Parliament, and certainly there are no such words here. I cannot doubt that if the prohibited thing is done, whatever that prohibited thing is, by a person who does it for the first time in his life, he is just as amenable to the law as though he had been for many years in the practice of it. Let a man open a house for such a purpose, and though he never in fact made a bet or received a deposit, though the proof might be difficult, yet the offence, if proved, would be consummated.

At the end of the judgment (in Hawke v. Dunn) I find these words: "The law does not forbid betting itself, nor is the business or avocation of a bookmaker necessarily illegal, but what the Legislature has forbidden, and what it has pronounced to be illegal, is the use, by those who make a trade and business of betting, of any place for the purpose of betting with persons resorting thereto." I will not again refer to the fallacious employment of the word "use"; what I at present insist upon is the selecting of such persons indicated by the words as if the Act of Parliament had made any difference between different classes of persons, and as if professional bettors were in any different position from any other members of the public.

In another part of the judgment I find the learned judge saying: "In my opinion to limit the meaning of the words 'other place' to some other place ejusdem generis with a house or office, would have the effect of defeating, not of forwarding, the object of the Legislature, and I cannot imagine that, with the desire to suppress that kind of betting mentioned in the preamble, it was in contemplation to afford it a kind of sanctuary in a betting ring or in any other place not ejusdem generis with a house or office." The mischief recited in the preamble is the opening of places called betting houses or offices, and the receiving money in advance by the owners or occupiers of such houses or offices, or by other persons acting on their behalf. The learned judge makes his meaning clear when he begins by saying that "one of the practices deemed to be objectionable and injurious was that of what is known as ready-money betting—viz., that the person making the bet deposited with the bookmaker the money which he was disposed to adventure." This is again inserting by construction words which are not there; the words of the statute are "owners or occupiers of such houses or offices."

I certainly should have thought that if this case were to be argued upon the preamble alone there was not much room for doubt; with the actual enacting words, however, I have myself endeavoured to deal.

The commentary on Doggett v. Catterns, (1868) 13 W. R. 160, 17 C. B. N. S. 669, in Ex. Ch. 19 W. R. 390, 19 C. B. N. S. 765, seems to suggest that a different thing is aimed at by section 4 than that which is included in section 2. I entirely agree with what Blackburn, J., said on that case, but his question is, I think, applicable to the case now under discussion. I cannot suppose that the very same thing was not intended to be aimed at by all the sections; and the reasoning of the learned judge seems to assume that a different class of transactions was aimed at, so that the decision of Doggett v. Catterns might be reconciled with the view that he himself entertains, upon the ground that the question did not arise upon section 1 but upon section 4. I am unable to concur with any such view. The offence, whatever it is, is created by sections 1 and 2. The other sections in the Act apply as corollaries from the commission of the offence, and I think it would be impossible to reconcile Doggett v. Catterns with the view of the learned judge, by supposing that section 4 is not ancillary to and from but a new remedy in respect of the same class of transactions which are made the subject of penal enactments by sections 1 and 2.

The analogy which the learned judge suggests between the statutes 42 Geo. 3, c. 119, 4 Geo. 4, c. 60, s. 60, and the statute now under construction, is, I think, erroneous, and a careful consideration of those statutes would lead to an opposite conclusion. The words of the Act Geo. 3, c. 119, so far as they are relevant to the matter in hand, prohibited any person from keeping any "office or place" for lotteries, and so

Act which the learned judge does not seem to have noticed—namely, 59 Geo. 3, c. 65, actually recites that doubts had arisen in respect of the use of these words. The section in that Act is as follows: "And whereas doubts have arisen whether, under and by former Acts passed from time to time for granting to His Majesty a sum of money to be raised by lotteries, and the Acts commonly called 'Little Goe Acts' of the twenty-seventh year of his present Majesty, intituled 'An Act to render more effectual the laws now in being for suppressing unlawful lotteries,' and of the forty-second year of His present Majesty, intituled 'An Act to suppress certain games and lotteries not authorized by law,' the word 'place' mentioned in the said Acts respectively was meant to describe any place used for the purpose of drawing the illegal lottery called 'Little Goe' or for the purpose of insurance in the lottery of 'Little Goe' or in anywise relating thereto, be the same an enclosed building or not; it is therefore hereby declared and enacted, that the word 'place,' when and where the same is mentioned and used in this and the said several above-recited Acts relating to the drawing of the said illegal lottery called 'Little Goe,' or the assembling of persons for any of the illegal purposes mentioned therein, or for the purpose of 'Little Goe' or lottery insurance, shall be taken to extend to and mean any place in or out of an enclosed building or premises, whether upon land or water, where such illegal practices, or anything relating thereto, shall be carried on or attempted to be carried on."

So that, notwithstanding the width of the words, the Legislature found it necessary to explain, enact, and declare the meaning of the word "place." These form part of a collection of statutes establishing a monopoly by the Government for raising money by lotteries, and prohibiting every kind of lottery and every "place" for establishing any kind of lottery in words which are intended to be exhaustive. To apply such an analogy to such an Act as your lordships are now considering, wherein it is admitted that neither betting nor professional betting—if there be a difference—is prohibited at all, seems to me to be erroneous.

If I have passed over the arguments relied upon by some of your lordships in respect of the history of the legislation and the argument derived from the mischief which the preamble expressly recites to be the mischief against which the Act is directed, it is not that I differ from or undervalue the cogency of those arguments. I only desire to emphasise the proposition that I should come to the same conclusion as that to which I have arrived upon the language of the statute itself if those arguments were not available to aid its construction.

For these reasons I think the appeal should be dismissed with costs, and I move your lordships accordingly.

I ought to add that my much lamented and distinguished friend Lord Herschell, who saw my judgment, concurred in the views which I have expressed. And I have a letter from my noble and learned friend the Lord Chancellor of Ireland saying that he also agrees with the judgment I have proposed to your lordships.

Lord WATSON.—I am of the same opinion, and for substantially the same reasons which have already been expressed by my noble and learned friend the Lord Chancellor.

Lord HOBHOUSE.—In stating to the House the conclusions to which I have been drawn in this difficult case, I will endeavour as far as possible to avoid repetition of matters which have been frequently stated, though some repetition is necessary to make my remarks intelligible. I think that, often as disputes have arisen under the Betting Act of 1853, none has arisen exactly in the present form. In other cases there has either been a criminal charge or an action to recover money as the foundation of them. In the present case, a member of the company which owns the racecourse seeks to prevent the company from using its property in a way which in his view is forbidden by statute. Those sections, therefore, which are specially aimed at occupiers, managers, or persons filling other special characters, are not now directly called into action. They must be carefully considered as throwing light on the principal section which contains the prohibition to which they all refer and on which they all rest. But the part of the Act relied on for the injunction is the first and principal section, which declares in impersonal terms that no place shall be used for the purpose therein described.

The section is somewhat involved, and I am disposed to think that its involutions have caused some inaccuracy of language, or even of thought, in some passages of the many judgments cited to us. I will first pick out and arrange the material words applicable to the present discussion. After the preamble, section 1 enacts: "(a) No house, office, room, or other place (b) shall be opened, kept, or used (c) for the purpose of the owner . . . (d) or any person using the same . . . (e) betting with persons resorting thereto." Taking the words of widest meaning, I read this as a declaration that no place shall be used for the purpose of the owner or (of) any person using the same (for) betting with persons resorting thereto. There is no question here about the owner using the place for betting with anybody. I have only inserted him into my skeleton sentence for the purpose of showing how I read into it the prepositions "of" and "for" in heads (c), (d), and (e)—a reading which makes the grammar rather clearer, and, I think, will hardly be disputed. If, then, the company's reserved enclosure is a placed used for the purpose of any person using it for betting with persons who resort to it, it is the thing prohibited; it is declared to be a common nuisance and contrary to law.

The precise nature and use of this enclosure is to be learned from the company's defence and from particulars of description put in by them. I will state what seem to me the material points. It is about a quarter of an acre in extent. It is uncovered, except that on the side furthest from the racecourse is the grand stand—namely, tiers of seats with a roof over them. All people are admitted to the racecourse on payment of 1s. or 2s. 6d., according to the occasion. All people are admitted to the enclosure on such further payment as will make up £1. The number of persons admitted on race-days varies from 500 to 2,000. Among them are professional bookmakers, varying from 100 to 200, having no special right there, and admitted only as other people are. Of the general public the greater number go there for the purpose of backing horses with bookmakers. A certain number do not bet at all. The bookmaker is accompanied by a clerk, who assists him in his transactions. He does not confine himself to any fixed spot, nor does he use any such apparatus as a desk, stool, umbrella, or tent, though any particular bookmaker is usually to be found in or near the same part of the enclosure. Some minor points are mentioned, and various modes of betting explained; but I do not think that much more light is thrown on the nature of the place than by the main incidents which I have mentioned.

We have it, then, that in this small space of a quarter of an acre there collect habitually on race-days a number of persons whose calling is to make bets with anybody who comes to them; that they may number 200, each with his clerk, making 400 persons out of, at most, 2,000, whose business is betting with the public; that they never fall short of 100, making, with clerks, 200 such persons; that the greater number of the other persons using the enclosure, who may be 500 or may be 2,000 in the course of the day, go there for the purpose of doing business with these bookmakers; and that, though they walk about, each of the bookmakers is usually to be found in the same part of the enclosure. Your lordships are the judges of fact in this case. What inference can you draw, except that the enclosure is known to persons desirous of making bets as a place where they can at once find those who will gratify their desire; and that the business is regular and methodical, carried on in a defined area, which is small compared with the numbers who use it for betting, and in which each professional betting-man can be at once found by anybody who wants him within a few yards of the spot on which he is accustomed to stand?

Applying the expressions of the statute to the facts, and taking the words in their ordinary and reasonable sense, it seems to me impossible to deny that the enclosure is a "place kept" (by the company) and "used" (by them) "for the purpose of persons" (bookmakers) "using the same for the purpose of betting with persons resorting thereto" (i.e., with that larger number of the public who go for the sake of betting with them), or, conversely, that it is kept and used by the company for the purpose of that greater number of the public using it for betting with the bookmakers who resort to it. The words appear to me to describe the case of this enclosure so readily and fitly that it is incumbent on the company, who deny that the use is illegal, to adduce very strong reasons for holding that the words are used in some sense much more restricted than the sense which they are calculated to bear according to the ordinary use of language. That they undertake to do by an examination of the rest of the statute.

It is said that some limitation must be placed on the generality of the words, for otherwise, seeing that betting, like every other human action, must be in some place or other, which for the moment would be used for that purpose, it would result that all betting would be prohibited. That is a thing which the Legislature has never attempted. In the year 1845 it was enacted that a bet should not be the basis of a contract as it used formerly to be; but it remains a perfectly legal act. That argument is repeated many times in various forms of language, and to show precisely what it is I cannot do better than read a passage from the weighty judgment of the present Master of the Rolls: "No person can bet except in some place or other, and whenever he bets in any place he uses that place for betting. To construe 'other place' or 'place' in its ordinary sense of any and every place where persons can or do bet, would involve an absolute prohibition of betting, and would have rendered it quite unnecessary to specify 'betting houses, rooms, or offices.' But the Legislature clearly did not intend to prohibit, and has not prohibited, all betting, nor even all betting by persons who deposit their stakes. Some limitation must therefore be put on the expression 'other place' or 'place.'"

Now, speaking with great deference to so clear an intellect, I cannot help thinking that the argument would not have been put in this way if it had not been for the involved structure of section 1, or if the sentence had been kept, as it were, displayed before the eyes of the commentator. The ordinary sense of "place" is not to mean any and every place where persons can bet. The ordinary sense is a portion of space, and as applied to the earth we live on, a portion of that earth. But the moment the idea of betting is introduced, other words of section 1 come into play. The Legislature has not left us to deal with "place" in vacuo or in the abstract. It has joined other words, and so, as I think, carefully described and confined the meaning of "place." If the practice complained of is that of the owner, occupier, manager, or persons in like position, the meaning is confined within a very narrow compass. In the case before us we have a wider range given by the word "persons." Still there is a qualification of the word "place," and it is one which seems to my understanding to be reasonable, intelligible, and definite enough to ascertain and to apply to the facts of each case. To fall within section 1 the place must be one used for the purpose of anyone using the same for betting with persons resorting thereto. That is true of only a very limited number of places. We have not to construe the word "place," but the compound term "place-used-for-the-purpose." I agree that we must consider the meaning of the word "used" and the meaning of the word "purpose," but if we find that when those words are interpreted in senses germane to the subject-matter, and in accordance with common usage they give a reasonable limitation of the word "place," why should we quit the safe ground of the statutory words and go about seeking for limitations of our own, which must be conjectural?

The most common limitation imposed on the generality of the word "place" by those who think it needs more limitation than is supplied by the words immediately connected with it is, that it must be akin ejusdem generis with its companions, "house, office, room." If the genus selected is wide enough in range, I agree; but that does not go far to solve the problem. That it must mean something other than a house, office, or room the words compel us to admit, and I think nobody denies it. To find out what it means that is not a house, office, or room, and is yet in the view of the law-makers of the same nature, the statute itself is our guide; not in sidelong, indirect lights thrown by other sections addressed to other parts of the subject, but in the express words of this section, which are directly addressed to the very root of the subject. If another place is definite enough in area for identification, if it enables its users to carry on their business as a house, office, or room would do, and if the use of it produces the same results to betting people as a house, office, or room would do, it is of the same genus or nature as a house, office, or room, and it is struck at by the Act. And I think that is the kind of place which is designated by the expression indissolably linked with it, "place-used-for-the-purpose"; and that the other limitations which have been suggested to exclude such places as this enclosure are not warranted by the terms of section 1, and are not called for by any fear of unreasonable consequences. With these remarks on the insufficiency, as I think it, of the criticisms on the word "place" separated from the context from which the statute never separates it, I pass on to examine the words of qualification used in the statute.

The place must be used for a purpose before it can fall within the prohibition. The word "used" is almost as wide in range as the word "place." It may be applied to most human actions. But to use a thing for a purpose is an expression with a much more limited range, and the nature of the purpose will confine it within narrower limits still. If I walk along Whitehall I may be said to use Whitehall, but if I blow my nose there, and thereupon anyone were to say that I was using Whitehall for the purpose of blowing my nose that would be a misuse of language to which either casual hearers or students of language would object. The phrase "use for a purpose" necessarily implies a deliberate use, a designed choice of the thing used for the purpose in hand. Again, if a snarling dog approaches me, and I take up one of the stones on the road to fling at him, it is not incorrect, though the user be momentary, to say that I have used the stone for the purpose of flinging it at a dog. But it would be very incorrect to say that the stones on the road are kept or used for the purpose of persons using them for flinging at dogs. The expressions, I think, necessarily, or at least very strongly, import an habitual or repeated use of the thing for the purpose.

If, then, we read the statute as striking at places the use of which for the purpose of betting is deliberate, designed, and repeated, either on the part of the owner or person having the control, or on the part of other persons using the same, we shall, as I conceive, give to its words their plain and ordinary meaning, and we shall not give to it any extravagant latitude such as has been suggested.

I do not propose to take up the time of the House by a minute examination of cases which have been examined often and minutely by others. I think that very little, if any, authority can be produced against the reading which I have tried to expound, and that many judicial opinions may be cited which favour it. But I should like to illustrate it by reference to cases which seem to me to mark neatly the boundaries between legal and illegal use of a place for betting. There are two cases, in each of which the bar or tap-room of a public-house was used for betting. In each case betting took place in the bar. In Whitehurst v. Fincher, 17 Cox C. C. 70, 38 W. R. Dig. 82, the defendant was the betting man. He went to the bar on three consecutive days and made some bets. He was not a bookmaker. It was held that the room was not used for the purpose. In fact, the defendant came in, and being there made bets, but there was no designed or systematic use of that place. In Hornsby v. Raggett, 40 W. R. 111, [1892] 1 Q. B. 20, the defendant was the occupier, whose room was used by a bookmaker systematically for his business, and the defendant was convicted. The judges who decided the former case were Mathew, J., and Fry, L.J., and those who decided the latter were Mathew, J., and Mr. Justice, now Lord Justice A. L. Smith. And with Hornsby v. Raggett agree Reg. v. Preedy, 17 Cox. C. C. 3, decided by Hawkins, J., where the place was the bar of a public-house, to which the defendant resorted on several days for making bets. In none of these cases did the court allow the objection that the betting men had no right to use the place; or that it was used at the same time by other persons for its legitimate purpose of a tap- or bar-room; or that no particular part of the room was allotted for betting. The decisions turned on the essential question whether or no the evidence showed that the room was used for the purpose of a person using the same for betting with persons resorting thereto. And for ascertaining this purpose the leading consideration was whether the use of the room was casual or systematic.

For the same purpose I compare the cases of Reg. v. Cook, 32 W. R. 796, 13 Q. B. D. 377, and Snow v. Hill, 33 W. R. 475, 14 Q. B. D. 588, on the one hand, with Hawke v. Dunn on the other hand. In the first of those three cases the place was a bicycle-ground, [illegible] acres in extent. There were 20,000 spectators. Though no betting was allowed, some actually took place. The manager of the ground was convicted by the magistrates, but the conviction was quashed by the court, consisting of Hawkins, J., and Smith, L.J. The facts showed, said Hawkins, J., that betting was not the business of the place. So in Snow v. Hill the place was an enclosed field, five acres in extent, used for dog-races. The defendant, who was convicted by the magistrates, moved about this field making bets. Lord Coleridge and Smith, L.J., were the judges. They quashed the conviction. It appears from the judgment which the latter learned judge delivered in the present suit, that the precise ground of the decision was that the defendant walked about and did not use any definite spot; not, as had been supposed, that he was not shown to have been a professional bookmaker. But in that case there was no other spot capable of definition except the whole field, and it was not shown that the field was crowded with betting men, or could reasonably be said to be used for the purpose of betting, or for any purpose other than its ostensible one of dog-racing. In both these cases the question really tried was whether a defined place was used for the purpose forbidden by the statute. In Hawke v. Dunn the same question was tried. The defendant was a bookmaker, the place was an enclosure, within a racecourse, called "Tattersall's Ring." On the day in question about 1,000 persons were admitted to the enclosure, including the defendant and fourteen other bookmakers, with their clerks. That is a much smaller proportion of bookmakers than exist in the present case; but as regards the size of the place and the habitual use of it, that case strongly resembled the present one. The magistrates refused to convict the defendant of using the enclosure for the forbidden purpose, but on appeal a conviction was obtained. Hawkins, J., delivered the opinion of the court of five judges, who were unanimous. He laid it down that the user forbidden is the user by those who make a trade or business of betting. And what the judges found is that the facts proved—namely, the definite area, the large number of betting men resorting to it for betting, the habitual use of it, and the calling of the defendant—combined to show that the enclosure was a place used for the forbidden purpose.

Here let me make a remark on a point which has entered into the discussion of the six cases I have quoted—namely, whether or no the persons betting were professional bookmakers. It was pointed out more than once at the bar, and has been again pointed out by the Lord Chancellor, that the statute does not single out bookmakers as objects to strike at. That is quite true, and yet it remains that the character of the persons who commonly use the place is a relevant and important fact. The crucial question being whether the particular place in dispute is a "place-used-for-the-purpose," surely the fact that it is habitually used by persons who make betting the business of their lives is an important ingredient of evidence for ascertaining the purpose. I have not mentioned it with any other object, and I think it is with the same object that other judges have dwelt upon it.

I think that the six cases which I have mentioned are all well decided, though of course I am aware that the suit before your lordships is intended to be and is in effect a rehearing of Hawke v. Dunn. Different judges used different terms in expressing their opinions; but in each of these six cases the real controversy has been whether there is a reasonably defined area designedly and repeatedly used for the purpose of betting with persons resorting thereto. If so, that is a forbidden place within section 1, and the question who is liable to penalties depends on other sections of the Act.

Of course there will be difficult cases in which it is doubtful whether they fall on one side or the other of the dividing line between legality and illegality, whatever line may be drawn. In deciding whether a place is used for a purpose, the size of the place, its more or less marked division from other places, the proportions between those who come for the purpose in question and those who come for other purposes, the regularity or frequency of the use, all such things must enter into the consideration, and may cause much difficulty. For myself, I cannot feel substantial difficulty in the six decisions I have quoted. And yet I know there is difficulty, such difficulty as to produce dissent from Hawke v. Dunn in the Court of Appeal, and among most of your lordships. How far that difficulty will affect other decisions I hardly know, but unless it is rested on some grounds peculiar to enclosures on racecourses it will shake many other decisions. I think that some of the other decided cases are on the face of them open to question. In Eastwood v. Miller, 22 W. R. 799, L. R. 9 Q. B. 440, I should have doubted whether the ground could properly be said to be a place used for the purpose of any person using the same for betting with persons resorting thereto, seeing that the only place was a large field used for other purposes by largely preponderating numbers of persons. In Haigh v. Town Council of Sheffield, 23 W. R. 547, L. R. 10 Q. B. 102, the same doubts occur. But in the case of Hawke v. Dunn, as in the present case, the statutory expressions are fitted exactly to the facts, and we can hardly say that there is difficulty, if these expressions are to receive their obvious and ordinary sense, and are not to be cut down on account of expressions in other sections, or because it is that such places as enclosures on racecourses are wholly beyond the scope of the enactment.

The latter of these suggestions is founded mainly on the preamble, which recites as the motive for the new law that a kind of gaming has "of late" sprung up. It goes on to mention specifically the opening of places called betting houses or offices, and the receiving of money in advance for bets, which I believe is called ready-money betting. "For the suppression thereof" it is enacted; and then commences section 1. There is nothing to explain what period of time is comprised in the vague words "of late," nor whether the latter phenomena are the opening of betting houses and offices simply, or, as the grammar would indicate, that opening combined with ready-money betting; nor why ready-money betting, which requires possession and payment of cash by the offerer of the bet, is more demoralizing than ordinary betting, in which he may go to any extent beyond his means on the chance of winning and never having to put down any money at all. Looking at the preamble alone, I say for myself that it does not give me any idea of the precise mischief which the Legislature is resolving to suppress, except that it has something to do with betting, and that I have to look at the enacting part to find out what it is. That is not the sort of preamble which can be used with any confidence to control expressions in the enacting part, even were they less clear than those of section 1. At any rate, that section 1 is more precise than the preamble, and does go beyond it in several particulars, is allowed by everybody who has commented on it; and I need not dwell more upon that point.

But it is stated that the practice of betting in racecourse enclosures prevailed long before the year 1853, and that in some cases it is traceable as far back as the beginning of this century. Some very pertinent remarks on this statement were made in the Court of Appeal by Rigby, L.J., which I will not repeat (they begin at p. 291, [1897] 2 Q. B.) but will beg to adopt, as showing that statements of this kind, though unquestionably made in perfect good faith, must be received with great caution. They relate to matters of history beyond the personal knowledge of the parties who make them; they have not been subjected to close investigation; and in order to have any important bearing on this discussion the facts stated must not only be a full account of the whole case, but must have been present to the minds of the framers of this statute. The ground is a very unsafe one to build upon.

But let us see exactly what the argument is. It is, I understand, that if the Legislature had intended to prohibit such well-known practices, it would have used more express words pointed to that end. The argument was very well and forcibly put, and I confess that for some time I came under its influence. But after all its force depends on the extent to which it is thought that the terms of section 1 require judicial limitation narrower than the limitation which they themselves import when read in their ordinary sense. By repeated study of those terms I have persuaded myself, and have been at pains to show, that this ordinary sense of the terms leads to a reasonable and clear comprehension of the mischief at which the Legislature has struck. To any mind which has arrived at that conclusion the force of the argument founded on notorious existing practice is turned in the opposite direction. Why, if racecourse enclosures were not struck at, should the Legislature have chosen terms which fit this enclosure, and, therefore, ex hypothesi the older enclosures with close exactitude, and yet make no exception in their favour? Suppose it were shown that systematic betting went on in public-houses long before 1853. It would be very surprising if it did not, and probably it could be shown if anybody were interested enough in the matter to make inquiry. Public-houses are not mentioned in the Act any more than racecourse enclosures. Their bar-rooms are subject to precisely the same inquiries as regards defined area, user, and purpose as are racecourse enclosures. It has been found in several cases that the terms of section 1 aptly describes parts of bar-rooms frequented by ordinary customers, but also frequented by betting men. It is difficult to think that those decisions should be overturned if reasons were assigned for believing that the practices condemned by them were too old to fall within the very vague terms "of late sprung up," and that the Legislature could not have intended to prohibit practices then long known.

It is true that many years have elapsed before applying the Betting Act to places of the kind now in question. If the meaning of the descriptive terms were so ambiguous as to hold the mind in equilibrio between two rival constructions, one might resort to this consideration for aid. But I cannot admit it to import an ambiguity into terms which I find substantially clear. It is of no great weight. In this country we are in the habit of leaving many kinds of prosecutions to be set agoing by private persons, and the result is an irregular application of the law. Whether private persons shall invoke a law to suppress practices which they dislike depends on many circumstances affecting their minds; perhaps the most powerful incitement would be an extension of the practices themselves, and of the feelings roused against them.

This irregularity is most marked when the law has placed in the category of crime practices which large numbers of persons think to be vicious, and large numbers again think to be harmless, and carry on without any loss of self-respect or of the respect of their neighbours; and such I take to be the case with betting. I could mention other statutes—e.g., those relating to the observance of Sunday, and those relating to lotteries, which have been applied in unexpected ways after a long time. But I will avoid these speculations. It is sufficient to say that if this statute is invoked it must be rightly construed whether its long sleep has been due to lack of interest or of courage, or to ignorance, or to any other cause.

There are, it is true, expressions and provisions in the statute on which arguments may be built for restriction of the terms of section 1. I will refer to a sentence or two in the judgment of the present Master of the Rolls, because, by collecting those passages of the statute together, he presents a condensed and forcible statement of the argument founded on them. (See [1897] 2 Q. B., at pp. 261-2.) He first refers to the preamble which I have dealt with at length. The place aimed at by the Legislature, he says, is a place where the business of betting is carried on (sections 1, 3, 4). Well, that is the main object of this enclosure. It is a place used as a betting house or office, which can be forcibly entered under the warrant of a magistrate (sections 11, 12). This enclosure is used by the great majority of persons who use it at all, both in form and substance, just as a betting house or office is used, and it can be forcibly entered by the officers of the law. It is a place which can be advertised as a betting place (section 7); so can this enclosure, though in fact it is not. It is a place which can be reasonably regarded as a common nuisance (section 1); so can this enclosure. If the practice objected to were an orgie, offensive to the moral sense, nobody would think that it was not a nuisance, or that there was any absurdity or practical difficulty in treating it as a nuisance, and the Legislature has chosen to place the specified mischief on the footing of a nuisance.

So far I see no difficulty in applying the provisions of the statute to the enclosure. But then stress is said on this: that it must be a place which it is not absurd to treat as a gaming house within 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, ss. 2, 11, 12. That provision, I admit, causes difficulty; and it is the only one of the subordinate provisions which does. It would be somewhat astonishing if persons entering the enclosure for curiosity only, or amusement, found themselves arrested for being in a gaming house. I cannot find, however, that this consideration has prevented the courts from holding places under like conditions to be within section 1. It would be absurd, in some respects, to treat the spots occupied by a desk, an umbrella, or a box as gaming houses; but that did not prevent decisions that they were within section 1, and I have not heard any objection taken to those decisions. It would be very hard if a man going to enjoy a pot of beer in Preedy's bar had been arrested for being in a gaming house, yet Preedy's case and the other public-house cases involved such a consequence as much as Hawke v. Dunn, or as this case. I do not know that they are to be overruled, and I certainly do not think that they ought to be.

In the recent case of Liddell v. Lofthouse, 44 W. R. 149, [1896] 1 Q. B. 295, all the consequences apprehended in this case might have followed. The place was a billsticker's hoarding, supported at two points by stays of timber, and quite open in front. This formed between the supports a convenient protected bay for a betting man, who posted himself there for three consecutive days to bet with all comers. He was convicted by Lindley and Kay, L JJ., of using the place for the forbidden purpose. Yet not only was the place unenclosed, but in front it was undefined by any boundary, and any innocent passer-by who stopped for a while to look on might, according to the argument now under examination, be arrested for being in a gaming house. Lindley, L.J., says: "The place is sufficiently defined for all purposes. As to its being partly undefined, I think there are many places, which though in some sense undefined, can yet be described with sufficient clearness for the purpose of identification." I entirely agree; but I add that in all such places there may be, and in many there are sure to be, persons not engaged in the betting. I do not remember that this decision was objected to in the argument here, and in the Court of Appeal it was referred to by several judges with apparent approval.

I think this difficulty shrinks in magnitude under examination. It really arises from carelessness in importing the provisions of another statute into a new range of subjects; and that the words "other place" bring in a larger range is not denied by anybody; the only dispute is, how much larger. Then the draftsman does not observe that some of the subordinate provisions of the imported statute may not be applicable to everything which falls within the larger range. The arrest of persons not actually engaged in the betting is a thing most unlikely to happen; and it does not appear ever to have happened in fact. I cannot think it right to cut down clear words of enactment in the leading section because one of the subordinate provisions may involve a remote possibility of this kind. It is hardly legitimate to allow so small a part of the Act to influence its essential scope so largely.

To sum up briefly what I fear has been a tedious argument, I find a place definitely demarcated, of small size compared with its occupants, regularly frequented by large numbers of professional bookmakers carrying on their business of betting in the most methodical manner with persons who come there for that purpose. A "certain number," it is said, do not bet at all; but the greater number of the public go for the purpose of betting with the bookmakers. I agree that the Act is directed not against betting, but against bookmakers and those who make a business of betting: Liddell v. Lofthouse. But I say that the mode of warfare adopted against such persons is to strike at places where betting is concentrated into a focus, so that persons wishing to bet may know exactly where to find those who will indulge them. Wisely or unwisely, the Legislature has decided that such practices are vicious, "tending to the injury and demoralization of improvident persons." Wisely or unwisely, the Legislature has thought it possible and desirable to repress these vicious practices by branding them as crimes. It has declared that places used for such practices are common nuisances and contrary to law. If we are to rely on admitted facts, this enclosure is a concentrated focus of betting as regular as the races themselves, and it is thronged by betting men, professional and other, with only a moderate sprinkling of men not engaged in betting. If there is any meaning in words, that is a place kept and used for the purpose of persons using the same betting with persons resorting thereto. Those are the guiding terms of the Act, and I do not think that their meaning can rightly be cut down by anything in the vague preamble or in the subordinate provisions.

In my judgment, therefore, the decision in Hawke v. Dunn is right, and so is the decision which the Lord Chief Justice delivered in this case in deference to Hawke v. Dunn. Knowing that the majority of your lordships are of a different opinion, I make no motion. But having myself arrived from a state of great doubt to a clear conclusion, I have thought it right to state the reasons why I differ from so great a weight of authority.

Lord MACNAGHTEN.—I concur in the motion proposed by the Lord Chancellor.

Lord MORRIS.—I also agree.

Lord SHAND.—I also am of the same opinion, and in addition I only desire to express my view that, if the language of the words of enactment in the statute were open to the observation that they are ambiguous, and so are open to two different views or constructions, which I do not think they are, yet I am strongly of opinion that the terms of the preamble are so clear as to the object and intended scope of the statute that the judgment, even in that view, must be given in favour of the respondents.

Lord DAVEY.—This case is chiefly remarkable for the great divergence of judicial opinion on the question involved in it. On the one hand we have the opinions of Hawkins, Cave, Wills, Wright, and Kennedy, JJ., in Hawke v. Dunn, and those of Rigby, L.J., in the present case, in favour of the appellant's view; while, on the other hand, Lord Esher, the present Master of the Rolls, and Lopes, L.J. (now Lord Ludlow), and Smith and Chitty, L.JJ., support the respondents' contention, and it is tolerably clear that the opinion of the Lord Chief Justice was in the same direction. If we turn to the older decisions it is admitted that Eastwood v. Miller and (I think) Haigh v. Town Council of Sheffield and Liddell v. Lofthouse cannot stand with the decision of the Court of Appeal. We have also the valuable opinion of Erle, C.J., and Keating, J., on the construction of the Act in Doggett v. Catterns, and it is somewhat difficult to make out the exact grounds on which their decision was overruled in the Exchequer Chamber. For reasons which will presently appear I think that the distinction sought to be made in Bows v. Fenwick, 22 W. R. 804, L. R. 9 C. P. 339. and Gallaway v. Maries, 30 W. R. 151, 8 Q. B. D. 275, that the betting man or bookmaker (as he is called) in one case stood on a stool under an umbrella and in the other case on a box, is too thin to be a ground for decision.

In this divergence of judicial opinion I find it the better and safer course to examine the words of the Act itself and endeavour to form my own opinion on the construction of the Act as applied to the admitted facts of the present case, as if the matter were res integra, and there were no previous decision upon it.

Turning, therefore, to the Act, the first thing to be noted is the preamble, to which great and, as I think, undue importance has been attached by some of the learned judges in the Court of Appeal. Your lordships must forgive me if I read the words of it: "Whereas a kind of gaming has of late sprung up leading to the injury and demoralization of improvident persons by the opening of places called betting houses or offices, and the receiving of money in advance by the owners or occupiers of such houses or offices, or by other persons acting on their behalf on their promises to pay money on events of horse-races, and the like contingencies, for the suppression thereof" (i.e., of the kind of gaming described). "Be it enacted," &c.

It has been said that inasmuch as betting transactions of the same character as those which take place in this enclosure have been carried on in similar enclosures throughout the country from the beginning of the century, it is inconceivable that these practices should have been unknown to the Legislature when it passed the Act of 1853, and if it had been intended to suppress them, direct or unmistakeable words would have been found in the Act. Your lordships have before you in the appellant's case (the accuracy of which was admitted by the learned counsel for the respondents in the course of the argument) a more detailed statement of the facts on this point than was unfortunately before the Court of Appeal. That statement is to the effect that although enclosed spaces had been in existence at race-meetings prior to the passing of the Act, for the purpose of betting, yet prior to that time the betting was for the most part credit betting, and ready-money betting only occasionally took place, and to a small extent. I think, therefore, that the argument I have referred to is founded on an exaggeration of the facts as now disclosed; but, further, I am of opinion that the argument itself is illegitimate if it is sought thereby to cut down the language of the enactment according to its plain and natural meaning, or to restrict the enactment to the particular matter set forth in the preamble. "Undoubtedly"—I quote from Chitty, L.J.'s, judgment words with which I cordially agree—"it is a settled rule that the preamble cannot be made use of to control the enactments themselves where they are expressed in clear and unambiguous terms." But the preamble is a key to the statute, and affords a clue to the scope of the statute when the words construed by themselves without the aid of the preamble are fairly capable of more than one meaning. There is, however, another rule or warning which cannot be too often repeated, that you must not create or imagine an ambiguity in order to bring in the aid of the preamble or recital. To do so would in many cases frustrate the enactment and defeat the general intention of the Legislature. It may well be in this and in other cases that the Legislature, taking the recited facts as the occasion of the enactment, has deliberately used larger words to prevent the same kind of mischief in other forms. In the present case I am bound to express my opinion, with unfeigned respect for those who think otherwise, that there is not any such ambiguity in the present Act as entitles a court to cut down or restrict the words of the enactment by the recital in the preamble.

I have said thus much about the preamble because I dissent from many of the arguments which have been used, and the question is one of general interest. But in truth it is not essential to my opinion in this case, because I am prepared to accept the construction put upon the word "place" by the learned counsel for the respondents.

To turn now to the enactments themselves, and reading only what is material to explain my construction, section 1 provides that no house, office, room, or other place shall be opened, kept, or used for the purpose of any person using the same or conducting the business thereof betting with persons resorting thereto, or for the purpose of receiving deposits in the manner which has been shortly described as ready-money betting. Section 3 enacts that any person who, being the owner or occupier of any house, room, office, or other place, shall knowingly and wilfully permit the same to be opened, kept, or used by any other person for the purposes aforesaid or either of them, or any person conducting the business of any house, &c., used for the purposes aforesaid, shall be liable to penalties. The present case falls within section 3, and the important words are "opened, kept, or used." I think that the word "used" must mean something different from "opened" or "kept," and be intended to enlarge the scope of the enactment; and the person who uses is clearly different in kind from the occupier who permits the user. I cannot find any sufficient reason for not attaching its ordinary meaning to the word "used," which is not a difficult word to construe. Indeed, I have had some difficulty in understanding in what other sense the word is said to be employed, or grasping the meaning sought to be attached to it.

It will be seen that the prohibited purposes are twofold: (1) using a house, &c., for the purpose of betting with persons resorting thereto, and (2) receiving deposits on bets. I have already said that for the purposes of this case I accept Mr. Walton's contention that the word "place" should be construed as ejusdem generis with house, room, or office. I will ke it to mean any enclosed space capable of being ed and in fact used by persons carrying on the siness of betting with others as their office or place business for the time being. The questions there- e are: Was this enclosure a place capable of being used; was it, in fact, used for the purposes entioned in the first section of the Act, and did the spondents wilfully permit it to be so used?

The enclosure in the present case is a piece of ound of not more than a quarter of an acre in tent, fenced off and enclosed by iron railings. We ve not, therefore, to consider any questions such as ose raised in Doggett v. Catterns whether a tree in yde Park could be a place within the meaning of e Act, or those suggested in the course of the gument, whether a racecourse could be a place. It an enclosed, segregated space of comparatively oderate dimensions, and it was scarcely denied that is capable of being a "place" within any construc- n of that word.

The number of persons admitted to this enclosure ries from 500 to 2,000, and among such persons ere are always a certain number, varying from 100 200, who are professional bookmakers "carrying their business" (I use the language of the amended rticulars) in the manner described. Of the other embers of the public frequenting the enclosure e greater number go there for the purpose of backing" horses with the bookmakers, but a certain mber do not bet at all. They go there, I suppose, m curiosity or in company with their friends, perhaps even (though the situation does not seem ry eligible for obtaining a quiet view) to see the ce. The bookmaker in the enclosure is accompanied his clerk or partner with the necessary book for cording his transactions. He does not confine him- lf to any fixed spot in the enclosure, nor does he use y such apparatus as a desk, stool, or umbrella, ough any particular bookmaker is usually to be nd in or near the same part of the enclosure. The ended particulars then describe the mode of betting opted by the bookmakers. To put it shortly, the actice is for the members of the public who bet with m to back a particular horse against the "field," hilst the bookmaker backs the "field" against the rticular horse selected. A bookmaker anxious to ck the field against a particular horse calls out the ds which he will give or take in respect of those rses, and this practice of calling out the odds largely adopted by every bookmaker betting in the closure for the purpose of attracting the attention backers. Some bookmakers carry on a ready- ney business—that is, usually require the backer to posit his stake when the bet is made. Others do greater part of their business on credit—that is, hout requiring a deposit. But, as might be ex- ted, a deposit is required when a bet is made with erson unknown to them.

On this statement of facts I cannot bring myself to ubt that the reserved enclosure is a place in the ure of a room which is in fact used by professional ting men as their place of business for the time ng, or, if you will, temporary office, for both the poses mentioned in the first section of the Act— nely, for the purpose of betting with persons resort- thereto, and for the purpose of money being eived by them in consideration of a promise to pay ney on the contingency of a horse-race. In my nion the provisions of the Act are infringed if a son carries on his business in the manner prohibited the Act in some known room or place to which ple who come to bet with him can resort knowing t they will find him there. There is nothing what- r in the Act which requires that the occupation or r of the place for the prohibited purposes shall be exclusive, or that the person using the place shall have a right of occupation of any defined portion of it. And I regard it as altogether immaterial that the bookmakers do not stand on a stool or box, or use a gaudy umbrella for the purpose of rendering themselves more conspicuous or attracting the attention of their customers. Those are accessories which may afford useful evidence when the nature of the business is in doubt, but are not essential to the carrying on of the business. Then it is said that the bookmakers pay the same fee for admission as the other members of the public, and have no more right there than others who have paid the same fee. I am unable to see the relevance of this. The question is, not how they get there, but what they are permitted to do when they have got there? In short, it seems to me, on the admitted facts of this case, that this enclosure is a species of betting-room or exchange to which professional betting men go for the purpose of pursuing their calling, and which their customers resort to knowing they will find them there and be able to deal with them. I adopt the judgment of the present Master of the Rolls in the Stockton case (Liddell v. Lofthouse), which seems to me a more difficult one than the one before your lordships.

It is not in controversy that the respondents knowingly permit the enclosure to be used by betting men in the manner described, and, inasmuch as it does not appear that any other part of the land under their control is used for the same purpose, I should have little difficulty in inferring, if it were necessary, that the reserved enclosure is appropriated by them for that purpose. I have a strong suspicion that they would not permit the betting men to carry on their business on the grand stand or any other part of their adjoining land or buildings. But it is not so found in the present case, and I have no right to assume it, nor is it necessary for the purpose of this case. It is sufficient to say that the bookmakers are licensed or permitted by the respondents to use this particular place for the purposes of their business.

Some of the learned judges have thought it inconceivable that the Legislature can have intended to prohibit the use of an enclosure like the one in question for the purposes detailed in the amended particulars. I have a greater difficulty in understanding why, under the provisions of an Act directed to the suppression of a particular kind of gaming, a person should be allowed to transfer his business for the day or more to an enclosure in Kempton Park and carry it on there in precisely the same manner which he could not do in his own office in London or elsewhere. I do not think that any serious difficulty is created by the enclosure being liable to be treated as a common gaming house, with the consequences thereof. Persons who resort to this enclosure must know what they are about. And it is admitted that the majority of people who go there do so for the purpose of betting.

For these reasons I agree with Rigby, L.J., and my noble and learned friend Lord Hobhouse that the judgment of the Court of Appeal should be reversed. But as the majority of your lordships are of a different opinion, the appeal will, of course, be dismissed with costs.

LORD JAMES OF HEREFORD.—I desire to say that it appears to me that this action was duly brought in the court below.

The leading counsel for the appellant, in the commencement of his argument, very properly called your lordships' attention to the fact that the action was in one sense a friendly action—a fact of which the courts below had also been informed. It appears that by a decision in the case of Hawke v. Dunn the proceedings permitted by the defendants at Kempton Park would be regarded as illegal. From that decision there could be no appeal. Shareholders in the defendants' company were therefore interested in obtaining the decision of the Court of Appeal and of this House upon the matters involved. To effect his object the plaintiff, one of the shareholders in the defendants' company, brought this action in a form which would secure a judgment upon the legality or illegality of the defendants' proceedings. It seems clear that the action was brought in good faith for the purpose of obtaining an authoritative and final judgment. Probably the plaintiff will regard with satisfaction his want of success in the action. But the judgment, whatever it may be, will and must be acted upon. This, therefore, is not a case where the judgment of a judicial tribunal is sought for the purpose of determining a right for mere abstract purposes.

It also seems quite clear that there is no ground for saying that any collusion has existed between the plaintiff and defendants or their legal advisers. The statements made by Mr. Asquith and the late Sir Frank Lockwood are conclusive upon that point. In the course of his reply at the bar of the House Mr. Asquith stated that he had acted as leading counsel for the plaintiff in the case of Hawke v. Dunn, and had argued successfully in that case that facts similar to those existing in the present suit constituted illegality. Not the slightest trace can be found throughout the whole of these proceedings of any want of good faith or zeal on the part of plaintiff or his advisers in the conduct of the suit.

It was stated by the leading counsel for the appellants that a somewhat too broad admission was alleged to have been made in the tenth "particular," wherein it was stated that at the time of the passing of the Betting Houses Act, 1853, betting was carried on and had been carried on since the commencement of the century in certain enclosures in precisely the same manner as now existing. In my judgment this allegation is immaterial, and cannot in any degree affect the decision that should be arrived at on this appeal. But even if it were material the alleged inaccuracy has now been plainly corrected by the statements made in the tenth paragraph of the appellant's case. Such statements, admittedly correct, are now accepted without reference to the allegations in the tenth "particular." The decision of your lordships will, therefore, proceed upon the statement of fact that some ready-money betting had existed on racecourses prior to 1853, but in less degree than that which has occurred since.

Inasmuch, therefore, as it seems that this action has not been brought to try any abstract question, that the judgment of this House is sought for the purpose of being enforced and acted upon, and that the action —which has been conducted in perfect good faith—is in no sense collusive, I can see no ground for the suggestion that there is any impediment in the way of the due determination of this appeal.

I do not refer in detail to the facts of the case, which have been already stated, but I regard them as establishing that within an enclosure at Kempton Park certain "bookmakers" are in the habit of betting, that such persons make betting their trade or business, and that the fact of such betting taking place within the enclosure is known to the defendants, and the betting not being interfered with must be taken to be sanctioned by them.

The action is based on the allegation that the respondents have infringed the provisions of the Betting Houses Act, 1853, by opening and keeping open the enclosure for the purpose of being used by professional "bookmakers" for betting with persons resorting thereto. In order to determine the question submitted for the decision of your lordships' House, it is necessary carefully to consider both the history and the provisions of the Betting Houses Act of 1853.

In relation to the origin of the Act, I concur in the statement made by Hawkins, J., in the case of Reg. v. Cook. It appears that shortly before the passing of the Act of 1853 a system of ready-money betting had sprung up in the Metropolis and the larger provincial towns. Houses, offices and rooms were opened for the sole purpose of carrying on this betting business. Public-houses also were utilized for effecting the same object. In these places lists giving the names of horses entered for different races were exposed to view. Against the names of the horses on these lists figures were placed showing the odds the betting man or bookmaker carrying on the betting business was willing to lay against each horse. These betting places were open to the public in the same way that a shop is kept open. Anyone wishing to back a horse would have to deposit the sum of money he desired to risk with the person in attendance, receiving a card recording the transaction. Such a mode of betting of course represents what is termed ready-money betting. These list houses became so numerous, and the betting carried on in them became so extensive, that the Government of the period determined to deal rigidly with the evils resulting therefrom, and to suppress by rendering illegal the list houses. With this object, as declared by Sir Alexander Cockburn, the then Attorney-General, the Act of 1853 was passed. The object of that Act can be discovered from its contents. It is intituled "An Act for the Suppression of Betting Houses," and the preamble recites "that a source of betting has of late sprung up tending to the demoralization and injury of improvident persons by the opening of places called betting houses or offices, and the receiving of money in advance by the owners or occupiers of such houses or offices, or by other persons acting on their behalf, on their promises to pay money on events of horse-races and the like contingencies. For the suppression be it enacted," &c.

It will be seen that, so far as the preamble discloses the intention of the Legislature, the evil intended to be dealt with is not the act of betting either by depositing money or on credit, which was and is legal. The evil recited is the carrying on of a betting business under certain conditions in a house or office, and for suppression of these houses and offices the provisions of the Act were framed.

Doubtless the contents of a preamble of an Act of Parliament cannot for any purpose control the actual clear provision of the statute; but if the wording of the statute gives rise to doubts as to its proper construction, the preamble can be and ought to be referred to in order to arrive at the proper construction to be put upon the enacting portion of the statute.

Upon this subject I fully accept the dictum of Lord Tenterden in Halton v. Cove, 1 B. & Ad. 538, 558, who thus summarizes the matter: "It is very true, as argued for the plaintiff, that the enacting words of an Act of Parliament are not always to be limited by the words of the preamble, but must in many instances go beyond it. Yet on a sound construction of every Act of Parliament I take it the words of the enacting part must be confined to that which is the plain object and general intention of the Legislature in passing the Act, and the preamble affords a good clue to discover what the object was."

With the intention apparently of dealing and dealing only with the evils recited in the preamble, the Legislature proceeded in the first section of the Act to enact: "No house, room, or other place shall be opened, kept, or used for the purpose of the owner, occupier, or keeper thereof, or any person using the same, or any person procured or employed by or acting for or on behalf of such owner, occupier, or person using the same, or of any person having the care or management or in any manner conducting the business thereof, betting with persons resorting thereto, and every house, office, or room, or other place opened, kept, or used for the purposes aforesaid, or any of them, is hereby declared to be a common nuisance and contrary to law." And by section 2: "Every house, room, office, or other place opened, kept, or used for the purposes aforesaid, or any of them, shall be taken and deemed to be a common gaming house."

The provisions of this second clause are very important when construing and applying the first. In order to bring the first clause into operation something must exist that can at least constructively be regarded as a common gaming house. As the betting at Kempton Park was not carried on in a house, room, or office, it becomes necessary to determine what effect is to be given to the words "other place," and how far they can be held to apply to the enclosure wherein the alleged illegal betting took place.

Speaking in general terms, whilst the place mentioned in the Act must be to some extent ejusdem generis with house, room, or office, I do not think that it need possess the same characteristics; for instance, it need not be covered in or roofed. It may be, to some extent, an open space. But certain conditions must exist in order to bring such space within the word "place."

There must be a defined area so marked out that it can be found and recognized as "the place" where the business is carried on and wherein the bettor can be found. Thus, if a person betted on Salisbury Plain, there would be no "place" within the Act. The whole of Epsom Downs or any other racecourse where betting takes place would not constitute a place; but directly a definite localization of the business of betting is effected, be it under a tent or even movable umbrella, it may be well held that a "place" exists for the purposes of a conviction under the Act. If this view be correct, I think that the enclosure existing at Kempton Park might, physically speaking, under certain conditions constitute "a place" within the meaning of the first and second sections of the Act of 1853. It is a defined space limited by metes and bounds, and of such an area that a person therein carrying on the business of betting can be found. I also think, as I have previously stated, that it is established that within this enclosure betting took place, that the bets were made by men whose business is that of a bookmaker or betting man, and that such betting took place with the cognizance, and therefore it must be held with the sanction, of the defendants. But the main question involved in this case has still to be solved—namely, Was the enclosure opened, kept, or used for the purpose of the owner, occupier, or any person using the same, or of any person conducting the business thereof, betting with persons resorting thereto? In my opinion this question must be answered in the negative. For I think that the certain conditions I have just referred to do not exist, and that in consequence of the absence of those conditions this enclosure cannot be held to be "a place" wherein an offence has been committed.

In this case the only alleged "place" where the business of betting is said to be carried on is the particular enclosure referred to. But it must be remembered that the whole of Kempton Park racecourse is enclosed; within that enclosure there are certain stands and other enclosures. Unfortunately it is known to all that as a general rule wherever racing takes place betting upon the races exists also. Some portion of those who witness horse-races invariably bet. It may be taken, therefore, that of the spectators who enter the Kempton Park racecourse a certain number intend to bet on the races and do so. Those who back horses are for the most part members of the general public; those with whom the horses are backed—that is, those who lay the odds against the different horses, are known as "bookmakers," and no doubt attend at all race-meetings with the primary object of carrying on their business of betting.

It is probable that throughout the whole of the enclosed racecourse betting on the different races takes place in greater or less degree. Certainly there is nothing to prevent such betting everywhere within such enclosed course. But by a sort of gravitation, resulting apparently from convenience, the majority of those who bet at Kempton Park congregate within a special enclosure—the one in question—for the purpose of betting. The spot appears to attract the "bookmakers" in consequence of its being central and adjacent to different stands, and within sight of the winning post and of the board on which the names of the horses about to start and their jockeys are made public. But I do not find that the defendants have opened, kept, or used this enclosure for the purposes of betting more than any other portion of the racecourse. Any member of the public can enter it for the purpose of seeing the race. No facilities for betting are provided by the defendants, and the fact that bets are made therein results from the personal action of the persons entering it. I certainly can find no direct evidence that the enclosure was opened, kept, or used for the purpose mentioned in section 1 of the Act—that is, for conducting the business of betting. Doubtless it is proved that betting as alleged, systematically took place within the enclosure to the knowledge of the defendants. Is that evidence sufficient to establish an infringement of the Act? In my opinion it is not. As was often remarked during the argument of the case at the bar, betting is not illegal in itself, and the statute never intended to make it so. It is only the opening, keeping, or using of a place for the carrying on of a betting business that is illegal. This is shown by the consequences created by section 2 of the Act. The place wherein illegality exists is declared to be a common gaming house, and the right to arrest and search all persons found therein follows. A man who bets or allows betting in his private house, or the man who, associating with his fellows in a club, even a sporting club, and there bets upon races, is guilty of no illegal act. In such cases the ingredient of dedication or appropriation of the place to the purposes of a betting business is absent. And as I think that in this case such ingredient is equally absent, it appears to me that this enclosure has not, by the proceedings which occur within it, been constituted a place within the meaning of section 1 of the Act of 1853.

In thus dealing with the case, I have treated the whole enclosure as being the alleged "place." There is another view that may be presented—namely, that each peripatetic bookmaker using the enclosure occupies "a place"—that is, the ground upon which his two feet rest, and that having permission so to stand upon any particular spot he may from time to time select, there is a shifting appropriation of each of such spots for the purpose of carrying on his business. But in such case, what can be said to constitute the "place" requisite to constitute the offence? There is nothing in any way resembling a house, office, or room. No defined area exists; nothing to indicate where the bookmaker can be found is to be seen; and, as was admitted by Mr. Asquith during his argument at the bar, every piece of earth on which a betting man's feet rest, say, on Salisbury Plain, cannot constitute a place ejusdem generis with house, office, or room. I think the statement of the same learned counsel that "a place must be a place where a man according to the ordinary usages would be found" is correct.

I do not purpose referring to the cases which were quoted at the bar in detail, but I would say that I think it must be taken that the judgment of the Court of Appeal in the present case overrules the decisions in Eastwood v. Miller, Haigh v. Town Council of Sheffield, and Hawke v. Dunn. Whilst with several cases, such as Shaw v. Morley, 16 W. R. 763, L. R. 3 Ex. 137, and Bows v. Fenwick, in which convictions took place, no conflict arises. On the other hand, the judgment appealed from seems to be supported by the Scottish case of Hemetty v. Hart, 13 Ct. of Sess. Cas., 4th series, 9, and Snow v. Hill.

For these reasons I am of opinion that the judgment of the Court of Appeal should be affirmed, and the appeal therefore dismissed with costs.

Order appealed from affirmed, and appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors for the appellant, Le Brasseur & Oakley.

Solicitors for the respondents, Peachey & Son, for Arthur Cheese.

Court of Appeal.

From Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. (A. L. Smith, Vaughan Williams, and Romer, L.JJ.) — June 7.

"THE FULHAM." (a.)

Ship—Salvage—Detention of salved property by receiver of wreck—"Salvage due under this Act"—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), ss. 544, 546, 552.

By section 552 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, "Where salvage is due to any person under this Act," the receiver shall, if the salvage is due in respect of services rendered in assisting any vessel, or in saving life therefrom, or in saving the cargo or apparel thereof, detain the vessel, or cargo, or apparel.

Held, that the words "salvage due under this Act" were not confined to cases where there was a claim for life salvage under sections 544 and 545 of the Act, or where the claim was for salvage services rendered to a wreck or vessel stranded or in distress on or near the coasts of the United Kingdom under section 546, but extended to all cases where salvage was recoverable under any of the provisions of the Act.

Judgment of Barnes, J. (ante, p. 62, [1898] P. 206), affirmed.

Appeal from the judgment of Barnes, J., reported ante, p. 62, [1898] P. 206.

The action was brought by the owners of the British steamship Fulham against the defendant, who was the receiver of wreck and collector of customs at the port of Plymouth, to recover £60 damages for the detention of The Fulham at Plymouth.

The facts were shortly these: The Fulham while on a voyage from Sulina to Dunkirk ran short of fuel, and when in the English Channel, about twenty miles from Plymouth, she was taken in tow by the steam tug Flying Buzzard and brought into Plymouth. A claim for salvage services was made, and at the request of the master of the tug the defendant, acting under section 552 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, detained The Fulham at Plymouth for two days, when she was released upon security being given to the satisfaction of the defendant. On the same day a writ was issued on behalf of the owners, master, and crew of the tug in the Admiralty Division claiming salvage remuneration, and a salvage award was made in their favour.

Barnes, J., held that the defendant had jurisdiction under section 552 to detain the ship, and gave judgment for him.

The plaintiffs appealed.

Robson, Q.C., and J. A. Hamilton, for the plaintiffs.—The defendant had no jurisdiction to detain the ship under section 552 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894. That section only applies to cases where "salvage is due to any person under this Act." Salvage "due under this Act" refers to cases of life salvage under sections 544, 545, and to cases where salvage is payable under section 546 where salvage services are rendered to a vessel wrecked, stranded, or in distress on or near the coasts of the United Kingdom. The salvage here was not "due under this Act," as there was no life salvage, and The Fulham was not in distress "on or near" the coast.

Sir R. B. Finlay, S.G., and H. Sutton, for the defendant.—Section 552 is not limited to cases in which salvage is payable under sections 544, 545, or 546. It applies to all cases where salvage services are due or claimed under any provision of the Act, whether the provision relates to procedure or otherwise. Those cases cover every claim for salvage services: see sections 544-550, 565, 571. If the section were limited as contended for by the plaintiffs, the inquiry upon which the receiver of wreck would have to embark would be an impossible one, and his duties in this respect would be rendered impossible.

They referred to Hartfort v. Jones, 1 Ld. Raym. 393.

J. A. Hamilton replied.*

Cur. adv. vult.

June 7.—A. L. SMITH, L.J., read the following judgment: This is an action brought in the Admiralty Division of the High Court of Justice by the owners of the steamship Fulham, which is a British ship, against the receiver of wreck and collector of customs at the port of Plymouth, to recover damages for his having detained the plaintiffs' ship. Two causes of action are set up, the first being that the defendant had been guilty of what is called in the pleadings a gross dereliction of duty in detaining as he did the plaintiffs' ship, and the second that the defendant had no jurisdiction at all to detain the plaintiffs' ship. The first cause of action is traversed by the defendant, and the second the defendant justifies under section 552 of the Merchant Shipping Act of 1894. What is the true construction of this section is the paramount question in this case, though others have been debated. As to the first cause of action, my brother Barnes has found in favour of the defendant, and the plaintiffs do not appeal as to this. As regards the justification pleaded under section 552 of the Act of 1894, the learned judge has also found in favour of the defendant, and it is against this that the plaintiffs appeal.

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

* The arguments as to whether any life salvage services were rendered so as to bring the case within section 544, and whether The Fulham was in distress "on or near the coasts of the United Kingdom" within section 546 are omitted, as in the judgment of the court, it became unnecessary to deal with them.

The question is peculiarly short in itself, and is, What is the true rendering of the words in section 552 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, "where salvage is due to any person under this Act"? It is said on behalf of the plaintiffs that the words are limited to cases which come within either section 544 or section 546 of the Act, and it is only in such cases that the receiver of wreck has jurisdiction to detain a ship alleged to be liable to a salvage claim under section 552 of the Act. It was argued that section 544 does not apply to the present case because there was no salvage recoverable for salving life, and that section 546, which relates to salvage of property, does not apply because the steamship Fulham was not in distress at any place "on or near the coasts of the United Kingdom," though she was in the port of Plymouth when the claim was made by the salvors for salvage services rendered to her. I desire to say that I protest against being taken through the Merchant Shipping Acts of 1846, 1854, 1861, and 1862, in order to put a construction upon the few words I have to construe in the great consolidating Act of 1894, with its 748 sections and 22 schedules, in the last of which no less than 48 prior Acts have been wholly or in part repealed. If this is to be the means by which a consolidating statute such as that of 1894 is to be construed, it would be far better that the Legislature should not attempt to codify the law at all, for suitors and the court would then be spared the trouble of having also to interpret an additional Act. In the Act of 1894 new groups of sections, with new headings, are inserted. Old sections are placed in new contexts, different phraseology is at times used, and, for myself, I decline to embark upon an inquiry as to why or wherefore the Act of 1894 differs from the prior Acts, in themselves differing with each other, and I apply myself to what the Legislature has enacted to be the law when it passed the Merchant Shipping Act of 1894.

The facts are these: The plaintiff's ship, The Fulham, was in distress some twenty miles off Plymouth, being short of coal. The owners of the tug Flying Buzzard, being apprised of this fact, sent out their tug from Plymouth to her assistance, and the tug brought The Fulham safely into Plymouth, which is in the defendant's district. My brother Barnes, assisted by the Elder Brethren, in a salvage suit brought by the owners of the tug against the owners of the steamship Fulham, found that there had been a risk, when the tug took The Fulham in tow, of the steamship going ashore and being lost, and that there was some risk to life, and he awarded the sum of £900 for the salvage services rendered. The learned judge, in his judgment now under appeal, said the risk to life would form an element in considering the claim, though it was "substantially a claim for salving property."

With these facts I come to section 552. That the present is a case "arising out of a salvage service and a dispute relating thereto" is clear, and it is in relation to a dispute about this service that the receiver of wreck at Plymouth detained The Fulham, which detention is now complained of. The Act of 1894 is conveniently divided, as many Acts are, into differents parts, each part containing groups and sections with their respective headings and sub-headings. I turn to Part 9 of the Act, section 510, which is headed "Wreck and Salvage," for this is a part of the Act I have to consider. I pass over those sections in this Part 9 which do not relate to this case, and are under sub-headings—"Vessels in Distress," "Dealing with Wreck," "Unclaimed Wreck," "Removal of Wrecks," "Offences in respect of Wreck," "Marine Store Dealers," and "Marking of Anchors"—until I come to sections 544, 545, and 546, under the sub-heading "Salvage." Section 544 relates to salvage for saving life. Section 545 I will leave out; it is not material. Section 546 relates to salvage of cargo or wreck; that is, salvage of property where the vessel is wrecked, stranded, or in distress on or near the coasts of the United Kingdom. No duty is imposed upon the receiver of wreck by these sections. They deal with the salvage which may be recovered for salvage services rendered, whether to life or property. Next comes the sub-heading "Procedure in Salvage," with its group of sections. This is an important group as regards the present case. Sections 547, 548, 549, 550, and 551 all deal with the procedure which is to take place when disputes arise as to the salvage to be paid for salvage services rendered. It is perfectly clear that the salvage services about which these disputes may arise are in no way limited to salvage services on or near the coasts of the United Kingdom, for those sections embrace disputes as to salvage, wherever the services may have been rendered. These disputes may be settled either summarily or by the High Court, and all disputes not summarily adjudicated upon, according to the provisions of the Act, are to be determined by the High Court. I now come in this group of sections under "Procedure in Salvage" to section 551, which deals with the valuation of property by a receiver of wreck when a dispute as to salvage arises, and the res salved is in the district of the receiver, no matter where the salvage services may have been rendered. This section enacts that "where any dispute as to salvage"—which clearly means as to any salvage, no matter where the salvage services have been rendered—"arises, the receiver of the district where the property is in respect of which the salvage claim is made, may, on the application of either party, appoint a valuer to value that property, and shall give copies of the valuation to both parties. That the receiver of wreck at Plymouth had jurisdiction under this section of the Act to appoint a valuer at the instance of the salvors, even against the will of the shipowner, which valuer would go on board to value the property salved, is to me clear, and I did not hear the contrary contended for at the bar on behalf of the plaintiffs. Whether the dispute arises as to life salvage or as to salvage of property, no matter where the services have been rendered, this jurisdiction is conferred upon the receiver, and it is not confined to the case of a vessel in distress on or near the coasts of the United Kingdom; and as regards this jurisdiction there is no limit, excepting that the property saved must be in the district of the receiver.

But it is said that the next section in this group—namely, section 552, only confers upon the receiver of wreck a limited jurisdiction, and that he has no jurisdiction to detain a vessel in the case of a claim being made for salvage rendered to the ship which is then within his jurisdiction until payment of the claim or process be issued for the arrest and detention of the vessel by some competent court, as is provided for by this section, unless it be a claim for life salvage under section 544, or the vessel was in distress on or near the coasts, under section 546. This argument is based solely upon the words in section 552, "where salvage is due to any person under this Act." I do not agree with this contention, and for these reasons. First of all, what is the meaning of the words "salvage due under this Act"? I do not deny that they may mean money which is due and then payable for salvage services. But is this their real meaning in this section? Where can be found in either section 544 or 546, or indeed in any section of the Act, provision that money is due and then payable for salvage services rendered? It cannot be found. No salvage is due and then payable under either of the two sections, or any other section in the Act. It is clear to me that the true reading of the words "salvage due under this Act" is not that the money should be actually due; and surely this section 552 is not to be deleted from the statute, which, if the meaning contended for is to be attached to the words, would be the case. In my judgment the word "due" in this section means recoverable under the Act. I think this is supported by the words in sub-section 3 of section 552, "if the claim for salvage exceeds £200;" and at the beginning of the section the words are "under this Act," and not "under sections 544 and 546," or even "under the previous provisions of this Act." One finds in the Act how moneys payable for salvage services, whether to life or property, may be recovered under the Act, and see as to this, especially, section 565. I fail to see why a claim under section 565 is not a claim for salvage under section 552. In my judgment, therefore, section 552 is not limited to sections 544 and 546, as contended for by the learned counsel for the appellants. I am fully aware that the side-notes of a section form no part of the Act, but, having considered the Act, I cannot put in terser language what I hold to be the meaning of the section than what I find in its side-note. I find in its side-note, "Detention of property liable to salvage by a receiver." I believe this to be an accurate rendering of the section. In my opinion the receiver of a wreck had jurisdiction to detain the plaintiffs' ship as he did, and that my brother Barnes was right in the conclusion he arrived at as to the true construction of this section. What the Solicitor-General said about the Legislature placing the receiver of wreck in the shoes of the salvor, who was entitled to a lien upon the property salved, struck me as well worthy of consideration, but I do not need this to bring me to the conclusion I have arrived at; and I may add that I cannot see any sense in what the appellants contend for—namely, that although the receiver of wreck may detain a ship in the case of a dispute about salvage services, no matter where rendered, if the ship was in distress on or near the coast, yet he has no jurisdiction if the same dispute arises and the ship was not in distress on or near the coast and yet is within his district.

As regards the subsidiary points—namely, whether life salvage had in fact been rendered, and the meaning of "on or near the coast," so much debated at the bar, I say nothing. In the view I take of this case these questions do not arise, and if I said anything about them it would be purely obiter. For the reasons above stated, in my judgment this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., read the following judgment: I agree. Despite the arguments based on the words "due under this Act" in section 552, I cannot get out of the words of the section. I thought it my duty to examine the words carefully because the construction we have arrived at leads to a somewhat strong result; that is to say, that there may in fact be an arrest on mesne process by the receiver on a mere claim of salvage in a case in which the receiver may have no personal knowledge of the circumstances. I am not sure that the receiver has any discretion if a claim is made, as the word used is "shall." The power or jurisdiction in such circumstances seems certainly new under this Act.

ROMER, L.J., agreed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Holman, Birdwood, & Co.

Solicitor for the defendant, Solicitor to the Board of Trade.

From Q. B. Div.
(A. L. Smith, Rigby, and Vaughan Williams, L.JJ.) June 6.

WALSHAW v. MAYOR, &c., OF BRIGHOUSE (a.)

Local government—Offences—Unsound meat—Condemnation by justice—Compensation to owner—Arbitration—Award—Jurisdiction of arbitrator—Costs and expenses—"Full compensation"—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 116, 117, 308.

Meat was seized by an inspector of the local authority as unsound, and condemned by a justice under sections 116 and 117 of the Public Health Act, 1875. The owner of the meat was thereupon summoned for an offence under section 117, but the magistrates dismissed the summons upon an objection to its form, without inquiring into the merits. The owner of the meat claimed compensation, to be settled by arbitration, under section 308 for damage sustained by him by reason of the exercise by the local authority of the powers of the Act; and the arbitrator found that the meat was, at the time of its condemnation, sound and fit for the food of man, and he included in the damage sustained by the owner of the meat the loss of the carcase and the expenses of and incident to the seizure and in defending himself before the magistrates. In an action on the award the judge refused to admit evidence that the meat was unsound at the time it was condemned, and gave judgment for the amount claimed.

Held, that the question of the soundness of the meat at the time of its condemnation was a question of fact for the arbitrator to determine, and his finding could not be reviewed in the action.

Held, also, that the "full compensation" to which the owner of the meat was entitled would include the value of the meat and the expenses incurred by him in connection with the seizure and in defending himself before the magistrates.

Appeal from the judgment of Day, J., at the trial of the action without a jury.

The action was brought upon an award. It appeared that an inspector of nuisances for the borough of Brighouse seized under section 116 of the Public Health Act, 1875, a carcase of meat belonging to the plaintiff as unfit for human food, his opinion as to its unsoundness having been confirmed by the medical officer of health for the borough, and the carcase was on the same day taken before a justice of the peace, who condemned it and ordered it to be destroyed. The defendants thereupon took out a summons against the plaintiff under section 117 of the Act, but the magistrates, without hearing any evidence or going into the merits, dismissed the summons upon a technical objection as to its form, making no order as to costs. No further summons was taken out against the plaintiff. The plaintiff then claimed compensation under section 308 of the Act for the damage sustained by him by reason of the exercise by the defendants of the powers of the Act, and he appointed an arbitrator under sections 179, 180 for the purpose of having compensation assessed, and gave notice thereof to the defendants. The defendants did not within the prescribed time appoint an arbitrator, and the arbitrator appointed by the plaintiff proceeded with the arbitration, the defendants attending the proceedings, and in spite of their protest the arbitrator heard evidence as to the soundness of the carcase. The defendants then called evidence with the view of showing that the carcase was unsound. The arbitrator found as facts that the carcase was not diseased or unsound or unwholesome or unfit for the food of man when it was condemned and ordered to be destroyed, but was then sound, wholesome, and fit for the food of man; and that the plaintiff, by reason of the exercise of the powers of the Act, had sustained damage as follows: (a) The loss of the carcase, £7 10s.; (b) expenses of and incident to the seizure and of and incident to defending himself in the magisterial proceedings, £37 1s.; (c) loss in his business as a butcher which immediately and necessarily flowed from the seizure, condemnation, and magisterial proceedings, £52. He also directed the defendants to pay the costs of the reference and of the award.

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The plaintiff brought an action upon the award to recover the above amounts, when the defendants tendered evidence to show that the carcase was at the time of the seizure and condemnation unsound. Day, J., refused to admit the evidence upon the ground that this matter was concluded by the finding of the arbitrator, and gave judgment for the plaintiff for the amount claimed.

The defendants appealed.

By section 308 of the Public Health Act, 1875: "Where any person sustains any damage by reason of the exercise of any of the powers of this Act, in relation to any matter as to which he is not himself in default, full compensation shall be made to such person by the local authority exercising such powers; and any dispute as to the fact of damage or amount of compensation shall be settled by arbitration in manner provided by the Act. . . ."

Macmorran, Q.C., and T. R. D. Wright, for the defendants.—The arbitrator has only jurisdiction under section 308 to decide as to the fact of damage and the amount of compensation. He has no jurisdiction to find that the carcase was sound, as that is equivalent to finding that the plaintiff was not in default. That is a question of liability for the court and not for the arbitrator to determine. This is distinctly stated by Lord Fitzgerald in Brierley Hill Local Board v. Pearsall, 33 W. R. 56, at p. 58, 9 App. Cas. 595, at p. 603, and it also appears from Lord Selborne's opinion. The award was, therefore, bad on the face of it, at any rate so far as regards that finding, and Day, J., was wrong in refusing to admit evidence that the carcase was unsound and holding that the finding of the arbitrator concluded the matter. It is open to the defendants in an action on the award to shew that the damage was not occasioned by the exercise of the powers of the Act, and that the damage arose in relation to some matter as to which the plaintiff was himself in default, and in order to show that, they are entitled to give evidence that the carcase was unsound. [They also referred to In re Davies and Rhondda Urban District Council, Law Times, the 20th of May, 1899, p. 62.] Further, the question whether the plaintiff was in default was concluded by the order of the justice condemning the carcase as unfit for human food and directing it to be destoyed. The plaintiff might have appealed from that order to quarter sessions under section 269 of the Act, and not having done so the order of the justice was conclusive upon the matter, and the finding of the arbitrator cannot override it. As regards the items of damage, the condemnation of the carcase was the act of the justice and not the act of the defendants. Therefore the loss of the carcase was caused, not by the exercise by the defendants of the powers of the Act, but by the order of the justice. The first item therefore—namely, the value of the carcase, cannot be recovered. Nor can the expenses of the plaintiff in defending himself before the magistrates be recovered.' The magistrates might have made an order giving the plaintiff costs upon the summons. They did not do so, and so this item of loss was occasioned by the magistrates making no order as to costs and not by the exercise of the powers of the Act. Section 253 allows anyone, with the consent of the Attorney-General, to take out a summons under the Act. In re Bater and Mayor, &c., of Birkenhead, 41 W. R. 513, [1893] 2 Q. B. 77, was a different case, because there the question was as to the costs incurred by the owner of the meat in resisting its condemnation. Those costs were clearly caused by the seizure of the meat and its being taken before a justice for condemnation.

Scott Fox, Q.C., W. J. Waugh, W. Madden, and G. P. Walker, for the plaintiff, were not called upon.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—In my opinion this appeal must be dismissed. The question arises thus: The inspector of nuisances for the district inspected the carcase belonging to the plaintiff, and the medical officer of health also inspected it, and both came to the conclusion that the carcase was unfit for human food, and thereupon it was seized and a justice condemned it and ordered it to be destroyed. A summons was issued against the plaintiff, and the summons was dismissed, not upon the merits, but upon a technical objection, and it is admitted that that objection was a good one. No other summons against the plaintiff was taken out. The plaintiff then made a claim against the defendants for compensation upon the ground that he had been damaged by the exercise by the defendants of the powers of the Act—namely, in seizing and procuring the condemnation of the meat. The plaintiff appointed an arbitrator under the Act for the purpose of having the compensation assessed, but the defendants did not appoint one. The single arbitrator then proceeded with the reference, and evidence was heard at considerable length, and the defendants called a body of evidence to show that the carcase was unsound. In the result the arbitrator made his award, and the plaintiff now brings an action on it. It seems to me that the arbitrator was right in the form in which he made his award, because he did not find that the defendants were liable, but he found specific facts upon which the court are to say whether the defendants are liable.

I come now to section 308, upon which the point arises. Under it the arbitrator has to settle a "dispute as to the fact of damage or amount of compensation." We are not without authority as to the meaning of those words. In Brierley Hill Local Board v. Pearsall Lord Selborne and Lord Fitzgerald deal with them. Lord Selborne said that "if the arbitrator goes into the inquiry, as he ought, as a question of fact, and if he deals with the facts as he finds them, but deals with them in a wrong view of those facts according to law, then, no doubt, his award will not be final." There is nothing in that which shows that in an action on the award the court must not take the facts found by the arbitrator as binding between the parties. Lord Fitzgerald said: "In establishing his case under that section (section 308) the plaintiff had to sustain four propositions—viz., first, that he had sustained damage; secondly, that such damage had been occasioned by reason of the exercise by the local authority of the powers of the Act; thirdly, that such damage arose in relation to some matter as to which he was not himself in default; and fourthly, the amount of compensation to which he was properly entitled. Any dispute as to propositions 1 and 4 is to be settled by arbitration. The fact of damage comes first in the section, and is the foundation of all the rest. In the execution of his duties it is difficult to see how the arbitrator can avoid inquiring whether the acts complained of were matters done in the exercise of the powers of the Act, and as to which the claimant was not himself in default, so as to limit the scope of his assessment of compensation; but his decision, if any, as to the liability of the defendants in point of law would not be binding, and would be inoperative." In my opinion the words of the section, taken in conjunction with that decision, show that every question of fact is in the province of the arbitrator, and his decision is binding upon the parties, and only questions of law can be raised in an action on the award. The arbitrator has found that the carcase was sound. It is said that he ought not to have gone into that question, because by doing so he has found by inference that the plaintiff was not in default. The arbitrator however, could not have ascertained the fact of damage without finding whether the carcase was sound, though, no doubt, it followed that if the carcase were sound the plaintiff was not in default. It is further said that the seizure of the carcase by the inspector and its condemnation by the justice as unsound was conclusive to show that the plaintiff was in default, but in my opinion that is not conclusive, and it was open to the arbitrator to find that the carcase was sound.

There remains the question as to the items of damage claimed. The first item objected to is £7 10*s.* for the loss of the carcase. It is said that the loss was caused by the act of the justice who condemned it and ordered it to be destroyed, and not by the act of the defendants. I cannot agree. The proceedings which led to the condemnation were originated by the defendants, and they are responsible. It is then said that the costs of the proceedings before the justices cannot be recovered. By section 308 of the Public Health Act, 1875, the plaintiff is to be paid "full compensation" for any damage sustained by reason of the exercise of any of the powers of the Act in relation to any matter as to which he is not in default. In the present case the plaintiff has got £37 1*s.* less in his pocket owing to the exercise by the defendants of the powers of the Act. In In re Bater and Mayor, &c., of Birkenhead the owner of the meat was held entitled to be repaid the costs which he had incurred in resisting the condemnation of the meat. Lord Esher, M.R., in speaking of section 308, said: "The words used are very wide, and it seems to me that they must include any pecuniary loss which a man suffers when he is not himself in default. In ordinary language there certainly is damage sustained by a man when, in order to defend his property, he has to call witnesses to prove that he was not in the wrong. It is damage to his pocket because he has to pay the expenses of the witnesses whom he has called. An endeavour is made to avoid this conclusion by giving these expenses a legal name and calling them costs; but they are not the less expenses which a man has had to pay, and for the payment of which he is in the words of the Act entitled to 'full compensation.'" That case seems to me to cover this point. For these reasons the appeal must be dismissed.

RIGBY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. I only wish to make one observation. It cannot be denied that it was the duty of the arbitrator to deal with the fact of damage and the amount of compensation. It seems to me that it was impossible for him to deal with these questions without deciding whether the meat was sound or not. That was a fact for him to decide, and it is impossible for any court to say that it was not within his jurisdiction to decide it.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I entirely agree. In my opinion the arbitrator was acting within his jurisdiction in finding as a fact that the carcase was sound, and that finding cannot be disputed now. I wish to make an observation with reference to an argument advanced on behalf of the defendants—namely, that there had been a judicial order by a justice condemning the meat as unsound, and that, as it had thus been judicially determined that the plaintiff was in default, the arbitrator had no jurisdiction to go into that question and to override that judicial determination. In my opinion the order of the justice, in this case, condemning the meat was not a judicial order at all. I do not say that an order of condemnation under section 117 may not in some cases be a judicial order so as to be conclusive between the parties unless set aside and not to be gainsaid in subsequent proceedings. But I say that upon the facts here the order of condemnation was not a judicial order at all.

As regards the question whether the £37 1*s.* is recoverable, section 308 gives "full compensation" where a person has sustained any damage by reason of the exercise of any of the powers of the Act, and the case of In re Bater and Mayor, &c., of Birkenhead shows that these expenses are recoverable. It is further said that the loss of the £37 1*s.* was caused by the justices before whom the summons came making no order as to costs, and that therefore the loss was not caused by the exercise of the powers of the Act. I do not think so. If a competent court had made an order dealing with these costs, the parties could not go behind that. But here the justices made no order dealing with these costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Walker & Rowe, for F. Walker, Halifax.

Solicitors for the defendants, Williamson, Hill, & Co., for Storey & Willans, Halifax.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. }
Stirling, J. } June 7, 15.

LONDON AND MIDLAND BANK (LIMITED) v. MITCHELL. (a.)

*Mortgage—Personal property—Statutes of Limitations—Equitable mortgagee of shares in a limited company—Foreclosure—Statute-barred debt—*21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 3—3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 34—37 & 38 Vict. c. 57.

One of two brothers (who had carried on business in partnership, and were entitled to shares in a limited company, the certificates of which were deposited with a bank to secure any overdraft on a current account) died in 1891, and the account was then closed, leaving a balance due to the bank. In 1898, no interest having in the meantime been paid and no acknowledgment of the debt given, the bank sued the surviving brother and the executor of the deceased brother to enforce their security; and, while the former defendant did not resist the claim, the latter objected that the debt was barred by analogy by the Statutes of Limitations.

Held, that the bank were entitled to the relief claimed, because there was no provision in any Statute of Limitations affecting the right of a mortgagee of personal property to enforce his security, and the mere fact that the personal claim could not be enforced did not deprive a mortgagee of his right to proceed against the property.

Originating summons.

Two brothers, Alfred and Edward Wordsworth, had carried on business in partnership and had kept an account, first with a banking company now amalgamated with the plaintiff company, and subsequently with the plaintiff company. To secure the balance of their banking account Messrs. Wordsworth deposited with the plaintiffs' predecessors the following documents—(1) five certificates under the seal of Joseph Rodgers & Co. (Limited), showing that one Joseph Welstrop was the owner of the shares in question; (2) a certificate by the secretary of Joseph Rodgers & Co. of a transfer of those shares by the executors of Joseph Welstrop to Alfred and Edward Wordsworth; (3) a transfer of those shares, with the name of the transferee in blank signed by Alfred and Edward Wordsworth. The plaintiff company claimed to be entitled to the benefit of the security thus created and sought to enforce their lien or equitable charge in the following circumstances.

(a.) Reported by WARWICK H. DRAPER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

On the 3rd of April, 1891, Edward Wordsworth died, and the defendant William Mitchell was his legal personal representative. His brother, Alfred Wordsworth, was still living. At the date of the death of Edward Wordsworth a considerable balance was due to the plaintiffs on the banking account which was then closed. The balance still remained due, no interest having been paid on it, and no acknowledgment of the debt having been given by Mitchell. On the 28th of September, 1898, more than six years after the death of Edward Wordsworth, the plaintiffs issued this originating summons against Mitchell and Alfred Wordsworth. The latter made no objection to the relief claimed; the former raised the objection that the Statutes of Limitations were a defence to the action.

Upjohn, Q.C., and Martelli, for the plaintiffs.—The plaintiffs claim a declaration that the charge still existed, and ask for an account of the amount due and for a sale of the shares. As to the defence that the debt was to be considered as statute-barred, the plaintiffs contend that even if by analogy the doctrine was to be admitted in the case of an equitable mortgage, the time of limitation would only run from the date of refusal to pay off the debt, as, in the actions of detinue and trover, from the dates of the wrongful detention and conversion respectively. But to admit the analogy at all would be revolutionary as against the equitable mortgagees, who cannot enforce their security without bringing an action on the debt. The debt in this case is not extinguished by the statute 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, and no collateral right or remedy is affected thereby: Courtenay v. Williams, 3 Hare 539, per Wigram, V.C., at p. 551. The right of the mortgagees is a jus in rem, and this is not an action to recover a debt, but an action in rem to enforce the charge against the property charged; in one case the holders of an imperfect security were allowed to come in even in competition with the holders of a perfect security: In re Strand Music Hall Co., 14 W. R. 6, 3 De G. J. & S. 147. No Statute of Limitations applies here, not even by analogy: Mellersh v. Brown, 38 W. R. 732, 45 Ch. D. 225, where Kay, J., refused to apply the analogy to a case of personal estate.

Jenkins, Q.C., and T. Douglas, for the defendant Mitchell, the legal personal representative of the deceased partner.—The plaintiffs were not entitled to a foreclosure decree by reason of their laches and delay and the fraud of their manager, who had known that the surviving partner had purchased all the assets of the business, and had indemnified himself against all liabilities in respect of it. The remedy at law for the debt, which was a simple contract debt, was gone, and therefore the remedy to recover the thing which secured the debt was gone in equity. This was personal property, the right to recover which began in 1891, and now, by analogy, the debt was barred by the Statutes of Limitations: Cholmondely v. Clinton, 2 Jac. & W. 1, at pp. 81, 152; Sutton v. Sutton, 31 W. R. 369, 22 Ch. D. 511; Hovenden v. Lord Annesly, 2 Sch. & Lef. 607. [Shelford on Real Property Statutes (9th ed.), p. 149; and Robbins on the Law of Mortgages, p. 1059, was also referred to.] This was not in the class of cases of a reversionary interest: In re Lowe's Settlement, 30 Beav. 95, 10 W. R. Ch. Dig. 74; In re Hancock, Hancock v. Berrey, 36 W. R. 710, 57 L. J. Ch. 793; In re Lake's Trusts, 63 L. T. Rep. 416, 39 W. R. Dig. 112. The plaintiffs were not entitled, being statute-barred, to sue in equity for a transfer of the shares.

Henry v. Smith, 2 Dr. & War. 381, 4 Ir. Eq. Rep. 502; Heath v. Pugh, 29 W. R. 904, 6 Q. B. D. 345; and Brocklehurst v. Jessop, 7 Sim. 438, were also referred to.

Cur. adv. vult.

STIRLING, J., after stating the facts of the case, continued: The deposit of the documents which have been mentioned has constituted the plaintiffs equitable mortgagees of the shares. If authority for this is required I may refer to what was said by Lord Selborne in delivering the judgment of the Court of Appeal in France v. Clark, 32 W. R. 466, 26 Ch. D. 257, as to the position of the defendant Clark. [His lordship read from the report at p. 262.] It was admitted on behalf of the defendant Mitchell that no statute expressly applied, but it was contended that inasmuch as the personal remedy for the debt was barred by the statute 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 3, the remedy against the property which constitutes the security for the debt would not be enforced by a court of equity, acting in obedience or by any analogy to the statute. It is now well established that an action for foreclosure is not an action for recovery of a debt, but for recovery of the mortgaged property: Heath v. Pugh, 29 W. R. 904, 30 Ibid. 553, 6 Q. B. D. 345, 7 App. Cas. 235; Harlock v. Ashberry, 30 W. R. 327, 19 Ch. D. 539. Before the statute 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, it was held that a mortgagee of land could not get relief by way of foreclosure after a period of twenty years. This period was not fixed because the personal remedy was then barred, for the statute of James did not apply to specialty debts, and as regards simple contract debts barred them in six years; but it was chosen because section 1 of that statute (a section now repealed) provided that no person having a right of entry into land should thereunto enter but within twenty years after the title accrued. If the mortgage was not by deed, or if the deed contained no covenant for payment, then, although after six years the personal remedy was barred, the remedy against the land continued. This was recognized in the recent case of Barnes v. Glenton, ante, p. 435, [1899] 1 Q. B. 885, before the Court of Appeal. [His lordship read the headnote of the case and the judgment of Romer, L.J., at p. 890.] In addition to the cases there cited I may refer to In re Conlan's Estate, 29 L. R. Ir. 199, where Monroe, J., says: "The mere fact that the personal claim cannot be enforced does not deprive the creditors of the remedy against the land." The time, therefore, at which a bar to an action for foreclosure arises under or by analogy to the statute is not that at which the personal remedy ceases, but that at which the remedy against the property which is the subject of the charge is taken away. Now, the statute 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 3, does apply to certain actions for the recovery of personal estate—viz., detinue and trover. It does not appear to me that the analogy founded on these assists the defendants in the present case, for in neither form of action does time begin to run until a defendant has done something wrongful as between him and the plaintiff—as, for example, has refused to comply with a lawful demand or has wrongfully converted the property in his possession to his own use: see Miller v. Dell, 39 W. R. 342, [1891] 1 Q. B. 468. Nothing of the kind has happened here. Another way of looking at the case is this: The deposit of the shares constituted in equity an assignment of these shares to the plaintiffs to the extent of the debt, just as much as if a formal deed had been executed assigning them to the plaintiffs, subject to a proviso for redemption. The plaintiffs have, therefore, acquired in equity an interest in these shares and in the nature of property. Though the debt is barred, in the sense that a personal action can no longer be brought to recover it, the debt is not gone; nor is the right of property destroyed, for there is no provision in any Statute of Limitations with reference to personal property similar to that contained in 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 34, whereby the title to land is extinguished after the lapse of a certain period. If, then, the property of the plaintiffs still exists, I fail to see what there is to deprive the plaintiffs of the rights attached to such property. On this ground Kay, J., proceeded in In re Hancock. That case no doubt relates to a reversionary interest in personalty, and it was contended that the decision might have been different if it had related to an interest in possession. If the fund was in the hands of a person who could successfully plead the statute against both mortgagor and mortgagee, no doubt the result would be different; but if the holder of the fund either could not plead the statute (as, for example, by being an express trustee) or did not choose so to do, it seems to me that the reasoning of the learned judge would still apply. How could a mortgagor interfere to prevent the holder of the fund from handing over the property to his mortgagee? In my judgment the contention of the defendant Mitchell is not well founded, and the plaintiffs are entitled to relief by way of foreclosure or sale.

His lordship made the usual foreclosure decree in respect of the shares mentioned in the summons, the bank to add the costs of the summons to their security.

Solicitors, Morton, Cutler, & Co., for Carter, Atkinson, & Bentley, Pontefract; Emmet & Co., for Foster, Raper, & Routledge, Pontefract.

Chan. Div. } June 16.
Byrne, J. }

JOHNSTONE v. CROMPTON & CO. (a.)

Mines and minerals—Reservation from grant—Red rock and coal, neither of immediate commercial value—Injunction.

The defendants were the lessees of certain lands under a lease dated the 30th of September, 1860, granted by the predecessor in title of the plaintiff, the lease containing the reservation, "except nevertheless and always reserved out of this demise all mines and minerals within or under the said land."

The defendants, in boring for water, had bored through a stratum of red rock and a layer of coal from six to eight inches in thickness, and the plaintiff moved for an injunction to restrain their so doing, on the ground that, although it was admitted that the red rock and coal could not be worked for profit at the present time, these substances were mines and minerals within the reservation.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the injunction on the principle laid down in Hext v. Gill, 20 W. R. 957, L. R. 7 Ch. App. 699, and explained in Earl of Jersey v. Guardians of the Poor of Neath Poor Law Union, 37 W. R. 388, 22 Q. B. D. 555, that the substances in question were such as had "a use and a value of their own independent of and separable from the rest of the soil."

Motion to restrain the defendants from making or permitting to be made in or under the lands demised by or comprised in an indenture of lease dated the 30th of September, 1860, any excavations or underground borings or from removing any mines or minerals in or under the said lands or from interfering with the use and enjoyment by the plaintiffs of the said mines or minerals.

By an indenture of lease dated the 30th of September, 1860, and made between Thomas, Earl of Wilton (the predecessor in title of the plaintiff Sir Frederic Johnstone) of the one part, and Thomas Mucklord (through whom the defendants claimed) of the other part, three closes, fields, or parcels of land situate in the township of Ainsworth, forming part of the Heaton estates, together with the printworks, dyehouse, bleachworks, messuages, dwelling-house, erections, and buildings thereon, and the reservoirs of water situate thereon, and the use and enjoyment of all water usually flowing on to the lands thereby demised from the adjoining lands of the said earl, with their appurtenances, "except nevertheless and always reserved out of this demise all mines and minerals within or under the said land, with liberty for the said earl and his assigns, and other the person and persons for the time being entitled to the reversion immediately expectant on the determination of the term hereby created, and their agents and workmen, at all times to drain, get, and dispose of the said mines and minerals at his and their free will and pleasure, nevertheless not breaking open nor doing any damage to the surface of the land hereby demised or the buildings thereon, and making reasonable compensation to the said lessee, his executors, administrators, and assigns, or his or their tenants, for all damage thereby occasioned," were demised by the said earl to the said Thomas Mucklord for the term of ninety-nine years from the 29th of September, 1860, without impeachment of waste at the yearly rent of £150, and subject to the covenants by the lessee and conditions therein contained.

By an indenture of lease dated the 17th of March, 1896, and made between the then Earl of Wilton of the one part and Thomas Fletcher of the other part, all those mines of coal and cannel known by the names of the "Trencherbone" and the "Cannel" mines lying under parts of the Heaton estate, together with full liberty to work, win, and get the said mines, were demised to the said Thomas Fletcher for the term of twenty-one years from the 23rd of March, 1896, subject to the payment of the dead rent and royalties there mentioned.

The mines demised by the lease of the 17th of March, 1896, comprised mines known as the "Trencherbone" and "Cannel" mines lying under the lands demised by the lease of the 30th of September, 1860.

The lease of the 30th of September, 1860, was assigned to the defendants, Crompton & Co., in or about the year 1897. The lease of the 17th of March, 1896, was assigned to the plaintiff company, Thomas Fletcher & Sons (Limited), on the 16th of May, 1898.

It appeared from the evidence that the defendants had recently commenced to excavate and sink a borehole about eighteen in diameter and through the mines and minerals reserved by the lease of 1860, and that they intended to sink the said borehole to a depth of about 400 ft., so as to insure their piercing the rock known as "Cannel" rock lying immediately above the cannel mines and obtaining water therefrom.

(a.) Reported by RALEGH B. PHILLPOTTS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

It appeared that in order to reach the cannel rock the borehole must pass through the following strata—namely, surface clay, red rock, red metal, fireclay, coal, Trencherbone coal, and that the defendants had already bored through the red rock and a stratum of coal from six to eight inches in thickness.

It also appeared that the cannel rock contained large quantities of water, which, when reached by the borehole, would, through pressure, rise to the surface, and in so doing would flood all the strata above it which were pervious to water including the Trencherbone coal and Trencherbone rock, and that the consequence of such flooding would inevitably be that when the rock above the cannel rock was worked, the workings would become flooded and that the flooding would extend through the connections made or to be made with those workings, and that irreparable injury would be done, not only to the mines and minerals under the lands demised by the lease of the 30th of September, 1860, but to the adjoining mines.

The main question was whether, having regard to the reservation in the lease of 1860 the boring through the strata of red rock and coal of from six to eight inches in thickness was a boring through, and therefore a trespass upon, the reserved minerals.

It was conceded that the red rock and coal in question could not be commercially worked to a profit at the present time.

Farwell, Q.C., and Cann, for the plaintiffs.—The principle laid down by Hext v. Gill, 20 W. R. 957, L. R. 7 Ch. App. 699, applies in deciding what comes within the term "minerals," the test being whether the substances have a use and value of their own independent of, and separable from, the rest of the soil: Earl of Jersey v. Guardians of Poor of Neath Poor Law Union, 37 W. R. 388, 22 Q. B. D. 555.

Macswinney and H. P. Lowe, for the defendants.—The accuracy of the definition in Hext v. Gill has been doubted by the House of Lords in Lord Provost of Glasgow v. Farie, 37 W. R. 627, 13 App. Cas. 657, and the reservation here only applies to minerals that can be worked at a profit.

BYRNE, J.—In this case the plaintiffs seek for an injunction to restrain the defendants from boring beneath the surface of certain property which is demised to them, the object of the boring being to obtain water. On the evidence as it at present stands water cannot be obtained without boring to such a depth as to penetrate the cannel coal, which lies at a very considerable depth from the surface. The defendants are lessees under a lease dated the 30th of September, 1860, whereby certain lands are demised. [His lordship read the lease as above set out, and proceeded:] Now, it is in evidence that there is danger should the cannel coal be penetrated, or should a seam called the "Trencherbone coal" be penetrated, and water be subsequently obtained, that there will be very considerable flooding of other property belonging to the plaintiffs, which would be the consequence of the operations which have been commenced. I have before me a plan showing the nature of the material through which the boring has gone, and will have to go, should it be continued. There is first of all the surface clay, then next to that comes red rock and red metal, then coal six to eight inches, then bands of coal, then metal, and below that again, red rock porous, then thin coal, and then the Trencherbone coal; then below that again there is red rock and metal, and then thin bands of coal; and ultimately, at a very considerable depth, you get to cannel coal. At present the defendants have only bored to the six-to-eight inch coal—that is, the highest near the surface. They have bored through the red rock.

The question which has been argued before me is whether, having regard to the reservation in the lease, the boring through the red rock and the coal is boring through, and, therefore, a trespass upon, the reserved mines and minerals or the reserved minerals really. It is conceded that this red rock and the coal in question cannot be commercially worked to a profit at the present time.

It is said, on the other hand, by the defendants, that the true meaning of the reservation is only to reserve such minerals as can be worked for a commercial profit. I think I am truly expressing the terms in which the contention is put, but it does not much matter whether that is the precise way of referring to it, because I will refer to the authorities to show the exact point. It is also said that assuming the red rock and the coal in question can be construed to come within the term minerals in the reservation, nevertheless there is such a context as would render it necessary to put such a construction on that reservation as would show that in this particular document it referred only to such minerals as can be got at a profit. That is founded on the expression, "with liberty at all times to drain, get, and dispose of the said mines and minerals at his and their free will and pleasure, nevertheless not breaking open nor doing any damage," and so on, in the words I have already read.

I had better deal with that point first. I do not think, on a fair construction of this reservation, if without that power the clause in question includes such substances as are said to be minerals in the present case, that the use of the subsequent words giving power to drain, get, and dispose of would limit the use of the word "minerals" in the way suggested. Therefore it occurs to me that the true question is whether a reservation of mines and minerals means only substances properly coming within those words which can be commercially worked to a profit. Now, the first case to which I propose to refer is and has been for many years regarded as a leading case on this branch of the law; I mean Hext v. Gill. Without going into the circumstances of that case I refer at once to a passage in the judgment where Mellish, L.J., says (p. 712): "But the result of the authorities, without going through them, appears to be this: that a reservation of minerals includes every substance which can be got from underneath the surface of the earth for the purpose of profit, unless there is something in the context or in the nature of the transaction to induce the court to give it a more limited meaning." Then the learned judge proceeds to consider whether it ought to have a more limited meaning in the case then before him.

Then in the case of Lord Provost and Magistrates of Glasgow v. Farie a question arose as to the meaning within the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, of a reservation of the "whole coal and other minerals in the land," and there was some discussion as to the true meaning of Hext v. Gill in the course of that case. Lord Halsbury, C., says (p. 669): "I cannot help thinking that the true test of what are mines and minerals in a grant was suggested by James, L.J., in the case of Hext v. Gill, which I shall have occasion hereafter to refer to; and, although the lord justice held himself bound by authority so that he yielded to the technical sense which had been attributed to these words, I still think (to use his language) that a grant of 'mines and minerals' is a question of fact 'what those words meant in the vernacular of the mining world, the commercial world, and landowners' at the time when they were used in the instrument"; and later on the Lord Chancellor refers to the language of Mellish, L.J., in Hext v. Gill. He refers to the summing-up of the authorities, and then he says: "I cannot myself assent to such a definition. In the first place, it introduces as one element the circumstance that the substance can be got at a profit. It is obvious to see that if that is an essential part of the definition the question whether a particular substance is or is not a mineral may depend on the state of the market, and it may be that a mineral one year is not a mineral the next." Then Lord Macnaghten says (13 App. Cas. 689): "In some of the reported cases it seems to be laid down, or assumed, that to be a mineral a thing must be of commercial value, or workable at a profit. But it is difficult to see why commercial value should be a test, or why that which is a mineral when commercially valuable should cease to be a mineral when it cannot be worked at a profit." Lord Herschell says (13 App. Cas. 685): "I think the reservation must be taken to extend to all such bodies of mineral substances lying together in seams, beds, or strata as are commonly worked for profit and have a value independent of the surface of the land."

The words in that case were "mines and minerals," so that it is really a definition of the words "mines of coal," &c., "or other minerals."

Now, the observations of the learned lords in the case of Lord Provost and Magistrates of Glasgow v. Farie were fully consideredin the case of Earl of Jersey v. Guardians of Poor of Neath Poor Law Union. I will venture to take from the judgment of Bowen, L.J., his view of what was meant by the summing up of Mellish, L.J., of the authorities in Hext v. Gill, and he deals with that matter in reference to the criticism of Lord Halsbury, C., to which I have already referred in the case of Lord Provost and Magistrates of Glasgow v. Farie. The passage I refer to is at 22 Q. B. D., at p. 562, where the lord justice says: "I would only say with regard to Lord Halsbury's criticisms on Hext v. Gill, I cannot help thinking either that he has not been perfectly reported, or else the Lord Chancellor had not in his mind at the moment the exact canon of construction of Mellish, L.J., because Mellish, L.J., does not say, nor, I think, mean, that the test was whether the minerals could be worked at a market profit at the time, but whether they had a value of their own independent of and separable from the rest of the soil. Reading the passage from the judgment of Mellish, L.J., to which I have referred, together with what Bowen, L.J., said in the passage I last read, it does not appear to me there is anything inconsistent in the law as laid down in Hext v. Gill, falling deservedly under the criticism, which was applied to it. The case of Earl of Jersey v. Guardians of Poor of Neath Poor Law Union is a clear decision, if it were wanted, that Hext v. Gill is a binding authority, not only on me, but on the Court of Appeal; so also is the case of Earl of Jersey v. Guardians of Poor of Neath Poor Law Union.

Now the question is, What is the true meaning of the rule as laid down in Hext v. Gill? It cannot be that the test is whether the minerals can be worked at a market profit at the time. This is expressly shown by Bowen, L.J., not to be the meaning of the words of Mellish, L.J. Does it, then, mean that the test is whether they are minerals in any other sense than this; are they substances otherwise falling under the definition of minerals which have "a use and a value of their own independent of and separable from the rest of the soil?" I understand the true rule to be this: You inquire what the substances are; and then you ask, Are those "minerals" in the sense that they belong to a class of substances, or form a class or kind of substance of which it can be said that the substance is a valuable article either for the purposes of sale or other purposes? Applying that test to a simple substance like coal, I ask myself, Is coal a mineral? Speaking generally, undoubtedly, apart from this particular test of commercial value, one must say that coal is one of the most familiar examples of what is meant by minerals, not merely in a general sense, but in a grant of this description. It is one of the first things which is so regarded in a coal district. Am I to inquire whether the coal, as it now exists beneath the soil, can be got so as to be sold at a profit? I think not. I think it belongs to a class of substance, or is an illustration of a substance which has "a use and a value of their own independent of and separable from the rest of the soil." I think that is the fair result of the authorities; and that in this case, it being shown upon the evidence that red rock is useful for building purposes, as to the red rock and as to the coal which has been referred to, although neither of these substances can be worked to a commercial profit at the present time, yet nevertheless they fall within the reservation; and that what the defendants have done and are threatening to do constitutes really a trespass on the property of the plaintiffs in the action. The result, therefore, is that the plaintiffs are entitled to an injunction restraining the defendants from trespassing on the mines and minerals mentioned in the lease.

Solicitors, W. F. Foster; Woodcock, Ryland, & Parker.

Chan. Div.
Wright, J. } May 31.

In re JUBILEE SITES SYNDICATE (LIMITED). (a.)

Company—Winding up—Supervision order—Private examination under section 115 of the Companies Act, 1862—"Due regard to interests of creditors or contributories"—Public examination—Petition by the official receiver—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 115—Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. 63), ss. 8, 14.

The powers which section 14 of the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890, gives the court to order a company to be wound up compulsorily on the application of the official receiver includes every case where the powers of the voluntary liquidator are proved, in the opinion of the court, to be insufficient for the purposes of the winding up in so far as the interests of the creditors or contributories are concerned. An order, however, ought not to be made as a matter of course, but a strong case ought to be made out to justify the interference of the court under that section.

This was a petition presented by the official receiver under section 14 of the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890, praying that the company, which was being wound up under the supervision of the court, might be ordered to be wound up compulsorily.

The company was formed in April, 1897, and went into voluntary liquidation on the 2nd of November of that year, the liquidation being ordered to be carried on under the supervision of the court.

(a.) Reported by C. W. MEAD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

On the 10th of November Mr. H. C. Wilson, who had been appointed voluntary liquidator, still continued to act. A Mr. H. Spain was, however, afterwards appointed as joint liquidator with him.

The syndicate had been promoted by the Dumbarton Development Syndicate (Limited), a company registered in Scotland, but it was alleged that this company was but another name for an individual—a Mr. Beall—and serious charges of misfeasances were made against him.

The official receiver now petitioned under section 14 of the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890, that the company might be wound up compulsorily on the ground that it was necessary that Beall, who had already been privately examined under section 115 of the Companies Act, 1862, should be publicly examined under section 8 of the Act of 1890, in order that a fuller disclosure of the facts relating to the company might be obtained.

Mr. Spain, one of the liquidators, supported the petition. Mr. Wilson, the other liquidator, opposed.

Stewart Smith, for the official receiver.—It is necessary in this case that there should be a public examination under section 8 of the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890, in order that the facts may be fully disclosed. This can only be done under a compulsory order. The court should therefore exercise its powers under section 14 of that Act and order this company to be wound up compulsorily.

Norman Craig, for Wilson.—The liquidators are not failing in their duties, and the court should only move when such is the case.

Stewart Smith, in reply.—The powers of the court are much greater in a compulsory than in a voluntary winding up or one under supervision "So that where a primâ facie case of malpractice has been made out a creditor may be 'prejudiced by a voluntary winding up,' and, if so, a compulsory order will be made": Buckley on Companies Act (7th ed.), 362.

WRIGHT, J.—This is a case of great importance. It is very desirable that a person in the position of the official receiver should in a proper case be able to interfere with effect for such a purpose as is here suggested. There are two questions for my decision—namely, What is the real meaning of section 14 of the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890? and, Has a sufficient case been shown to justify an order being made under the section when its meaning has been ascertained? I have had a great doubt as to what the section means, but I think a reasonably wide construction ought to be given to it, and that, without straining its language at all, the section includes every case where the powers of the voluntary liquidator are proved, in the opinion of the court, to be insufficient for the purposes of winding up in so far as the interests of creditors or contributories are concerned. If, in short, the official receiver, after a compulsory winding-up order, would possess any power which the voluntary liquidator cannot exercise, and which is shown to be necessary in order that there may be an efficient winding up in the interests of the creditors or contributories, then section 14 applies. That is the principal factor in the case. If that is the proper construction of the section, are the facts of the present case sufficient to bring it within the section? I think they are. There is a strong primâ facie case that there are persons who ought to be made to restore, if they have got it, the property of the company. When I find, as I do, that a zealous voluntary liquidator, acting under the advice of counsel of great experience, arrives at the conclusion that he cannot satisfactorily take proceedings for misfeasance without some examination going beyond that which may be obtained under section 115 of the Companies Act, 1862—or, in other words, that a public examination under section 8 of the Act of 1890 is absolutely necessary—then I think that a winding-up order under section 14 of that Act should be made. I may add that I do not think an order should be made as a matter of course under section 14. As here, a very strong case must be made out to justify the interference of the court under that section.

Solicitors for the official receiver, Munns & Longden.

Solicitor for the voluntary liquidator, E. H. Hoare.

Q. B. Div.
(Darling and Channell, JJ.) } May 17.

KINSON POTTERY (LIMITED) (Appellants) v. MAYOR, ALDERMEN, AND BURGESSES OF THE BOROUGH OF POOLE (Respondents). (a.)

Local government—Public health—Nuisance—Liability of owner—Want of structural convenience—Sewer—Right to drain into—Obligation to provide—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 15, 21, 94.

The slop and scullery water of twelve houses owned by the appellants, but occupied separately by their tenants, flowed into a drain constructed for the purpose of carrying away the surface water from the street upon which the houses abutted. The slop and scullery water flowed thence into an open ditch, where a nuisance arose. No cesspool or other means of dealing with the drainage was provided upon the premises themselves, nor was there an available sewer constructed for the purpose of carrying away sewage. The appellants were summoned by the local authority under sections 94 and 95 of the Public Health Act, 1875, for non-compliance with a notice to abate the nuisance, and an order was made upon them by the justices before whom the summons was heard.

Held (Channell, J., dubitante), that the appellants were the proper persons to be proceeded against, since the nuisance arose from the "want of a structural convenience" within the meaning of the first proviso of section 94.

Held, also, that, though the surface water drain was a "sewer" within the meaning of section 4 of the Act, the appellants had no right, by virtue of section 21, to turn into it matter which it was not intended to receive, and that the obligation of the local authority under section 15 to provide sewers in their district was discretionary.

Case stated by justices for the borough of Poole.

A complaint was preferred by the respondents, as urban sanitary authority of the borough of Poole, against the appellants, charging them that, being the owners of twelve houses in Ringwood-road, Longfleet, within the respondents' district, they did unlawfully permit the premises to be in such a state as to be injurious to health, and did unlawfully make default in complying with the requisitions contained in a notice served upon them by the respondents, requiring them to abate the nuisance, contrary to section 95 of the Public Health Act, 1875.

The appellants were the owners of the twelve houses mentioned in the complaint. The houses were situated in a part of the respondents' district which bore a rural character and abutted upon a highway known as Ringwood-road. In 1892 a plan was deposited with the respondents by W. H. C. Curtis, on behalf of William Carter, the then owner of the houses. The plan provided for the draining of the houses into cesspools at the back. In 1896 the business of William Carter was incorporated under the Companies Acts under the name of the appellant company, and the houses became the property of the appellant company.

(a.) Reported by C. G. WILBRAHAM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

In erecting the houses the plans were departed from in that the cesspools at the back were not constructed.

Prior to 1892 the respondents, as highway authority, had laid down at the side of the highway upon which the appellants' houses abutted a drain for a distance of 123 yards or thereabouts for the purpose only of receiving the surface water from the highway. By means of the drain the surface water was conveyed to, and emptied into, an open ditch by the side of another highway about 49 yards distant from the appellants' houses.

The slop and scullery water from the appellants' houses was, without the permission of the respondents, turned into the surface water drain and, entering the open ditch, became offensive. The respondents, by a formal notice served on the appellants, required them to abate the nuisance by constructing cesspools to receive the slop and scullery water from their houses. This notice not having been complied with, the present proceedings were instituted.

A system of drainage was carried out by the respondents in parts of their district, but the nearest point to which a main sewer had been brought by the respondents was half a mile distant. Beyond this no sewer had been constructed by the respondents into which the slop and scullery water from the appellants' houses could have been drained.

The justices made the order asked for by the respondents.

Section 94 of the Public Health Act, 1874, is as follows: "On the receipt of any information respecting the existence of a nuisance the local authority shall, if satisfied of the existence of a nuisance, serve a notice on the person by whose act, default, or sufferance the nuisance arises or continues, or, if such person cannot be found, on the owner or occupier of the premises on which the nuisance arises or continues, requiring him to abate the same within a time to be specified in the notice, and to execute such works and do such things as may be necessary for that purpose: Provided—first, that where the nuisance arises from the want or defective construction of any structural convenience, or where there is no occupier of the premises, notice under this section shall be served on the owner; secondly, that where the person causing the nuisance cannot be found and it is clear that the nuisance does not arise or continue by the act, default, or sufferance of the owner or occupier of the premises the local authority may themselves abate the same without further order."

Section 15 of the same Act provides as follows: "Every local authority shall keep in repair all sewers belonging to them, and shall cause to be made such sewers as may be necessary for effectually draining their district for the purposes of this Act."

Section 21 provides that "the owner or occupier of any premises within the district of a local authority shall be entitled to cause his drains to empty into the sewers of that authority on condition of his giving such notice as may be required by that authority of his intention to do so," and upon certain other conditions.

Macaskie, for the appellants.—The liability for this nuisance rests not upon the appellants, but upon the respondents. The surface water drain whence the nuisance arose is not a drain, but a sewer within the meaning of the Public Health Act, 1875, because the drainage of more than one house flows into it (Travis v. Uttley, 42 W. R. 461, [1894] 1 Q. B. 233); and this is so notwithstanding that the drainage of the houses was, in the first instance, wrongfully turned into the drain (Geen v. Vestry of St. Mary, Newington, 46 W. R. 624, [1898] 2 Q. B. 1), and notwithstanding that the drain was only intended to be a surface water drain, Whettcroft v. The Local Board of Matlock, 52 L. T. Rep. 356, 33 W. R. Dig. 128. The drain is, therefore, the property of the respondents, and the appellants had, by virtue of section 21 of the same Act, a right to drain into it. It was the duty of the respondents, under section 15, to make proper sewers for the drainage of the houses in their district, and it was their failure to comply with this duty that caused the nuisance. They cannot proceed against the appellants for a nuisance caused by their own failure to provide proper sewers: Reg. v. Tynemouth Rural District Council, 44 W. R. 646, [1896] 2 Q. B. 219, 451; Kirkheaton District Local Board v. Ainley, [1892] 2 Q. B. 274, 40 W. R. Dig. 219; and Fordham v. Parsons, [1894] 2 Q. B. 780. The appellants are not the proper persons to be proceeded against. They are not the persons by whose act, default, or sufferance the nuisance arose. The occupiers are the proper persons to be proceeded against.

Clavell Salter, for the respondents.—It is immaterial whether the appellants are the persons by whose act, default, or sufferance the nuisance arose, because the nuisance arose from the want of a structural convenience—namely, the absence of cesspools, within the first proviso of section 94, and therefore the proceedings were rightly taken against the appellants, who are the owners. Further, the appellants are, at any rate, persons by whose act, default, or sufferance the nuisance "continues." Assuming that the drain is a sewer, the appellants had no right to drain into it because, under section 21, it is a condition precedent that notice of an intention to drain into a sewer should be given. No such notice was given in the present case. The appellants could not have a right under section 21 to turn house drainage into such a sewer as this was, because it emptied into a natural watercourse, and the local authority is expressly forbidden, by section 17, to drain into natural watercourses without first dealing with the effluent.

Macaskie replied.

DARLING, J.—I think that the magistrates were right in making the order. The appellants were the proper persons to be summoned in respect of the nuisance which had arisen, because I think the nuisance arose from the want of a structural convenience within the first proviso of section 94. If the cesspools indicated in the plan had been constructed, the slop and scullery water would not have flowed into the respondents' surface water drain and thence into the ditch, and so caused the nuisance.

Now, it is said that the appellants are not liable for the nuisance, because the drain into which the slop and scullery water, after it left the appellants' premises, found its way was a sewer; that, as it was a sewer, the appellants had a right, under section 21 of the Public Health Act, 1875, to turn into it anything they chose; and that then it was for the respondents to deal with it and not themselves.

I cannot think that the Legislature intended that. It is true that this drain may, for certain purposes, be a sewer—for instance, for the purpose of vesting in the local authority. But it does not follow from that that owners or occupiers of houses are entitled to turn anything they chose into what is technically a sewer. If that were so, chemical manufacturers would have the right to turn offensive chemical substances into mere country drains, and there would be thrown upon the shoulders of the local authority the burden of altering their sewers at the mere caprice of owners or occupiers. There must be a proper user of the sewer.

There being an improper user in this case, the contention that under section 21 notice of an intention to use the sewer was necessary is immaterial.

It was further contended that it was the duty of the respondents to provide sewers for their district and that individual owners or occupiers could not be called on by the respondents to abate a nuisance which arose in consequence of their failure to provide sufficient sewers. But, in my opinion, the local authority have a discretion as to what sewers are necessary. I think the appeal should therefore be dismissed.

CHANNELL, J.—I am of the same opinion. The only question on which I have any doubt is as to whether the appellants are the proper persons to be be proceeded against. Three points were raised. It is said in the first place that this surface water drain is a sewer vested in the local authority, and that, that being so, the appellants have a right, under section 21, to turn the drainage of their houses into it. The contention is ridiculous. It is true that a pipe made to carry surface water may, in certain circumstances and for certain purposes, become a sewer, and I think that this pipe, though not intended to receive sewage, is yet within the definition of a sewer. But though the pipe is a sewer, that does not give the plaintiffs the right to use it for the purpose for which they did use it. The right given by section 21 is, in the first place, only on condition of notice being given to the local authority; and I think that it was intended that only sewage should be drained into drains constructed for the purpose of carrying sewage, and that only water should be drained into drains constructed for the purpose of carrying water. There must be a proper user of the sewers constructed by or vested in the local authority. Further it is said that the nuisance arose from the default of the local authority to provide a proper sewer for this part of their district in accordance with section 15. No doubt the local authority have a duty to provide sewers, but that does not mean that they are bound to provide sewers for the use of every house in their district. There may be a case where in a rural district a few cottages are isolated. Can it be said that the local authority must construct sewers, at great expense, to receive the drainage of these cottages? It is a question of degree, and the local authority have a discretion in the matter; so that it does not follow that because these houses are within the respondents' district that they are bound to provide sewers for them, and there is nothing to show that an obligation exists to provide sewers in this portion of their district. The proper course for the appellants to have taken would have been to require that an inspector should be sent to inquire into the requirements of the district.

With regard to the third and main point—whether the appellants are the proper persons to be summoned—I have, as I have said, some doubt. I am not clear what is meant by a want of a structural convenience, and I should like to further consider it, but it is not of importance here, because, in any case, the tenants could be proceeded against and the appellants could be compelled to make the necessary alterations in that way.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the appellants, J. E. King, for J. H. Tattersall, Bournemouth.

Solicitors for the respondents, Prior, Church, & Adams, for H. S. Dickinson, Poole.

Court of Appeal.

From Q. B. Div. (A. L. Smith, Rigby, and Vaughan Williams, L.JJ.) — June 21.

GOOCH v. CLUTTERBUCK AND ANOTHER.
DAVIS (Third Party). (a.)

Landlord and tenant—Lease—Assignment—Indemnity against breaches of covenant—Covenant to repair—Premises out of repair at date of assignment—Liability of assignee.

A lease, which contained a covenant by the lessee and his assigns to keep the houses comprised therein in repair, became vested in the defendants as the executors of the assignee of the lease. The houses were out of repair, and the defendants agreed to sell them to a purchaser for the residue of the term. On the same day the plaintiff, who was entitled to the reversion on the determination of the lease, served notice upon the defendants that the houses were out of repair, giving particulars of the breaches of covenant complained of. The defendants subsequently executed, as trustees, an assignment of the lease of the houses to the purchaser, who knew of their condition and of the service of the notice, and the purchaser covenanted that he would thenceforth pay the rent reserved by the lease, and observe and perform the lessees' covenants therein contained, and from the payment and performance thereof respectively would keep indemnified the defendants and the estate and effects of their testator. The houses not having been put into repair, the plaintiff brought an action against the defendants to recover damages for breaches of the covenant to repair specified in the notice, and the defendants served a third-party notice on the purchaser claiming indemnity from him under his covenant to indemnify.

Held, that the defendants were entitled to an indemnity from the assignee against their liability for the breaches of the covenant to repair.

Appeal from the judgment of Channell, J., at the trial without a jury of an action to recover damages for breach of covenant to repair.

By a lease dated the 4th of August, 1807, the plaintiff's predecessor in title demised to one Critchley a piece of land for the term of 100 years from the 25th of March, 1807, at the yearly rent of £3 15s. The lease contained a covenant by Critchley, his executors, administrators, and assigns, to erect within one year certain houses on the land, and during the continuance of the lease as often as need be to repair and keep in repair the same. The houses were built in pursuance of the covenant. The plaintiff was the owner of the reversion expectant upon the determination of the above term, and by divers mesne assignments the premises became vested for the residue of the term in one John Malin, who entered into possession, and died on the 26th of July, 1897, and thereupon the premises became vested for the residue of the term in the defendants as the executors of Malin.

On the 1st of October, 1897, the plaintiff served notice upon the defendants under section 14, sub-section 1, of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, that the premises were out of repair, and gave particulars of the breaches of covenant complained of. Upon the same day the defendants agreed to sell to Patrick Davis the premises for the residue of the term, and upon a requisition as to title the notice of the 1st of October was disclosed to Davis.

On the 20th of December, 1897, the defendants, as trustees, by deed assigned the premises to Davis, who knew of their condition and of the breach of covenant, for the residue of the term of one hundred years at the yearly rent of £3 15s. by the lease reserved and subject to the lessee's covenants therein contained. The assignment contained the following clause: "And the purchaser doth hereby covenant with the vendors that he will henceforth pay the rent by the said lease reserved, and observe and perform the lessee's covenants therein contained, and from the payment and performance thereof respectively will keep indemnified the vendors and the estate and effects of the said John Malin, deceased."

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

On the 31st of January, 1898, the houses not having been put into repair, the plaintiff brought an action against the defendants as executors of John Malin, and also in their personal capacity, to recover damages for breaches of the covenant to repair specified in the notice of the 1st of October, 1897, committed during the possession of Malin and of the defendants. The defendants served a third-party notice on Davis claiming indemnity from him under the above covenant in the assignment.

Channell, J., found that there had been a breach of the covenant to repair, and gave judgment for the plaintiff, subject to a reference as to damages, and he held that as the breach of the covenant to repair was a continuing breach, the defendants were entitled to an indemnity from Davis.

Davis appealed.

O. Leigh Clare, for Davis.—The covenant of indemnity relates to future breaches and not to past breaches of covenant by the assignors. The assignors were bound to perform the covenants during the continuance of their term up to the date of the assignment. If the judgment is right, the assignee would be liable to indemnify the assignors against arrears of rent which accrued due during the continuance of their interest, or against claims founded upon a breach of covenant to paint every seven years committed by the assignors. That would not be a reasonable construction of the covenant. The common form of covenant is given in Key & Elphinstone's Precedents in Conveyancing (6th ed.), p. 427.

He referred to Hawkins v. Sherman, 3 C. & P. 459; Smith v. Peat, 9 Exch. 161, 2 W. R. Dig. 154; Moule v. Garrett, 18 W. R. 697, L. R. 5 Ex. 132.

A. T. Lawrence, Q.C., and T. Douglas (S. Joyce Thomas with them), for the defendants.—The assignee knew that the premises were old and out of repair, and that the plaintiff had served notice on the defendants under section 14 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, that a breach of covenant had been committed. The assignee knew that the plaintiff was threatening an action on the covenant to repair or to recover possession, and he took over the premises together with the defendants' liability to repair. In these circumstances the assignment was executed and the covenant of indemnity was inserted. The covenant would be of no use unless it covered breaches of covenant committed by the assignors during their term. The plaintiff cannot sue them for breaches of covenant committed after the assignment. The construction placed on the covenant by Channell, J., was right.

O. Leigh Clare replied.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—In this case Channell, J., felt some doubt in the construction which he placed upon the covenant to indemnify. Nor am I perfectly clear about it. I think upon the whole that Channell, J., has come to a right conclusion. The action was brought against a mesne assignee to recover damages for breach of a covenant to repair. On the 1st of October, 1897, a notice setting forth a list of dilapidations was served on the defendants, and on the same day the defendants agreed to assign the premises to Davis; and on the 20th of December the assignment was executed. The question turns entirely upon the true construction of the covenant of indemnity in the assignment. The circumstances in which the assignment was executed have been stated to us, and we have been told that the houses are old houses and the executors were selling these old houses to Davis. In my opinion the meaning of the covenant in the assignment is, so far as regards the covenant in the lease to repair, that Davis will indemnify the defendants against all actions and claims in respect of their liability on the covenant. Upon the whole, therefore, I am of opinion that the judgment of the learned judge was right.

RIGBY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. I do not think it in anyway a clear point, but upon the whole I agree with the construction placed upon the covenant by Channell, J. We have here houses as to which each of the parties knew their condition and the terms of the lease. The assignee, who has been brought in as third party, knew that the covenant to repair contained in the lease had not been performed by the assignors. In those circumstances he covenanted that he would observe and perform the lessee's covenants contained in the lease—that is, that he would put the houses in proper repair, and if he had done so no action would have been brought by the reversioner against the assignors. The covenant in the assignment goes on to say that "from the payment and performance thereof respectively" the assignee "will keep indemnified the vendors and the estate and effects of the said John Malin, deceased." The meaning of that clause seems to me to be this: I, the assignee, know that you, the assignors, have not performed your covenant to repair, and I will indemnify you against your liability to perform it. To my mind that is not at all an unreasonable construction, because it may be assumed that the assignee gave less for the houses than he would otherwise have given. The covenant of indemnity is somewhat curiously worded. What is the meaning of keeping indemnified from the performance of the covenant? It seems to me that it means that the covenantor will keep the covenantee indemnified against all actions, proceedings, expenses, claims, and demands whatsoever on account of the obligation which the latter has undertaken. This obligation was undertaken by the defendants and has not been performed. The plaintiff brought an action against them claiming damages in consequence thereof. The defendants had no defence to that action. In my opinion upon the true construction of the covenant the assignors are entitled to an indemnity. The difficulty has arisen by taking a common form of covenant and importing some clumsy words into it.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I agree. I think that according to the reasonable construction of the covenant the assignee undertook to satisfy the claim which the landlord had against the assignors under the covenant to repair. I am brought to that conclusion partly by the particular words in the covenant, keep indemnified "from performance," instead of non-performance, which are the ordinary words. I am also led to this conclusion by the fact that, to a large extent, this indemnity covenant deals with a state of things with which the assignors could not themselves interfere. Having assigned the lease, the assignors could not enter upon the premises and perform the covenant to repair.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the defendants, Ward, Bowie, & Co., for Lane, Clutterbuck, & Tomlinson, Birmingham.

Solicitors for Davis, Goldberg, Barratt, & Newall for A. J. O'Connor, Birmingham.

From Q. B. Div.
(A. L. Smith, Rigby, and Vaughan Williams, L.JJ.) June 14.

BRANKELOW STEAMSHIP CO. (LIMITED) AND OTHERS v. CANTON INSURANCE OFFICE (LIMITED). (a.).

Insurance, marine—Lump chartered freight—Cesser clause—Charterers' liability to cease on cargo being loaded—Lien for bill of lading freight—Absence of lien for chartered freight—Loss of goods by perils of the sea—Bill of lading freight payable less than chartered freight.

By a charter-party a ship was chartered for a voyage at the lump freight of £3,000 payable on delivery of the cargo. The master was to sign bills of lading at any rate of freight the charterers might require, but not under chartered rates, or difference to be settled in cash on signing bills of lading; the charterers' liability to cease on shipment of the cargo provided it was worth the freight, dead freight, and demurrage on arrival at the port of discharge, but the vessel to have a lien thereon for the recovery of all freight, dead freight, and demurrage. The charterers loaded a full cargo under bills of lading which made the goods comprised in each bill of lading deliverable to the consignee thereof on payment of the bill of lading freight. The shipowners effected a policy against perils of the sea on the chartered freight. During the voyage part of the cargo was lost by a peril of the sea, and on the ship's arrival at the port of discharge the bills of lading freights payable to the shipowners upon that part of the cargo which arrived was less by £645 than the chartered freight, though the cargo which arrived was worth the chartered freight. In an action by the shipowners upon the policy to recover the £645 as being a loss of chartered freight by a peril of the sea,

Held, that the loss was not caused by a peril of the sea, but by the master not having signed bills of lading giving the shipowners a lien upon the goods comprised in each bill of lading for the whole chartered freight.

Appeal from the judgment of Bruce, J., in favour of the defendants.

The action was brought upon a policy of marine insurance on chartered freight. By a charter-party dated the 17th of September, 1896, the plaintiffs chartered their steamship Ramleh to Messrs. Williams & Co., as charterers, for a voyage from the River Plate to Liverpool at the lump freight of £3,000 payable on delivery of the cargo at Liverpool in cash.

Clause 18 of the charter-party was as follows: "Bills of lading.—The master to apply at the offices of the charterers or their agents to sign bills of lading at any rate of freight the charterers or their agents may require, but not under chartered rates or difference to be settled in cash on signing bills of lading. Charterers' liability to cease upon shipment of the cargo (provided said cargo is worth the said freight, dead freight, and demurrage on arrival at the port of discharge), but the vessel to have a lien thereon for recovery of all freight, dead freight, demurrage, and all other charges whatsoever."

The charterers loaded a full and complete cargo under bills of lading signed by the master, the goods comprised in each bill of lading being deliverable to the consignee thereof on payment of the bill of lading freight, and a lien being given on the goods for the bill of lading freight. The total of the bills of lading freights exceeded the chartered freight.

On the 11th of November, 1896, the plaintiffs effected with the defendants a policy of insurance against perils of the sea "on £3,000 freight, chartered or as if chartered, so valued, on board or not on board." During the voyage the vessel went aground and part of the cargo was jettisoned or damaged by a peril of the sea, and upon arrival of the vessel at Liverpool the bills of lading freights payable upon that portion of the cargo which arrived amounted to £2,355, and the plaintiffs received this sum from the consignees. The cargo which arrived was worth the chartered freight, dead freight, and demurrage.

The plaintiffs brought this action on the policy to recover £645, the difference between the £3,000 chartered freight and the £2,355 received for the bills of lading freights, as being a loss of freight by a peril of the sea insured against.

Bruce, J., held that the loss of the chartered freight was not caused by a peril of the sea, but by reason of the master having signed bills of lading making the cargo deliverable to the respective consignees on payment of the bill of lading freight, and not giving a lien on the goods comprised in each bill of lading for the chartered freight, and he accordingly gave judgment for the defendants.

The plaintiffs appealed.

Joseph Walton, Q.C., and Pickford, Q.C. (Horridge with them), for the plaintiffs.—The bills of lading freights at the time of shipment exceeded the £3,000 chartered freight, and as the goods that arrived were worth the £3,000 chartered freight, the cesser clause applied, and the charterers' liability to pay the chartered freight ceased on the goods being shipped. The shipowners had, therefore, to look to the bills of lading freights for payment of the chartered freight. The bills of lading freights, in consequence of a loss by a peril of the sea, fell short of the chartered freight by £645, and that is a loss which the shipowners can recover under the policy. The plaintiffs were, therefore, entitled to recover.

They referred to Gardner v. Trechmann, 15 Q. B. D. 154, 33 W. R. Dig. 190; and Inman Steamship Co. v. Bischoff, 31 W. R. 141, 7 App. Cas. 670.

Carver, Q.C., and J. A. Hamilton, for the defendants.—The charter-party gave a lien on the goods shipped for the whole chartered freight. Each parcel of the cargo might have been put under a lien for the whole £3,000. Each bill of lading only gave a lien for the bill of lading freight. There would have been no loss of the chartered freight if each bill of lading had given a lien for the £3,000 chartered freight, as the cargo that arrived at Liverpool was worth more than £3,000. Therefore the shipowners lost their chartered freight by their own act and not by a peril of the sea. The cesser of liability is equivalent to the lien given, and the shipowner gets the lien in consideration of relieving the charterer from liability: Hansen v. Harrold Brothers, [1894] 1 Q. B. 612. The defendants knew of the charter-party and of the lien given by it to the shipowners, and they insured the chartered freight on that footing. They never insured the bill of lading freight. The defendants, therefore, were not liable.

Pickford, Q.C., in reply.—The shipowners took a lien on each parcel of goods shipped for the bill of lading freight relating to that parcel, and those freights exceeded in all £3,000. Therefore they had a lien for the whole £3,000 on the bill of lading freights, and a loss of freight occurred by a peril of the sea.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 14.—A. L. SMITH, L.J., read the following judgment: By a charter-party dated the 17th of September, 1896, the plaintiffs, the Brankelow Steamship Co. (Limited), let their steamship Ramleh on hire to Messrs. Williams & Co., the charterers, for a voyage from the River Plate to Liverpool at the lump freight of £3,000, payable on the delivery of the cargo in cash. Upon the 11th of November, 1896, the plaintiffs caused a policy of marine insurance to be effected with the defendants, the Canton Insurance Office (Limited), to cover the lump chartered freight upon the voyage in question against perils of the sea, the freight insured being thus described in the policy: "On £3,000 freight, chartered or as if chartered, so valued, on board or not on board." I leave out the other plaintiffs upon the record—viz., the charterers of the ship, for I agree with Mr. Carver that the defendants undertook no liability as to them under the policy. It was the shipowners' lump chartered freight and nothing else which they covered by the policy against perils of the sea. The charterers loaded a full cargo under this charter, and in due course the ship arrived at Liverpool with the cargo on board, excepting a portion represented by bills of lading freights amounting to the sum of £645, which cargo by reason of a sea peril had been jettisoned, or lost upon the voyage, and it is these bills of lading freights amounting to £645 which the plaintiffs seek to recover from the defendants under their policy covering lump-chartered freight. Now, if there were no other facts in this case but those above mentioned, there cannot be a doubt that there would have been no loss of lump chartered freight by a peril of the sea, for it has been often held that upon a charter at lump chartered freight the whole amount is payable by the charterer to the shipowner upon the arrival of the ship, and that the right to the payment is not conditional upon the delivery of the full cargo at the port of destination, and if part of the cargo has been lost by reason of a peril of the sea upon the chartered voyage, the lump chartered freight without deduction is nevertheless payable by the charterer to the shipowner on delivery of the remainder of the cargo at the port of discharge—see Merchant Shipping Co. v. Armitage, 22 W. R. 11, L. R. 9 Q. B. 99, and other cases cited by Mr. Carver in his excellent work on Carriage by Sea (ed. 1885), pp. 549 and 550—and this was not disputed at the bar. The plaintiffs consequently could have had no claim against the underwriters for loss of lump chartered freight, for the whole of this freight they could have recovered from the charterers, although a portion of the cargo had been lost on the voyage. That the liability of underwriters when underwriting lump chartered freight is very different and less onerous than when underwriting freight in general represented by bills of lading freights is obvious, and this cannot be denied. But the plaintiffs allege that in the charter-party in this case there is a cesser of liability clause coupled with a lien which appears to me to be of the ordinary description. It is as follows: "The master to apply at the offices of charterers or their agents to sign bills of lading at any rate of freight the charterers or their agents may require, but not under chartered rates, or difference to be settled in cash on signing bills of lading. Charterers' liability to cease upon shipment of the cargo (provided the said cargo is worth the said freight, dead freight, and demurrage on arrival at port of discharge), but the vessel to have a lien thereon for the recovery of all freight, dead freight, demurrage. and all other charges whatsoever." It is argued for the plaintiffs that inasmuch as they had by this clause given up their right against the charterers for the £3,000 upon the shipment of the cargo, and that as they had taken no lien upon the cargo which arrived for "all freight," that is, for the whole of the lump freight of £3,000 but only for the respective bills of lading freights which amounted to the sum of £645 less than the lump freight of £3,000 by reason of cargo carrying that amount of freight having been lost during the voyage, they were, therefore, entitled to recover these bills of lading freights of £645 from the underwriters of the policy on lump chartered freight. Now, apart from the fact that a shipowner's right against a charterer under a cesser clause like the present only operates to the extent to which the shipowner has taken a lien for freight—see Clink v. Radford, 39 W. R. 355, [1891] 1 Q. B. 625, and Hansen v. Harrold Brothers—how do matters stand? It is said by the plaintiffs that under this cesser clause the charterers' liability ceased upon shipment of the cargo, and that as all the shipowners could look to upon the arrival of the ship for the lump chartered freight of £3,000 was a lien upon the cargo which arrived for the bills of lading freights thereon, and that as these bills of lading freights amounted to the sum of £645 less than the £3,000 lump freight by reason of a loss by sea perils of the portion of the cargo represented by the £645 bills of lading freights, this loss can be recovered from the underwriters as a loss occasioned by perils of the sea. Although the charter-party was not shown to the underwriters when they effected the policy, it is obvious that they must have known of the existence of a charter-party, for it was freight chartered or as if chartered valued at £3,000, which they insured against perils of the sea, and as Lord Blackburn, in Inman Steamship Co. v. Bischoff, 31 W. R. 141, at p. 144, 7 App. Cas. 670, at p. 678, said: "Though the underwriters knew . . . that there was such a charter-party, under which what was meant to be insured would accrue, it is not in any sense accurate to say that the policy is to be read as if the charter-party was set out in it so as to affect its construction. . . . But as soon as it is ascertained that the policy attached on the hire under a particular charter-party, the charter-party must be read in order to see how the subject-matter was affected by the misfortune which happened." And Lord Selborne, at p. 672, 31 W. R., at p. 142, thus expresses himself: "It appears to me that the question arising upon the policy ought to be determined in the same way as if the charter-party had been seen by the insurers and referred to in the policy, though not, of course, so as to extend the contract of the underwriters by any unnecessary implication to anything not properly covered by the express terms of the policy." Now, assuming that the underwriters had seen the charter-party in this case with its cesser clause and its corresponding lien, what would they have seen? They would have seen that the captain was to sign bills of lading at any rate of freight not under chartered rates, and that the vessel was to have a lien upon the cargo when shipped for the recovery of all freight, and it was in these circumstances that they undertook the risk of covering the lump chartered freight of £3,000 against perils of the sea. By whose act was it that the plaintiffs, the shipowners, had not a lien upon the cargo which arrived for all the lump chartered freight (the cargo which arrived being ample to secure this)? Surely that of the shipowners themselves by not taking bills of lading with either the words "freight and all other conditions as per charter-party" therein, or in some other form giving to themselves a lien over the whole cargo which arrived for the recovery of "all freight" as mentioned in the cesser clause. In my opinion there is nothing in the charter-party which would have prevented this being done, the clause as to signing bills of lading having reference only to the question at what rates of freight the bills of lading were to be given, and the clause has nothing to do with the form in which the bills of lading were to be taken. It may be that the shipowners desired to be able to have recourse to the bills of lading freights, if necessary, but this is not what the underwriters have underwritten. Of the form in which the bills of lading were taken the underwriters knew nothing and were total strangers. Except as to rate of freight the form was in the power of the plaintiffs. If the plaintiffs had taken bills of lading giving a lien for the chartered freight over the whole cargo which arrived they would have lost nothing, for the cargo which arrived was, as before stated, of ample value to satisfy the lien for the lump freight. This, however, the plaintiffs did not do, and yet they now seek to recover from the underwriters the £645 bills of lading freights as being a loss by the perils of the sea, which was not covered by the policy. The proximate and real cause of the loss is by reason of the forms in which the plaintiffs took the bills of lading, and I agree with my brother Bruce that the plaintiffs have not established a loss of lump freight by perils of the sea, which is the only risk the defendants underwrote. For these reasons I think that this appeal must be dismissed with costs. Romer, L.J., concurs in this judgment.

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., read the following judgment: The question in this case is whether there has been a loss of chartered freight covered by the policy of insurance entered into by the defendants. The defence as pleaded in effect is that on the arrival the cargo was worth the freight, dead freight, and demurrage; but the bill of lading freight was less than the charter-party freight, and that in that event upon the true construction of the charter-party the charterers remained liable to the shipowners for the charter-party freight, the subject-matter of the insurance, and the same was not lost, if at all, by the perils insured against.

This being an insurance of chartered freight, the shipowner must have an insurable interest in freight, and this he has if, having made a contract the execution of which will give him freight, his ship being in a condition to execute the contract breaks ground on the voyage described in the charter-party. It follows that in such case, if the ship is prevented from executing the contract contained in the charter-party by one of the perils insured against, the shipowner has lost his freight by that peril, and may recover for that loss.

There is no dispute but that the shipowners had an insurable interest in the chartered freight. The cargo contemplated by the charter-party was put on board and the ship duly proceeded on her voyage. The question raised is whether the ship was prevented by one of the perils insured against from executing the contract contained in the charter-party, and thus earning the chartered freight. It is said that the facts set out in the defence show that the shipowners were not prevented by one of the perils insured against from earning the freight because the ship arrived with a cargo worth the freight, dead freight, and demurrage, and that upon the true construction of the charter-party the charterer remains liable for the chartered freight.

I think that having regard to the terms of the policy the insurer must be taken to have had notice of the charter-party and its terms: see per Lord Selborne in Inman Steamship Co. v. Bischoff, 31 W. R., at p. 142, 7 App. Cas., at p. 672. This does not mean that the policy is to be construed as if the charter-party was set out in the policy so as to extend the contract of the underwriters to anything not covered by the express terms of the policy, but only that the charter-party must be read in order to see how the subject-matter of insurance has been affected, if at all, by the perils of the sea. If the insurance by the terms of the policy is of lump freight as per charter-party, nothing in the charter-party can convert the contract of the underwriters into an insurance of bill of lading freight, but if by the terms of the charty-party a lump freight is payable out of the bill of lading freight and not otherwise, a loss of cargo by the perils of the sea to such an extent that there is not sufficient bill of lading freight to pay the amount of the lump freight may be a loss of the lump freight by a peril of the sea. This is expressed in the passage in Lord Blackburn's judgment in Inman Steamship Co. v. Bischoff, cited by Barnes, J., in his judgment in The Alps, 41 W. R. 527, [1893] P. 109.

Now, having regard to the terms of the charter, party in the present case, the question is whether, according to those terms, the lump freight is payable out of the bill of lading freight and not otherwise, because if the chartered freight is by the terms of the charter payable out of the bill of lading freight and not otherwise, it would seem to follow that, if by the perils of the sea the goods are lost on the delivery of which only the bill of lading freight was payable, the chartered freight has been lost by the perils of the sea. Now, whether chartered freight was payable out of the bill of lading freight and not otherwise depends mainly on the terms of the cesser clause—i.e., clause 18 of the charter-party. It runs thus: "Bills of lading.—The master to apply at the offices of the charterers or their agents to sign bills of lading at any rate of freight the charterers or their agents may require, but not under chartered rates or difference to be settled in cash or signing bills of lading. Charterers' liability to cease upon shipment of the cargo (provided said cargo is worth the said freight, dead freight, and demurrage on arrival at port of discharge), but vessel to have a lien thereon for recovery of all freight, dead freight, demurrage, and all other charges whatsoever."

Now, I have no doubt whatsoever but that the charterers' liability for freight has ceased, having regard to the fact of the shipment of cargo, and that the said cargo was worth the freight, dead freight, and demurrage on arrival at the port of discharge; nor do I think that it would have made any difference to the cesser of liability even it the shipowners had no lien or no effective lien for the recovery of freight; see French v. Gerber, 25 W. R. 113, 1 C. P. D. 737.

But it may still be that according to the true construction of clause 18 the lump freight was not lost by the perils of the sea, but lost because the shipowners having a lien on the cargo (which exceeded in value the amount of the lump freight) did not choose to exercise that lien, or voluntarily chose to sign or let the master sign bills of lading which precluded them from exercising the lien given to them by the charty-party on the cargo for the whole freight, because the bills of lading make the goods the subject thereof deliverable to each consignee on payment by him of the bill of lading freight due in respect of his parcel of goods.

Bruce, J., as I understand, was of opinion that under the charter-party the shipowners had a lien on the cargo which arrived (which cargo exceeded in value the amount of the lump freight) for the lump freight, and that the shipowners deprived themselves of their right to exercise their lien by reason of the master having signed bills of lading binding them to deliver the goods on payment of the bill of lading freight. If so, I agree that there has been no loss of lump freight by perils of the sea, and I have reluctantly come to the conclusion that this is the true construction. I tried hard to avoid coming to that conclusion, because it seems to me that the shipowners and the charterers as business men both intended that the master should have no option but to sign bills of lading making the goods, the subject thereof, deliverable on payment of the bill of lading freight. The provision that the master shall sign bills of lading at any rate of freight the charterers may require, but not under chartered rates or difference to be settled in cash on signing bills of lading, is a strong indication that the shipowners were to look to the bill of lading freight only for the payment of the chartered freight. But the later words seem to give the shipowners a lien on the cargo for the chartered freight, and I do not see my way to construe those words in the way which is suggested by the earlier words in clause 18 without construing a lien on the cargo for the chartered freight as meaning a lien on the cargo for the bill of lading freight only, which is inconsistent with the words for "recovery of all freight, dead freight, and demurrage, and all other charges whatsoever." In other words, one cannot read the words as to the lien on the cargo as giving a lien subject to the signing by the master of bills of lading making the goods, the subject of each bill of lading, deliverable on payment of the bill of lading freight. I have come to this conclusion more reluctantly because the result seems to be that, having regard to the terms of the charter-party, the policy was mere waste paper; for if the ship arrived with goods of sufficient value to cover the freight, the lien would prevent any loss of freight; and if the goods were of insufficient value, the cesser clause would cease to operate, and the personal liability of the charterers would revive.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Pritchard, Englefield, & Co., for Simpson, North, & Co., Liverpool.

Solicitors for the defendants, Waltons, Johnson, Bubb, & Whatton.

Appeal.
(A. L. Smith, Rigby, and Vaughan Williams, L.JJ.) June 10.

APPLEBY v. HORSELEY CO. (LIMITED) AND LOVATT. (a.)

Master and servant—Employers' liability—Accident to workman—Amount of compensation—Average weekly earnings—Break in employment—Period of actual employment—Claim to indemnity—Notice—Indemnity as between respondents — Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), Schedule I. (1), (a), (i.)—Workmen's Compensation Rules, 1898, rr. 19-23.

A workman who was killed by an accident on the 27th of September, 1898, had been originally employed by his employers before the 27th of September, 1895, and from that date till March, 1896, he was earning wages of £2 10*s. a week. There was then a break in his employment till February,* 1897, when he commenced work again at wages of 30*s. a week, and he continued to work at that rate of wages till his death.*

Held, that, in calculating the amount of compensation to which his widow was entitled under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, Schedule I. (1), (a), (i.), the period of work before the break ought not to be taken into account, and that the award ought to be for 156 times 30*s.*

Where the respondents in an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act are the undertakers and a person who has contracted with them, and the undertakers claim indemnity against the contractor, it is necessary, under rule 23 of the Workmen's Compensation Rules, 1898, to give notice of such claim in the same way as is required by rule 19 in the case where a claim to indemnity is sought against a third party.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Two appeals by the Horseley Co. (Limited) from the decision of the judge of the Leicester County Court in an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

The applicant was the widow of a workman who had been killed by an accident in the course of his employment. The proceedings were taken against the Horseley Co. (Limited) and Henry Lovatt. Lovatt had undertaken the work of carrying out certain alterations at Leicester railway station, and the Horseley Co. had entered into a sub-contract with him for executing a portion of the work—viz., the bridge work and iron work. The workman was in the employment of the Horseley Co. and was at the time of his death engaged on the work for which they had so contracted.

The county court judge, by his award, ordered the Horseley Co. and Henry Lovatt to pay £269 15s. to the applicant as compensation and also to pay the applicant's cost of the arbitration, and further ordered the Horseley Co. to indemnify Henry Lovatt against liability to pay the compensation and costs directed to be paid by the award.

The question in the first appeal, to which the applicant was respondent, was whether the county court judge had assessed the compensation on the right principle.

The second appeal, to which Lovatt was respondent, was against that part of the award which ordered the Horseley Co. to indemnify Lovatt.

The facts with regard to the first appeal were as follows: The workman was originally employed by the Horseley Co. before the 27th of September, 1895, as a riveter, in which capacity he earned wages at the rate of £2 10s. a week, and he continued so to work until March, 1896. In that month he met with an accident, and was in consequence thereof unable to do any work for eleven months. He was not, however, actually dismissed from the employment of the company, and in February, 1897, he commenced work again, being employed as a timekeeper and storekeeper, and earning wages at the rate of 30s. a week. He continued to work in this sort of employment until the fatal accident, which happened on the 27th of September, 1898. The applicant was wholly dependent on the earnings of the deceased at the time of his death.

The facts with regard to the second appeal were that no notice of a claim for indemnity was given by Lovatt to the Horseley Co. before the hearing of the arbitration, and the question of indemnity was first raised at the conclusion of the evidence, when Lovatt's solicitor asked the county court judge to make an order for indemnity under section 4 of the Workmen's Compensation Act.

McCardie, for the Horseley Co., in the first appeal.—The amount of compensation to which the applicant is entitled in this case is determined by section 1 (a), (i.), of the first schedule to the Act, which is as follows: "The amount of compensation under this Act shall be, where death results from the injury, if the workman leaves any dependants wholly dependent upon his earnings at the time of his death, a sum equal to his earnings in the employment of the same employer during the three years next preceding the injury . . . And if the period of the workman's employment by the said employer has been less than the said three years, then the amount of his earnings during the said three years shall be deemed to be 156 times his average weekly earnings during the period of his actual employment under the said employer." If the employment of the workman in this case is to be treated as having been continuous, without any break, then the proper amount of compensation is the amount of actual earnings received by him during the three years from the 27th of September, 1895, to the 27th of September, 1898, which was £177. If, on the other hand, there was a break in the employment during the eleven months from March, 1896, to February, 1897, then the proper amount of compensation is 156 times his average weekly earnings during the period from February, 1897, to the 27th of September, 1898, which is £234. The county court judge found that there was a break of eleven months, and that the workman entered upon a new employment in February, 1897. But having found this, he treated the words "the period of his actual employment" at the end of the section as though they were "the periods of his actual employment," and he took the period before the break, when the workman was earning £2 10s. a week, and the period after the break, when he was earning 30s. a week, and calculated the average weekly earnings of those two periods added together, and multiplied that average by 156, which gave £269.

C. A. McCurdy, for the applicant.—The period of continuous actual employment in this case was less than three years; but the relationship of master and servant continued throughout the whole of the three years. The county court judge was justified in taking into account the earlier period of work before the break: Keast v. Barrow Hematite Steel Co, 15 Times L. R. 141. The object of the section is to give the applicant 156 times the average weekly earnings during the period of three years.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—The question is, By what rule ought compensation to be assessed in this case? If the deceased was in continuous employment from September, 1895, to September, 1898, the compensation would work out at £177. The employer, however, does not contend for that; he says that there was a break of eleven months in the course of the three years, and that the only continuous employment was from February, 1897, to September, 1898. If that is right, as I think it is, the compensation works out at £234. On the other hand, the applicant says that the proper method is this—to take the period during which the deceased was earning 30s. a week, then to skip over the period of eleven months, and take the anterior period during which he was earning £2 10s. a week, then to calculate the average weekly earnings during those two periods, and multiply that average by 156, which works out at £269. I think that throughout section 1 (a)(i.), of the first schedule to the Workmen's Compensation Act, the word "employment" ought to be read as meaning continuous employment. Where the employment has been continuous for more than three years before the injury, the compensation is to be the amount of the man's earnings during those three years. But where the period of continuous employment has been less than three years, the compensation is to be 156 times his average weekly earnings during the time that he has in fact been continuously employed. Here the time of continuous employment before the injury was from February, 1897, to September, 1898. In my opinion, therefore, the amount of the award ought to be £234, not £269. I think the county court judge was wrong in reading the word "period" as including "periods." The appeal must be allowed.

RIGBY and VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.JJ., concurred.

Appeal allowed.

McCardie, for the Horseley Co., in the second appeal.—The county court judge had no jurisdiction to make an order for indemnity, as no notice of a claim for indemnity had been given as prescribed by the Workmen's Compensation Rules, 1898. Rules 19-23 provide a code as to claims for indemnity. By rule 19, "Where a respondent claims to be entitled under section 4 or section 6 of the Act or otherwise to indemnity over against any person not a party to the arbitration, he shall, five clear days before the day fixed for proceeding with the arbitration, file a notice of his claim . . . ; and the registrar shall seal such notice and deliver it to the respondent, who shall serve the same . . . upon the person against whom such claim is made." Rule 22 (2) (a) empowers the county court judge, if the respondent and the third party consent, and if the third party admits his liability to indemnify the respondent, to make such award as the nature of the case may require in favour of the respondent against the third party. Then rule 23 says as follows: "(1) Where a respondent claims to be entitled to indemnity against any other respondent, a like notice may be issued and the like procedure may be adopted for the determination of questions between the respondents as might be issued and adopted if such last-mentioned respondent were a third party. (2) Provided that where both the undertakers as defined by the Act and a contractor with them are made respondents to an arbitration, and it is decided in such arbitration that the contractor is liable to pay compensation under the Act, the judge may, without any consent or admission of liability on the part of such contractor, make an award in accordance with paragraph (2) (a) of the last preceding rule in favour of the undertakers against the contractor." The result is that rule 19 requires notice to be given where indemnity is sought against a third party, and rule 23 says the same procedure is to be adopted where indemnity is sought against a person who is already a party to the proceedings as a respondent.

T. W. Chitty, for Lovatt.—The rules ought not to be construed as requiring notice, where the person seeking indemnity and the person against whom indemnity is sought are the undertaker and a contractor who are already parties to the arbitration as respondents. The county court judge acted in accordance with the proviso to rule 23.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—The question is, Can an order for indemnity be made without notice in a case where indemnity is sought by the undertaker against a subcontractor, both of whom are respondents in the arbitration? The case is governed by rule 23, which refers back to rule 19, which requires notice in cases of indemnity against a third party. It is said, however, that the proviso to rule 23 dispenses with the necessity of notice in cases coming within that rule. I do not agree with that contention. In my opinion notice must be given. The appeal must, therefore, be allowed.

RIGBY and VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.JJ., concurred.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitor for the applicant, B. Wilkinson, for S. R. Wykes, Leicester.

Solicitors for the Horseley Co., Morgan, Price, & Mewburn, for Hargreave & Heaton, Birmingham.

Solicitors for Lovatt, Pritchard, Englefield, & Co.

Appeal.
(A. L. Smith, Vaughan Williams, and Romer, L.JJ.) May 13.

Irons v. Davis & Timmins (Limited). (a.)

Master and servant—Employers' liability—Accident to workman—Compensation—Weekly payment—Wages the same after as before the accident—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), Sched I., cl. 2.

A workman, who lost his thumb in consequence of an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment, was received back after the accident into the employment of the same employer at the same rate of wages as before the accident, though he was not put at the same kind of work. The county court judge awarded him 2s. 6d. a week from the time when he resumed work after the accident.

Held, that, as the wages after the accident were the same as those before, there was no power at that time to award any weekly payment in respect of the period after the workman resumed work.

Appeal from an award of the judge of the Clerkenwell County Court under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

The respondent Irons, who was seventeen years of age, was in the employment of the appellants, Davis & Timmins (Limited), and he was injured by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment within the Act, one of his thumbs being so injured that it had to be amputated. The respondent was absent from work on account of the accident for eight weeks. His wages before the accident were 9s. a week, and at the end of the eight weeks he came back to work with the appellants and received 9s. a week as wages, but he was not employed at the same work as before, it being stated that he was employed at odd jobs.

The county court judge awarded the respondent 27s. for the period during which he was absent from work, excluding the first two weeks, and 2s. 6d. a week for life. At the time of the award the respondent had gone back to his employment.

By clause 2 of Schedule I. of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, "In fixing the amount of the weekly payment regard shall be had to the difference between the amount of the average weekly earnings of the workman before the accident and the average amount which he is able to earn after the accident. . . ."

A. T. Lawrence, Q.C., and Rewlatt, for the appellants.—There was no evidence upon which the judge could award any weekly payment. No question is raised as to the 27s. for the period during which the respondent was absent from work on account of the injury. The respondent's wages were the same after the accident as before. By clause 2 of Schedule I. the weekly payment is to be based upon the difference in wages before the accident, and those which the workman "is able to earn" after the accident. The respondent here was able to earn the same wages after the accident as before.

Ruegg, Q.C., and E. Browne, for the respondent.—The weekly payment is given for "total or partial incapacity for work": Schedule I., clause 1 (b). This means incapacity for the class of work at which the workman was employed before the accident; and the words "able to earn" in clause 2 refers to the same class of work. Though the respondent was earning the same wages after the accident as before, it was not at the same class of work, and he was not such a good wage-earning machine as he was before. He was put to do odd jobs. He was only receiving boy's wages before the accident, and it will be a great hardship on him if he cannot get any compensation because he was able to earn the same amount of wages after the accident. He will never be able to earn as high wages as a workman as he could do if the accident had not happened, and by clause 12 of the schedule, unless a weekly payment is awarded, the order can never be reviewed, as by that clause the weekly payment can only be "ended, diminished, or increased," and so the respondent will never get any compensation at all.

A. L. Smith, L.J.—There is no question as to the award of 27s., but the question is whether there was any evidence before the judge upon which he could award the 2s. 6d. a week. In my opinion there was no evidence before him to justify his awarding that or any other sum. The evidence shows that the respondent was earning the same wages after the accident as before. Clause 2 of Schedule I. says that "regard shall be had to the difference between the amount of the average weekly earnings of the workman before the accident and the average amount which he is able to earn after the accident." Here those amounts are the same. The county court judge was therefore wrong. It has, however, been pointed out that clause 12 of the schedule can only be invoked when some weekly payment is awarded, and the appellants' counsel have consented, in order to get rid of any supposed hardship upon the respondent, to our awarding something so as to enable the respondent, if so advised, to apply at some future date under clause 12 to have the payment increased, and therefore by consent we order a weekly payment of one penny.

Vaughan Williams and Romer, L.JJ., concurred.

*Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the appellants, Trower, Freeling, & Parkin.

Solicitors for the respondent, Pattinson & Brewer.

(a.) Reported by W. F. Barry, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

From Q. B. Div.
(Lindley, M.R., and Rigby and Collins, L.JJ.) [and Q. B. Div. (Wright, J.)] March 21, 23, 29; May 12.

In re Gieve (Trading as Shaw).
Ex parte Mrs. L. E. A. Shaw v. Mason. (a.)

Bankruptcy—Proof—Postponement—Sale of goodwill in consideration of an annuity—Partnership Act, 1890, ss. 2 (3) (e), 3.

Where a business had been sold in consideration of the payment of an annuity to the vendor, not expressed to be payable out of the profits of the business,

Held, by the Court of Appeal (reversing Wright, J.), that, upon the bankruptcy of the purchaser, the vendor was entitled to prove in respect of such annuity, and was not, under section 3 of the Partnership Act, 1890, postponed to other creditors.

Appeal by a creditor from the rejection of her proof by the trustee in bankruptcy.

Mrs. Shaw, the appellant, in 1892 sold her deceased husband's business to the bankrupt Gieve and a Mr.

* See Chandler v. Smith & Son, 15 Times L. R. 480.

(a.) Reported by R. C. Mackenzie and P. M. Francke, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law.

Willis (since deceased) upon terms which are fully set ut in the judgment of Wright, J., the most important eing that in consideration for the sale of the business he purchasers were to pay Mrs. Shaw an annuity of 2,650.

Upon the bankruptcy of Gieve, Mrs. Shaw sent a proof in which she valued her annuity at 29,000.

The trustee rejected her proof upon the ground that e annuity was payable out of the profits of the usiness, and any proof therefore must be postponed ll all other creditors should have been paid in full, rther that it had been valued at an excessive nount considering the speculative nature of the usiness upon which it was a charge.

Mrs. Shaw appealed.

Muir Mackenzie and G. Cave, for the appellant.

Reed, Q.C., and Carrington, for the trustee.

Cur. adv. vult.

March 29.—WRIGHT, J.—The deceased, John Shaw, rried on a very profitable speculative business as a ock and share dealer, and died leaving his widow s sole executrix and legatee. By an agreement ted the 25th of March, 1892, she assigned the busiss to Gieve and Willis. The agreement provided o far as material) as follows:

1. The business, goodwill, and trade-name, and the rniture and effects used in the business, and the ses of trade premises are sold to Gieve and Willis.

2. The vendor agreed to advance £8,000 for use in s business.

3 and 4. As the consideration for the sale of the siness the purchasers were to pay the vendor an nuity of £2,650, together with interest on £15,000, such part of £15,000 as she should have received payments of the annuity. The annuity was to be leemable after the payments on account of it should ve reached £15,000, by payment of a further 5,000. It is not expressly stated that the annuity tb be paid out of the profits of the business.

5. The capital advance of £8,000, with a further ,200 for the furniture, &c., were to be paid off by talments of £1,000 a year as a minimum, to be creased by the amount of any excess of profits over ,000 a year (inclusive of the amount of the annuity d interest) until the whole should be paid off.

9. The vendor's lien on the business is preserved.

10. The purchasers covenant to carry on the busis until the vendor's claims are discharged, and to est in it the £8,000 and also £2,000 of their own.

14. The vendor is to have access to books and ounts.

15. Upon any default by the purchasers the vendor y rescind the agreement, and in that case she is to paid any arrears then due, and an annuity of ,000 a year and a further amount (to be calculated a manner which is not intelligible).

In my opinion section 3 of the Partnership Act, 0, applies to this agreement. The payments to be de were all to be made out of profits, for dently no other fund was in fact contemplated out which they could be made; and where this is the e the reason for the enactment seems applicable. e creditors have been invited to give credit to the iness of the firm, and the assets of that business e been reduced by the annuity to the vendor, and y be to a great extent absorbed if the vendor is to k for the calculated value of the annuity. I see hing in the language of the enactment which its it to a contract by which the annuity is ressed to be payable only out of profits.

he same principle seems to me to be applicable to the £8,000 and the £2,200. The latter sum seems to be in substance an agreed price for the furniture, &c., which price is treated as lent to the firm. The language of clause 5 seems to express an intention that the repayment of these sums is to be made out of profits.

In this view the question does not at present arise whether the claim has been properly framed. Should it become necessary to determine this, I think that it ought to be held that the claim is wrong in so far as it is based on a merely arithmetical calculation of the value of the annuity. It must be valued by the trustee, and he would, in my opinion, be entitled to take into consideration the precarious nature of the business out of the proceeds of which the payments were to be made, and also the provisions for redemption and rescission.

Against this decision Mrs. Shaw appealed to the Court of Appeal. The appeal was heard on the 12th of May, 1899.

Muir Mackenzie and George Cave, for the appellant, referred to the Partnership Act, 1890, s. 2, subsection 3 (c) and (e), s. 3; and In re Allen & Co., Ex parte Strong & Hanbury, 10 Morrell 84.

Herbert Reed, Q.C., and A. H. Carrington, for the respondent, cited Badeley v. Consolidated Bank, 36 W. R. 745, 38 Ch. D. 238; and In re Gieve, ante, p. 441.

No reply was called for.

LINDLEY, M.R.—The rights of the parties in this case must be gathered from the written instrument into which they have entered; unless, of course, that instrument can be impeached as being a fraud against creditors, which is not suggested here at all. It appears to me that you cannot possibly bring this agreement within the sections which are relied upon by the learned judge—sections 2 and 3 of the Partnership Act, 1890.

This agreement obviously does not create a partnership, and there is in fact no partnership, between Mrs. Shaw and Mr. Gieve, who bought her husband's business. Such an arrangement was never contemplated by them. On the face of the agreement itself, or appearing from other circumstances if you go behind it, there is nothing of that sort. There is nothing, I think, at which we can legitimately look, to lead us to a different conclusion. Fraud is not alleged, except so far as the agreement itself may be a fraud. Now, in the absence of fraud, it is clear that, as I have said, the agreement must regulate the rights of the parties. We have, therefore, to examine what the rights of the parties under this agreement are. It is quite obvious, to my mind, that Mrs. Shaw was simply stipulating that a certain annuity should be paid to her, and that she is not a person receiving, as the consideration for the sale, a portion of the profits of the business, within the meaning of the provision in section 3 of the Partnership Act, 1890. I think it is a fallacy to argue that the person who has to pay her the annuity is a gentleman engaged in the business, and that, therefore, she is to receive from him a share of the profits. I do not doubt that it is quite true that, unless he carried on that business or a similar one, he would be unable to pay Mrs. Shaw her annuity; but it does not follow from that that she is to be treated as bargaining to receive a share of the profits of the business, any more than any of his other creditors, none of whom, presumably, would be paid unless he carried on some business and earned some income. You cannot bring this agreement within the terms of section 3 fairly construed. You cannot possibly say, having regard to the terms of this agreement for the payment of an annuity, that this lady is going to receive by way of annuity or otherwise a portion of the profits of this business. With respect to section 3 of the Act of 1890, it must be borne in mind that she is not to be postponed unless she comes within the language of its provisions, which I will read: "In the event of any person to whom money has been advanced by way of loan upon such a contract as is mentioned in the last foregoing section, or of any buyer of a goodwill in consideration of a share of the profits of the business, being adjudged a bankrupt, entering into an arrangement to pay his creditors less than twenty shillings in the pound, or dying in insolvent circumstances, the lender of the loan shall not be entitled to recover anything in respect of his loan, and the seller of the goodwill shall not be entitled to recover anything in respect of the share of profits contracted for, until the claims of the other creditors of the borrower or buyer for valuable consideration in money or money's worth have been satisfied." I think you cannot, on the true construction of that section, treat the bankrupt as buying a business on the consideration of an agreement to pay to Mrs. Shaw by way of annuity a part of the profits. That appears to me to be so plain that if it were not for those clauses of the agreement which give the creditor a security on the business, I should think the case an absolutely unarguable one. Mrs. Shaw has, by the terms of the agreement, a right to rescind it, which right she has not exercised. That does not bring the transaction within this section. It appears to me that the learned judge took an erroneous view of the true construction of the section, and erroneously treated this bargain as coming within the Act. I think it is certainly not within the Act simply because the bankrupt was a person engaged in business, and will probably pay the annuity out of the profits. If it is not within the Act for that reason, it is not within it at all. As regards the value to be put on the annuity for the purpose of proof, if the parties had not asked us to refer that to the registrar to assess I should have felt some difficulty in doing so, because this is not a case where the trustee has attempted to assess the value, and there has been an appeal from him. But as both the parties request us to deal with the matter in that way, I see no difficulty at all, especially after what Mr. Reed has suggested, that he is prepared, on the trustee's behalf, to say that the trustee does not see his way in regard to assessing the value. The proper course will be to discharge the order of the learned judge, and by consent or at the request of the parties to refer it to the registrar to estimate the proper value to be put upon this annuity.

RIGBY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion, both as to the construction of the deed itself, as to the construction of the Act of 1890, and as to referring the valuation of the claim, in the circumstances of this case, to the registrar. I think there is no ground for supposing that there was any real bargain between the parties outside of this agreement.

COLLINS, L.J.—I am of the same opinion, on the same grounds.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors, Slark, Edwards, & Co.; Ingle, Holmes, & Co.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. North, J. — May 12.

LORD GIFFORD v. LORD FITZHARDINGE. (a.)

Settlement—Tenant for life—Payment off of mortgage—Presumption.

Where a tenant for life of a settlement pays off out of his own moneys a mortgage on a reversionary interest, assigned to the trustees of the settlement subject to the mortgage, and takes a reconveyance which in effect makes the payment off of the mortgage enure for the benefit of the settlement, the court will make a declaration that, notwithstanding the form of reconveyance, the tenant for life is entitled to have the charge kept alive for his own benefit, and that the sum so paid off has priority over the settlement.

Action.

In April, 1879, the plaintiff had executed to the defendant a mortgage of his reversionary interest in certain trust funds. In April, 1880, the plaintiff executed a marriage settlement which included the reversionary interest above mentioned. The trusts of the settlement were to pay the income of the trust funds to the wife for her life for her separate use, then to the plaintiff if he survived her for his life, with remainders to the children of the marriage as the plaintiff should appoint, with the ultimate remainder to the plaintiff.

The plaintiff's reversionary interest included in the settlement was made subject to the mortgage to the defendant.

There were no children of the marriage.

In October, 1896, the plaintiff, without taking legal advice, paid off the mortgage debt, and took a reconveyance.

No mention was made of the marriage settlement, as the mortgagee's solicitors who prepared the reconveyance were ignorant of its existence.

The plaintiff brought this action to have the reconveyance set aside, and to have a proper transfer of the mortgage made to him by the defendant.

The plaintiff, in his evidence, said that he had paid off the mortgage out of his own moneys, and that he had not intended to pay off the mortgage for the benefit of the settlement, and that he had not appreciated the legal effect of the reconveyance until he had recently consulted his solicitors.

E. C. Macnaghten, Q.C., and Beddall, cited Burrell v. Lord Egremont, 7 Beav. 205; In re Harvey, 44 W. R. 242; Morley v. Morley, 4 W. R. 75, 5 De G. M. & G. 610, and argued that in such a case the presumption always was that a tenant for life paying off a charge did so for his own benefit.

Beaumont, for the defendant, and

S. R. Earle, for the trustees of the marriage settlement and the wife, offered no opposition.

NORTH, J., accepted the plaintiff's statement of his intention in paying off the mortgage, and as the effect of the reconveyance was to benefit the settlement, the best course was to follow Burrell v. Lord Egremont and to make a declaration that notwithstanding the form of the reconveyance, the plaintiff, as tenant for life, having paid off the mortgage debt out of his own moneys, was entitled to have the charge kept alive for his own benefit, and that the £1,000 secured by the mortgage had priority over the settlement. The plaintiff was ordered to pay the costs of the action.

Solicitors, Stevens, Bawtree, & Stevens; Jennings & Finch.

(a.) Reported by R. SILLEM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Chan. Div.
Byrne, J. } June 1.

In re THE PRINTERS AND TRANSFERERS' AMALGAMATED TRADES PROTECTION SOCIETY. (a.)

Trades union—Dissolution of union—Unexpended funds—Resulting trust—Principle of division of funds.

A trades union society registered under the Trade Union Acts passed a resolution to dissolve itself. The rules contained no provision for the application of the funds in the event of a dissolution. The Crown laid no claim to the funds as bonâ vacantia.

Held, that there was a resulting trust in favour of the existing members at the time of the dissolution in proportion to the amount contributed by each member to the funds of the society, and that, in taking the account, it was not necessary to pay any regard to payments for fines and forfeitures or for benefits received under the rules.

Summons.

This was an application to the court to determine in what mode the funds of a dissolved trades union should be divided.

The facts of the case were as follows: The Printers and Transferers' Amalgamated Union was registered in 1872 under the Trade Union Act, 1871. The object of the union was by means of weekly contributions to enable its members to secure reasonable remuneration for their labour. The society was divided into two classes—printers and transferers, the printers being men and the transferers women, and under the rules the printers contributed to the funds of the union twice as much as the transferers, and were entitled to receive twice as much on the scale of payments made to members for their support during strikes or lock-outs. There were also in the rules provisions for fines and forfeitures for breaches of the rules, and for regulating the amount of payments in proportion to the time that a person had been a member of the society, and for a dissolution of the society by a vote of four-fifths of the members; but there was no provision made for the distribution of the funds in the event of such a dissolution.

In November, 1898, the union was duly dissolved by a vote of its members. At this time the society numbered 201 members, and its funds amounted to about £1,000. The application stood over for a communication to be made to the Attorney-General, but he did not appear, and it was understood that the Crown laid no claim to the funds as bonâ vacantia.

Buckmaster, for the trustees and liquidator of the society.

Farwell, Q.C., and Kirby, for certain members of the union.—There is here a resulting trust in favour of existing members at the date of the dissolution. Deceased members have no interest whatever, and the proper course is to divide the fund among the members in proportion to the amounts contributed by each member. The decision of Chitty, J., in Cunnack v. Edwards, 43 W. R. 325, [1895] 1 Ch. 489; reported on appeal 45 W. R. 99, [1896] 2 Ch. 679, applies here. There Chitty, J., held that there was a resulting trust for the representatives of deceased members, there being no surviving members left. The Court of Appeal reversed that decision and held that the funds were bonâ vacantia; but the grounds on which it reversed it do not here apply. The Lord Chancellor there remarks—[1896] 2 Ch. 681—that the entire interest had been exhausted in respect of each contributor. That is not so here, as there are members who can claim, and therefore there must be a resulting trust. Further, the Crown makes no claim to the fund here as bonâ vacantia. [BYRNE, J., referred to Smith v. Cooke, 40 W. R. 67, [1891] A. C. 297.]

Waggett, for the printers.—The fund should be divided among the existing members, according to the amounts which they have contributed; but the printers should receive twice as much as the transferers.

Dunham, for the transferers.—There ought to be an equal division among all members. It is not here strictly a case of a resulting trust. There is here a fund in the hands of trustees, and which belongs to the persons who are the cestui que trust of those trustees in equal shares.

Farwell, Q.C., replied.

Brown v. Dale, 27 W. R. 149, 9 Ch. D. 78, was also referred to.

BYRNE, J.—This is a trades union which has passed a resolution to dissolve itself, and the question as to which this application is made is as to the distribution of its funds. [After stating the constitution and referring to the rules of the society, his lordship continued:] The only persons interested in these funds are the persons who were existing members of the society immediately prior to its dissolution; the interest of such persons being of the nature of a contingent benefit to such of them as were entitled to payment under the rules of the union. In Cunnack v. Edwards a very similar question came before Lord Justice (then Mr. Justice) Chitty, and he held that the representatives of surviving members were not entitled to the funds, but that there was a resulting trust in favour of the members of the society from time to time or of their legal personal representatives in shares in proportion to the amounts contributed by each member to the funds of the society. With regard to the decision in Cunnack v. Edwards it should be observed that there was there no existing member of the association and the question there was, whether the funds had passed to the Crown as bona vacantia or were distributable among the persons who had contributed to the funds. The Court of Appeal decided that the funds were bonâ vacantia, and the leading ground of that decision was that on the true construction of the rules of that society each member on making a payment had parted with his money in favour of third persons. That circumstance does not exist in the present case. Here all are equally entitled to benefits on the happening of certain contingent events, and moreover in this case although a communication has been made to it, the Crown puts forward no claim to the funds as bonâ vacantia. To whom then do these funds belong and in what manner ought they to be distributed. I think that the members of the society existing at the date of the dissolution are the only persons who can establish any claim to the funds. The next question is, Ought these funds to be distributed among all the members of the society equally, or in proportion to the contingent benefits to which the two classes are entitled—that it is to say, in the proportion of one to two? Practically it comes to this, that I must decide that the funds are divisible here among the members equally or in proportion to their contributions to the funds. Here I think that the true ground to take is to hold that there is a resulting trust in favour of those who have contributed to the funds, and therefore I think that the proper and legitimate way here will be to divide them in accordance with the amounts contributed by the members at the date of the passing of the resolution for dissolution. To carry out these rights to the fullest extent it might be necessary for me to direct an account, which would involve such matters as payments for fines and forfeitures and benefits received under the rules. I feel, however, as Chitty, J., felt in Cunnack v. Edwards, that the taking of such an account would cause delay and expense, and would very considerably eat into the funds. Following Chitty, J., I therefore think that I am justified in saying that such matters need not be considered. I therefore make the following declaration: It appearing that the Attorney-General makes no claim, there is a resulting trust in favour of the members of the society who existed at the date of the resolution for dissolution, and that the funds are divisible in accordance with the amounts subscribed irrespective of fines and forfeitures and without regard to any amount received under the rules by such members. The costs of all parties as between solicitor and client will be payable out of the funds.

(a.) Reported by J. ARTHUR PRICE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Solicitors, Carthew & Williams, for A. Ellis, Burslem.

Chan. Div.
Cozens-Hardy, J. } June 6, 19.

DIXON v. WINCH. (a.)

Mortgage—Transfer—Notice to mortgagor—Omission to give—Negligence—Collusive sale by mortgagor and mortgagee—Satisfaction of mortgage.

The doctrine of Williams v. Sorrell, 4 Ves. 389, and Norrish v. Marshall, 5 Mad. 475, is not applicable as against a transferee of a mortgage where there has been collusion between mortgagor and mortgagee to pay the debt to the mortgagee.

W. having purchased and mortgaged to D., his vendor, certain land, built houses thereon and sold the houses to the plaintiff. Prior to the sale D. transferred the mortgage to the defendant. The conveyance to the plaintiff, to which both W. and D. were parties, recited (inter alia) that D., being seised for an unincumbered estate in fee simple in possession, agreed to sell to W. for £100, but that no conveyance had been executed, which recital was false to the knowledge of W. The purchase-money was paid to D., who retained a sum for principal, interest, and costs, but it was not shown to the satisfaction of the court how the sum was arrived at. The plaintiff had not actual notice of the defendant's security, and W. had not had notice of the transfer of the mortgage given him by the defendant, and denied knowledge of the transfer. D., who had been employed by the defendant to collect the interest on the defendant's mortgage, after paying interest on the mortgage for some years to the defendaht, absconded, and nothing could be recovered from him.

Held, that, although payment-off of the mortgage debt to the mortgagee by a mortgagor after, but without notice of, a transfer must, in the absence of collusion, be allowed to the mortgagor as against the transferee, as settled by the above-named cases, this doctrine ought not to be extended to a case where the money which was said to have been paid in satisfaction of the mortgage was part of the purchase-money procured by a false recital in the conveyance to the purchaser to the effect that there was not and never had been any mortgage; that the case must be treated as one of collusion between W. and D. to obtain the purchase-money by means of false recitals; and therefore that the retention of part of the purchase-money by D. was not equivalent to payment-off of any part of the mortgage.

Action.

By a deed dated the 14th of July, 1886, some land at Harlow was conveyed to Dent in fee.

By a deed dated the 24th of March, 1892, Dent conveyed to the defendant Winch, a builder, a portion of this land, subject to certain building restrictions, and Dent acknowledged Winch's right to the production of the conveyance of 1886 in the usual way.

Winch, who was financed by Dent, built some houses on part of the land; and by a deed dated the 11th of January, 1893, Winch mortgaged this part of the land and the houses to Dent to secure £350 with interest at £5 per cent.

On the 16th of January, 1893, Dent transferred to the defendant Miss Ellman the mortgage debt of £350 and the mortgaged property subject to redemption. Miss Ellman received, and had since retained in her own possession, the conveyance to Winch and the mortgage from Winch to Dent with the transfer from Dent to herself indorsed thereon. Notice of the transfer was not given by Miss Ellman to Winch.

Dent paid Miss Ellman interest on the mortgage debt until 1898, when he absconded. He paid it together with interest on other mortgages collected by him for her, the letters inclosing his cheques expressly referring to Winch's mortgage.

On Dent's disappearance the following facts were discovered. By a deed dated the 15th of September, 1893, and made between Dent of the first part, Winch of the second part, and the plaintiff Mrs. Dixon of the third part, after reciting that Dent being seised of the lands thereinafter described for an unincumbered estate of inheritance in fee simple in possession, some time since agreed to sell the same to Winch at the price of £100, but that no conveyance thereof had been executed, and reciting that Winch had erected three houses and had agreed to sell the same to the plaintiff at the price of £685, it was witnessed that in consideration of £100 paid by the plaintiff to Dent and of £585 paid by the plaintiff to Winch, Dent and Winch conveyed to the plaintiff a portion of the land comprised in Miss Ellman's mortgage. The deed contained no reference to Ellman's mortgage, and there was no covenant for production of deeds.

By a deed dated the 25th of April, 1894, and made between the same parties and containing similar recitals, the rest of the land was, in consideration of £375 paid to Winch, conveyed by Dent and Winch to the plaintiff.

It appeared that on the 13th of September, 1893, Winch signed and gave to the plaintiff Mrs. Dixon a receipt in the following terms: "Received this 13th of September, 1893, of Mrs. Dixon the sum of £1 as deposit in purchase of my three cottages in Bury-road, Harlow, for the sum of £685, she to have a free conveyance prepared by Mr. Dent, and to accept my title from him. The purchase to be completed on the 16th of September, 1893.—(Signed) WALTER WINCH, MARY DIXON."

No abstract of title was furnished to the plaintiff, and no investigation of any sort made on her behalf. The first purchase by the plaintiff was completed at the plaintiff's house, Winch and Dent being present. The plaintiff gave to Dent a bearer cheque from her brokers for the amount of £685 1s. 6d., and received back £1 1s. 6d. from Winch. Dent retained £451 10s. for principal, interest, and costs, said to be due to him from Winch, and paid the balance to Winch by his own cheque. A document in Dent's handwriting was produced by

(a.) Reported by J. F. WALEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Winch, which to a certain extent explained the transaction. It was as follows:

	£	s.	d.
Principal	425	0	0
Interest from the 11th of January, 1893, to the 15th of September, 1893 ...	12	10	0
Costs	14	0	0
	451	10	0
Cheque of Mrs. Dixon	685	1	6
	451	10	0
	£233	11	6

No account of the pecuniary dealings between Dent and Winch was ever furnished by Dent to Winch, and there was nothing to show how the £425 or the interest was made up. The interest was more nearly 4 per cent. on £450 than 5 per cent. on £350.

The circumstances attending the second sale were assumed by the court to be substantially the same.

It was not alleged that the plaintiff Mrs. Dixon in fact had any notice of the defendant Ellman's security, and Winch swore that he did not know of the transfer to Ellman.

The plaintiff claimed a declaration whether the defendant Miss Ellman's mortgage was a valid and subsisting security or not, and if it was, to be entitled to redeem and to be indemnified by Winch. The defendant Miss Ellman counterclaimed foreclosure or sale in default of payment.

H. T. Eve, Q.C., and Christopher James, for the plaintiff.

T. R. Hughes, Q.C., and W. G. Hayter, for the defendant Winch, contended that Miss Ellman must be treated as having been paid off, and in addition to the cases noticed in the judgment cited Jones v. Gibbons, 9 Ves. 407, footnote; Withington v. Tate, 17 W. R. 559, L. R. 4 Ch. App. 288; and Bickerton v. Walker, 34 W. R. 141, 31 Ch. D. 151.

N. Micklem and J. E. Harman, for the defendant Miss Ellman.—Both the plaintiff and Winch were affected with notice of the transfer. Moreover, Winch ought to have required the mortgage deed to be handed back. By not doing so he enabled the fraud. Under the circumstances neither the plaintiff nor Winch can make any case of payment off.

Eve, in reply, referred to Kettlewell v. Watson, 30 W. R. 402, 21 Ch. D. 685, and Cave v. Cave, 28 W. R. 793, 15 Ch. D. 639.

Other authorities were cited as to the application of the doctrine of constructive notice to a party through his solicitor, which was much argued, but was not material to the following decision.

COZENS-HARDY, J.—This action involves a difficult question as to who is to suffer by reason of the fraud of a solicitor named Dent, who has absconded, and from whom nothing can be recovered. The facts, so far as material, may be shortly stated. [His lordship stated the facts set out above, and continued:] In these circumstances it is necessary to consider upon whom the loss due to the fraud of Dent ought to fall.

Now, as to Winch it is clear that Dent was his solicitor throughout. It is also clear that by executing the two conveyances to the plaintiff containing recitals which were false to his knowledge—for he cannot be heard to say that he was not aware of the conveyance by Dent to him and the subsequent mortgage by him to Dent—he has been the real occasion of the fraud.

With reference to the defendant Miss Ellman, Dent was undoubtedly her solicitor in the matter of the transfer. She, however, got from Dent all that she was entitled to have, and the only negligence that can be attributed to her is the omission to give Winch notice of her transfer.

With respect to the plaintiff Mrs. Dixon there is more difficulty. I think, however, that I must hold that Dent was her solicitor in the matter of the two conveyances, although by the terms of her contract he was to be paid by Winch. The reasoning of Turner, V.C., in Hewitt v. Loosemore, 9 Hare 449, seems to me to apply to the present case.

Now, at the moment when the plaintiff's purchase was completed in September, 1893, the position of the parties was as follows: Miss Ellman was legal mortgagee of the entire property for £350 and interest. Mrs. Dixon acquired by her conveyance only the equity of redemption in part of the property subject to this mortgage, whether she had or had not notice of the legal mortgage. Winch remained owner of the equity of redemption of the remaining part of the property comprised in Miss Ellman's mortgage. Miss Ellman contends that nothing has happened to deprive her of the position which she admittedly held at the moment when Mrs. Dixon paid her purchase-money to Winch. On the other hand Mrs. Dixon contends, and in this contention she is supported by the defendant Winch, that nothing is due to the defendant Ellman on her mortgage, because Winch, in September, 1893, paid off Dent, the mortgagee, without having notice or knowledge of Dent's transfer to Ellman. It is well settled that where a mortgage is transferred without the privity of the mortgagor, the transferee takes subject to the state of account between the mortgagor and mortgagee at the date of the transfer (Matthews v. Wallwyn, 4 Ves. 118); and it is also settled that payments of interest or payments on account of principal made by the mortgagor to the mortgagee after, but without notice of, a transfer must, in the absence of collusion, be allowed to the mortgagor as against the transferee: Williams v. Sorrell, 4 Ves. 389. This doctrine has been extended to the case where the whole mortgage debt is, under similar circumstances, paid off: see Norrish v. Marshall, 5 Madd. 475; Allen v. Lord Southampton, 29 W. R. 231, 16 Ch. D. 178.

Apart from these authorities, I should have thought it reasonable to hold that where the mortgagor, being entitled on payment off of the mortgage to the actual custody of the mortgage deed and other documents of title, which in fact are in the possession of the transferee, chooses to pay the mortgagee without asking for the deeds, he ought not to be allowed, as against the transferee, to justify such payment. I should have thought that this negligence on the part of the mortgagor was far greater than the negligence of the transferee in omitting to give notice of the transfer. But I am asked to apply this principle to a case where the money, which is said to have been paid by Winch to Dent in satisfaction of the mortgage, was part of the purchase-money procured by the solemn statement in the conveyance by Winch and by Dent that there was not any mortgage and that there never had been any mortgage. I decline thus to extend the doctrine. I am not satisfied how the £425 mentioned in the document above referred to was arrived at. I cannot treat Winch as an innocent and perfectly honest mortgagor making a payment to the mortgagee in good faith for the purpose of redeeming his mortgage; I must treat him as colluding with Dent to obtain Mrs. Dixon's purchase-money by means of false recitals. And I cannot recognize the retention by Dent of £451 10s. as equivalent to a payment off of the mortgage for £350 without notice of the transfer.

Moreover, the question is not now between Miss Ellman and Winch, but between Miss Ellman and Mrs. Dixon; and it would be a lucky accident for Mrs. Dixon if I should be driven to hold that the legal mortgage, subject to which she bought, had been since discharged without either party being aware of the fact by reason of a transaction between Winch and Dent. There is no equity in favour of Mrs. Dixon, and, in the circumstances, I am not prepared to destroy Miss Ellman's security for her benefit. In the view which I take it is not necessary for me to express any opinion upon the difficult question whether Mrs. Dixon is to be affected with the knowledge which her solicitor Dent had of Miss Ellman's security.

The result is that I must declare that Miss Ellman's mortgage is a valid subsisting charge for £350 with interest and the costs of the action and counterclaim. I understand that Mrs. Dixon will redeem. If the figures are not agreed there must be the usual foreclosure decree in favour of Miss Ellman. As between Mrs. Dixon and the defendant Winch, he must indemnify her against all payments she has to make to Miss Ellman, and must pay her costs of the action.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Druces & Attlee.

Solicitors for the defendant Winch, West, King, Adams, & Co.

Solicitor for the defendant Ellman, C. F. Ingram.

Q. B. Div.
(Grantham and Lawrance, JJ.) June 14.

LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. HOLZAPFELS COMPOSITIONS CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Petroleum Acts—Definition of petroleum—Composition containing petroleum—Petroleum Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 105), s. 3.

The term "petroleum," as used in the Petroleum Acts, is not confined to petroleum, or oils or products of petroleum in their simple state, but extends to a composition containing petroleum as one of its ingredients.

Case stated by a Metropolitan police magistrate.

Upon an information charging the respondents with keeping a quantity of petroleum (to which the Petroleum Acts of 1871 and 1879 applied) otherwise than in pursuance of a licence given by the local authority contrary to section 7 of the Petroleum Act, 1871, the following facts were proved:

The respondents were manufacturers of a substance known as Holzapfels, a composition which is used for coating ships' bottoms. On the 7th of December, 1898, a quantity of the composition was kept by the respondents at premises belonging to them in Robin Hood-lane. The respondents held no licence for keeping petroleum on these premises.

The composition was contained in 109 steel drums hermetically sealed. It contained about 33 per cent. of petroleum oils, and about an equal quantity of oil mixed with pigments, gum, &c., into the form of a paste, paint, or composition. 25 per cent. of the petroleum oils used in the composition would, when the composition was tested in the manner set forth in Schedule I. of the Petroleum Act, 1879, give off an inflammable vapour at a temperature of 73° Fahrenheit.

The magistrate dismissed the information upon the ground that the composition was not petroleum nor an oil or product of petroleum within the definition of petroleum in section 3 of the Petroleum Act, 1871. He held also that petroleum was not present in the composition in sufficient quantities to make the composition petroleum.

Section 7 of the Petroleum Act, 1871, enacts that, save as thereinafter mentioned, "petroleum to which this Act applies shall not be kept except in pursuance of a licence given by such local authority as is in the Act mentioned." The exceptions are not material to the present case. The appellants were the local authority having power to grant licences under the Act.

Section 3 provides as follows: "For the purposes of this Act the term 'petroleum' includes any rock oil, Rangoon oil, Burmah oil, oil made from petroleum, coal, schist, shale, peat, or other bituminous substance, and any products of petroleum or any of the above-mentioned oils; and the term 'petroleum to which this Act applies,' means such of the petroleum so defined as, when tested in the manner set forth in Schedule I. to this Act, give off an inflammable vapour at a temperature of less than 100° of Fahrenheit's thermometer." The Petroleum Act, 1879, substituted 73° of Fahrenheit's thermometer for 100° as the minimum temperature.

Avory, for the appellants.—The decision of the magistrate is wrong, for it amounts to this, that petroleum ceases to be petroleum within the meaning of the Act when something else is mixed with it. In The Pharmaceutical Society v. Armson, 42 W. R. 662; [1894] 2 Q. B. 720, it was held, with regard to a patent compound which contained, as one of its ingredients, one of the poisons scheduled in the Pharmacy Act, that the compound did not cease to be a poison within the Pharmacy Act because the poison was mixed with other substances. If the composition came within the definition of petroleum in section 3, it was clearly also petroleum to which the Act applied, because it is found in the case that when tested it gave off an inflammable vapour at a temperature of 73° Fahrenheit.

Atherley Jones, Q.C. (F. Newbolt with him), for the respondents.—Whether the composition was petroleum or not is a question of fact which the magistrate has decided in the respondents' favour. It is quite fair to say that a substance which contained so small a proportion of petroleum as this composition did is not petroleum within the meaning of the Act.

GRANTHAM, J.—This appeal must be allowed. I am sorry to have to come to this conclusion, because I feel that it will interfere with the respondents in the conduct of their business. But we have to construe the Act of Parliament, and, in my view, it is clear that this composition comes within the definition of petroleum given in section 3 of the Petroleum Act, 1871; for it is clear that petroleum does not cease to be petroleum because something else is mixed with it. The petroleum might have been mixed with something which would have prevented it from throwing off an inflammable vapour at the temperature indicated by the Legislature. If that had been so, the composition would not have been petroleum to which this Act applied. But the composition under consideration is admittedly dangerous. It is therefore, also, petroleum to which the Act applies.

LAWRANCE, J., concurred.

Case remitted to magistrate.

Solicitor for the appellants, Blaxland.

Solicitors for the respondents, Stokes & Stokes.

(a.) Reported by C. G. WILBRAHAM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Q. B. Div.
(Darling and Channell, JJ.) April 13.

BROWN v. PATCH. (a.)

Gaming —"Place" used for betting—Betting Houses Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 119), s. 1.

On a certain part of the ground upon which a race meeting was being held a bookmaker erected a structure consisting of four legs or supports made of bamboo fastened together. On the top there was a board on which from time to time the bookmaker wrote the odds offered against the different horses, and, lower down, a canvas screen or banner some distance off the ground, bearing the bookmaker's name. Throughout the day the bookmaker stood upon a box or stool close to the structure shouting the odds and betting with persons upon the ground.

Held, that the bookmaker was a person using a place for the purpose of betting with persons resorting thereto within the meaning of the Betting Houses Act, 1853, there being a sufficient localization of the business of betting at the spot where he stood.

Case stated by justices of Blandford, in the county of Dorset.

A summons was issued against the respondent, upon the complaint of the appellant, for unlawfully using a place—to wit, a particular part of the enclosure known as the Larmer Tree Grounds, in the parish of Farnham, for the purpose of betting with persons resorting thereto.

The following facts were proved: In the parish of Farnham, in the county of Dorset, are situated certain enclosed grounds known as the Larmer Tree Grounds. Once a year a meeting for horse-races is held in these grounds by permission of the owner. On the 8th of September, 1897, a race meeting was held in the grounds, at which several thousands of persons were present, among them being some six bookmakers, or professional betting men, with their clerks. All these persons, including the bookmakers and their clerks, were admitted without payment to all parts of the and outside the stands. The respondent was a bookmaker, and he entered the Larmer Tree Grounds with his clerk about 12.30 p.m. on the 8th of September, 1897. The two men erected on the ground a structure, of which the following is a description: It was made of bamboo cane, with four legs or supports, two in front and two at the back, fastened together in front. It was 5ft. or 6ft. high from the ground to the top. On the top of this structure there was a board, on which was painted in gilt letters the words, "Bob Patch. London. All in run or not. Pay first past the post." Below the board was a canvas screen or banner some distance off the ground, and the words "Bob Patch, London," were on the canvas. The respondent had a wooden box or stool close to the right hand side of the structure. From time to time during the day the respondent stood on the box or stool and shouted the odds against the different horses or bicyclists running in the different races, and invited all persons present to bet with him, and from time to time wrote on the board before referred to the odds offered against the different horses and bicyclists. When a bet was made the backer paid the amount to the respondent, and the respondent or his clerk, who stood by him on the ground, wrote down the bet in a book, and a ticket was given to the person making the bet.

After each race the persons who had backed the winning horses were, upon presenting the ticket, paid the amount they had won, together with the sum deposited.

During the whole time the racing continued the respondent's structure remained in the position and on the particular part of the grounds in which it was first placed. There was nothing surrounding the structure, whether for the purpose of excluding the public or for any other purpose, and the respondent had no exclusive right of user of any portion of the grounds. Other bookmakers erected similar structures and conducted a betting business in a similar manner.

The justices dismissed the summons.

Section 1 of the Betting Houses Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 119), provides: "No house, office, room, or other place shall be opened, kept, or used for the purpose of the owner, occupier, or keeper thereof, or any person using the same, or any person procured or employed by or acting for or on behalf of such owner, occupier, or keeper, or person using the same, or of any person having the care or management or in any manner conducting the business thereof, betting with persons resorting thereto; . . ."

Section 3 imposes a penalty upon any person who, being the owner or occupier of any such house, office, room, or other place, or person using the same, shall open, keep, or use the same for the purposes thereinbefore mentioned.

Clavell Salter, for the appellant.—The respondent ought to have been convicted. What he did amounted to using a place within the meaning of the Betting Houses Act: Bows v. Fenwick, 22 W. R. 804, L. R. 9 C. P. 339; Liddell v. Lofthouse, 44 W. R. 349, [1896] 1 Q. B. 295; and Shaw v. Morley, 16 W. R. 763, L. R. 3 Ex. 137.

Stutfield (H. S. Cautley with him), for the respondent.—The justices were right. The facts of this case are precisely similar to those of Gallaway v. Maries, 30 W. R. 151, 8 Q. B. D. 275, a decision on which the House of Lords have in Powell v. Kempton Park Racecourse Co., ante p. 585, [1899] A. C. 143, thrown doubt. The only addition to the circumstances of that case are that in the present case the defendant, in addition to standing upon a stool or box, erected a structure close to it. That is not sufficient to afford a distinction. The Legislature clearly intended by the the word "place" to indicate some circumscribed and defined area in which persons could congregate. This is shown by sections 11 and 12, where provision is made for the police to enter and break into any suspected house, office, room, or place and to arrest the persons found therein. Any other construction of the word "place" would tend to turn the Act into an Act against betting.

DARLING, J.—In this case proceedings were taken against the respondent under the Betting Houses Act, 1853, and he was charged with an offence under section 3. [After reciting the facts, his lordship proceeded:] It is argued by the appellant that the respondent committed an offence under the Act because he kept and used a place for the purpose of betting with persons who resorted to it. It is said, on the other hand, that he did not use such place because the facts resemble those in Gallaway v. Maries, which has been overruled in Powell v. Kempton Park Racecourse Co. In the latter case all the cases on the subject have been reviewed by the House of Lords. Some of these have emerged as good law, including Liddell v. Lofthouse, Bows v. Fenwick, and Shaw v. Morley, while others have been shown to be bad law.

The Lord Chancellor, in his judgment, says, with regard to the meaning of the word "place," that any place which is sufficiently definite, and in which a betting establishment might be conducted, would satisfy the words of the statute, and Lord James says that where there is a definite localization of the business of betting, there is a "place" for the purposes of conviction under the Act.

(a.) Reported by C. G. WILBRAHAM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

I will not attempt to define a "place," but having regard to the law laid down in Powell v. Kempton Park Racecourse Co., can we say that the magistrate should have drawn the inference that this was a "place" within the meaning of the Act, either as being sufficiently defined, or on the ground that there was a definite localization of the respondent's place of business? I think that here the respondent localized his business at the spot where he had erected the structure, and he thereby converted that spot into a "place" within the meaning of the Act. It was not necessary that a "place" within the meaning of the Act should have a roof, or that it should have fixed boundaries. Here the respondent erected a structure with a board upon it announcing that he was there and was prepared to make bets. He went further. He took a stool, placed it close to the structure, and actually stood there carrying on the business of betting. He did not put up a sign and then walk about and make bets. He did not put up this board to say where he might be found. He stood close to it. In my opinion there was a definite localization of the business of betting.

CHANNELL, J.—I have come to the same conclusion. The law on the subject is fairly well settled. There is no difficulty as to what the law is. The difficulty is in applying it. It has become perfectly clear—if it were ever in doubt—that the statute was directed against betting houses and places, and not against betting persons. It is also clear that the statute does not prohibit a place being used by persons who go there to bet with each other; nor is a person prohibited by the statute from keeping a place for the purpose of people coming there and betting with each other. But what is prohibited is that a person should keep or use a place for the purpose of other people coming to bet with him. As the Lord Chancellor said in Powell v. Kempton Park Racecourse Co., the important question is not what is the place, but what is the user of it; and although it is true that place must be ejusdem generis with house, office, or room, yet the analogy is in the way of its user rather than the place itself.

The House of Lords in the case referred to brings out clearly all these points. They are put especially clearly in the judgment of Lord James of Hereford. The question in each case is whether the business of betting has been localized. Assume that a man uses apparatus, be it a board or stool, or what not. That apparatus may be used merely to indicate his identity. If that is so it does not localize the business nor bring the man within the Act. But the apparatus may also be used for the purpose of indicating the place where the business is carried on. Then it becomes important. So that in each case one must look at the facts and see whether, on the one hand, the defendant is using the structure to indicate merely that he is prepared to bet, or whether, on the other hand, he is using it to indicate that there is a place to which people may come and make bets with him.

Though it is useful to see what view other judges have taken, yet it is not a decision binding on us when a judge from certain facts draws an inference. Here the facts are sufficient to enable us to draw the inference that the respondent did not say, in effect, "I am a man who bets," but that he did say, "I am carrying on business here in this place." If we draw that inference the case comes within the class of cases which in Powell v. Kempton Park Racecourse Co. have been held to be good law. On the other hand, if we had not drawn that inference the case would have fallen among the class of cases which have been held to be bad law.

I am guided in my decision in this case by the judgments in Bows v. Fenwick, and I think on the facts of this case that the business of betting was localized.

Case remitted to the justices.

Solicitors for the appellant, Robbins, Hay, Water & Co., for James Douglas, Sherbourne.

Solicitors for the respondent, Lumley & Lumley.

IN BANKRUPTCY.

Q. B. Div. (Wright, J.) March 20; April 25.

In re TANKARD.

Ex parte OFFICIAL RECEIVER v. MRS. A. HART. (a.)

Bankruptcy—Voluntary settlement—Gift of jewels and money—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52) s. 47.

Gifts of personal property made by a bankrupt within two years of his bankruptcy, without restricting the donee's power of alienation, but with intention that the donee shall use or retain the property for an indeterminate time, are voluntary settlements within the meaning of section 47 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, and void as against the trustee in bankruptcy, but without prejudice to any sale or disposition of the property made by the donee before bankruptcy in good faith and without notice of an available act of bankruptcy. But the donee may have to account for the proceeds of any such sale or disposition remaining in his hands at the commencement of the bankruptcy.

Motion by the official receiver as trustee in the bankruptcy for a declaration that certain gifts of jewels and furniture, or money to purchase furniture, made by the bankrupt to the respondent within two years of the bankruptcy were void as voluntary settlements within section 47 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883.

In 1896 the bankrupt acquired the lease of a house in Curzon-street, Mayfair, at a rent of £325 per annum.

In June, 1897, he made over the lease at a nominal sub-rent to the respondent, and at the same time he gave her all the furniture and pictures in the house which were valued at about £4,000.

During 1897 and 1898 he made her gifts of jewellery of great value, including a pearl necklace which cost £2,350.

In July, 1898, he gave her £1,000 with which she purchased furniture for a house she had taken at Maidenhead.

On the 4th of February, 1899, a receiving order was made against the bankrupt, adjudication followed, and the official receiver became trustee in the bankruptcy.

The respondent gave up the lease which was disclaimed by the official receiver, but refused to give up the furniture and jewels, and after the adjudication in bankruptcy she sold the pearl necklace for £7[illegible]. The official receiver thereupon took these proceedings to recover the jewels and furniture or their value.

Reed, Q.C., and Carrington, for the official receiver.

(a.) Reported by P. M. FRANCKE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

—These gifts should be set aside as voluntary settlements. Section 47 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, defines a settlement as any conveyance or transfer of property, and it was held in In re Vansittart, Ex parte Brown, 41 W. R 32, [1893] 1 Q. B. 181, that a gift of diamonds to a wife was a settlement, and in Ex parte Harvey, In re Player (No. 1), 2 Morrell 261, that a gift of money to a son to buy shares was a settlement.

Rufus Isaacs, Q.C., and J. Henderson, for the respondent.—The gifts in question here were not in the nature of settlements, and the case is governed by Ex parte Harvey, In re Player (No. 2), 15 Q. B. D. 682, 34 W. R. Dig. 170, where the court held that a gift of money to a son made for the purpose of enabling him to start in business was not a settlement of property within section 47 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883.

Reed, Q.C., replied.

Cur. adv. vult.

April 25.—WRIGHT, J., after stating the facts, continued: The bankrupt and the lady have been examined before me. I have no doubt that the proper conclusion of fact is that, on the one hand, there was no stipulation or reservation restricting the lady's power or right to alien the property, but, on the other hand, the bankrupt's intention was that it should be kept and used by her until necessity might require her to dispose of it. There is no evidence or suggestion of any trust for the donor. The lease has been given up to the trustee and disclaimed by him. I have to determine whether section 47 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, applies in the case of the other gifts.

I think that I am bound by the authority of In re Player, 2 Morrell 261, and In re Vansittart, to hold that that section applies only to such conveyances or transfers as are in the nature of settlements, in the sense of being dispositions of property by a person to be held and preserved for the enjoyment of some other person. The retention of the property in some sense must according to those cases be contemplated, and not its immediate alienation or consumption. But it is not necessary, according to those authorities, that there should be any actual restriction of the power of alienation by the donee. Accordingly, the section was held to apply to a gift of money by a father to his son to be spent in buying shares on which the son was to receive the dividends, although there was nothing to prevent the son from selling the shares immediately (In re Player), and in In re Vansittart it was held to apply to a gift of diamonds by a husband to his wife, an inference being drawn that the retention of the diamonds by her was contemplated, although no restriction upon the power of alienation was expressed or understood. In the present case I draw a similar inference, and think that the pearl necklace and other jewellery, and the furniture or money to buy furniture, were given and received with the intention that the necklace, jewels, and furniture should be kept for enjoyment by the donee for an indeterminate time, and that the section, even as so construed, applies. But for the decision in In re Player I should have thought that in section 47 the word "settlement" ought to be construed in accordance with sub-section 3, as including every kind of conveyance or transfer of property (which term by virtue of section 168 includes money), the word "settlement" in the earlier part of the section being apparently used merely for convenience of drafting. And this seems to have been the view of the Court of Appeal in In re Farnham, [1895] 2 Ch. 799, 44 W. R. Dig. 98, where Lindley, L.J., said: "It was admitted on all hands, looking to the last words of that section, that any gift of property is void as against a trustee in bankruptcy"; and In re Carter and Kenderdine's Contract, 45 W. R. 484, [1897] 1 Ch. 776, seems to be to the same effect: "this section 47 according to its terms hits a conveyance or transfer of property of any sort." Upon this construction of the section, any voluntary alienation by a person would, in the event of his becoming bankrupt within two years, become undone as from the date of the bankruptcy, and the property would from that date revest in the alienor, and therefore in the trustee in his bankruptcy, but not so as to undo or affect any transfer or charge acquired by any person bonâ fide and for valuable consideration before the bankruptcy: In re Holden, 36 W. R. 189, 20 Q. B. D. 43, per Cave and Smith, JJ.; In re Vansittart, and In re Brall, 41 W. R. 623, [1893] 2 Q. B. 381, per Vaughan Williams, J.; and In re Carter and Kenderdine's Contract in the Court of Appeal. And I conceive, though there seems to be no authority on the point, that neither the original alienee, nor the transferee from him, could be required to restore money which he has spent or property which he has aliened before the bankruptcy, and without notice of any act of bankruptcy (or, perhaps, without knowledge of insolvency), though the alienee probably is liable to account for any proceeds which remain in his hands at the time of the bankruptcy—at any rate, if the acquisition by him of those proceeds was an object of the gift to him so that the proceeds can properly be said to represent the gift. And, if this is the proper view of the meaning and consequences of the section, the inconveniences which seem to have been apprehended in In re Player would not occur. There would be no hardship in making the donee of a voluntary gift surrender what remains in his hands free of any charge or equity. If, however, this is not the proper construction of the section, it seems difficult to avoid the conclusion that "settlement" ought to be understood to mean such a conveyance or transfer as of itself limits the power of alienation by the donee and so preserves the fund, rather than to mean something so vague as to be satisfied by a gift which the donee is intended or expected to keep, but is free to alien. The decision, however, in In re Player does not seem to have been expressly questioned in In re Farnham or in In re Carter and Kenderdine's Contract, and it was before those cases followed, though apparently with some difficulty, by Vaughan Williams, J., in In re Vansittart. It is strange that, although somewhat similar enactments have existed in Bankruptcy Acts from (1604) 1 Jac. 1, c. 15, s. 5, which was in substance re-enacted by 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, and by the Bankruptcy Act, 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. 106), there were hardly any decisions upon their construction. The few reported cases appear to be three or four to the same effect as Kensington v. Chantler, 2 M. & Sel. 36, where Lord Ellenborough said that "the statute had not the word money, and seemed to be confined to things which were the subject of conveyance and capable of being conveyed or procured to be conveyed; and that the doctrine contended for would go the length of making a son liable to refund every portion of money given to him by his father for his maintenance." The existing enactment dates from 1869, and was not the subject of judicial construction until In re Player. The trustee is entitled to the order for which he asks, and if necessary there must be an inquiry as to the necklace.

Solicitors for trustee, G. H. Barker & Son.

Solicitors for respondent, Wainwright, Pollock, & Co.

Court of Appeal.

From Q. B. Div.
(A. L. Smith and Vaughan Williams, L.JJ.) July 14.

SOFTLAW v. WELCH. (a.)

Married woman—Separate estate—Contract made during coverture—Liability after death of husband—Form of judgment—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), s. 1, sub-section 2.

A married woman entered into a contract before the passing of the Married Women's Property Act, 1893, and was sued upon it after the death of her husband.

Held, that the form of the judgment against her must limit the execution to such property as during her coverture was her separate property not subject to any restriction against anticipation.

Appeal from an order of Channell, J., at chambers.

The action was brought to recover £273 7s. 2d. upon three promissory notes made by the defendant, when a married woman, and upon a covenant in a mortgage deed executed by her during marriage. The contracts sued on were entered into by the defendant before the passing of the Married Women's Property Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 63). The action was commenced after the death of her husband. Upon an application for judgment under order 14 the master gave the plaintiff leave to sign final judgment in the ordinary form.* Channell, J., upon appeal, varied the order of the master, giving leave to sign final judgment against the defendant, execution to be limited to such property as during her coverture was her separate property not subject to any restraint on anticipation, unless by reason of section 19 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, the property should be liable to execution notwithstanding such restriction.

The plaintiff appealed.

A. Powell, for the plaintiff.—By section 1, sub-section 2, of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, a married woman can render herself liable in respect of and to the extent of her separate property upon a contract. This is a personal liability, though execution can only issue against her separate property: Holtby v. Hodgson, 38 W. R. 68, 24 Q. B. D. 103; Jay v. Robinson, 38 W. R. 550, 25 Q. B. D. 467; Pelton v. Harrison (No. 1), 39 W. R. 689, [1891] 2 Q. B. 422; Pelton v. Harrison (No. 2), [1892] 1 Q. B. 118, 40 W. R. Dig. 181. Before the Act of 1882 this liability was not a personal one: Pike v. Fitzgibbon, 29 W. R. 551, 17 Ch. D. 454. When a married woman becomes discovert she ceases to have separate property, and the personal liability can be enforced against all her property: per Lindley, L.J., in Holtby v. Hodgson. The order of Channell, J., limiting the judgment to the form settled in Scott v. Morley, 36 W. R. 67, 20 Q. B. D. 120, as in the case of a married woman was wrong, and the judgment ought to be in the ordinary form. This question cannot arise with regard to contracts made by a married woman after the passing of the Married Women's Property Act, 1893, because by section 1 (c) of that Act every such contract is enforceable against all property which she may thereafter whilst discovert be possessed of.

He also referred to Beckett v. Tasker, 36 W. R. 158, 19 Q. B. D. 7; Hood Barrs v. Cathcart, 42 W. R. 628, [1894] 2 Q. B. 559; Hood Barrs v. Heriot, 44 W. R. 481, [1896] A. C. 174.

Wootton, for the defendant.—Under the Act of 1882 the liability of a married woman is only a proprietary and not a personal liability (per Bowen, L.J., in Scott v. Morley; see also In re Lynes, Ex parte Lester & Co., 41 W. R. 488, [1893] 2 Q. B. 113; Aylesford v. Great Western Railway Co., 41 W. R. 42, [1892] 2 Q. B. 626), or if the liability is personal it is subject to the limitations imposed by the Act—namely, that her free separate property alone can be taken in execution. In either case the judgment must be limited to such separate property not subject to a restraint on anticipation as the married woman possessed during coverture. It is necessary to prove that the married woman had separate property at the time she entered into the contract: Palliser v. Gurney, 35 W. R. 760, 19 Q. B. D. 519; Stogdon v. Lee, 39 W. R. 467, [1891] 1 Q. B. 661; Harrison v. Harrison, 36 W. R. 748, 13 P. D. 180. This shows that a married woman contracts only as regards her free separate estate, and this liability cannot be enlarged by her becoming discovert.

A. Powell, in reply, referred to Whittaker v. Kershaw, 39 W. R. 22, 45 Ch. D. 320.

Cur. adv. vult.

July 14.—VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., read the following judgment: This is an appeal from the decision of Channell, J., at chambers, given on appeal from the order of Master Manley Smith. The action is brought by the plaintiff against the defendant, Lucy Price Welch, a widow, to recover £273 7s. 2d., principal and interest, due on three promissory notes. Two of such notes being notes made by the defendant alone during coverture, and the other note being a joint and several note signed by the defendant and her husband also made during coverture. Alternatively there is in respect of the £100, the subject of the last-mentioned note, a claim against the defendant on a covenant contained in a mortgage deed executed by the defendant and her husband. The notes were made and the covenant was executed by the defendant before the passing of the Married Women's Property Act, 1893. Application was made by the plaintiff for the judgment under order 14. The defendant put in an affidavit stating that at the time she contracted the debt sued for in this action she was a married woman, and that the debt was incurred by her in respect of her separate estate only. Master Manley Smith made an order giving the plaintiff leave to sign judgment. The defendant appealed, and Channell, J., ordered the judgment signed under Master Manley Smith's order (which was a judgment in the ordinary form as if the defendant had been a feme sole) to be set aside, and ordered that the plaintiff should be at liberty to sign judgment against the defendant for the amount indorsed on the writ with interest and costs, and that as regards the defendant such sum and costs be payable out of her separate property as thereinafter mentioned and not otherwise, and that execution on such judgment should be limited to such property as during her coverture was her separate property not subject to any restraint against anticipation, unless by section 19 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, the property should be liable to execution notwithstanding such restriction. From that order of Channell, J., the plaintiff now appeals to us. It was stated in argument and not denied that at the date of the making of the promissory notes sued on and of the execution of the mortgage deed the

* It was assumed for the purposes of this case that at the date of the contracts the defendant had some free separate property.

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

defendant had no separate estate not subject to restraint against anticipation. The argument before us on behalf of the plaintiff was that the death of the husband having put an end to the restraint on anticipation, the plaintiff in an action commenced after the husband's death against his widow was entitled to judgment against her as a feme sole, and not in the Scott v. Morley form as ordered by Channell, J. In other words, it was argued on behalf of the plaintiff that a married woman who during coverture made a promissory note thereby became the personal debtor of the person in whose favour the note was made, and that the restraint on anticipation being removed by the death of the husband the plaintiff was entitled to sue the widow on the notes made during coverture as a feme sole and to have the ordinary judgment against her as such. But in my judgment the effect of the death of the husband is not to enlarge the right which the creditor theretofore had against the married woman. It seems to me clear from the judgment of Kay, L.J., in Pelton v. Harrison (No. 1), which was the judgment of the whole court, that if the judgment is, as it was in that case, in the Scott v. Morley form, such a judgment cannot, after the death of the husband and the determination of the restraint on anticipation consequent thereon, be enforced against property as to which during coverture she was restrained from anticipation. It may be urged that the judgment in Pelton v. Harrison may be supported as being based on the Scott v. Morley form of the judgment, which in that case was sought to be enforced against the widow; but I think it is clear from the latter part of the judgment that Kay, L.J., meant to decide the case on principle and not on the form of the judgment. He seems to me to put it quite plainly that the Married Women's Property Act did not intend to enable a married woman by a contract entered into by her during coverture to incur any liability except in respect of and to the extent of her separate property held by her during coverture without restraint on anticipation, or, as it has been called, her free separate property, and that the Act did not intend to make liable on such a contract during coverture, or on a judgment obtained in an action brought to recover a debt arising on such a contract, property acquired by her after the death of her husband, nor any property, though separate property, as to which during coverture she was restrained from anticipation. This construction of the Married Women's Property Act accords with the judgment of the Divisional Court in Beckett v. Tasker, and in particular the judgment of Wills, J. This construction of the Act also accords with the view expressed by the Court of Appeal in Scott v. Morley that the Married Women's Property Act is a new provision imposing upon a married woman's separate estate a liability at law corresponding to the liability that before could only be produced by proceedings in equity, which took the form of a declaration charging her separate estate with the amount of the debt: see the judgment of Lord Esher, M.R. At common law a married woman during coverture could not personally enter into any contract, and Bowen, L.J., says that this liability of a married woman upon her contracts is the creation of the section (section 1, sub-section 2, of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882), and, as the section begins by limiting her liability to the extent of her separate property, so it closes it by repeating that satisfaction is only to be obtained out of her separate property. It seems to me that this clearly means the separate property which the Act has enabled her to charge by her contracts during coverture—that is, her free separate property owned by her at the date of such contract or coming to her during coverture. The cases of Palliser v. Gurney and Tetley v. Griffith, 36 W. R. 96, which decide that a married woman who has no separate property is incapable of entering into a contract at all, also go to show that the only contracts which the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, enabled a married woman to make during coverture are contracts affecting her free separate property held by her as such during coverture.

The only authority which at all conflicts with this continuous line of cases is Holtby v. Hodgson, or rather the dictum of Lindley, L.J., in his judgment in that case to the effect that separate property that she (the wife) is restrained from anticipating, which cannot be got at in any way while her husband is living, becomes immediately subject to the judgment as soon as he is dead. The judgment itself in Holtby v. Hodgson involved no such proposition. The husband in that case was alive, and the only question in the case was whether a judgment obtained against a married woman in her husband's lifetime substantially in the Scott v. Morley form in an action on a contract made by her during coverture could be enforced by a garnishee order under ord. 45, r. 1, attaching a judgment debt due on a judgment recovered by her in an action for malicious prosecution brought by her during coverture. Two points were argued. First, it was said that the judgment against the married woman only created a proprietary liability, and that such a judgment was not a judgment or order for the payment of money within the meaning of those words in ord. 45, r. 1, and further, that the judgment did not make a married woman a debtor within the meaning of that order; but the court decided that such a judgment was a judgment for the payment of money, and that the married woman was a debtor personally liable, although execution was limited to her separate estate. Secondly, it was urged that the judgment obtained by the married woman did not create a debt due to her, but only gave her damages as part of her separate estate. The court held that the judgment created an attachable debt. There is nothing in this judgment, or in the finding that a married woman is under such a contract a personal debtor, inconsistent either with the limitation of the contracting power of a married woman or with the limitation of the satisfaction of damages recovered against her to separate property coming to her possession during coverture, which seems to me to be the limitations established by the cases to which I have called attention.

The case of Holtby v. Hodgson was followed in Pelton v. Harrison (No. 2) by Lopes and Kay, L.JJ., a case in which it was held that a judgment against a married woman is a personal one although enforceable against her separate estate only, and that costs due to a married woman in respect of an interlocutory application might be satisfied by an order for set-off under ord. 65, r. 27 (21), of costs due from the married woman under a judgment in the Scott v. Morley form. Pelton v. Harrison (No. 1) was cited, but neither Lopes, L.J., nor Kay, L.J., seems to have considered that case inconsistent with Holtby v. Hodgson. It is further to be observed that both in Pelton v. Harrison and in Beckett v. Tasker the judgment in the Scott v. Morley form was obtained in an action brought after the death of her husband. Having thus gone through the authorities, I have come to the conclusion that the order of Channell, J., was right in principle —that is to say, that the Scott v. Morley form is the right form of judgment whenever the action is brought on a contract made by a married woman before the Act of 1893 during coverture; but a difficulty arises in this case, because counsel for Mrs.

Welch admitted before us that he could not take the point that there ought to be no judgment against his client because he had admitted before the master and the judge that in some form judgment must go, and on the facts as stated in argument there was no free separate estate at the date of the contracts—viz., the promissory notes—by reason of all the wife's property being subject to restraint against anticipation. It is said that this makes a Scott v. Morley form of judgment impossible, and that therefore the judgment must, on the admission that there must be judgment, be in the ordinary form; but I do not think we ought on this to order judgment in the ordinary form. I think the defendant's counsel has only precluded himself from setting up the fact that at the date of the alleged contracts there was no free separate estate and claiming judgment for the defendant as was successfully claimed in Tetley v. Griffith.

A. L SMITH, L.J.—I agree, and only wish to add this, that the fact of a married woman becoming discovert does not extend her liability upon a contract made by her during coverture before the passing of the Married Women's Property Act, 1893.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Stock & Slater.

Solicitors for the defendant, Layton, Sons, & Lendon.

From Q. B. Div. (A. L. Smith and Vaughan Williams, L.JJ.) July 5.

NIX AND THE BEESTON BREWERY CO. (Appellants) v. JUSTICES FOR THE CITY OF NOTTINGHAM (Respondents). (a.)

Licensing law—Licence—Beer licence—"Real resident holder and occupier"—Beerhouse Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 61), s. 1.

By section 1 of the Beerhouse Act, 1840, "No licence to sell beer or cider by retail . . . shall be granted to any person who shall not be the real resident holder and occupier of the dwelling-house in which he shall apply to be licensed."

Held, that the fact that the applicant for a beer licence in respect of a dwelling-house is paid a salary by brewers, and has to pay over to them the profits made upon the sale of the beer, does not of itself in law prevent him from being the "real resident holder and occupier" of the house.

Appeal from the decision of a Divisional Court upon a special case stated by the quarter sessions for the county of Nottingham on an appeal against a refusal by the respondents, the licensing justices, to grant to the appellant, Eliza Nix, a renewal certificate to apply for and hold an excise licence to sell beer by retail to be consumed off the premises, 79, Dame Agnes-street, Nottingham. The licensing justices on the 5th of October, 1898, refused to grant the renewal on the ground that Nix was not the real resident holder and occupier of the premises within the meaning of the Beerhouse Act, 1840. The quarter sessions dismissed the appeal subject to a case.

The case stated that at the hearing of the appeal the facts as to the holding and occupation of Eliza Nix were proved as follows: The premises in question were a dwelling-house and shop. Eliza Nix had been in possession of the premises since the 20th of December, 1897, during the whole of which time she held a licence in respect of the premises. Upon taking possession of the premises she paid a valuation amounting to £20 to the former tenant and licensee. She had been a weekly tenant of the Beeston Brewery Co. since she first entered the premises at a rent of 8s. a week, such rent being duly paid by her, and on the 5th of October, 1898, she still continued such tenant. At the hearing before the licensing justices she refused to produce any receipt for rent alleged to have been paid by her from time to time in respect of the premises, and she stated that she had no written agreement of tenancy. She had always lived and slept in the premises, occupying, together with her family, the whole of the dwelling-house, and had complete control over the same. She had paid in respect of the premises poor rates as assessed. She sold in the shop the beer of the Beeston Brewery Co., who were the owners of the premises, and she received a salary of 12s. a week from the company for selling their beer as their manager and servant, and accounted to the company for the profits made upon the beer so sold by her on their account. She continued so to sell the beer of the company up to the 5th of December, 1898, after which date she carried on business for and on account of herself.

Upon the above facts the quarter sessions were of opinion that Eliza Nix was not in law the real resident holder and occupier of the premises upon the 5th of October, 1898, upon the ground that, instead of receiving the profits of the business, she received a salary and had to account to the company for all moneys received as aforesaid, and they confirmed the decision of the licensing justices on that ground.

The question for the opinion of the court was whether the quarter sessions were right in law in holding that upon the above facts Eliza Nix was not the real resident holder and occupier of the premises within the meaning of the Beerhouse Act, 1840. In the Divisional Court Grantham, J., was of opinion that upon the facts stated Eliza Nix was the real resident holder and occupier of the premises within the meaning of the Act, while Lawrance, J., was of opinion that she was not. In the result the decision of the quarter sessions stood affirmed.

The appellants appealed to the Court of Appeal.

Hugo Young, Q.C. (W. H. Stevenson and T. Lindley with him), for the appellants.—The facts as found in the case show that Nix was the real resident holder and occupier of the premises within the meaning of section 1 of the Beerhouse Act, 1840. The word "real" is used in contradistinction to a sham residence; "resident" means that the licensed person must sleep on the premises (Reg. v. Allmey, 35 J. P. 534; Reg. v. Manchester Justices, ante, p. 410, [1899] 1 Q. B. 571); and "holder" means tenant. Nix was clearly the "occupier" as she paid the poor rates and had complete control ever the premises. Section 4 of the Act uses the words "real resident in and occupier of the dwelling-house"; and section 2 of the Beerhouse Act, 1830, uses the word "householder." All these expressions convey the same meaning. The quarter sessions have held that a person who is in fact the real resident holder and occupier of the premises ceases to be so in law if he or she is not interested in the profits arising from the sale of the beer on the premises. That proposition cannot be supported. The destination of the profits of the business cannot affect the question whether the licensed person is the real resident holder or occupier.

W. Appleton, for the respondents.—The quarter sessions have affirmed the finding of the licensing justices that Nix was not the real resident holder and occupier of the premises, though they have given a wrong reason for their finding. Their finding is a finding of fact and cannot be overruled in this court. Assuming, however, that the quarter sessions treated the question as one of law, a mere manager or servant of the brewery company, who has no voice in the management of the business, is not the real resident holder and occupier within the meaning of the Beerhouse Act, 1840. Section 1 says that no licence to "sell" beer shall be granted to any person who is not the "real resident holder or occupier." Those words show that the person to be licensed must sell the beer on his own account. Section 8 confirms this. The Legislature intended that the licensed person should carry on his own business on the premises. The quarter sessions were therefore right.

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Hugo Young, Q.C., replied.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—It seems to me that the only difficulty in this case arises from the way in which the case has been stated. The question arises upon section 1 of the Beerhouse Act, 1840, which provides that "no licence to sell beer . . . shall be granted to any person who shall not be the real resident holder and occupier of the dwelling-house." The meaning of that enactment is that the licensee must be the real resident householder and occupier of the dwelling-house. Whether a person is the real resident householder and occupier of the dwelling-house is a question of fact in each case and not of law, and, as was pointed out by my brother Williams during the argument, section 5—now repealed, though that is immaterial for this purpose—distinctly recognises that the question is one of fact. If I did not feel myself embarrassed by the way in which the case is stated, I should say that there was evidence before the justices upon which they could find that Nix was not the real resident householder and occupier of the dwelling-house. But that is not the question put to us. We can only give judgment upon the facts as stated, and it is not for us to draw inferences of fact. The quarter sessions must find the facts. The quarter sessions have found that the facts as to the holding and occupation were proved as stated in the case. Those facts are that Nix, upon taking possession paid a valuation of £20 to the former tenant. She was a weekly tenant to the brewery company at a rent of 8s. a week, and on the 5th of October, 1898, she still continued such tenant. The quarter sessions have stated that as a fact, and have not found the tenancy to be a sham. Why the quarter sessions go on to state that she refused to produce any receipt for rent "alleged to have been paid" I cannot conceive, because they have already found that the rent was duly paid. Then the case finds that Nix always lived and slept there, occupying the whole of the premises, and having complete control over them; she paid the poor rates; and she received a salary of 12s. a week from the brewery company. Those facts are all evidence that Nix was the real resident holder and occupier; and I agree with the Queen's Bench in Reg. v. Allmey and Reg. v. Manchester Justices that the object of the Legislature is to ensure that the licensee shall be actually resident in and in occupation of the house. But having found those facts, the quarter sessions go on to state that upon the above facts they were of opinion that Nix was not in law the real resident holder and occupier of the premises upon the 5th day of October, 1898, upon the ground that instead of receiving the profits of the business she received a salary and had to account to the company for all moneys received as aforesaid, and they confirmed the decision of the licensing justices on that ground; and they ask the court to say whether they were right "in law" in holding that upon those facts Nix was not the real resident holder and occupier of the premises within the meaning of the Beerhouse Act of 1840. In my opinion that is not a good ground for the decision. If Nix was on the facts the real resident holder and occupier of the premises, the mere fact that she handed over the profits on the sale of the beer to the company did not make her the less the real resident holder and occupier. Therefore I agree with the view taken by Grantham, J., entirely on account of the way the case was stated. For these reasons I think that the appeal should be allowed.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. It is provided by section 1 of the Beerhouse Act, 1840, that no licence to sell beer shall be granted to any person who is not the real resident holder and occupier of the dwelling-house. In my judgment the applicant for the licence must therefore be the real resident holder and occupier of the dwelling-house where it is proposed to sell beer, not in form only, but also in substance, and the question whether the applicant is such a holder and occupier is a question of fact in each case. In my judgment there was ample evidence in this case upon which the licensing justices were entitled to come to the conclusion that Eliza Nix was not the real resident holder and occupier of the house in question. I may point out before I pass on that the words "resident holder and occupier" are not a lengthy way of stating that the applicant must be the occupier of the house. They constitute three different essentials to the qualification to hold the licence. The applicant must be resident on the premises and must be the holder and occupier of them in substance and in fact. A man may well be resident on the premises without being either the holder or the occupier of them within the meaning of the section. That being the state of things, and the licensing justices having decided that Nix was not the real resident holder and occupier of the premises, an appeal was brought to quarter sessions. The quarter sessions affirmed the decision of the licensing justices, not as a conclusion of fact, but upon the ground that Nix, instead of receiving the profits from the sale of the beer received a salary, and had to account to the brewery company for all moneys received, and that this as a matter of law prevented her from being the real resident holder and occupier. In my opinion the quarter sessions were wrong in that conclusion. The fact that Nix received a salary and was accountable to the company for the profits does not of itself in law negative her being in substance and in fact the real resident holder and occupier. Our duty upon the case as stated is to answer the question put to us by the quarter sessions, and we must answer that question in the negative.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the appellants, F. Osbaldeston & Co., for Green & Williams, Nottingham.

Solicitors for respondent, T. B. & W. Nelson, for W. T. Cartwright, Nottingham.

From Q. B. Div.
(A. L. Smith, Vaughan Williams, and Romer, L.JJ.) June 29.

PURVES v. "STRAITS OF DOVER" STEAMSHIP CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Ship — Seaman — Termination of service abroad — "Passage home"—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), s. 186, sub-section 2 (c).

By section 186 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, where the service of any seaman belonging to any British ship terminates at any port out of her Majesty's dominions, the master shall, as one of several alternatives, (by sub-sections 2 (c)) "provide him with a passage home."

Held, that a "passage home" means a passage to the port in her Majesty's dominions at which the seaman was originally shipped, or to some port in the United Kingdom agreed to by him.

Dicta in Edwards v. Steel, Young, & Co., 45 W. R. 689, [1897] 2 Q. B. 327, followed.

Appeal by the defendants from the judgment of Mathew, J.; reported in [1899] 1 Q. B. 38, 4 Com. Cas. 1.

The action was brought to recover £1 5s. 3d. for passage and maintenance money under section 186, sub-section 2 (c), of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894.*

The facts were as follows: The plaintiff was a sea-going fireman, and the defendants were the owners of the steamship Straits of Dover. On the 19th of January, 1898, the plaintiff shipped on board The Straits of Dover at Newport, Monmouth, as a fireman, under articles of agreement of that date, wherein the plaintiff's birthplace was described as Everlady, Haddington, his port of engagement address as 4, Windmill-street, Newport, and his home address as 90, Roseley-drive, Denniston, Glasgow, and the intended voyage was described as being "Newport to Rio de Janeiro and (or) any ports or places within the limits of 75deg. N. and 60deg. S. latitude, the maximum time to be one year's trading in any rotation and to end in the United Kingdom or Continent of Europe between the Elbe and Brest (inclusive) at master's option." The plaintiff served on board the vessel on the voyage contemplated, which ended on the 9th of May, 1898, at Antwerp, which is between the Elbe and Brest.

On the termination of the voyage the master paid off the crew at Antwerp, and in addition to their wages tendered, in the manner provided by the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, to each member of the crew the sum of 12s. 6d. for the purpose of providing him with a passage to Harwich, together with maintenance on the passage. All the members of the crew accepted this sum except the plaintiff, who refused to accept either his wages or his passage and maintenance money unless he were paid in respect of the latter sufficient to enable him to proceed to Newport, and claimed in respect of such passage money and maintenance £1 5s. 3d., which the master refused to pay. The wages due to the plaintiff were remitted in the ordinary course to the Mercantile Marine Office at Newport, where they were received by him. It was agreed that the sums of 12s. 6d. and £1 5s. 3d. were proper sums to provide the plaintiff with passage money and maintenance from Antwerp to Harwich, and from Antwerp to Newport respectively.

Mathew, J., held that, as the master had elected to provide the plaintiff with a passage home under clause (c), he was bound to provide the plaintiff with a passage to the port at which he was shipped. He therefore gave judgment for the plaintiff for £1 5s. 3d. claimed.

Joseph Walton, Q.C., and Lewis Noad, for the defendants.—The words "passage home" in section 186, sub-section 2 (c), of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, mean a passage to a home port—that is, a port in the seaman's country. Clauses (a) and (b) refer to the port at which the seaman was originally shipped or a port in the United Kingdom agreed to by the seaman. The language of clause (c) is purposely altered, and does not refer to the same port as that mentioned in clauses (a) and (b). Section 186 is not confined to British seamen, and the words "passage home" in sub-section 2 (c) mean a passage to a port in the seaman's country. "Home" cannot mean the seaman's place of residence, because that may be inland, and the enactment deals only with a sea passage. It must mean some port in the seaman's country, as, for instance, an English seaman would have to be sent to a port in England, an Irishman to a port in Ireland, and so forth. Sections 190, 191, relating to distressed seamen, show that this must be the meaning of "passage home" in section 186, sub-section 2 (c). In Edwards v. Steel, Young, & Co., 45 W. R. 553, [1897] 1 Q. B. 712, before Collins, J., the question as to the meaning of "passage home" in clause (c) was argued, and the learned judge decided that question in favour of the shipowners. In the Court of Appeal, 45 W. R. 689, [1897] 2 Q. B. 327, the question was not argued on the part of the shipowners, and the opinions expressed by the judges, that "passage home" means a passage to the port at which the seaman was originally shipped or to a port in the United Kingdom agreed to by the seaman, were obiter dicta, and ought not to be followed.

Robson, Q.C., and J. D. A. Johnson, for the plaintiff, were not called upon.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—Notwithstanding the arguments which have been addressed to us, I see no reason to alter the opinion which I expressed in Edwards v. Steel, Young, & Co. I have a distinct recollection of that case. Many points were argued in it, at any rate by one side, and all these points were before us. Mr. Joseph Walton, who appeared for the defendants in that case, no doubt argued only one point, but we thought it right to express our opinion upon all the points brought before us.

As to the present case I wish first of all to say in regard to this long Merchant Shipping Act, 1894,

* Section 186 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894: "(1) In the following cases, namely: . . . (b) where the service of any seaman or apprentice belonging to any British ship terminates at any port out of her Majesty's dominions the master shall give to that seaman or apprentice a certificate of discharge in a form approved by the Board of Trade, and in the case of any certificated officer whose certificate he has retained shall return such certificate to him. (2) The master shall also, besides paying the wages to which the seaman or apprentice is entitled, either (a) provide him with adequate employment on board some other British ship bound to the port in her Majesty's dominions at which he was originally shipped or to a port in the United Kingdom agreed to by the seaman, or (b) furnish the means of sending him back to some such port, or (c) provide him with a passage home, or (d) deposit with the consular officer or merchants as aforesaid such a sum of money as is by the officer or merchants deemed sufficient to defray the expenses of his maintenance and passage home."

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

that in construing a section under one heading or division of the Act, it is generally of little use to look at other sections under other headings. Section 186 occurs in Part II. of the Act under the heading "Masters and Seamen," and under the sub-heading "Leaving Seamen Abroad." By section 186, sub-section 1 (b), "where the service of any seaman or apprentice belonging to any British ship terminates at any port out of her Majesty's dominions," then, by sub-section 2, "the master shall also, besides paying the wages to which the seaman or apprentice is entitled, either (a) provide him adequate employment on board some other British ship bound to the port in her Majesty's dominions at which he was originally shipped, or to a port in the United Kingdom agreed to by the seaman." That clause seems fairly clear. When a seaman is discharged abroad, the shipowner must send him back to the port at which he was originally shipped, or to some port in the United Kingdom agreed to by the seaman. If the shipowner does not do that, he may "(b) furnish the means of sending him back to some such port"—that is, to the port specified in clause (a); or he may "(c) provide him with a passage home." In my opinion that refers to the same port as that described in clauses (a) and (b)—that is, the port at which the seaman was originally shipped or some port in the United Kingdom agreed to by the seaman. I cannot agree with the view taken by Collins, J., in Edwards v. Steel, Young, & Co., that the words "passage home" in clause (c) indicate something different from the port described in clauses (a) and (b). It seems to me that these words merely write short what is written at length in the two preceding clauses. Then comes clause (d), which allows the master another alternative—namely, to deposit with the consular officer or merchants such a sum of money as is by the officer or merchants deemed sufficient to defray the expenses of the seaman's maintenance and passage home. Supposing the master adopts that alternative, how much is he to deposit? If the defendants' contention is correct, it would be a compliance with the Act if the master deposited a sum of money sufficient to take the seaman to the nearest port in his own country, though the sum deposited were quite insufficient to take the seaman back to the port at which he was originally shipped. According to that contention, if a seaman were shipped at Newcastle and discharged abroad, the master could send him or provide the means of sending him to Falmouth. I cannot think that that is the meaning of the Act. In my opinion the shipowner is not entitled to send him to any port he pleases. It must be to the port at which the seaman was originally shipped or to some other port agreed to by the seaman.

Now with regard to the case of Edwards v. Steel, Young, & Co. In that case Lord Esher, M.R., said: "The next alternative is 'or (c) provide him with a passage home.' Collins, J., appears to have thought that a 'passage home' would include a passage to any port in the United Kingdom. I hardly think that that is the right view. If a seaman were shipped on the Clyde, could a 'passage home' mean a passage to London? I incline to think—and I state my opinion upon this point, though it is not strictly necessary to decide it, because this is a test action and the parties desire to know the construction which we place upon the statute—that a 'passage home' means a passage to the port at which the seaman was shipped, or to some other port in the United Kingdom agreed to by the seaman." That was the opinion of the Master of the Rolls. I see that in the judgment which I delivered in that case I said: "I agree with the Master of the Rolls that a 'passage home' means a passage to the port at which the seamen was shipped, or a port in the United Kingdom to which he agrees to go." Notwithstanding the excellent arguments which have been addressed to us to-day, I remain of the opinion which I expressed in that case. For these reasons I think that this appeal should be dismissed.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The question we have to determine is, What is the meaning of section 186, sub-section 2 (c), of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894? I agree with the view expressed by Lord Esher, M.R., in Edwards v. Steel, Young, & Co., and I feel bound to differ from the view of Collins, J., in that case. If we adopt the view of this court in Edwards v. Steel, Young, & Co., we give the words "passage home" in clause (c) a definite meaning—namely, as being a short way of referring to that which is stated at length in clauses (a) and (b) when defining the duty of the ship towards a seaman discharged at a foreign port. According to my view, section 186, sub-section 2, contemplates only one obligation imposed on the master in the case of a seaman discharged abroad, and clauses (a), (b), (c), and (d) merely define the alternative modes of carrying out that single obligation. If this view is correct, it follows that in using the words "passage home" in clause (c) the Act did not mean to create a new or different obligation, but only to provide one of several modes of carrying out the one obligation. It may be said that, if this view is correct, there is no real difference between the several modes provided by the clauses. I think that there is a difference. The obligation is to send the seaman home. Under clause (a) the master may send him home by providing him with adequate employment on a British ship bound to the port in her Majesty's dominions at which he was originally shipped, or to a port in the United Kingdom agreed to by the seaman. Clause (b) gives the master the alternative of sending him home by furnishing him with the means of going to some such port, and I understand that to mean that the master may provide him with money for that purpose. Then clause (c) gives the master another alternative—namely, he may provide the seaman with a passage home. I understand that to mean that the master may provide him with a ticket for a passage on some ship bound to the port specified in clause (a). The master has, under clause (d), another alternative. He may deposit a sum of money to defray the expenses of the seaman's maintenance and passage home. In my opinion these four clauses merely prescribe several alternative modes of carrying out the single obligation to send the seaman home to the port at which he was originally shipped or to some other port in the United Kingdom agreed to by the seaman. Clause (c) does not alter that obligation, it only describes the obligation shortly.

ROMER, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The question seems to me to be a difficult one. It is admitted that the word "home" in clause (c) does not mean the residence of the seaman without reference to a port. It does not mean the home address which the seaman has to give when he signs the articles of agreement. I agree that "home" means some port in some place. The word "passage" tends to show that that is so, if there were any doubt about it. The word "home" referring to some port and not to the seaman's residence, it must be remembered that the section has reference only to seamen or apprentices belonging to a British ship. In my opinion the word "home" is used in a general sense so as to exclude a foreign country. It is a word used in reference to a seaman or apprentice belonging to a British ship, and I do not think it was intended to distinguish, for instance, between Englishmen, Irishmen, Scotsmen, and Welshmen. I think it is used in a general sense of excluding all notion of a foreign country when dealing with a British ship. Taking the word as referring to a home port, is there anything in the section to show that the master is at liberty to select the port and the seaman is to have no voice in the matter? Looking at the enactment as a whole I do not think that the Legislature had any such intention. I think that clause (c) must be construed by reference to clauses (a) and (b), and it means that the seaman must be provided with a passage to some port agreed to by him, or failing an agreement to the port at which he was originally shipped. I see no ground for holding that the master is at liberty to send the seaman to any port, not in a foreign country, which the master may select, having regard to the nationality of the seaman. If the master chooses to provide the seaman with a passage home, he must send the seaman, failing an agreement as to a port, to the port at which the seaman was originally shipped.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for plaintiff, Pattinson & Brewer.

Solicitors for defendants, Botterell & Roche.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. North, J. — April 11.

THE DUNLOP PNEUMATIC TYRE CO. v. NEAL. (a).

Patent — Infringement — Repairs — Agent of plaintiff causing infringement by requesting article to be made.

The sale of a patented article implies a license to do simple repairs during the life of the article, but does not authorize a reconstruction of the article, making up precisely the combination which is the subject of the letters patent.

Position of defendant discussed when article is made at request of plaintiff's agent.

Kelly v. Batchelar, 10 Rep. Pat. Cas. 289, distinguished.

Motion.

The fourth claim of the plaintiff's patent was for "a rubber or elastic tyre having the form of a saddle or arch in section lined with canvas in combination with two wires or sufficiently inelastic cores for securing the same to the rims of tyres substantially as herein described."

The plaintiff commenced this action to restrain the defendant from infringing and claimed an interlocutory injunction until the trial of the action or further order to restrain the defendant from infringing the patent by manufacturing or selling pneumatic tyres of the same construction as those described in the specification or only colourably differing therefrom.

From the affidavits of J. T. Rowland it appeared that Rowland took the defendant a worn-out tyre originally made by the plaintiff under the patent. The defendant took out the wires, repaired the same, and re-covered them, so that Rowland received back a new cover constructed precisely on the same lines as the tyres made under the patent.

The defendant by his affidavit alleged that Rowland was the regular agent of the plaintiff, and had, in effect, incited him to infringe, and moreover, that what he (the defendant) did was regularly and as a matter of course done in the trade.

Rowland in his affidavit in reply said, after denying that he was the plaintiff's regular agent: "The plaintiff company informed me that the defendant was making infringing tyres under the guise of repairing old tyres, and asked me to see if it was so. Accordingly I took the old worn-out cycle cover to him and he pointed out how he was going to do what he called repair same, and brought me specimens of the indiarubber strips he intended putting on and told me what the cost would be if I chose the best of them."

Moulton, Q.C., and J. C. Graham, for plaintiffs.—The validity of the patent has already been established in other proceedings. What the defendant has done is not repairing, it is making a new article, and there is no license to do that. As to the point that Rowland was the agent of plaintiff and incited the defendant to infringe, this case is distinguishable from Kelly v. Batchelar, 10 Rep. Pat. Cas. 289, relied on by defendant, for there the person who gave the instructions had authority to do so. Rowland was not so authorized, and only went to find out what defendant was doing.

Terrell, Q.C., for defendant, relied on Kelly v. Batchelar on the point that Rowland was the agent of the plaintiff, and further, that what the defendant did was bonâ fide repairing such as might be done by anyone.

NORTH, J.—First, as regards Kelly v. Batchelar. That case is distinguishable. There the person who directed the article to be made had authority to do so. In the present case there was no such authority. [The learned judge read the passage from Rowland's affidavit above set out.] What it comes to is that this was an employment of an agent to see what really the defendant would do. The defendant did not know that Rowland was the plaintiff's agent at all, nor did he deal with him on that footing. For this reason it seems to me that this case is not within Kelly v. Batchelar. Then as regards what was actually done I am in a little difficulty, because there is no suggestion that the defendant has done the same kind of thing before or intends to do it again. There is no threat on his part to continue to infringe in this way, and no injunction that I can grant can prevent his finishing and delivering and receiving payment for the article dealt with in this case. When you look at the fact that the defendant was employed in the way of his trade to do this thing, and asks no questions, but accepts the order and points out the way in which he is going to do it, it may be taken for granted that what he did he did in the course of trade, and that he will do it again if he gets a similar order. I must add that I do not think that the defendant is justified in saying that the mere fact that these wires had been used before in an article made by the plaintiffs is a license to use them again for any article of a similar kind. In my opinion the authority or license given by the fact of sale is to use them till worn out. Simple repairs may be done by a person without a license from the manufacturer; but when the whole thing is taken and practically a new tyre sold with only the old wires in it, I think there is no license to use these old wires for the purpose of putting them into and making up precisely the combination claimed by the patent.

Solicitors, J. B. & F. Purchase; L. W. Taylor.

(a.) Reported by R. SILLEM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Chan. Div. Stirling, J. March 29; April 12.

CHARNOCK v. COURT. (a.)

Trade union—Watching or besetting—"Place"—Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 86), s. 7.

Two members of a workmen's union met men who had been brought over from Ireland to replace workmen on strike at the landing-stage of the steamer, informed them of the strike, and paid their railway fares to places unaffected by the strike.

Held, that this was a watching or besetting of a place where workmen happened to be, within sub-section 4 of section 7 of the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875, as there was nothing in the statute which necessarily implied any prolonged watching, nor was its operation limited to a place habitually frequented by the workmen; nor was this attending at a place merely to communicate information within the proviso at the end of section 7, inasmuch as the two members of the workmen's union attended to hold out inducements to the men to go elsewhere.

This was a motion by the plaintiffs in an action brought by three members of the Union of Master Joiners at Halifax, suing on behalf of themselves and all other members of the union, against the president, the secretary, and one of the members of the executive committee of the Amalgamated Society of Carpenters and Joiners, a trade union registered under the Trade Union Act, 1871, for an injunction to restrain the defendants until the trial of the action from (inter alia) watching or besetting the landing-stage at Fleetwood or the railway station at Halifax, or the works of the plaintiffs or any of them, or of any other member of the masters' union or the approaches thereto, or the place of residence of any workman employed by or proposing to work for the plaintiffs or any of them, or any other member of the said union, for the purpose of persuading or otherwise preventing persons from working for the said union or any member thereof, or for any purpose except merely to obtain or communicate information. An objection having been taken that the plaintiffs could not sue on behalf of themselves and all other members of the masters' union, the action being one of tort, the writ was amended by making all members of the masters' union plaintiffs.

It appeared that on the 2nd of January, 1899, a strike commenced, and was still continuing, of the journeymen carpenters and joiners at Halifax. To replace the men on strike the masters brought men from other places, particularly Belfast. The Belfast men were procured through a Mr. Forster, who, on the 20th of February, sent nine men by steamer to Fleetwood and thence by rail to Halifax, and on the next day sent thirteen other men by the same route. Before starting each man signed a document whereby he agreed to work at Halifax as a non-union man for twelve months, and by the same document the master joiners of Halifax bound themselves to find work for the holder for the same period. The nine men arrived at Halifax railway station on the 21st of February, and were there met by three master joiners, of whom one of the plaintiffs was one. The defendant Court was also there. He informed the men of the strike, with the result that only two of them went to work at Halifax. The thirteen men were met at Fleetwood by two men named Walker and Wadsworth, who acted under the instructions of the men's union. Walker and Wadsworth informed the Belfast men of the strike and that if they would go elsewhere to work their expenses would be paid and work would be found for them, and they provided several of the men with tickets for Morecambe and Glasgow, and also with money for one night's lodging. These expenses were paid out of a sum provided for that purpose by the secretary of the men's union. The result was that only four out of the thirteen men went to work at Halifax.

Upjohn Q.C., and R. J. Parker, for the plaintiffs.—There has been a watching or besetting within the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875, s. 7, sub-section 4. The decision in J. Lyons & Sons v. Wilkins, 45 W. R. 19, [1896] 1 Ch. 811; ante, p. 291, [1899] 1 Ch. 255, shows that to bring the case within the proviso at the end of section 7 the defendants must prove that what was done was merely for the purpose of communicating information. The landing-stage at Fleetwood and the railway station at Halifax are places where the workmen "happened to be" within sub-section 4.

Jenkins, Q.C., Godefroi, and W. L. Richards, for the defendants.—The words "other place where he happens to be" must be construed with reference to the words immediately preceding and do not include a place to which the general public have access.

Upjohn, Q.C., replied.

Cur. adv. vult.

April 12.—STIRLING, J., stated the facts and continued: The construction of the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875, has been considered by the Court of Appeal in the recent case of Lyons & Sons v. Wilkins. Two points decided in that case are material for the present purpose. First of all it is decided that watching or besetting is unlawful within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 4, unless it is in order merely to obtain or communicate information; and secondly, that watching or besetting a house or other place where the workmen are is unlawful if done in order to compel a master to do or abstain from doing what he has a legal right to abstain from doing or to do. Applying the law thus laid down to what took place on the arrival of the steamer at Fleetwood I think in the first place that the attendance of Walker and Wadsworth there was with a view to deprive the masters of the assistance of workmen brought over from Ireland, and so compel them to conduct their business in accordance with the requirements of the men; secondly, I think that their attendance was not in order merely to obtain or communicate information. Walker and Wadsworth went there provided with money which was used to send the Irish workmen to other places—namely, Morecambe and Glasgow. It seems to me that they went there in order to hold out inducements, and attending at a place to hold out such inducements is, in my opinion, not within the proviso at the end of section 7.

The next question is whether the case is within sub-section 4, which prohibits watching or besetting the house, or the place where a person resides or where he happens to be. It was known or suspected that workmen would arrive at Fleetwood by steamer upon the 22nd of February. Walker and Wadsworth go there, await the arrival of the steamer, and then enter into communication with the men who land. It seems to me that that is watching a place where the workmen happen to be. There is nothing in the statute which defines the duration of the watching. It may be, it seems to me, for a short time, and as to that I refer to the words of the proviso itself which speaks of attending at or near a house or place where the person resides or works or happens to be. The word "attending" does not necessarily imply any lengthened attendance upon the spot, nor is there anything in the statute to limit its operation to a place habitually frequented by the workmen, such as a house where he resides or the place where he works. On the contrary the words "place where he happens to be" seem to me to embrace any place where the workman is found however casually.

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

[His lordship then considered the question whether the defendants were liable for the acts of Walker and Wadsworth, and came to the conclusion that they were so liable. He then dealt with the case so far as it related to the proceedings at the Halifax railway station, and as to that he came to the conclusion that the evidence was too conflicting to enable the court to grant an interlocutory injunction.

With regard to the proceedings at Fleetwood he granted an injunction in the following terms "to restrain the defendants or their agents or person authorized by them from watching or besetting the landing-stage at Fleetwood or any other place to which any person or persons employed or about to be employed by the plaintiffs or any of them may be brought."]

Solicitors, Helliwell, Harby, & Evershed, for Jubb, Booth, & Helliwell, Halifax; Fielder & Fielder, for R. Wilkinson, Halifax.

Chan. Div.
Kekewich, J. } June 24.

In re BLAIBERG AND ABRAHAMS' CONTRACT. (a.)

Vendor and purchaser—Disclosure of trust—Mortgagees—Trustees—Devolution of trustees' title.

On a sale of freeholds a mortgage debt thereon was to be paid off. It was inadvertently disclosed that the mortgage money belonged to the mortgagees as trustees of a settlement, and that they were not the original trustees thereof. On a vendor and purchaser summons,

Held, that the vendor must trace the devolution of the title of the trustees from the date of the settlement, in order to enable the purchasers to get a good discharge for the payment of the mortgage money.

On the 12th of October, 1880, the owners in fee of certain freehold property in Stoke Newington mortgaged them to secure £6,000 and interest.

On the 12th of May, 1882, the mortgage debt and security were transferred to Sir J. Commerell and Mr. Pierse Kelly in consideration of £6,000 recited by the deed of transfer to be paid by them out of moneys belonging to them on a joint account.

On the 14th of February, 1899, Benjamin Blaiberg, who had become the owner in fee simple of the property subject to the mortgage of the 12th of May, 1882, entered into an agreement with Louis and Alfred Abrahams to sell the property to them in fee simple in possession free from incumbrances, it being arranged to pay off the mortgage debt of £6,000 out of the purchase-money.

Pierse Kelly, it appeared, had died, and by a mistake the purchasers acquired the knowledge that R. H. Kelly had been appointed as a trustee in his place, that the moneys advanced by Commerell and Pierse Kelly belonged to them as trustees of a marriage settlement of 1848, that they were not the original trustees of the settlement, and that the appointment of the new trustee was invalid. No transfer of the mortgage had, however, been made to him. The purchasers by their requisitions thereupon required to know how the original trustees had been got rid of, and how Commerell and Pierse Kelly had been appointed trustees. The vendor replied that as there had been no transfer to R. H. Kelly, and he had not been duly appointed trustee, in effect all that had happened was that one of the trustees had died, that the trust had not been brought on the title, and although by mistake the fact of its existence had been revealed the purchasers were not affected by it, and that Sir J. Commerell as surviving trustee would give a good discharge for the mortgage money. The purchasers insisted on their requisition. The vendor took out this summons asking that it might be declared that the requisition had been sufficiently answered, and that Sir J. Commerell, as sole surviving trustee of the settlement, could give a good discharge for the mortgage money.

R. F. Norton, for the vendor.—Sir J. Commerell admits he is trustee. If he is not a de jure he is a de facto trustee for the properly appointed trustees, and as such can give a proper discharge for the mortgage money. It would be contrary to the practice of the court to require us to answer such a requisition as this: In re Harman and Uxbridge and Rickmansworth Railway Co., 31 W. R. 857, 24 Ch. D. 720.

Warrington, Q.C., and J. M. Solomon, for the purchasers.—The trusts have been disclosed, and therefore we must see that the money is paid to the person capable of giving a good discharge.

They distinguished In re Harman and Uxbridge and Rickmansworth Railway Co.

KEKEWICH, J.—The mortgage in question was made to Sir John Edward Commerell and Mr. Pierse Kelly, and contained the usual recital that the money advanced belonged to them upon a joint account. That, of course, would have enabled Sir J. Commerell now to give a receipt for the mortgage money on the death of Mr. Pierse Kelly being proved. It may be that if, contrary to the usual and more cautious form, the mortgage deed had contained a recital showing that the mortgagees held the money as trustees on the joint account, there would nevertheless have been no difficulty on the payment now being required to be made to the survivor of the original trustees. But unfortunately a slip has been made here, and the trusts of the settlement upon which the mortgagees held this money have been disclosed. That shows not only who are beneficially entitled under the settlement, but also that Sir J. Commerell and Mr. Pierse Kelly were not the original trustees of the settlement. It may be that they never were trustees at all or that they held the money as trustees for the duly appointed trustees, but it is not shown that they were at the date of the mortgage the properly appointed trustees of the settlement. It follows that there is nothing to satisfy the purchasers that Sir J. Commerell is the surviving trustee of the settlement. Are they, therefore, entitled to ask that? It is better perhaps to put it a little stronger and to inquire whether they are bound to ask it, that is, for their reasonable protection? They are not, if they can get a proper discharge from Sir J. Commerell, if as a matter of fact and in law Sir J. Commerell is the surviving trustee of the settlement. Counsel for the vendor argues, and with perfect soundness, that Sir J. Commerell has acknowledged himself to be the trustee, and that he therefore is a trustee for all the persons entitled under the settlement. But that does not show that he is the person capable of giving a good discharge for the mortgage money. Then, the trusts of the settlement having been disclosed, and not merely the beneficial trusts of the estate but the title of the trustees, it seems to me that, although the risk in this case is perfectly trifling and inappreciable, still a purchaser cannot be too careful, and if it should in fact turn out that there was some flaw in the appointment of Sir J. Commerell, then the purchasers would not have paid the money to the de facto or the de jure trustee of the settlement and the result would be that if the difficulty hereafter arose, they would have to prove that Sir J. Commerell had accounted to the persons who could give a complete discharge. The objection taken is extremely technical, but I cannot hold that the purchasers are wrong in saying that they must have a complete discharge, which I think the vendor must give them. With regard to the case before Pearson, J., of In re Harman and Uxbridge and Rickmansworth Railway Co., I think it does not govern this case, because there the trust deed was not disclosed. All that was disclosed there was that the testator was a trustee. But there was nothing to show that originally any person other than the testator ever had anything to do with the trust. If there as here the trusts had been disclosed it might have been necessary to go into the title of the trustees, notwithstanding the reluctance with which Pearson, J., would have done so; a reluctance which I share. I must therefore make a declaration that the requisition has not been sufficiently answered.

(a.) Reported by C. C. HENSLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Solicitors, Gordon, Dalbiac, & Pugh; Edward Le Voi.

Chan. Div. }
Kekewich, J. } June 22.

In re MARYON-WILSON.
WILSON v. MARYON-WILSON. (a.)

Inland revenue—Settlement estate duty—Incidence—Property settled by instrument outside will—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), ss. 2, 4, 5, 6, 8—Finance Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 28), s. 19.

Where property given by the will of a testator is settled, not by the will itself, but by an instrument outside the will, settlement estate duty must be borne, not by the testator's general residue, but by the settled property.

By a settlement dated the 23rd of July, 1895, made on the marriage of Eva K. Maryon-Wilson with G. C. Hardy, Sir Spencer Maryon-Wilson, the father of the wife, covenanted, in consideration of the marriage, with the trustees of the settlement, and also separately with the husband and wife, that his executors or administrators should, within six months after his death, pay to the trustees of the settlement £25,000 with interest at 3½ per cent. from the date of his death "without any deduction." And it was further declared that the trustees should hold the £25,000 upon the trusts thereinafter declared in favour of the wife, the husband, and the issue of the marriage, with an ultimate trust in favour of Sir Spencer Maryon-Wilson, his executors, administrators, and assigns.

Sir Spencer Maryon-Wilson died on the 31st of December, 1897, having by his will dated the 1st of August, 1896, devised certain freehold estates to the trustees of his will for a term of 2,000 years upon trusts to raise thereout and pay, inter alia, £25,000 to the trustees of the marriage settlement in performance of his covenant to that effect in the settlement. The testator also declared that estate duty and further estate duty in respect of any devises, legacies, or bequests made by him, should be borne by the respective devisees and legatees.

This was a summons by the trustees of the will to determine how as between themselves and the trustees of the marriage settlement (1) the rateable part of the estate duty, and (2) the settlement estate duty in respect of the sum of £25,000 ought to be borne. It was admitted that the estate duty must be borne by the testator's general residue.

O. L. Clare, for the executors and trustees of the will.—If the £25,000 had been settled by the will itself, settlement estate duty, which is a different duty from estate duty, would be payable by the trustees of the settlement out of the settled property under section 19 of the Finance Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 28). It has, however, been settled by an instrument outside the will—namely, the marriage settlement, the trustees of which ought to pay it. Moreover the £25,000 was not property of which the testator was at the time of his death "competent to dispose" under section 2 (1) of the Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), for it was a debt due from his estate. He also referred to sections 6 (1) (2) and 8 (3) of the Finance Act, 1894.

Crawley, for the trustees of the marriage settlement.—Settlement estate duty is part of estate duty and ought, therefore, to be borne by the general residue: In re Webber, Gribble v. Webber, 44 W. R. 489, [1896] 1 Ch. 914; Finance Act, 1894, s. 5 (1) (a). The Finance Act, 1896, s. 19, does not apply to this case: In re Gibbs, Thorne v. Gibbs, 46 W. R. 477, [1898] 1 Ch. 625. All the duties are payable out of the testator's general residue, for he covenanted to pay "without any deduction": In re Parker-Jervis, Salt v. Locker, ante, p. 147, [1898] 2 Ch. 643.

He also referred to section 8 (3) of the Finance Act, 1894.

Austen Cartmell, for another party interested.

KEKEWICH, J.—The distinction to be borne in mind is that between a legacy including a share of residue settled by a will and a legacy or share of residue given whether in satisfaction of an obligation or merely as an act of bounty to persons who either themselves have agreed to make a settlement or to persons who as trustees are recipients under an outside settlement creating limitations in succession which render it liable to settlement estate duty under the Finance Act. That is the distinction, and it is a distinction which has been approved both by judicial decision and by legislative enactment in the Finance Act, 1896, which has overruled, and by overruling has recognized as right under the Act of 1894 the decision of North, J., in In re Webber, Gribble v. Webber. There the testator had made a bequest, in a form with which conveyancers are very familiar, on certain trusts for the daughter-in-law for her life with remainders over according to the usual trusts of a marriage settlement, and North, J., held that in a case of that kind the legacy must be paid free of all estate duty, and the mere fact that the bequest was itself settled made no difference. The result was that not only was the ordinary estate duty ordered to be paid out of the testator's general estate on the whole of the testator's estate, including the bequest, but also the additional settlement estate duty which attached to the settled legacy. North, J., considered that if that was not done the testator's intention to give the legacy would not be carried out, for if settlement estate duty were deducted from the legacy the beneficiaries under the will would not receive what the testator intended to give them. That is the substance of North, J.'s, decision. Then the Legislature interposed, and by the Finance Act of 1896, s. 19, provided that "the settlement estate duty leviable in respect of a legacy or other personal property," that includes, of course, a share of residue, "settled by the will of the deceased shall, unless the will contains an express provision to the contrary, be payable out of the settled legacy or property in exoneration of the rest of deceased's estate." That section overrules North, J.'s, decision, thereby, however, recognizing that that decision was a right one on the Act of 1894, because an Act of Parliament would not have been required unless the decision had been right. That section, however, leaves at large the question how settlement estate duty is to be borne when the settlement is made outside the will. In this case the settlement was not only within the testator's knowledge, but he was a party to it himself, and he had covenanted that his executors would pay the £25,000 after his death. What he did by his will was merely to perform the obligation, not to give the legacy. But what difference does that make? Suppose he had covenanted to pay to his daughter this £25,000, and she had then settled it by an independent instrument; or suppose he had merely bound himself by a voluntary bond to pay £25,000 to a person who, without the testator being a party to the transaction, had then settled it; or suppose a case where the settlement follows a long time after the covenant, how could it be said that the testator had put himself under an obligation to pay the settlement estate duty which attached by virtue of the settlement made, not by the testator, but by the person to whom the testator was bound to pay the £25,000. I see no reason for it in the Finance Acts, and see no reason for it on principle. I agree with the argument of counsel for the executors when he says that section 8 (3) and (4) of the Finance Act, 1894, rather assists him than his opponents. I think that the testator's estate has performed its duty when the £25,000 has been handed over intact and free of the ordinary estate duty to the trustees of the marriage settlement. Either because the testator covenanted to pay it to the trustees, or because he covenanted to pay it to his daughter, who has to give it to the trustees (that, to my mind, being quite immaterial), the trustees must bear the burden of the settlement estate duty. They are accountable for that additional duty in respect of what comes to them as settled property.

(a.) Reported by C. C. HENSLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Then it is argued that the testator covenanted to pay this £25,000 "without any deduction," and that "deduction" ought to cover estate duty. Be it so. The result is, the executors must pay £25,000 free of estate duty, but not free of the duty which attaches to the settlement which is made of that £25,000. In other words they are bound to pay the duty which intervenes between the estate which pays and the estate which receives—that is, the ordinary estate duty. The trustees are to receive £25,000 without any deduction on account of the ordinary estate duty, but having so received it they hold it as a settled fund, and they are liable to pay the additional settlement estate duty. I think, therefore, that the distinction which is contended for exists, and that when property is settled, not by the will itself, but by an instrument outside the will, settlement estate duty must be borne by the settled property. I hold, therefore, that the executors must pay the ordinary estate duty out of the testator's general residue, and that the additional settlement estate duty must be paid out of the £25,000 by the trustees of the marriage settlement.

Solicitors, Bell, Steward, May, & How; Evans, Foster, & Wadham.

Q. B. Div. (Grantham and Bruce, JJ.) July 4.

BELTON v. BUSBY AND ANOTHER. (a.)

Gaming—Betting-house or room—User—Public-house—Betting Houses Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 119)—Licensing Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 94). s. 17 (2).

A professional betting man went day by day, between the hours of 12 noon and 3 p.m., to a public-house. He generally sat in the part of the house known as the saloon, and there conducted the business of ready-money betting, receiving bets and stakes and paying the bets when won. The proprietor and licensee of the public-house was aware of and consented to what the betting man did, but the latter paid no rent. Besides the betting business the ordinary business of a public-house was carried on in the saloon. The betting man had no interest in the latter business, neither had the licensee of the public-house any interest in the betting business.

Held, that the betting man used the public-house for the purpose of betting with persons resorting thereto, and was therefore guilty of an offence against section 3 of the Betting Houses Act, 1853, and that the licensee was guilty of an offence against section 17 (2) of the Licensing Act, 1872.

Case stated by a Metropolitan police magistrate under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43 and 42 & 43 Vict. c. 49.

The respondent Alfred Woods was charged before the magistrate upon five summonses issued at the instance of the appellant, for that he, on the 25th of February, the 1st, 2nd, 3rd, and 4th of March, 1899, being a person using the Royal Pair beerhouse, Gloster-grove, Kensington, did use the same for the purpose of betting with persons resorting thereto, contrary to section 3 of the Betting Houses Act, 1853.

The respondent Samuel Busby was charged for that he, on the same dates, being the licensee of the Royal Pair beerhouse, did suffer it to be used by Alfred Woods in contravention of section 3 of the Betting Houses Act, 1853, contrary to section 17, sub-section 2, of the Licensing Act, 1872.

The following facts were proved:

The respondent Woods was a professional betting man or bookmaker. The respondent Busby was during all material times the keeper and proprietor and licensee of the Royal Pair beerhouse.

On each of the days to which the summonses referred Woods came to the Royal Pair beerhouse shortly after 12 noon, and remained there till shortly before 3 p.m. Busby was always present in the beerhouse when Woods was there, and it was found by the magistrate as a fact that what Woods did in the beerhouse was done with the knowledge and permission of Busby. Woods only bought beer at the beerhouse on one occasion, and on two occasions he sent out for, and bought elsewhere, a bottle of whiskey, which was drunk by both Woods and Busby. Except for some cigars and for the beer bought on the occasion above referred to Woods was not a customer of the beerhouse.

The business of the beerhouse was carried on on the ground floor. The business premises consisted of a bar, a saloon, a public bar, and a tap-room.

In the saloon there was a screen or partition which partially divided one part of it from the other. Woods always came to the saloon and generally remained near and on one side or the other of the partition. He went from there to other parts of the saloon and to the public bar and tap-room as occasion arose, returning to the neighbourhood of the partition. While he was in the saloon Woods received bets, which were generally made at starting prices. Slips of paper, bearing the names of the dog or horse backed, together with the money staked, were handed to him by persons wishing to make a bet, and when a bet was won Woods paid the money in the saloon. Disputes and discussions about the bets also took place in the saloon. Bets occasionally also took place between Woods and Busby and were settled over the counter in the saloon.

(a.) Reported by C. G. WILBRAHAM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The two respondents conversed about bets, horses, and racing. Woods invited persons coming to the house to bet with him, sometimes successfully and sometimes unsuccessfully, the man invited making an excuse, such as that he had no money. The magistrate found on these facts that Woods conducted in the saloon the business of ready-money betting, and stated that the evidence led to the inference that Woods was known to his customers to be at the above-mentioned times at the Royal Pair beerhouse and to carry on his betting business there, and that persons did come there for the purpose of transacting betting business with him.

Apart from the betting business carried on by Woods the ordinary business of a beerhouse was carried on at the Royal Pair beerhouse. Woods had no interest of any sort in the latter business or in the house itself. He did not take any part in the management of the house, nor had he any control over the business of the house. There was no evidence that Busby had any interest in bets made by Woods.

The magistrate dismissed the summons against both respondents, holding that the respondent Woods did not use the bars of the beerhouse in such a manner as to constitute an illegal user within the meaning of the Betting Houses Act, 1853, and that the respondent Busby did therefore not permit an illegal user of his house.

Section 3 of the Betting Houses Act, 1853, enacts that "any person who, being the owner or occupier of any office, house, room, or other place, or a person having the same, shall open, keep, or use the same" for the purpose of betting with persons resorting thereto shall be liable to a penalty.

Section 17 of the Licensing Act, 1872, enacts that if any licensed person . . . (2) opens, keeps, uses, or suffers his house to be opened, kept, or used in contravention" of the Betting Houses Act shall be liable to a penalty.

Danckwerts, for the appellant.—The case shows that Woods conducted the business of betting at the beerhouse, and that he was generally known to be there for the purpose of that business at certain times. The effect of Powell v. Kempton Park Racecourse Co., ante, p. 585, [1899] A. C. 143, was that, to be within the Betting Houses Act, a person must have some different right to be in the place where the prohibited act is done than the right possessed by the ordinary frequenter. This right Woods had, for Busby consented to his using the bar of the beerhouse he did, and so, in effect, gave him a license to carry on his betting business there. It was not necessary to show that Woods owned or occupied the premises. All that it was necessary to show was that he was entitled to use them for his betting business. Hornsby v. Raggett, 40 W. R. 111, [1892] 1 Q. B. 20, is in point. Woods committed an offence against the Betting Houses Act it is clear that Busby committed one against the Licensing Act: M'William v. Dawson, 15 J. P. 182.

The respondents did not appear.

GRANTHAM, J.—I am sorry that no one appears here to-day on behalf of the respondents, because it is possible that we may have overlooked some argument in their favour. Nevertheless, I am bound to say that I have no doubt that our judgment ought to be in favour of the appellants. The better course is for me to deal first with the case of Woods, because if Woods ought to have been convicted, it is clear that Busby ought to have been convicted also.

The great distinction between this present case and the cases of Hawke v. Dunn, 45 W. R. 359, and Powell v. Kempton Park Racecourse Co. is this, that in the case of racecourses persons go there in order to bet with each other. All are treated alike, whether they be backers of horses or bookmakers. A man goes to the enclosure either to get a better view of the races, or because he wants to back a horse and he hopes to find there someone who, holding an opposite view about the capabilities of the horse, will bet against him. Persons such as these, whether they be bookmakers or backers, are not in any sense owners or proprietors of the enclosure, nor are they, therefore, keeping or using the enclosure for betting in the sense intended by the Betting Houses Act. That is the general effect of the judgments delivered in the Kempton Park case. What we have to see is, whether the public-house kept by Busby in such a way that a professional bookmaker used it for the purposes of his betting business is in the same position as an enclosure on a racecourse. It seems to me that the two cases are quite distinct, and that the user of the public-house by Woods was clearly within the mischief of the Betting Houses Act.

In that Act the Legislature were probably trying to put a stop to the keeping of betting-houses used solely for betting. But then, as soon as the bookmaker found that he could not keep a betting-house of that kind, by ordering a bottle of whiskey or other drink he induced the proprietor of a public-house to allow him to carry on his business there. It brought trade to the house, and, in the present case, it suited Busby to give Woods the right to be on his premises day after day. No rent was paid for the right; still, Woods had something in the nature of a license to be there, and he was there regularly and at certain defined times for the purpose of making bets. The public-house became, in effect, as much a betting-house as the betting-houses against which the Act of 1853 was specially levelled. The word "place" was introduced into the Act because, when the bookmakers were excluded from the house, they would conduct their business in a place outside, such as a back-yard, and it was intended to bring persons using such places also within the meshes of the enactment. In my opinion Woods did use the public-house for the purpose of betting with persons resorting thereto within the meaning of the Act. The house was in fact just as much a betting-house as if it had been a room which Woods had hired for the purposes of his betting business.

That being so, I think that Woods was guilty of an offence under the Betting Houses Act, 1853, and that Busby was guilty of an offence under the Licensing Act, 1872. The case will therefore be remitted to the magistrate with this expression of our opinion.

BRUCE, J.—I agree. This room was used by Woods for the purpose of betting with persons resorting thereto. He used it in the sense that he regularly resorted there. He resorted there day by day, and was the person in control of the betting business carried on there. I entertain no doubt that Woods was guilty of the offence with which he was charged. What Woods did was done with the entire consent of Busby, and therefore Busby was guilty of the offence of suffering his licensed premises to be used in contravention of the Betting Houses Act.

Case remitted to the magistrate.

Solicitors for the appellant, Wontner & Son.

Q. B. Div.
(Grantham and Bruce, JJ.) June 15.

JEFFREY v. WEAVER. (a.)

Licensing law—"Keeping open for sale" of liquors after closing hours—Doors closed and locked—Customers afterwards seen to leave the premises—Licensing Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 49), s. 9.

The respondent was summoned for "keeping open" his licensed premises after closing hour, contrary to section 9 of the Licensing Act, 1874. The evidence in support of the summons was that the house was duly closed and the doors locked at 11 p.m., but that two customers remained inside drinking until 1.30 a.m., when they were seen to leave the premises by the back door.

The justices dismissed the summons, on the authority of Tennant v. Cumberland, 7 W. R. 161, 1 E. & E. 401, 23 J. P. 51, and Jefferson v. Richardson, 35 J. P. 470.

Held, on appeal, that the justices were right, since the evidence did not prove that the house was "kept open" within the meaning of section 9.

Special case.

Appeal by informant from a decision of the justices for the county of Worcester dismissing a summons against the respondent for keeping open his licensed premises for sale of intoxicating liquors after closing hour (in this cases 11 p.m.), contrary to section 9 of the Licensing Act, 1874.

The case stated that the justices had found as facts that the house was required to be closed at 11 p.m. At 11.25 p.m. two men were heard by the police from the outside to be talking in the bar. Both the front and back doors of the premises were then found to be locked. To allow the passage to be swilled with water, as was customary at night, the front door was opened and the police sergeant went in and found two men, and the respondent's wife in the act of handing them glasses of whiskey and soda. It was said that they were friends who were going to stay there that night and had taken beds. It was subsequently admitted that both men had been supplied with liquors as ordinary customers between ten and eleven o'clock, and had stayed on after closing hours at the invitation of the respondent's wife, who managed the business. The evidence of the police was that at 1.25 a.m. the respondent's wife opened the front door and looked out, and at 1.30 a.m. the men left by the back door and ran down the lane. When the police officer called the respondent's attention to this, he said, "I can't help it, it is my wife's fault."

The justices, when the summons came before them, were of opinion that they were bound by the decisions in Tennant v. Cumberland, 7 W. R. 161, 1 E. & E. 401, 23 J. P. 51, and Jefferson v. Richardson, 35 J. P. 470, and that to establish a charge of keeping open a licensed house there must be evidence that the outer door was open or ajar, or that someone was ready to open it and admit when notice was given by a customer. In the present case it was admitted that both the outer doors were locked at 11.25 p.m., and they dismissed the summons on the ground that there was no evidence that the house had been kept open, and they gave their determination against the appellant without calling for or hearing any evidence on behalf of the respondent.

Amphlett, Q.C. (Sidney Clarke with him), for the appellant.—The sole question here is whether there was evidence upon which the justices ought to have convicted. The Legislature in the Act of 1874 used the phrase "open" and also "keeping open," and the offence of "keeping open" consists of continuing to do business with customers who remain on after closing hours and after the doors of the house have been closed. If that submission is correct then there is evidence upon which the justices ought to have convicted: Finch v. Blundell, 26 J. P. 71; Thompson v. Greig, 34 J. P. 214. In Brewer v. Shepherd, 36 J. P. 373, and Brigden v. Heighes, 24 W. R. 272, 1 Q. B. D. 330, the court held that the evidence of keeping open was insufficient to support a conviction, but the distinction between the offence of keeping a house open—i.e., not closing licensed premises to the exclusion of customers, and keeping open the house—i.e., doing trade with customers already on the premises after closing hours, is one that ought not be drawn, for there is nothing in the Act to warrant it. Moreover, it is a distinction without any practical difference, and is opposed to the whole object for which the statute was passed. The justices were therefore in error when they considered that the two cases referred to by them in the special case were conclusive in favour of the respondent.

J. B. Matthews, for the licence-holder.—The justices were right in dismissing the summons, for under the statute a victualler may be charged either with selling during prohibited hours or with keeping open his house during such time, and the present proceedings seem to be an attempt on the part of the police to get rid of the difference between these two offences. There is no evidence of this house having been kept open for the purpose of giving access to outsiders to enter and obtain drink. In Tennant v. Cumberland the house was found closed, and it was held that, though a man was found there at 2 a.m. on Sunday, there was no evidence of "keeping open" the house, or that the man there had not been let in on the previous Saturday night. Crompton, J., in that case said it was a wrong offence that was charged, it should have been that of serving during prohibited hours, for there was no evidence of the house having been kept open during prohibited hours merely because a stranger was found on or was seen to leave the premises. In Jefferson v. Richardson, also, the Queen's Bench held that there was not sufficient evidence to support the conviction of keeping open, though there might have been sufficient evidence of wrongful selling.

THE COURT dismissed the appeal.

GRANTHAM, J.—I feel this to be a case of some difficulty, but upon the whole I think the safer view to take is for us to hold that the expressions "opening" and "keeping open" in the enactment under consideration must have their ordinary interpretation—namely, that the house must be open or kept open for the purpose of people going in, and not merely for the purpose of serving people already there. If people stay on to have drink after proper hours that would constitute another offence. Selling liquor during prohibited hours is a distinct offence, and in all the cases that have been cited the judges have kept strictly to the evidence of "keeping open" in the particular case. Here the people were proved to have been in the house before closing time and it was admitted that the house was in the ordinary sense closed, for both the front and the back doors were locked and the police could not get in at either of them. Indeed, they would not have got in but for the man who was engaged in swilling the floor. Taking the facts as admitted or proved in the case I think that the house was not open or kept open in the ordinary sense for people outside to go in, and I ought not in face of the authorities cited to hold that there was evidence here of keeping open to support a conviction within the words of the statute. The appeal fails and must be dismissed.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law

BRUCE, J., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the informant, Clarke & Blundell, for S. Thorneley, Bromsgrove.

Solicitors for the respondent, Thomas White & Sons, for J. & F. Holyoake, Worcester.

Q. B. Div.
(Darling and Channell, JJ.) April 25.

BASTER v. LONDON AND COUNTY PRINTING CO. (a.)

Master and servant—Dismissal—Negligence.

The question whether a single act of forgetfulness on the part of a servant will justify his dismissal without notice depends upon the character of the act.

A workman having the charge of a valuable machine, through forgetfulness, caused damage to the machine to the extent of £30.

Held, that his employer was justified in dismissing him without notice.

Case stated by a Metropolitan police magistrate.

A complaint was made by the appellant before the magistrate claiming £4 8s., two weeks' wages alleged to be due to the appellant in lieu of notice.

The appellant was in the employ of the respondents, and on the 16th of December, 1898, had charge of a printing machine called the "Century," which was worth £800. While he was in charge of it a cylinder called the "top rider" got jammed into the machine and did damage to the extent of £30. When the appellant was asked by the respondents' manager for an explanation, he replied that the top rider had jumped out of the forks in which it revolved and so fouled the machine. The respondents' manager did not accept the appellant's explanation, but believing that the appellant had caused the accident by omitting to place the top rider in its proper position in the forks before starting the machine, as it was his duty to do, paid him the wages then due to him and dismissed him without notice.

The magistrate was satisfied that the only way in which the accident could have occurred was by the appellant's forgetfulness to fix the end of the top rider in the forks before starting the machine, notwithstanding the appellant's strong belief that he had done so, and the magistrate held that such forgetfulness in the performance of an important part of the appellant's duty amounted to neglect which justified his dismissal without notice. He accordingly dismissed the complaint subject to this case.

It was admitted that, apart from this ground of dismissal, the wages would have been due.

W. M. Thompson, for the appellant.—Forgetfulness upon a single occasion is not a sufficient ground of dismissal, and does not amount to neglect. Neglect to be a ground of dismissal must be habitual. Parke, B., in Callo v. Brouncker, 4 C. & P. 518, enumerates the grounds of dismissal. They are: "Moral misconduct, either pecuniary or otherwise, wilful disobedience, or habitual neglect." See also Edwards v. Levy, 2 F. & F. 94.

Colam, for the respondents.—The principle on which dismissal without notice is justified is that, if a servant has behaved himself in such a way that it would be manifestly injurious to his master's interests to retain him in his employ, the master is justified in dismissing him. Whether that was so in the present case is a question of fact which the magistrate has found in the respondents' favour.

DARLING, J.—The magistrate was right. It has been argued that forgetfulness cannot amount to neglect. That cannot be so, because negligence or neglect as often arise out of forgetfulness as from anything else. That it should be a ground for dismissal in every case does not follow. The act of forgetfulness might be of so trivial a nature as not to be a ground for dismissal. But to be forgetful in a matter which might cause damage to the master or his property or to the other servants, that was forgetfulness of so serious a character as to amply justify dismissal. For instance, in the case of a signalman, who would say when he omitted to signal a train, and so occasioned a railway accident, that he did it from any cause but forgetfulness. Yet no one would say that such an act on his part would not justify his instant dismissal. Another argument was that negligence is not negligence such as to justify dismissal unless it is habitual. How many times may a servant be negligent? Twice, or three times? That argument is as dangerous for the working man as for his employer. You have a complicated machine, one moment of forgetfulness in the management of which might cause the death of hundreds, and yet it is said that negligence in the person having the care of such a machine is not negligence which justifies his dismissal unless it is habitual.

CHANNELL, J.—I am of the same opinion. It is impossible to give an exhaustive definition of negligence that would justify the dismissal of a servant. Whether a single act of negligence would justify dismissal depends upon the character of the act. The magistrate was right, and it is sufficient to say that on the facts the dismissal of the appellant was justified. It is a question of fact.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the appellant, George Jolly.

Solicitors for the respondent, Powell & Skues.

Q. B. Div.
(Lawrance and Channell, JJ.) Feb. 17.

REG. v. DR. TRISTRAM (JUDGE OF THE CONSISTORY COURT OF LONDON). (a.)

Ecclesiastical law — Burial—Disinterment—Faculty—Jurisdiction of Consistory Court—Burial Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 81), s. 25.

An ecclesiastical court has no power, in granting a faculty to disinter a body buried in consecrated ground, to cite the cemetery company to whom the ground belongs to appear before it for the purpose of making an order against such cemetery company that the body should be disinterred.

A faculty was granted by an ecclesiastical court to open a certain vault in consecrated ground and to open the lid of a coffin interred therein. In order to open the lid of the coffin it would be necessary to remove another coffin which contained a body.

Semble, that a licence of a secretary of state, pursuant to section 25 of the Burial Act, 1857, was required for such removal in addition to the faculty.

Rule to the judge of the Consistory Court of London for a prohibition to prohibit him from citing the directors, proprietors, and the secretary of the London Cemetery Co. to appear before him for the purpose of binding them by orders and directions inserted or to be inserted in a faculty.

(a.) Reported by C. G. WILBRAHAM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

(a.) Reported by C. G. WILBRAHAM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

On the 9th of March, 1898, an ex parte application was made by Anna Maria Druce and Sidney George Druce to the judge of the Consistory Court of London for a faculty to open a certain vault in the consecrated portion of the North London Cemetery at Highgate, the property of the London Cemetery Co., and to open the lid of a coffin interred therein with the view of ascertaining whether the coffin contained the remains of Thomas Charles Druce, and to remove, so far as was necessary for that purpose, other coffins in the vault.

The surviving executor of the will of Thomas Charles Druce and certain of the children of Thomas Charles Druce and their descendants intervened and opposed the application.

A petition was then filed and it appeared upon the affidavits that in order to examine the coffin of Thomas Charles Druce it would be necessary to remove the coffin containing the remains of Annie Maria Druce, his widow.

A question arose during the hearing of the petition as to whether, having regard to section 25 of the Burial Act, 1857, it was necessary to obtain the licence of a secretary of state to open the coffin said to contain the remains of Thomas Charles Druce and to remove that containing the remains of Annie Maria Druce.

On the 25th of November, 1898, the judge of the Consistory Court delivered judgment upon the application and decreed a faculty to issue after the expiration of fifteen days, the terms of the faculty to be settled by the registrar. He also held that it was not necessary for the petitioners, in order to enable them to act upon the faculty, to obtain a licence from a secretary of state.

On the 14th of December, the judge of the Consistory Court issued a citation to the directors, proprietors, and the secretary of the North London Cemetery Co. to appear before him to show cause why he should not, in pursuance of his decree of the 25th of November, insert in the faculty to be issued an order on the directors, proprietors, and the secretary of the company, as custodians of the consecrated ground in which the vault and coffin, the subject of the faculty, were, by themselves or their agents to execute the directions contained in the faculty, or to admit Anna Maria Druce or her agents to the cemetery to execute such directions. The citation was served at the offices of the cemetery company on the 16th of December. The company thereupon applied for, to the High Court, and obtained, the present rule for a prohibition.

Section 25 of the Burial Act, 1857, provides as follows: "Except in the case where a body is removed from one consecrated place of burial to another by faculty granted by the Ordinary for that purpose, it shall not be lawful to remove any body, or the remains of any body which may have been in any place of burial, without licence under the hand of one of Her Majesty's principal secretaries of state, and with such precautions as such secretary of state may prescribe as the condition of such licence; and any person who shall remove any such body or remains contrary to this enactment, or who shall neglect to observe the precautions prescribed as the condition of the licence for removal shall, on summary conviction before any two justices of the peace, forfeit and pay for every such offence a sum not exceeding £10."

Statham (Campbell Johnson with him) shewed cause.—The cemeteries belonging to the London Cemetery Co. are excluded from the operation of section 25 of the Burial Act, 1857, by section 54 of the Burial Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 85), into which the Act of 1857 is incorporated. That section provides: "Nothing in this Act contained shall extend to take away, diminish, alter, or prejudice any of the rights, powers, or authorities vested in any of the cemetery companies incorporated under the several Acts mentioned in the said schedule (B) of this Act, but all such rights, powers, and authorities shall be as good, valid, and effectual as if the Act had not passed." The Act incorporating the London Cemetery Co. is one of those referred to. The application of section 25 to the cemeteries of the London Cemetery Co. would involve an interference with the rights, powers, and authorities of the cemetery company. The judge of the Consistory Court has power, in the exercise of his jurisdiction over vaults and graves, to cite persons to appear before him who have an interest in the subject-matter of a faculty which is being prayed for: Bulwer v. Hase, 3 East 217. This is his time-honoured right. Further, it is the well-established practice of the Consistory Court to cite persons who are the custodians of consecrated ground, and to order them to do specific and positive acts. Whether the court has machinery to see that its orders are carried out is a different question. Though it cannot attach for contempt, it can punish the delinquent by admonition and by condemning him in costs. If the court made a wrong order that would be matter of appeal and not for a prohibition. It is conceded that prohibition would lie if the court attempted to try a common law right, such as the ownership of a grave. But here no attempt is being made to try the ownership of the grave. The court has jurisdiction to grant a faculty to open the grave in spite of the protest of relations of the persons buried therein or of the owner of the grave, and it has power to order it to be done: Bradford v. Fry, 4 P. D. 93. [CHANNELL, J.—There the order was to remove something in a church which was placed there illegally.] In Adlam v. Colthurst, L. R. 2 A. & E. 30, 16 W. R., A. & E. Dig. 16, the order was made against a person who was not even the custodian of the consecrated ground, but a mere parishioner. [CHANNELL, J.—In both these cases the persons against whom the order was made were persons who had done something without first obtaining a faculty to do it.] The court has power to make an order upon the custodians if they do anything wrong. The cemetery company would be doing something wrong if they obstructed the doing of the acts authorized by the faculty. The court has power to order the cemetery company to assist in the execution of the acts authorized by the faculty, and has power to insert such orders in the faculty.

Sir R Finlay, S.G. (Sir R. Webster, A.G., and H. Sutton with him), in support of the rule, on behalf of the Home Secretary.—The argument that section 25 of the Act of 1857 does not apply, on the ground that section 54 of the Act of 1852 reserves the rights and privileges of certain cemetery companies, is not valid. The cemetery companies could not be said to have a right to stop people from disinterring dead bodies. The right or privilege referred to in section 54 is some special privilege acquired by some particular cemetery company: Reg. v. Sharpe, 5 W. R. 318, 7 Cox C. C., 214. [CHANNELL, J.—We decided that point, raised in relation to another Act, in Starey v. Graham, ante p. 392, [1899] 1 Q. B. 406.] The only exception to section 25 is in the case of removal of a body from one consecrated place of burial to another. It was considered by the Legislature that in that case a faculty was sufficient. But here it is a case of the removal of a body to be put back again in its original position. That case falls within the body of the section, and the licence of the Home Secretary is accordingly required for such removal.

Danckwerts (Somers James with him), in support of the rule, on behalf of the London Cemetery Co., was stopped.

LAWRANCE, J.—The real question in this case is whether the judge of the Consistory Court has a right, while exercising his jurisdiction to grant a faculty for the disinterment of a body buried in the consecrated ground of a cemetery, to cite the cemetery company to appear before him and to order them to disinter the body. The faculty itself is a mere licence, and there appears to be no authority for the powers claimed by the judge of the Consistory Court. The cases cited to us in support of the pretensions of the Consistory Court are entirely distinct from the present case, for in those cases the orders were orders made to put an end to something which had been done without the licence of the Consistory Court.

Moreover, assuming that the judge had power to do what he did, section 25 of the Burials Act, 1857, would be a full answer to the order proposed to be made. It seems clear that without the licence of the Home Secretary there would be no power to interfere with the grave.

CHANNELL, J.—I agree that the rule must be made absolute. The matter stands thus: Interfering, without proper authority, with a body buried in consecrated ground is an ecclesiastical offence; it is probably also a common law misdemeanour. If it involves the removal of the body it appears, further, that the act is illegal by section 25 of the Burial Act, 1857, unless the licence of the Home Secretary has been first obtained. As regards the ecclesiastical offence, the ecclesiastical court has clearly power to authorize the act to be done, and so prevent it being an ecclesiastical offence. That is the meaning of granting a faculty. The faculty gives permission to do that which would, without the faculty, be an ecclesiastical offence. That is the entire operation of a faculty so far as I know. What power the ecclesiastical court has to order a disinterment I do not know. No authority for it has been shown. What is sought in this case is not a mere permission to disinter a body, but an endeavour is apparently being made by the ecclesiastical court to order the disinterment. If that is so, it seems to be clear that the court is going beyond its jurisdiction. What the ecclesiastical court has done is to issue a citation to the cemetery company ordering them to come before the court and to argue the question whether an order should not be made adversely to them directing that the disinterment should be carried out by one person or by another. I can see no authority in the court to do that. It is impossible to read the citation in the only way which would make it legal—that is, as a request to the company to come and say whether they had any objection to Mrs. Druce having the dispensation she asked.

The only cases cited to show that orders had been made by the ecclesiastical court were cases in which an ecclesiastical offence having already been committed the offender was ordered to restore the original state of things and to undo what he had unlawfully done. That was quite different from ordering a thing to be done in the first instance.

But assuming that, apart from section 25 of the Burial Act, the ecclesiastical court would have had power to order the disinterment, that provision is an additional reason for saying that the court are going beyond their jurisdiction.

Rule made absolute.

Solicitor for A. M. Druce, F. J. Macarthur.

Solicitor for the Treasury, The Treasury Solicitor.

Solicitors for the cemetery company, Baker, Blaker, & Hawes.

Solicitors for the interveners, Freshfields & Williams.

Court of Appeal.

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, M.R., and Romer, L.J.) — July 14, 15.

In re HOPE.
DE CETTO v. HOPE. (a.)

Settled land—Tenant for life—Heirlooms, sale of—Sanction of court—Discretion—Tenant for life in pecuniary difficulties caused by extravagance—Opposition of remaindermen—Jewel of unique character—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), s. 37.

The fact that a tenant for life has, by his own extravagance, brought himself into pecuniary difficulties, will not induce the court to relieve him by ordering a sale of heirlooms under the discretionary power conferred by section 37 of the Settled Land Act, 1882.

An application by the tenant for life for the sanction of the court to a contract by him for the sale of the Tavernier Blue (or Hope) Diamond refused.

The court ought, on such an application, to have regard to the wishes of persons entitled in remainder, and even to their sentimental preferences—as, e.g., the wish to preserve in the family a celebrated jewel of a unique kind. It ought to consider what was the intention of the settlor, what are the wishes of the family generally, and what would be for the benefit of the estate as a whole.

Decision of Byrne, J. (ante, p. 536), affirmed.

Appeal from a decision of Byrne, J. (ante, p. 536, where the facts are sufficiently stated).

Sir Edward Clarke, Q.C., Farwell, Q.C., and Martelli, for Lord H. F. Hope Pelham Clinton Hope, who appealed, referred to sections 37 and 53 of the Settled Land Act, 1882; In re Earl of Radnor's Will Trusts, 45 Ch. D. 402, 39 W. R. Dig. 202; In re Marquis of Ailesbury's Settled Estates, 40 W. R. 243 [1892] 1 Ch. 506 (affirmed in House of Lords, 41 W. R. 318, [1892] A. C. 356); and In re Hope's Settlement, 9 Times L. R. 506.

Counsel for the other parties were not called upon.

Mulligan, Q.C., and A. à B. Terrell, for the parties interested as tenants in tail in remainder.

J. E. H. Benn, for the Duke of Newcastle.

J. H. Young, for mortgagees of the life estate.

E. S. Ford, for the trustees of the will.

LINDLEY, M.R.—It appears to us that this is a case in which we ought not to differ from the learned judge in the court below. I do not wish to say anything unpleasant or unkind, reflecting unduly on Lord Francis Hope, the present applicant; but it is quite obvious that he has brought himself into these money difficulties by his own folly. That is not a reason for the court to grant such an application as this. No doubt the financial position of the tenant for life is a circumstance to be considered; but when we look at the matter, and see for whose benefit the proposed sale is to be, it is obvious that it is for nobody's benefit except that of the tenant for life. The whole object of this application is to increase his income by the interest which, if this jewel were sold, could be got by means of the purchase-money. Not only does nobody else want the sale; everybody else objects. It is said that the desire to keep this jewel in the family is a mere matter of sentiment, and a sentiment which we ought not to regard. I cannot go to that extent. Even if the sentiment is fanciful, I am not prepared to say that we ought to pay no regard to it. I daresay this diamond has not, historically, the value of some other jewels which have a longer pedigree. But it is evidently an object with the family to avoid parting with it. They might not object so much to the sale of some of the other heirlooms. We cannot ignore the fact that their feeling is that they wish to keep in the family a very beautiful and up to the present moment almost unique diamond. It is of a colour not seen at all until modern times. Another blue diamond has lately been brought from South Africa, and it is possible that more of the same colour may be obtained there. But there is no reasonable probability of the value of this particular diamond being diminished by anything which is at all likely to come from that quarter. Why, then, should this Hope diamond be sold? I think Chitty, J., was quite right when he said that when a tenant for life comes to the court with an application under section 37 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, to obtain its sanction to a sale there must be some reason to induce the court to give its sanction. The observations which Mr. Farwell pressed, and very properly pressed, upon us, about the tenant for life in the case of In re Marquis of Ailesbury's Settled Estates, 40 W. R. 243, [1892] 1 Ch. 506, affirmed in House of Lords, 41 W. R. 318, [1892] A. C. 356, being master of the situation, amount only to this. I was there addressing myself to a totally different set of circumstances, and what I meant was that under section 3 of the Act the tenant for life was master of the situation, because he could ruin the estate by selling the whole of it except the mansion-house. The question there was not upon whom, when an application is made for leave to sell the mansion-house, the burden of proof lies. As to that matter, I think the view of Chitty, J., is right, when he said, in regard to the present estate, when the question of selling the pictures was before him, that a tenant for life who makes an application under the Settled Land Act for the sanction of the court ought to make out a case, and not a doubtful case, for the interference of the court. I think we certainly ought not to say that when the tenant for life asks for our sanction to a sale it is for those who oppose the sale to satisfy us that we ought not to sanction it. However, in the present case it does not matter on whom the burden of proof is. We have all the facts before us, and I cannot see that it is for the benefit of anyone except this extravagant tenant for life that this diamond should be sold. I think I should myself have taken the same view as Byrne, J. has done if the case had come before me in the first instance. The only point Mr. Farwell made which impressed me at all was that the estate duty had to be considered and provided for. No doubt it has; and the estate duty, or rather the Finance Act of 1894 which imposes it, has rendered it necessary very often to break up family collections, and goes far to render a sale unavoidable. But that is no reason for us to accede to the present application. The appeal will therefore be dismissed.

(a.) Reported by R. C. MACKENZIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

ROMER, L.J.—I agree with the Master of the Rolls in what he has said with reference to this case, and I will add only a few words.

The sole reason, as the Master of the Rolls has pointed out, for this application is that the tenant for life may increase his income. At the present time he has an allowance of £2,000 a year as his means of support, having by his own extravagance dissipated the whole of his life income in this estate. One cannot help feeling, and seeing, that but for the extravagance of the tenant for life, the present applicant, no such application as this would probably have been made. The application is opposed by all the members of the family who are interested in these estates; and I do not think one ought to minimize a family feeling of this kind. The diamond is called by the name of the family, and is widely known by that name. Very philosophical minds may, no doubt, smile at and even deride pride in the possession of a celebrated jewel. But the court cannot ignore the existence of that feeling. We are sitting here to act as men of the world in dealing with a question of this kind, and undoubtedly many families do take a great pride in possessing jewels widely known and celebrated, and especially jewels of a unique type. I think the whole family may reasonably say that they desire the family should retain this celebrated diamond, widely known by their own name.

I do not think we ought to consider the Settled Land Act as suggesting or in any way laying down that the wishes of the testator are to be entirely disregarded. The testator certainly did intend this gem to be treated as a settled heirloom, and I do not think that intention ought to be ignored. The Settled Land Act has not said that the wishes of the testator are to be entirely disregarded, and I do not think that that was the intention of the Settled Land Act. The court, sitting to consider, on any special application, whether a sale of heirlooms ought to be made, ought to look at the whole case: the intention of the testator, the wishes of the family, and the circumstances showing whether a sale would be for the benefit of the estate as a whole. I cannot help thinking that if this estate is looked at apart from the peculiar condition of the present tenant for life—seeing that the income of the estate is about £16,000 a year—the family may well desire that an estate bearing that income should retain the Hope Diamond, and may say that it is not for the benefit of the members of the family from time to time that a jewel of this character should be sold.

For these reasons it appears to me that the judgment of the court below is correct, and that the appeal ought to be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, Maddisons, Leman, & Co.; Richard Smith & Sons, for Marshalls & Bate, East Retford; Devonshire, Monkland, & Co.; Rickards & Nightingale.

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, M.R., Jeune, P., and Romer, L.J.) — July 4.

In re MOSS.

KINGSBURY v. WALTER. (a.)

Will—Construction—Gift to a class—Gift to A. and the children of B. in equal shares—Death of A. before testator—Lapse.

A gift by will to a class properly so called (i.e., a number of persons indicated by a general description) and A., a named individual, in equal shares, is primâ facie, in legal contemplation, a gift to a class; so that, on the death of A. in the testator's lifetime, the whole of the property will be divisible amongst the other legatees.

(a.) Reported by R. C. MACKENZIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Decision of North, J., reversed.

Appeal from North, J.

The testator, one Moss, died on the 24th of March, 1893, having by his will given all his share or interest in the Daily Telegraph newspaper to trustees upon trust to pay the income thereof to his wife for her life, and after her death upon trust for the testator's niece, Elizabeth Jane Fowler, and the child or children of his sister, Emily Walter, who should attain twenty-one, equally to be divided between them as tenants in common. The residue of the estate the testator gave to his wife. The niece, Elizabeth Jane Fowler, died in the testator's lifetime, having attained twenty-one, but not having been married. The testator's wife survived him, dying on the 24th of September, 1897. The sister was still living, as were also all of her five children. The question having arisen whether the disposition of the interest in the Daily Telegraph was of the nature of a gift to a class, so that Elizabeth Jane Fowler's share was divisible among the children of Mrs. Walter, or whether her share lapsed and fell into residue, the representatives of the testator's widow took out an originating summons to have that question determined by the court.

North, J., decided that the gift was not a gift to a class, and that, by reason of the niece's death in the testator's lifetime, her share lapsed and passed under the residuary gift.

Mrs. Walter's children appealed.

Swinfen Eady, Q.C., Henry Terrell, Q.C., and J. G. Fawcus, for the appeal, referred to 1 Jarman on Wills (5th ed.), p. 232; In re Stanhope's Trusts, 27 Beav. 201; Aspinall v. Duckworth, 14 W. R. 527, 35 Beav. 307; Pearks v. Moseley, 29 W. R. 1. 5 App. Cas. 714, 723; Clark v. Phillips, 17 Jur. 886; Knapping v. Tomlinson, 34 L. J. Ch. 3; and In re Jackson, Shiers v. Ashworth, 32 W. R. 194, 25 Ch. D. 162.

Haldane, Q.C., and E. F. Ball, for the legal personal representatives of the widow, cited In re Chaplin's Trusts, 33 L. J. Ch. 183; 12 W. R. Ch. Dig. 108; Wilson v. Atter, 29 W. R. 480; and Drakeford v. Drakeford, 11 W. R. 977, 33 Beav. 43.

W. Hatfield Green, for the trustees.

No reply was called for.

LINDLEY, M.R.—It is very difficult to construe this will by the light of the authorities. But in one respect I entirely agree with North, J. I do not think the authorities help us much because they are in inextricable confusion. I do not think any case can be cited on either side which cannot be matched by a case on the other side more or less undistinguishable from it. In the present case we have to deal with this will, and the practical question we have to decide is what is to become of the share of the testator in the Daily Telegraph. When the testator made his will he had a niece named Elizabeth Jane Fowler and a sister named Emily Walter, both living. Miss Elizabeth Jane Fowler was a spinster, and was then, as I understand, nearly but not quite twenty-one years of age. Mrs. Walter had several children then and might have more. What the testator has done by his will is this: he has given his share in the Daily Telegraph to trustees upon trust to pay the income to his wife for her life, and after the death of his wife upon trust for the said Elizabeth Jane Fowler and the child or children of his sister Emily Walter who should attain the age of twenty-one years, equally to be divided between them as tenants in common. Miss Elizabeth Jane Fowler died in the testator's lifetime, and Mrs. Walter is alive and has five children. The wife is now dead and the time for dealing with the share in the Daily Telegraph has therefore arrived. Who, then, is to take it? There are several rival views about that. One view is—and that is the view adopted by the learned judge in the court below—that the share which Elizabeth Jane Fowler would have taken if she were alive (that is, one-sixth, as I understand it) has lapsed and has fallen into the residuary estate; so that, according to that view, one-sixth of the testator's share or interest in the Daily Telegraph has gone to persons who certainly were never intended by him to take it. That he did not intend this is obvious. It may be the legal result of the words he has used, but it is obvious that it was never dreamed of by the testator. What he intended was that this interest in the Daily Telegraph should go among the persons he has named, and not to other persons who merely represent his residuary legatee. The difficulty of the present case lies in this. We hear about classes, and about gifts to classes, and about the definition of a class. You may define a class in a thousand ways. Anybody may make any number of things or persons a class by singling out one or more attributes which are common, more or less, to them all, and making that attribute, or those attributes, the definition of a class. We have been referred, not improperly at all, to Mr. Jarman's definition of a class, for the purpose for which lawyers want such a definition—that is, for the purpose of construing a will. I think Mr. Swinfen Eady is right in saying that if you look at that definition the gift in this will does come within it. But, after all, whether you call this a class, or whether you call it a number of persons who are treated by the testator as if they were a class, that, it appears to me, is a mere matter of language, and I should seek to avoid deciding it. Age and caution have made me very reluctant to frame definitions, unless you can make a law to accord with your definitions, which judges cannot do. We have to decide what is to be done with the share given to the lady who has died. The testator says that his interest in the Daily Telegraph is to be equally divided between her and the children of Emily Walter—to be divided equally between them all. If some of those persons between whom it is to be equally divided are dead, are the shares of those who are dead to go to somebody else, or are they to go to those who survive? That is the real practical question, whether you say that the legatees are in effect a class (as Mr. Theobald does in a passage at p. 645 of the 4th edition of his book, where he says: "It is clear that a gift to A. and the children of B. may in effect be a gift to a class, if the testator treats the legatees as a class"), or whether you call them a number of persons who are to be treated as a class, does not really matter in the least. The guiding question here is, What is to be done with this property? What is to be done is that this interest is to be divided among these people, and, I will add, among such of them as shall be living. That is the obvious intention. The alternative view takes the share of the deceased niece away where it was never intended to go; and on that ground it appears to me that we ought to differ from the learned judge in the court below. I confess that if this case had come before me in the first instance I think I should have decided it as North, J., did, but my brother Romer has convinced me that his view is the right one.

JEUNE, P.—I agree, and I do not propose to add anything. I have no wish to say anything to make the decisions on this subject, which are contradictory and complicated, more so than they already are.

ROMER, L.J.—In the absence of any context negativing the view, I think that when a testator gives property X. to A. and a class of persons (say, the children of B.) in equal shares, he intends the whole of X. to pass by his gift if any one of the children of B. survives him, even although A. does not. Clearly if A. survived and none of the children of B. survived so as to share, then A. would take the whole, for A. would have to take either the whole or nothing; unless, indeed, it could be said that you are to look at the number of children of B. living at the date of the will, and that you are to say there is an intestacy as to the share of each such child dying between the date of the will and the testator's death. That, to my mind, is clearly an untenable proposition. If the testator intended that A. should take the whole if none of the children of B. survived him (the testator) so as to share, I think also he intended the children of B. to take the whole if A. did not survive so as to share. There is no satisfactory reason, to my mind, to distinguish between these two cases. I think that in such a gift as I have mentioned what the testator really means is that the property is to be shared equally by a body constituted of such of the following as shall be existing at the date of the testator's death (that is to say), A. and the children of B.; and generally when a testator gives property to be shared at a particular period equally between a class, properly so called, and an individual or individuals (and there is nothing to negative this view in the rest of the will), I think that what the testator must, primâ facie, be taken to mean is that you are to see which of that aggregated body is to share in that property at the time it comes for distribution, and that such a gift is really a gift to a class. Though I am perfectly well aware of the danger there is in attempting to lay down general propositions, and though few judges would more shrink from doing so than I, knowing as I do how a general proposition laid down often hampers judges in dealing with succeeding cases, yet I do think that in the present case I may venture to make the following statement, especially as the authorities are so conflicting, and as there is no express decision of the House of Lords or of the Court of Appeal upon the point. In my opinion it is correct to say that a gift by will to a class (properly so called) and A., a named individual, to share equally—so that the testator contemplates A. taking the same share that each member of the class will take—is primâ facie a gift to a class.

For these reasons—applying these principles to the case before us—I have no hesitation in saying that in my opinion the gift here was a gift to a class; that Elizabeth Jane Fowler was intended to share only as one of a class; and that, inasmuch as she did not survive to share, the rest of the class take the whole of the property.

Appeal allowed. Declaration that the gift was or was to be treated as a gift to a class, and that the share of E. J. Fowler did not lapse.

Solicitors, Tilleards; V. I. Chamberlain.

From Q. B. Div.
(Lord Russell of Killowen, C.J., and A. L. Smith and Collins, L.JJ.) } May 15.

HORSEY ESTATE (LIMITED) v. STEIGER AND THE PETRIFITE CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Landlord and tenant—Lease—Proviso for re-entry—Covenant against assigning or underletting—Liquidation of lessee company—Notice—Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 14—Conveyancing Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 13), s. 2, sub-section 2.

A lease granted by the plaintiffs' predecessors contained a covenant against assigning or underletting without the consent of the lessors, and also a proviso for re-entry if the lessees should commit any breach of covenant, or if (inter alia) the lessees, being a company, should enter into liquidation, whether compulsory or voluntary. The lease was, with the consent of the lessors, assigned to the defendants, who were an individual and a limited company. The defendant company went into liquidation, not in consequence of insolvency, but for the purpose of being reconstructed, and, having agreed to sell the lease to a new company, let the new company into possession pending the completion of the purchase, the new company undertaking to pay all rents, rates, and outgoings. Within a year of the liquidation the plaintiffs commenced an action to recover possession under the proviso for re-entry.

Held, (1) that the proviso for re-entry if the lessee company should enter into liquidation was a condition running with the land; (2) that the defendant company had entered into liquidation within the meaning of the proviso; (3) that, by virtue of section 2, sub-section 2, of the Conveyancing Act, 1892, notice under section 14 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, was necessary before the plaintiffs could enforce a forfeiture on the ground of the liquidation of the defendant company; and (4) that the letting the new company into possession did not constitute a breach of the covenant against assigning or underletting.

Appeal from the judgment of Hawkins, J., at the trial of an action without a jury, [1898] 2 Q. B. 258, 46 W. R. Dig. 89.

The action was brought to recover possession of premises under a proviso for re-entry contained in a lease. By the lease in question, which was dated the 4th of November, 1889, the trustees of the will of Thomas Horsey, deceased, demised the premises to John Donelly and a limited company for a term of twenty-one years.

The lessees for themselves and their assigns, and as a separate covenant, each of them for himself and itself respectively and his and its respective assigns, covenanted to pay the rent, to repair the premises, and not at any time or times during the term to assign or underlet the premises, or any part thereof, without first obtaining the consent of the lessors in writing, which consent was not to be unreasonably or vexatiously withheld in the case of the lessees satisfying the lessors that the proposed assignee was a substantial, respectable, and responsible person. There was a proviso in the lease for re-entry "if the lessees shall at any time fail or neglect to perform or observe any of their covenants, or if the lessees shall become bankrupt or enter into liquidation for the benefit of or compound with their creditors, or, being a company, shall enter into liquidation whether compulsory or voluntary."

On the 1st of August, 1894, the lessors conveyed their interest in the premises to the plaintiffs. On the 31st of March, 1896, the lessees, with the consent of the plaintiffs, assigned the residue of the term to the defendants, Jacob Steiger and the Petrifite Co. (Limited). The consent of the plaintiffs was expressly limited to that particular assignment. In December, 1896, the Petrifite Co., at a general meeting, duly passed, under section 129 of the Companies Act, 1862, a resolution for a voluntary winding up. This resolution was duly confirmed at a meeting in January, 1897, and a liquidator was appointed. The liquidation was not on account of any pecuniary embarrassment of the company, but simply for the purpose of reconstructing the company and increasing its capital. In furtherance of this object a new company was in September, 1897, duly formed and registered under the same name.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

On the 29th of October, 1897, a notice under section 14 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, was served by the plaintiffs on the original lessees and the defendant Steiger. On the 2nd of November a similar notice was served on the defendant company. It stated as grounds of forfeiture that the defendant company had entered into liquidation, and that there had been breaches of the covenant to repair. On the 4th of November the action was commenced.

On the 2nd of December, 1897, an agreement was entered into between the defendants and the new company, by which it was agreed that the defendant company, with the approval of the defendant Steiger, should sell, and the new company should purchase, all the right and interest of the defendants in the lease. The agreement contained a stipulation that, though the purchase might not then be completed, the new company should be let into possession of the premises within seven days of the first allotment of shares in the new company, and should as from that date pay all rents, rates, taxes, and outgoings, but that in the event of a rescission of the agreement (which had not happened) possession of the premises should be redelivered to the defendants. The new company was accordingly let into possession, but no assignment of the lease was made. The plaintiffs alleged that what had been done under this agreement constituted a new ground of forfeiture, as being a breach of the covenant against assigning or underletting, and it was agreed on terms that this alleged new ground of forfeiture shall be treated as having been in existence before the issue of the writ. At the trial the allegation of breaches of the covenant to repair was abandoned. Hawkins, J., gave judgment for the plaintiffs on the ground that the defendant company had entered into liquidation within the meaning of the proviso for re-entry.

The defendants appealed.

Herbert Reed, Q.C., Hammond Chambers, Q.C., Coome, Clarke Williams, and Timins, for the defendants.

Christopher James and B. A. Cohen, for the plaintiffs.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 16.—Lord RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN, C.J., read the following judgment: The question is whether the plaintiff company has established the right to re-enter upon the demised premises upon either of the grounds of forfeiture alleged—namely, (a) that the defendant company has entered into liquidation; or (b) that the defendants have underlet the demised premises. First, as to the liquidation—that the defendant company has entered into liquidation is not denied, but it was argued for the defendants (1) that upon the true construction of the lease the liquidation, within the meaning of the condition or proviso in the lease, must be a liquidation brought about by, or in consequence of, insolvency, which (it was admitted) was not the case here; (2) that the proviso in the lease only applied in case the individual lessee was bankrupt or had liquidated with his creditors and the company had entered into liquidation in consequence of insolvency; (3) that, if these contentions failed, the proviso or condition in question did not run with the land so as to bind the defendants, who were assigns merely of the original lessees; (4) that due notice under the Conveyancing Act of 1881, s. 14, had not been given before action, and that this was a condition precedent to the right to maintain any action; and lastly (5) that the defendants were, all these contentions failing, entitled to apply to the court for relief. I propose to consider these points seriatim.

As to the first point, in my judgment the determining event is the entering into liquidation in fact, and the cause which led to that event, or its object, is wholly immaterial. The contention of the defendants involves the introduction into the proviso after the word "voluntary" of the words "in consequence of insolvency." It seems to me the condition or proviso must be construed according to its plain meaning and without this qualification.

As to the second point, I think that the condition is carefully framed so as to make the proviso for re-entry apply, if either the individual lessee became bankrupt or compounded with his creditors, which is the first clause of the condition, or if the company lessee entered into liquidation. If, therefore, this were an action against the original lessees, the plaintiff company would, subject to the question of notice, be entitled to re-enter under the condition. But this is an action against the assigns of the original lessees.

The third point, which presents the greatest difficulty, has therefore to be considered—namely, is this condition of re-entry in the event of the company entering into liquidation one which, in the language of the common law, "runs with the land"? It is to be noted that this question was not raised in the court below, and the judgment of the learned judge is silent upon it. It was put in argument that the question here turned upon a condition and not upon a covenant, and it was suggested that the cases dealing with covenants were therefore not authorities on the present question. I cannot assent to this view. Whether a particular covenant or contition does or does not run with the land is determined by the common law, and it is enough to say that the authorities uniformly treat them as governed by the same principles: Stevens v. Copp, 17 W. R. 166, L. R. 4 Ex. 20. Further, the statute 32 Hen. 8, c. 34, s. 1, which gives assignees of the reversion the same benefit and remedies as lessors or grantors in respect of covenants and conditions, couples them together, and section 2 of that Act, which gives lessees the same remedies against assignees of the reversion which they had against the lessor or grantor, in like manner couples conditions and covenants together. Is, then, the condition in question one the burden of which runs with the land so that its obligation binds the assignee of the lease? The answer to this question depends, in this case, upon whether it is a condition touching the thing demised or is merely collateral. I say "in this case" because there are undoubtedly collateral covenants or conditions which on equitable principles, but only in a restrictive sense, bind the assignee. But this principle is confined to covenants and conditions of a negative character, and depends upon notice. But apart from cases of this class the true principle is that no covenant or condition which affects merely the person, and which does not affect the nature, quality, or value of the thing demised or the mode of using or enjoying the thing demised, runs with the land: see Mayor of Congleton v. Pattison, 10 East 130. Does, then, the condition or proviso in question "run with the land"? On the whole, and after much hesitation, I have arrived at the conclusion that it does. It must be taken as fully established that a covenant against assignment and also a proviso for re-entry in the case of bankruptcy run with the land: see Roe v. Sales, 1 M. & S. 297; Doe v. David, 1 C. M. & R. 405; Doe v. Ingleby, 15 M. & W. 465; Williams v. Earle, L. R. 3 Q. B. 739, 17 W. R. C. L. Dig. 74; Varley v. Coppard, 20 W. R. 972, L. R. 7 C. P. 505; Smith v. Gronow, 40 W. R. 46, [1891] 2 Q. B. 394. I think that a proviso for re-entry in case of liquidation by a company or individual falls within the principle of these cases, and indeed that the proviso as to liquidation is cognate both to a covenant against assignment and to a proviso relating to bankruptcy. It partakes of the character of each of them. The proviso against bankruptcy was introduced into leases in consequence of the ordinary covenant against assignment being held not to apply to the involuntary assignment which is the consequence of bankruptcy (see Doe v. Ingleby); and, like the covenant against assignment, it touches the question who shall have and occupy the premises demised, and therefore touches and concerns the thing demised: see Williams v. Earle, per Blackburn, J. I find myself unable to draw any distinction in principle between these cases and the case of a proviso for re-entry in case the assign of the lessee should enter into liquidation. I think the result, that covenants against assignment and provisoes for re-entry in the event of bankruptcy or liquidation stand on the same footing, is made clearer by considering what are the consequences following from a company entering into liquidation. By section 129 of the Companies Act, 1862, the company may be wound up, as in this case, by a special resolution, and by section 130 the winding-up is deemed to commence when the resolution is passed. By section 131, the special resolution having been passed, the company ceases to carry on its business except as far as may be required for its beneficial winding up; it is moribund, if not dead. By section 133 its property, after payment of creditors, must be distributed amongst its members, and by sub-section 7 of section 133 the liquidator may, without its being necessary to obtain any sanction from the court, exercise all the powers of the official liquidator; and amongst these powers is that given by section 95, enabling the liquidator to sell the real or other property to any person or company, or to sell the same in parcels. In the present case the original and confirmatory resolutions for winding up having been passed, it cannot be contested that liquidation has in fact been entered upon, and although it is true that the winding up has not been completed within the meaning of sections 142 and 143, I see no power in the company to undo what it has done. The winding up must go through, and must involve the dealing with the property of the company, including their interest in the premises in question, in the manner provided in the foregoing sections. I arrive, therefore, at the conclusion that the proviso for re-entry in case of the assigns of the original lessees entering upon liquidation applies, and that unless there is some other answer the plaintiffs can insist on re-entering.

I have now to consider the remaining, the fourth, point—namely, that no proper notice was given under section 14 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881. Was any such notice necessary? The answer to that question depends upon two considerations: (1) Is the liquidation in this case equivalent to a bankruptcy within sub-section 6 of section 14? And if so (2) What is the effect of sub-section 2 of section 2 of the amending Act of 1892? As to the first, I think, looking to the wide words of the interpretation section (2) of the Act of 1881 referring to bankruptcy, that liquidation is within the meaning of bankruptcy as interpreted by sub-section 6 of section 14 of the Act of 1881. It follows that, if the Act of 1892 has not effected a difference, the plaintiff company was not bound, as to this ground of forfeiture, to give notice at all. Has, then, the Act of 1892 made any difference? I think it has. I think the effect of section 2, sub-section 2, of that Act, which is very difficult of construction, is to take the case of forfeiture for bankruptcy or liquidation out of the cases in which notice is not necessary for one year from the bankruptcy or liquidation. If, then, notice is necessary, has it been given?

To determine the character of the required notice, what it shall contain and when it ought to be given, it is necessary to consider the scope of section 14 of the Act of 1881 as a whole. The object seems to be to require in the defined cases, (1) that a notice shall precede any proceeding to enforce a forfeiture, (2) that the notice shall be such as to give the tenant precise information of what is alleged against him and what is demanded from him, and (3) that a reasonable time shall after notice be allowed the tenant to act before an action is brought. The reason is clear; he ought to have the opportunity of considering whether he can admit the breach alleged; whether it is capable of remedy; whether he ought to offer any, and if so, what compensation; and finally, if the case is one for relief, whether he ought or ought not promptly to apply for such relief. In short, the notice is intended to give to the person whose interest it is sought to forfeit the opportunity of considering his position before an action is brought against him. The notice in question is dated the 29th of October, 1897, and alleges that the defendants, the company, had entered into liquidation; and, further, that they had broken the covenant to repair. It then proceeds to demand compensation, and gives notice that if the defendants fail to remedy the breaches within a reasonable time the plaintiffs will re-enter. To the notice is annexed a schedule requiring very extensive repairs to be done, which would require a considerable time to accomplish. This notice was served on the 2nd of November, and the writ in the action was served on the 4th of November. It is now admitted that the plaintiffs were not in a position to rely upon the alleged breach for non-repair. In these circumstances can this be said to be a proper notice within the Act? On the whole I think not. In the first place, if the entering upon liquidation had alone been put forward, the defendants would have had the opportunity of considering whether they had any answer, and, if not, whether they could make terms with the plaintiffs, but this was impracticable so long as the claim for breach of covenant to repair was made. Again, if non-repair was alone relied on, the defendants might possibly by offer of compensation accompanied by undertaking to repair, have made terms with the plaintiffs. Further, the statute clearly contemplates that a reasonable interval shall elapse after service of notice and before action. Can two days' notice be said, in all the circumstances, to be a reasonable notice? I think not. On the whole, therefore, I am of opinion that the notice was bad and did not comply with the condition precedent to action within section 14 of the Act of 1881.

Finally, as to the alleged breach by underletting. It is admitted that there has been no assignment within the meaning of the covenant against assignment. What has taken place is this. The defendants, having agreed to sell to the new company, have let them into possession pending the completion of the purchase, the new company undertaking to pay all rents, rates, and outgoings in connection with the premises or the business there carried on. There is a provision for redelivery of possession to the defendants if the contract should be rescinded. It is contended that this makes the new company the defendants' undertenants. But on what terms? The new company pay no rent to the defendants; they have undertaken no obligations to the defendants except those mentioned, which are not necessarily obligations of tenancy. But it is said the proper implication from these facts is that a tenancy at will has been created. Whether this may be technically so or not the practical answer to this contention seems to be that the defendants could not by the exercise of their will turn the new company out. The effective answer of the new company would be, "We have come in as purchasers, and we are willing to carry out our terms of purchase." In plain sense and according to the ordinary understanding of men, this is not a case of underletting at all, but merely a case in which the new company has been let in on terms of purchase. Had the covenant been (as is of late years often the case) against parting with possession without license of the landlord, the plaintiff company would have proved a breach of such a covenant, but they have not established a breach of the covenant in question, which is against underletting only. My learned brethren agree with this judgment. The appeal will therefore be allowed with costs.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Druces & Attlee.

Solicitor for the defendant Steiger, T. Durant.

Solicitor for the defendant company, P. Warner.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. } Byrne, J. } May 9.

SIXTH WEST KENT MUTUAL BUILDING SOCIETY v. HILLS. (a.)

Building society—Society known to be insolvent—Rule passed to enable society to facilitate realization—Rule ultra vires*—Breach of trust—Classes of shareholders—Distribution of assets.*

It is competent for a building society, even when in a state of insolvency, to pass a new rule for the purpose of facilitating the realization of the assets of the society, provided that such rule is bonâ fide passed for such purpose and does not affect the rights of the members of the society inter se in respect of their liability or in respect to the distribution of assets.

Trial of action.

This was an action by a building society against certain of its directors for a declaration that certain conveyances of property belonging to the society were ultra vires, and that the defendants were liable to account to the plaintiffs in respect of payment to a certain class of shareholders known as the C class at a time when there were no profits out of which payments could be made, and for all necessary accounts and inquiries.

The facts of the case were as follow: The plaintiff society was in 1878 duly registered under the Building Societies Act, 1874, as a terminating building society. In 1889 it was registered as a permanent building society. There were then classes of shares A, B, C. The A and B shares were subscription shares, the A shares being paid up gradually by instalments extending over a term of years, the B shares being subscribed by payment of one sum down, each sum maturing at the end of a term of years so as to entitle the holders to an advance or to repayment on withdrawal according to the rules of the amount paid with interest. The C shares were immediate advances to the society bearing a fixed rate of interest at 5 per cent. repayable on three months' notice on either side if the shares should have been in existence for twelve months, and having a preference over other shares in regard to interest.

The object of the society was to raise a fund for advances to be made to members on the security of freehold or leasehold estate by way of mortgage.

By the original rules all members were liable to contribute rateably to losses, and the right of withdrawal was regulated by rules 89 to 92 of the society's rules. These rules provided for repayment of subscriptions with interest to unadvanced members giving notice of withdrawal subject to certain deductions. In October, 1889, resolutions were passed making the society permanent and substituting for rules 89 to 92 a new section.

This new section provided: "After the 31st of December, 1890, no further advance shall be made upon shares then existing. From and after the passing of this rule the withdrawal of shares (other than C shares) by priority of notice shall cease, and all funds derived from repayment of advances, from realization of properties in possession, or any other source, shall be applied as follows: first to the expenses of management and the secretary's salary and the payment of capital and interest on C shares."

At the time when this new rule was made the society was in an insolvent condition and its members were aware that it would be necessary to dissolve it under the Building Societies Act, 1874.

A minute of the directors' meeting held on the 12th of December, 1888, showed that the secretary reported to the board that after properly weighing the matter concerning the close of the society in two years (the society as a terminating society would have closed in 1890) he had come to the conclusion that the best mode of securing reasonable and proper prices for the property on hand was to convert the society into a permanent one, thus obtaining the extension of time that might prove necessary for the accomplishment of this object.

No new members were admitted subsequently to the passing of the new rule in 1889, nor was any business transacted beyond protecting, getting in, and realizing assets. Prior to October, 1891, the society had taken possession of a number of properties in mortgage to it, and in October, 1891, the following new rule was passed:

"In order to facilitate the realization of any properties now or at any time in possession of the society, the directors shall have power to sell the same or any part thereof to any member, and receive in payment, either wholly or in part, any fully paid up or subscription shares held by the members, whether under notice of withdrawal or not, provided that such shares shall be taken subject to the deduction of any withdrawal fee in force for the time being.

"The directors shall have power to dispose of any properties now or at any time in possession to any depositor with the society, and to transfer until the usual notice of withdrawal any deposit standing in his name in payment or part payment of the same."

In accordance with this rule the directors proceeded to transfer to the shareholders property in exchange for shares on the basis of the valuation in the society's books, the difference being paid in cash. There was no evidence that in this transaction any shareholder had been treated more favourably than any other. The C shareholders had received interest in lieu of profits.

(a.) Reported by J. ARTHUR PRICE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

In 1894, upon a special case stated by consent for the opinion of the court as to the rights of the various classes of shareholders and Messrs. Shore, Hudson, and Blackmoor, Stirling, J., made an order appointing certain persons then before the court to represent the respective classes, and declaring that the C shares in the society in respect of which notice of withdrawal was not given before the change in the rules in October, 1889, were preferential as regards payment of interest only, and not as regards capital, but that the holders of C shares who gave notice to withdraw before the change of rules in October, 1889, were entitled to be preferred over the holders of shares who had not then given such notice, and that the new rule of October, 1889, was invalid, in so far as it varied any then subsisting rights of members. In 1896 the society was ordered to be dissolved under an award of the registrar of building societies, and a liquidator was appointed.

Neville, Q.C., and Sims, for the plaintiffs.—The rule of October, 1891, was ultra vires. Practically the business of the society stopped when the rule of October, 1889, was passed, for it was then admitted by the society themselves that they could no longer carry on business: In re Sunderland 36th Universal Building Society, 38 W. R. 509, 24 Q. B. D. 394; Strohmenger v. Borough of Finsbury Permanent Investment Society, 46 W. R. 69, [1897] 2 Ch. 469; Barnard v. Tomson, [1894] 1 Ch. 374.

Farwell, Q.C., and T. M. Stevens, for two of the defendants.—The rule was not ultra vires, for the society had power to alter their rules: Pépé v. City and Suburban Permanent Building Society, 41 W. R. 548, [1893] 2 Ch. 311. No doubt if the directors had not been acting bonâ fide in the distribution of the property, or if they had favoured one shareholder or one class of shareholders at the expense of another, they would have been acting ultra vires, and would have been liable for a breach of trust. All that they did was to divide assets in specie for the purpose of avoiding the expense of a sale by auction: Brett v. Monarch Investment Building Society, 42 W. R. 209, [1894] 1 Q. B. 367; Laing v. Reed, 18 W. R. 76, L. R. 5 Ch. App. 4.

Ashton Cross, for the two other defendants.

Neville, Q.C., replied.

The following cases were also cited in the argument: In re Kingston Cotton Mill Co., 44 W. R. 363, [1896] 1 Ch. 331; Reg. v. Braybrook, 69 L. T. Rep. 718.

BYRNE, J. (after stating the facts).—The terms of the special case before Stirling, J., agree with the conclusion that I have come to on the evidence before me in regard to the surrounding circumstances and the object and intention of the alteration of the rules in October, 1889. The result is to establish the right of the C shares to preference in respect of interest, to negative preference in respect of capital, and to determine, in accordance with the case of In re Sunderland 36th Universal Building Society, that the right of withdrawal by priority ceased in October, 1889, by reason of the condition of insolvency of the society. The main point which I have to consider is whether or not the rule of October, 1891, is invalid. In view of the decisions in Strohmenger v. Borough of Finsbury Permanent Investment Building Society and Pépé v. The City and Suburban Permanent Building Society, it is impossible to contend successfully that the right of a member of a building society like the present may not be varied by a new rule made under and in accordance with its statutory power of altering rules, and the rules may be varied so as to affect the rights of a member, even after he has given notice of withdrawal. But as was pointed out by the late Chitty, L.J., in Strohmenger v. Borough of Finsbury Permanent Investment Building Society, a rule must not change the constitution of the society, and the power of making and altering rules must be confined to the internal rights of the members of the society. In the same case it was also pointed out that there are obvious limits, which the learned judge did not attempt to define, as to the powers of making and altering rules which have to be considered as the cases arise. These were decisions in respect of the right of making rules, when no question of known insolvency at the time of making the rules had arisen.

I think that the case of the Sunderland 36th Universal Building Society only extends what had been held in Brownlie v. Russell, 8 App. Cas. 235, 31 W. R. Dig. 28, as to the effects of a winding-up order to a period anterior to the date of the actual order. In the case of In re Ambition Investment Building Society, 44 W. R. 141, upon a view of the prior authorities, it was held that a right of withdrawal under the rules came to an end when the society or its officers recognized that it must come to an end. In Barnard v. Tomson North, J., held that there were no materials for drawing a line earlier than the date of the instrument of dissolution. But in the present case it appears that at the alteration of the rules of 1889, and thenceforward, and at the date of the alteration in 1891 it was known to the officers and members of the society that the society was insolvent and that liquidation was inevitable.

It appears to me that as from the earlier date I have mentioned such of the existing rules as on the true construction of all the rules of the society were intended to operate so long only as the continuance of the society was contemplated ceased to have operation, and I consider that it follows by parity of reason that no rule could be passed altering the rights of the members of the society so as necessarily to affect their rights inter se in respect of liability, or in respect of distribution of assets, to the injury of some of such members for the benefit or advantage of others, even though it might be a rule properly made by a society not in contemplation of liquidation. I think, moreover, that in like manner it was incompetent to pass a rule conferring a power upon the directors, which, if exercised, must necessarily have a similar operation. On the other hand, I see no reason for holding that the right to alter rules was gone altogether, and I think that it was competent to make rules for facilitating the realization of the assets of the society, so long as such rules were bonâ fide passed for that purpose, and did not necessarily affect the rights of members in the way mentioned. I ought to say that there is no question in the present case as to the possibility of affecting the rights of outside creditors. A rule passed with the object and intention of facilitating realization, of avoiding the expense of a sale by auction, and of enabling the society to get rid of burdensome obligations, appears to me to be exactly the kind of rule which may be legitimately passed by a building society known to be insolvent as auxiliary to existing rules. Such a rule is not per se invalid, although in individual instances the exercise of the power conferred by it may be. Such a rule may, I think, be passed so long as it does not involve an alteration of the constitutional rights of members inter se or the rights of creditors. It is, however, obvious that if such rule is so exercised as to give unfair or undue advantage to individuals such exercise will constitute a breach of trust. It appears to me that the rule of October, 1891, was such a rule as I have referred to, and was not per se invalid inasmuch as it might be exercised so as to be advantageous to all members alike. I will assume as an illustration that an unadvanced member, who, under ordinary circumstances, would be entitled to withdraw and who would on withdrawal have been entitled to £1,000, has, by reason of the stoppage of the company's business, become entitled only in distribution of assets to his share pari passu with others (say, for example, a probable £500).

The society is in possession of a property standing in their books as worth £1,000, but in fact very much depreciated in value. The amount advanced on it is irrecoverable. It is only saleable to a member of the public by auction for £800, if saleable at all. If the society can sell to an unadvanced member for the £1,000, which stands in the books as the amount of his shares, they are no longer liable to pay him £500 in the distribution; they have secured a purchaser, and have saved the expense of an auction, possibly the expense of an abortive auction, and have arrived a stage nearer to the final distribution of assets. The purchasing member has, perhaps, made a good purchase, as he has got property which at one time was valued at £1,000, although no longer marketable at that price, but which may perhaps recover in value in course of time, in exchange for something equivalent to a right to payment of £500, but the society has gained also in the respects I have mentioned. I think each transaction must stand or fall on its own merits. If the directors can be shown under the rule to have favoured one shareholder at the expense of others, they have misused the power entrusted to them, and a fortiori if they have favoured a member of their own body, but in the absence of evidence proving a breach of duty towards the general body of shareholders they cannot be made liable. [His lordship proceeded to consider the claims against the different defendants in respect of the sales, and after dealing with them, continued:] The only remaining point is in reference to payment of interest on the C shares, but I think that such payment was in accordance with the contract with members holding C shares, and that the payments were not made in any way to the detriment of other members.

The whole result of my judgment is that the plaintiff society has failed and that the defendants against whom relief is asked are entitled to be paid their costs by the liquidator. There may be proper accounts taken in the cases I have referred to as to the indebtedness of individuals, subsequent costs being reserved.

Action dismissed.

Solicitors, Lumley & Lumley; Avery & Wolverson; Howard & Shelton; Essex, Bristow, & Co.

Q. B. Div.
(Grantham and Lawrance, JJ.) June 13.

ST. MARGARET'S AND ST. JOHN'S VESTRIES v. HOSKINS. (a.)

Metropolis—New building—Drainage—Building for the use of volunteers—Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), s. 75.

The appellants served a summons under section 75 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, upon the respondent, a builder, alleging that he had neglected to comply with their order that the lowest floor of a building in course of construction to be used as an armoury, storehouse, and drill hall by the 2nd Volunteer Battalion of Royal Fusiliers, and vested in their commanding officer, should be kept at such a level as would allow it to be drained into the public sewers.

The magistrate dismissed the summons on the ground that the premises were exempted from the provisions of the Act as being property vested in a servant of the Crown to be used exclusively for Crown purposes.

Held, on appeal, that the building was not exempt because it was intended for volunteer purposes, and that the matter must be remitted to the magistrate.

Special case stated by a Metropolitan police magistrate upon a summons taken out on behalf of the appellants—the united vestries of the two parishes—complaining that the respondent, F. C. Hoskins, a builder, did on the 1st of March, 1899, at 13, Tufton-street, neglect to comply with the order of the vestries ordering that the lowest floor of the building in course of construction be kept at such a level as would allow it to be drained into the public sewer.

The magistrate held that as the premises were to be used exclusively for volunteer purposes the provisions of the Act did not apply to them and dismissed the summons.

The vestries appealed.

W. O. Danckwerts, for the appellants.—Volunteer buildings do not belong to the Crown and must therefore comply with the Acts relating to ordinary buildings for the proper drainage of the Metropolis. The exemption in favour of Crown property in section 241 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, and section 116 of the Amendment Act of 1862 do not apply.

H. Avory, in support of the decision of the magistrate, cited Jay v. Hammond, 6 W. R. 41, 27 L. J. M. C. 25, and Pearson v. Holborn Assessment Committee, [1893] 1 Q. B. 389, 41 W. R. Dig. 165, and contended that unless expressly referred to the Crown was never bound by an Act of Parliament. These premises were in the same category as barracks, and the vestries had no power to dictate to the War Office how barracks should be put up. The building plans had received the sanction of the War Office. Since the decision in Pearson v. Holborn Assessment Committee, volunteers were recognized as being as much servants of the Crown as the militia. In that case it was held that premises occupied by a volunteer corps for the purposes of the service of the corps and being reasonably necessary for such service were occupied by servants of the Crown for the purposes of the Crown and therefore were exempted from rates. These premises were vested in Colonel Keller, the commanding officer of the battalion of volunteers for which they were being constructed, and were to be used only as a drill-hall, armoury, and storehouse for the corps. It was, therefore, a building vested in a servant of the Crown to be used exclusively for the purposes of the Crown.

GRANTHAM, J.—I regret that I cannot see my way in this case to decide in favour of the respondent, for it appears pretty certain from the facts found by the magistrate that this is one of those cases where vestries have interfered with a building without having any good cause for doing so. It appears that the basement or cellar of this building will be at a lower level than the main sewer, and of course it cannot be drained into the sewer if at any future time it should be found necessary to drain it from any cause whatever; but the magistrate said he did not see why this basement should require to be drained, and we have heard nothing to lead us to think that in this case he was wrong in the conclusion of fact he came to. At the same time that is not the point we have to decide. Mr. Avory contended that property for the use of volunteers was analogous to property belonging to the militia or the regular army as being her Majesty's property in right of the Crown. That contention is one which it appears to me cannot be supported, for how can it be said that this building and similar buildings, which in many cases are erected by private subscriptions, can be the property of the Crown? It is true that it is used for military purposes, but no case has been adduced to show that property used for military purposes only is necessarily Crown property. On this narrow ground the matter must go back to the magistrate, but for the reason I mentioned I should be very sorry if he should think it necessary under the circumstances to interfere.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

LAWRANCE, J.—I have considerable doubt as to this case. At the same time I am not prepared to hold that all property belonging to volunteers must in every case be regarded ipse facto as property belonging to her Majesty in right of the Crown. I agree, therefore, that this case should go back to the magistrate.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitor for the appellants, Percy Gates.

Solicitors for the respondent, Mackrel & Co.

Q. B. Div.
(Lord Russell of Killowen, C.J.) } May 10, 17.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. CARLTON BANK (LIMITED). (a.)

Revenue—Stamps—Receipts—Penalties—Entries of sums in book — Payment of sums—Entries initialled by person receiving money—Liability of entries to stamp duty as receipts—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), ss. 101, 103.

A bank, which was a limited company carrying on a moneylending business, engaged a solicitor under an agreement which made him an officer of the bank, for the purpose of carrying on the legal business of the bank and collecting debts due from customers. When the solicitor recovered sums of money for the bank he wrote down the amount in a book kept by him for that purpose, and he then took the money, with the book, to the bank and handed the amount over to one of the officers of the bank, who, in the margin opposite the amount paid, generally wrote the word "Received," with the amount and the date, and sometimes simply put his initials with the date, and in one case wrote the word "Entered," with the amount and initials.

Held, that these entries were all receipts within the meaning of section 101 of the Stamp Act, 1891; that there was no distinction in the form of the receipts, and that all the entries in respect of £2 or upwards required to be stamped as receipts; and that the bank were liable in penalties, under section 103, for the act of its officers in not stamping them.

Further consideration in an information by the Attorney-General claiming forty-eight penalties of £10 each from the defendants for not affixing stamps to certain receipts for sums of £2 and upwards.

The case was tried before the Lord Chief Justice and a jury on the 27th of March, when, upon the findings of the jury, it was reserved for further consideration.

The facts and questions raised appear fully in the considered judgment of the learned judge.

The Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), provides under the heading "Receipts," section 101 (1): "For the purposes of this Act the expression 'receipt' includes any note, memorandum, or writing, whereby any money amounting to two pounds or upwards, or any bill of exchange or promissory note for money amounting to two pounds or upwards, is acknowledged or expressed to have been received or deposited or paid, or whereby any debt or demand, or any part of a debt or demand, of the amount of two pounds or upwards, is acknowledged to have been settled, satisfied, or discharged, or which signifies or imports any such acknowledgment, and whether the same is or is not signed with the name of any person."

Section 103: "If any person—(1) gives a receipt liable to duty and not duly stamped . . . he shall incur a fine of ten pounds."

Sir R. Finlay, S.G., and Danckwerts, for the Crown.

Arthur O'Connor, Q.C., W. Graham, and Holloway, for the defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 17.—Lord RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN, C.J.—This is a case in which the Crown by information seek to recover a number of penalties against the defendants, the Carlton Bank, upon the ground that the bank issued or were responsible for the issuing of certain receipts, which required stamps, unstamped. The facts are these: The defendants are a limited company carrying on apparently the business principally of a money-lending bank, and they had in their employment under a peculiar kind of agreement the person who gave information in this case to the Inland Revenue, one George S. Coxwell. The agreement, which was dated the 20th of August, 1895, purported to appoint Coxwell the solicitor of the bank, to be an officer of the bank, the appointment to continue until determined by notice, as provided, by the bank, with a provision that he is to cease to be an officer of the bank in case of grave misconduct. The bank was to pay him a salary of £100 per annum, with certain provisions for increase, and to pay the rent of his office, cash for court fees and disbursements, and provide all books and stationery; the solicitor was to take the necessary steps to recover the debts due to the bank and to advise the bank; he was entitled to be paid certain travelling allowances while engaged in the business of the bank; the bank was to be entitled to his whole time, with a proviso that if not interfering with the business of the bank, he may, subject to their pleasure in the matter, attend to the business of other persons. I do not think that there is anything else in the agreement that is important. The course of business between Mr. Coxwell, as appointed solicitor and an officer of the bank, appears to have been this: When instructed he sued for and from time to time recovered amounts of money for the bank, and he seems to have kept his account with the bank in this form. The accounts as produced here are contained in two books, the first of which in order of date is headed thus: "Statement of moneys received by G. S. Coxwell from customers of the Carlton Bank and handed over to the bank." The course of business was this: When he received moneys on account of the bank it was his duty—a duty which he appears more or less regularly to have discharged—to pay over that money to the bank—that is to say, of course, to an officer of the bank, and the officer of the bank to whom he paid the money, sometimes the secretary of the bank and sometimes the cashier of the bank, having received the money initialled the amount and put a date evidencing the date on which he received the money. Sometimes that form was varied by having the word "received" added, and in one or two cases the word "entered" was used. So the matter goes on through the first book and is carried on into the continuation book, which book is entitled by Coxwell "Cash received book," and then a date is given for its commencement, and the words "G. S. Coxwell, 99, London-wall"—that being the office at which Coxwell carried on his business and not on the premises of the bank—that is to say, not in the place where the business of the bank was carried on. The contention on the part of the Crown was that each of these records—to use a neutral phrase—of the reception of these moneys by the officer of the bank constituted a receipt within the meaning of the Stamp Act, 1891, and required a stamp where the amount so recorded or acknowledged as received amounted to £2 or upwards. The only remaining thing necessary to state is that the jury found, in answer to questions put to them, these facts. When first asked a question as to whether what the representatives did was acting for the bank within the ordinary scope of their authority as agents of the bank, their answer was: "We are of opinion that these people"—meaning, I presume, the cashier and secretary—"did it as individuals to protect themselves against each other, and not to protect the bank"; and later, as they had not answered whether they did this in the ordinary course of business, they answered thus: "Yes; we are agreed that they were given"—that is these acknowledgments—"in the ordinary course of business as between one servant and another." These constitute all the facts of the case, and it was agreed that I should have power to draw any inference of fact not inconsistent with the findings of the jury to which I have adverted. Upon this state of facts three questions seem to me to arise. First, are these entries or any of them receipts within the meaning of section 101 of the Stamp Act of 1891? If they are receipts they require a stamp. That would seem to be the first important question. Next, if they or any of them are receipts and so require a stamp, are the defendants, the bank, liable to the penalty fixed by section 103 of the Act? That would seem to be the second question. The third and remaining question is, is any proper distinction to be drawn between the different instances, or do they all fall within the same category? I will say a word about each of these questions in the order in which I have stated them. First, are the entries or any of them receipts? That must turn upon what is the true construction of the statute itself, which provides—I omit immaterial words—that receipt includes any writing whereby any money amounting to £2 or upwards is acknowledged or expressed to have been received or deposited or paid, or whereby any debt or part of a debt of £2 or upwards is acknowledged to have been settled, satisfied, or discharged, or which signifies or imports any such acknowledgment, and whether the same is or is not signed with the name of any person. I need not point out that those are words of the most wide and comprehensive kind. To apply the facts here to that provision, first, it is clear, as it seems to me, that these entries were intended to be and in fact were an acknowledgment by an officer of the bank, who had authority to receive for the bank, that he had in fact received the money in question from the solicitor, and that the officer of the bank receiving had so received for the bank. In other words it would follow that the entries in that book when initialled by the officer of the bank constituted an acquittance pro tanto to the solicitor in respect of the money he paid—that is to say, the solicitor having received the money and being under a liability to account for that money, and indeed if he was a servant of the bank in the strict sense of the word being liable to prosecution if he embezzled the money and did not properly account for it, the entries in these books constituted an answer to any demand made upon him in respect of such money. Such entries entitled him to say, "Here is the evidence under the hand of your own officer, who was entitled to receive the money, that I have in point of fact discharged myself of that obligation." Can I say that that is not a receipt within the meaning of these comprehensive words? Can I say that it is not a receipt within both clauses of that section 101—namely, can I say that it is not a writing acknowledging or expressing the receipt or payment of £2 or upwards? Or can I say that it is not a writing whereby a debt or part of a debt is acknowledged to have been paid? It seems to me after careful consideration, and I confess, beginning with the impression that this was not a transaction which the Legislature probably contemplated as requiring a stamp, I have felt myself obliged by the force of the language of this section to come to the conclusion that these are receipts within the meaning of that section. Something was said during the argument on both sides as to there being special canons of construction applicable to these Revenue Acts. I confess I do not accept that argument at all. I see no reason why there should be any special canons of construction in respect of any particular Acts of Parliament. The duty of the court in all cases, whether relating to taxation or to any other subject, is to give effect to the view of the Legislature as that view is to be gathered from the language that has been employed, having regard to the context in connection with which it is employed. That is a canon of universal application and I am not aware that there is any true authority for saying that a taxing statute is to be differently construed from any other. Of course it is incumbent on those who invoke its authority to make out to the satisfaction of the tribunal, and for that tribunal to be satisfied, that the will of Parliament enforcing the tax has been expressed, but if the court arrives at that conclusion that its will has been expressed in a particular direction the court must give effect to it. Let me test the view I am expressing in this matter by this illustration. If in this case instead of being in the service of the bank under a more or less exceptional agreement, Coxwell had been a solicitor employed as solicitors usually are, to do the business of the bank, and having recovered moneys for the bank he had to hand these moneys over and take an acknowledgment in writing. It would be beyond argument that in such a case the acknowledgment in writing must be stamped. Is there anything in the circumstances of that case which in principle differentiates the present from it? Of course there are differences between the position of an independent solicitor and the position of Coxwell in this case. For instance, the independent solicitor, once he received money from the bank would be absolute debtor to the bank and would be bound in all events or whatever happened to account to the bank for every penny that he received, and, on the other hand, he could not be treated as the servant of the bank so as to be punished by prosecution for embezzlement if he appropriated the money to his own use. In the present case probably—it is not necessary to decide it—Coxwell might be held to be properly regarded as the servant of the bank, so that he would be liable to be prosecuted for embezzlement

(a.) Reported by Sir SHERSTON BAKER, Bart., Barrister-at-Law.

if he did not account for the money, and also he would not, in my judgment as at present advised, be absolutely the debtor to the bank in the same sense in which the independent solicitor would be, because if he were to be regarded as the servant of the bank and he received the money for the bank, and without any neglect on his part the money had been lost or stolen, it seems to me he would not have been liable in respect of such loss occurring without any default upon his part; but these are the only differences. It does not seem to me that they are differences which distinguish the two cases in principle, having regard to the application of the statute in question. I am inclined to think that the case of the carter and the case of the various clerks—referred to during the argument—using multiform invoices in shops are distinguishable from the present case, and for this main reason, that in those cases the entries are in the course of business for the mere regulating of book-keeping, and are not regarded as documents of acquittance handed over to the person who pays. For instance, in the case of the carter the book is the book of the company or his employer, and remains in the possession of the employer except for the purpose of deliveries and receipt of money for which it may be handed temporarily to the carter, but he does not take that book and it is not given to him as an acquittance or acknowledgment. So in the case of the multiform invoices in shops where the money passes or may pass through several hands, and there may be an initialling of the receipt in the same way, although the documents are undoubtedly to regularize the accounts, and are necessary to be referred to to show how this or that employé has dealt with the money, they are not treated as receipts given to that person within the meaning of the Act. When we look at the language of the Act, I think the distinction I am here drawing is not technical, but is a real one, because the words of the earlier part of the clause are "a receipt whereby any money is acknowledged or expressed"—that is, to somebody—"to have been received or deposited or paid, or whereby any debt or demand," and so on, "is acknowledged to have been settled, satisfied, or discharged." Then in the penalty clause, section 103, "If any person gives a receipt"—that means, if he hands over a receipt as acquittance or discharge to a particular person—then he shall be liable to the penalty. Here it is clear that this was given to Coxwell and was kept by him as evidence of the payment, in other words as a receipt which he is able to produce. The headings of the book bear out that view, and the fact that the book is kept by him and returned to him and is not in the custody of the bank at all or the officers of the bank, except during the moment of initialling, also supports that view. I therefore come to the conclusion that these are receipts, or some of them are, within the meaning of the Act, and require stamps. The next question is, Is the bank liable? It is clear that under section 103 the person, which of course includes, under the Interpretation Act of 1889, corporations, who is liable is the person who gives the receipt, and therefore of course it follows that in order that the bank should be made liable it must be their receipt. But they are a limited company and their receipt can only be given by the officers of the bank, by persons representing the bank acting within the scope of their authority as such officers of the bank. I have already intimated that these men who received the money had the bank's authority to receive it. When they received it, it was practically a payment to and a reception by the bank. Now what is the effect, in considering this question, which ought properly to be given to the findings of the jury? Their findings are these: First, "We are of opinion that these people did it as individuals to protect themselves against each other, and not to protect the bank." It may be that that was the motive with which that was done by those representing the bank, but that by no means concludes the question. The question is, What in fact did they do? What they did was this: Being officers of the bank entitled to receive the money, they gave in ordinary course these acknowledgments which I have already intimated in my opinion were receipts within the meaning of the Act. The further finding of the jury was, "We are agreed that they were given in the ordinary course of business as between one servant and another"—that is, that they were given for the regularizing of the accounts as between the servants. That may be their motive, but they did these acts as representing the bank, and having power to bind the bank by the acts which they so did, and they did this in the ordinary course of business. It does not seem to me, therefore, that there is anything in these findings of the jury inconsistent with the inference that the officers of the bank did this with the knowledge and authority of the bank; but when it is remembered that the persons who did these things were the cashier and the secretary of the bank, the inference which seems to me proper to be drawn is that it was done with the knowledge and authority of the bank. If any other view were to be taken it would open a very wide door to fraud, and it would defeat the objects of the Legislature in imposing this tax if it were to be said that although these things were done in the ordinary course of business and were within the authority of the cashier and secretary to do, and although they had the effect of giving effectual acquittances to the person to whom they were given on receipt of the money, the bank might turn round and say that it was a matter merely between these officers of the bank and not a transaction to which the bank was in any real sense a party. I think the bank was a party, and must be taken in my judgment to have concurred in what was done.

The only remaining question is, Is there any distinction to be drawn between these cases, or do they all fall within the same category? In my judgment they all fall within the same category. Apart altogether from authority I think the language of the statute itself makes it clear that no formal words are required. I recur again to those words "receipt includes any note or writing whereby any money amounting to two pounds or upwards is acknowledged or expressed to have been received or paid, or whereby any debt or demand . . . is acknowledged to have been settled or discharged, or which signifies or imports any such acknowledgment, and whether the same is or is not signed with the name of any person." It seems to me that those words cover the present case, and no particular or formal words are necessary to constitute these documents receipts if they signify or import acknowledgment within the meaning of the Act. It seems to me they import acknowledgment within the meaning of section 101 whether the document is merely initialled, or whether there are initials plus the word "entered," or initials plus the word "received." I therefore think there is no proper distinction to be drawn between these cases.

The result will be that there will be judgment for the Crown, and I hope that this is a case in which the Inland Revenue authorities will be well advised not to press for the whole of these penalties, as I think it was a case in which those acting for the bank in the circumstances of this case may well honestly have supposed that they were violating no provision of the law in doing what they did. I think in such circumstances the Inland Revenue ought to be advised not to exact the full measure of the penalties to which in point of law and according to my judgment they are entitled.

Judgment for the Crown for £480, being a penalty of £10 on each of the forty-eight counts.

Solicitor for the Crown, The Solicitor of Inland Revenue.

Solicitor for the defendants, S. J. Debenham.

Q. B. Div. (Wright and Bruce, JJ.) } Feb. 27; March 29.

HARFORD v. LYNSKEY. (a.)

Municipal corporation—Election—Nomination—Candidate—Right to petition—Disqualification existing at date of nomination—Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), ss. 77, 88.

The petitioner and the respondent were duly nominated as candidates for election to the office of councillor for a ward of a municipal borough. The petitionsr was, at the time of his nomination, interested in a contract with the corporation of the borough. At the hearing of objections to nomination papers the respondent objected to the petitioner's nomination on the ground that his interest in such contract disqualified him (under section 12 (1) (c) of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882) for election. The mayor allowed the objection, and the respondent, being the only other candidate, was declared to be elected as on an uncontested election. On a petition being presented by the petitioner against the return of the respondent, it was admitted, on the authority of Pritchard v. Mayor, &c., of Bangor, 37 W. R. 103, 13 App. Cas. 241, that the mayor had no jurisdiction to entertain the objection, but it was contended that the petitioner, being disqualified at the date of the nomination, was not entitled as a candidate (within the meaning of sections 77 and 88 of the Act) to present a petition.

Held, that, although the petitioner was disqualified for nomination as well as for election, yet, having been nominated in proper form, he was a "candidate" and entitled to present the petition.

Monks v. Jackson, 1 C. P. D. 683, 25 W. R. Dig. 110, distinguished.

Special case stated for the opinion of the court in the matter of an election petition touching an election for the office of councillor for the South Scotland Ward of the City of Liverpool.

The case was stated by a barrister agreed upon by the parties pursuant to an order of Bruce, J.

The City of Liverpool is a city to which the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, applies, and is divided into twenty-eight wards, one of which is called the South Scotland Ward. This ward is represented in the city council by three councillors, and one of such councillors goes out of office on the 1st of November in each year.

On the 18th of October, 1898, the town clerk of the said city duly published notice in the words of Form H. in Part II. of Schedule VIII. of the Municipal Corportions Act, 1882, that the last day for the delivery of nomination papers for the nomination of candidates at the then ensuing election for the said ward was the 24th of October, 1898; that candidates must be duly qualified for the office to which they were nominated; and that the lord mayor would attend at the Town Hall on the 25th day of October to hear and decide objections to nomination papers.

On the 24th of October a nomination paper was duly delivered at the town clerk's office by which the petitioner being a person enrolled and entitled to be enrolled as a burgess was nominated as a candidate for the said office. Such nomination paper was in all respects in accordance with the rules contained in Part II. of Schedule III. of the said Act.

The respondent and one Patrick Kelly were also duly nominated as candidates for the said office, but Kelly afterwards duly withdrew his said nomination, and thereupon ceased to be a candidate at the election. At the hearing, on the 25th of October, 1898, by the lord mayor of objections to nomination papers the respondent handed in an objection to the nomination paper of the petitioner on the ground "that he is now a contractor to and with the Liverpool Corporation, and is directly interested in contracts with the said corporation for the supply of police uniform requisites. One of such contracts is dated the 5th of November, 1896, and continues to run until the 31st of December, 1898." The petitioner was heard in answer to the objection, and thereupon explained that there had been only one contract such as referred to in the objection, and that he had assigned all interest in that contract to one William Drew, and contended that the question of his alleged disqualification did not affect his nomination and could only affect his election in the event of his being elected. Notwithstanding this contention the Lord Mayor allowed the said objection.

The petitioner and his partner in a firm of F. J. Harford & Co. had entered into a written contract with the corporation of the date and running for the period mentioned in the respondent's objection for the supply of certain articles of clothing for the police. The contract contained a prohibition against assigning or transferring the contract without the consent of the corporation. On the 23rd and 24th of October, 1898 (before the delivery of the petitioner's nomination paper as aforesaid) the said firm made verbal arrangements with the said William Drew to take over and carry out in all respects the said contract, and on the 24th of October notice in writing thereof was given to the said town clerk by the said firm and by Drew. Such arrangements were made without the consent of the corporation.

On the 27th of October there was a meeting of the council at which the petitioner intended to apply for the consent of the said corporation to the assignment by the said firm of all their interest under the said contract to the said Drew. The petitioner abandoned such intention after and in consequence of the said decision of the said lord mayor. No such application was in fact made at that meeting by the petitioner or the said Drew. Such consent of the said corporation was given subsequently to the 1st of November, 1898.

On the 1st of November, 1898, an election was held to fill ordinary vacancies in the office of councillor for the different wards of the said city, and on that day the respondent was declared to be elected as being the only person validly nominated for the said South Scotland Ward.

On the 14th of November, 1898, the petitioner duly presented a petition praying that it might be determined that the respondent was not duly elected.

The questions for the opinion of the court were:

1. Whether, upon the facts above stated, the petitioner was a candidate at the above election and was duly nominated and entitled to present this petition.

2. Whether, upon the facts above stated, the lord mayor was right in allowing the said objection.

Macmorran, Q.C. (S. H. Day with him), for the petitioner.—As to the second question, it is clear that the lord mayor had no jurisdiction to entertain the objection: it was not an objection to the nomination paper, and it is only such objections, and not objections relating to the qualifications of candidates, that are to be determined by the mayor: Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, s. 55, and third schedule, Part II., rule 9; Howes v. Turner, 1 C. P. D. 670, 24 W. R. Dig. 103; Pritchard v. Mayor, &c., of Bangor, 37 W. R. 103, 13 App. Cas. 241. The petitioner is entitled to present this petition: a petition may be presented by "a person alleging himself to have been a candidate at the election" (Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, s. 88 (1)); and candidate means "a person elected or having been nominated or having declared himself a candidate for election" (ib. s. 77); the petitioner is within the two last descriptions, and, although disqualified at the time of the nomination, he might have got rid of the disqualification in the interval between nomination and election.

(a.) Reported by T. R. COLQUHOUN DILL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Robson, Q.C. (Coward with him), for the respondent.—We do not dispute that the mayor had no jurisdiction to entertain this objection. The petitioner was not a candidate within the meaning of section 88 (1), and he is not entitled to petition. To be a candidate a person must be qualified to be elected. The form of notice of election (Form H. in the eighth schedule to the Act) states that "candidates must be duly qualified for the office to which they are nominated." The petitioner was at the time of nomination disqualified under section 12 (1) (c) by reason of his interest in a contract with the corporation. His wrongful act in putting himself forward as a candidate when he was disqualified cannot give him a right to petition which he would not otherwise possess. Monks v. Jackson, 1 C. P. D. 683, supports the view that an election cannot be questioned on the petition of a person whose candidature was not regular.

Macmorran, Q.C., in reply.—In Monks v. Jackson there had been no valid nomination at all: here the petitioner was duly nominated and his disqualification was temporary only, and might have been removed before the day of election. If it were not so removed his opponents could have given notice to the voters of the disqualification, and the votes given for him would be thrown away; and if he was elected they could petition on the ground of his disqualification (section 87 (1) (c)). In the Bristol case (Simeon on Elections, pp. 47, 51), it was held, in the case of a parliamentary election, that a qualification acquired during the poll itself was sufficient.

Cur. adv. vult.

March 29.—The judgment of the court (WRIGHT and BRUCE, JJ.) was delivered by

WRIGHT, J.—On the 24th of October, 1898, the petitioner and the respondent were nominated in proper form for election to the office of councillor for a ward in the city of Liverpool. The respondent objected to the petitioner's nomination on the ground that the petitioner was then interested in contracts with the corporation, and was therefore disqualified by section 12 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, which enacts that "a person shall be disqualified for being elected and for being a councillor" if and while he is so interested. The lord mayor allowed the objection, and thereupon the respondent became the only person standing nominated, and on the 1st of November he was declared by the returning officer elected as upon an uncontested nomination. The petitioner admits that at the time of his nomination he was interested in contracts with the corporation, but he contends that he could and would have got rid of his disqualification before the day fixed for the poll, and was therefore not disqualified for nomination; and he contends that at any rate the lord mayor was wrong in entertaining the objection, and the returning officer wrong in declaring the respondent elected as upon an uncontested election. It is now admitted that, having regard to the case of Pritchard v. Mayor, &c., of Bangor, the lord mayor must be taken to have had no power to entertain an objection of this kind, and although the returning officer was bound to act on the lord mayor's allowance of the objection, and was bound to declare the respondent elected as upon an uncontested nomination, yet it seems clear that the election and the declaration of it were voidable on petition, if it is shown on petition that the lord mayor rejected a nomination which he had no power to reject; and the petition, if it had been brought by voters, must have succeeded to the extent of unseating the respondent and rendering a fresh election necessary. We have to determine whether the same consequence ought not to follow upon the petition of the excluded candidate; and this involves, or may involve, the determination of two questions—the first, whether this petitioner was disqualified for nomination; and the second, whether, if so disqualified, he can maintain this petition, as voters could have done, so far as to unseat the respondent, who had been wrongly declared elected.

With respect to the first question we have not been able to find any authority in point. No case of the kind seems to have occurred under the Municipal Corporations Acts; and the cases of parliamentary elections to which we have been referred, or which are collated in Hatsell's Precedents, Sir Thomas Erskine May's Parliamentary Practice, and the old editions of Rogers on Elections, do not throw any light on the matter. They are mostly cases where the disqualification was not for election, but for sitting or voting. In the absence of any guide we think it safest to hold that, in cases of elections under the Municipal Corporations Acts, a person who at the time of nomination is disqualified for election in the manner in which this petitioner was disqualified, is disqualified also for nomination. The nomination is for this purpose an essential part of the election, and if there are no competitors it of itself constitutes the election by virtue of the express words of section 56. A different construction might produce much confusion. On the nomination day no one could know whether the persons nominated will at the poll be effective candidates or not. It is true that in the case put the disqualification may be removed before the election is completed, but what is to be the effect, if the disqualification continues until the poll begins, or until the middle of the polling day, or till the close of the poll? Will votes given before the removal of the disqualification be valid? If not, how is the number of them to be ascertained? It seems to us unreasonable to hold that the Act means to leave the matter in such a state of uncertainty; and for these reasons we think that this petitioner was disqualified for nomination or election. It is not necessary to say whether the same conclusion would follow if the disqualification were such as must necessarily cease at a time between nomination and poll, as, for instance, if a person were nominated on the last day of his minority for a poll to take place on a future day.

On the second question there is not less difficulty. The 88th section of the Act provides that "an election petition may be presented either by four or more persons, who voted or had a right to vote at the election, or by a person alleging himself to have been a candidate at the election." By the 77th section the word "candidate" is for the purposes of Part IV. of the Act (in which both these sections are included), interpreted as follows: "'Candidate' means a person elected, or having been nominated, or having declared himself a candidate, for election." By Schedule VIII., Form H, the notice of election which is to be given by the town clerk under section 54 is to state that "candidates must be duly qualified for the office to which they are nominated." The question which we have now to decide depends primarily on the construction of section 88. The words "a person alleging himself to have been a candidate" cannot, of course, mean that a mere allegation without any colour of foundation in fact would suffice. Such a merely false allegation would be properly dealt with in a summary way. But the words used seem designed to express something wider than absolutely valid candidature, and they are at any rate consistent with the view that any person who was in fact a candidate may present and maintain a petition, just as persons who voted in fact may do whether or not they had a right to vote. Nor does there seem to be any sufficient reason why words should be limited even to persons who have been in fact nominated in due form. It is quite possible that an intended nomination of a person may have fallen through or have been prevented in such a way that the election of another person may have been invalid, as, for instance, if the town clerk refused to supply a nomination paper, or if, by design or negligence, he, in exercising his important duty under Schedule III., Part II., rule 6, filled up a nomination paper so imperfectly as to avoid the nomination, or if, as in Howes v. Turner, he issued a bad notice of election, and in any such case it can hardly have been intended to deprive the aggrieved person of the right to petition. Such a construction is, further, the only one which will fit the interpretation of "candidate" in section 77. Possibly that interpretation was inserted for a different purpose—namely, to define the limits of time within which a person should be affected by the enactments relating to corrupt or illegal practices, but there is nothing which expressly limits section 77 to that purpose, and there seems to be no reason why it should not be applied to section 88, as primâ facie it ought to to be. And if this is the proper construction of section 88, either as taken by itself or as interpreted by section 77, it does not seem to be affected by the form of notice in Schedule VIII., Form H, which is not intended as a definition of a candidate or as of itself an enactment of any kind, but is a mere notice calling attention to the enactments of the statute; and if literally construed it is irrelevant, because it refers not to disqualification, but to qualification, and here the petitioner was qualified under section 11, though he was disqualified under section 12. But then it is said that, assuming the primâ facie meaning of section 88 to be in favour of the petitioner, such a construction ought to be rejected because it may produce inconvenient or unreasonable consequences. For instance, in the present case a person who was disqualified for election will unseat a person who, if the election had proceeded, either would have been validly elected or, if defeated, could on petition have unseated the present petitioner. Such an argument, ab inconveniente, ought not to be allowed to override the proper construction of the language of the Act unless the inconvenience is clear and great. The same result would have followed if voters had been the petitioners. An election petition is not simply a matter between the parties, but is of public concern, and if the election had proceeded as it ought to have done the respondent might not have been elected, and although in that case he could have unseated the petitioner he might not have been able to claim the seat. Nor is the argument ab inconveniente all in favour of the respondent. If his contention is right a petition may be brought by a person who is believed by himself and by everyone else not to be disqualified, and who was properly nominated, and yet after a long trial it may turn out that he was not qualified to be a candidate or was disqualified, and therefore, if the respondent's contention is right, it would seem that the petition must abate, no matter what transactions of public concern may be involved, and no other petition could in most cases be brought. For these reasons, if the matter were entirely clear of authority, we should be of opinion that this petitioner, having been in fact a candidate duly nominated in point of form, is entitled to maintain this petition.

But it is contended that the case of Monks v. Jackson, decided in 1876, on the repealed Municipal Elections Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 40), and the Corrupt Practices (Municipal Elections) Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 60), is inconsistent with this view. There the returning officer had allowed an objection to the petitioner's nomination on the ground that his nominators were not duly qualified, and the petition sought to unseat the respondent on the ground that that objection was unfounded and ought to have been disallowed. The respondent contested the petitioner's right to petition on the ground that the petitioner himself had not in fact been nominated in due form. The petitioner in effect replied that this point had been raised at the nomination and disallowed by the returning officer, and that by the express terms of the Act of 1875, s. 1 (3), that disallowance was final. A case was stated, and it was held by Lord Coleridge, C.J., and by Archibald, J., that the petitioners had not been effectively nominated in point of form; and that notwithstanding the express terms of the Act of 1875, s. 1 (3), this was fatal to the petitioners' right to petition. During the argument, Archibald, J., is reported to have said: "The petitioners must show that they were entitled to be candidates"; and Lord Coleridge, C.J., to have said: "If, upon the face of the case, it appears that there is a fatal objection to your being petitioners, are we not to decide upon that matter?" In giving judgment dismissing the petition, Lord Coleridge said: "The case shows on the face of it that the petitioners were not duly nominated as candidates, and had no right to go to the poll, and that if they had been elected their election must have been set aside. . . . It appearing on the face of the case that the petitioners were not duly nominated, there is no ground for questioning the election of the respondents"; and Archibald, J., said: "The petitioners are shown not to be qualified to appear to question the validity of the election." We are unable to discover any material difference between the language of the Acts on which Monks v. Jackson was decided, and the language of the Act of 1882, on which this case depends, and although the considerations which have led us to a conclusion in favour of the present petitioner's right to maintain his petition were not presented to the court in Monks v. Jackson, we ought to follow the decision in that case if it can be supported since the Bangor case (see per Lord Herschell, 13 App. Cas., at p. 257), and if it is in point. We think, though not without doubt, that it is not in point. The decision was that the petitioner had not been nominated in fact, and therefore was not qualified to petition. Here the petitioner was duly nominated in fact. His nomination was in form regular, and he was, therefore, a candidate, and in our opinion qualified to maintain this petition—not, of course, for the purpose of claiming the seat, but for the purpose of showing that there was no valid election, as any of the persons who voted at the election might have done, whether they had a right to vote or not. Our decision does not involve the proposition that in every case a person whose nomination has been rejected on the ground of disqualification or want of qualification can maintain a petition. We do not understand it to be laid down in the Bangor case that a nomination cannot ever be rejected except for informality in the form or presentation of it. If the nomination paper is on the face of it a mere abuse of the right of nomination, or an obvious unreality, as, for instance, if it purported to nominate a woman or a deceased sovereign, there can be no doubt that it ought to be rejected, and no petition could be maintained in respect of its rejection.

Judgment for the petitioner.

Solicitors for the petitioner, Pritchard & Sons, for Collins, Robinson, & Driffield, Liverpool.

Solicitors for the respondent, Sharpe, Parker, Pritchards, & Barham.

House of Lords.

From C. A. (England). Feb. 16.

Midland Railway v. Loseby and Another. (a.)

Railway—Traffic—Arbitration—Charges—Reasonableness—Midland Railway Order Confirmation Act, 1891, s. 5.

By section 5 of the Midland Railway Order Confirmation Act, 1891, the railway company were empowered to charge a reasonable sum for certain additional services rendered to a trader at his request or for his convenience, and "any difference" arising thereunder was to be determined by an arbitrator appointed by the Board of Trade.

Held, that all matters material and incidental to such a difference are within the competence of the arbitrator, whose decision is final.

London and North-Western Railway v. Donellan, [1898] 2 Q. B. 7, 46 W. R. Dig. 147, approved.

Decision of the Court of Appeal affirmed.

This was an appeal from an order of the Court of Appeal (A. L. Smith and Chitty, L.JJ.) in the matter of an arbitration between the appellant company and the respondents.

Under section 5 of the Midland Railway Order Confirmation Act, 1891, "The company may charge for the services hereunder mentioned, or any of them, when rendered to a trader at his request or for his convenience, a reasonable sum by way of addition to the tonnage rate. Any difference arising under this section shall be determined by an arbitrator to be appointed by the Board of Trade at the instance of either party. Provided that where before any service is rendered to a trader he has given notice in writing to the company that he does not require it, the service shall not be deemed to have been rendered at the trader's request or for his convenience."

The 4th sub-section provides: "The detention of trucks, or the use or occupation of any accommodation, before or after conveyance, beyond such period as shall be reasonably necessary for enabling the company to deal with the merchandize as carriers thereof or the consignor or consignee to give or take delivery thereof; or, in cases in which the merchandize is consigned to an address other than the terminal station, beyond a reasonable period from the time when notice has been delivered at such address that the merchandize has arrived at the terminal station for delivery; and services rendered in connection with such use and occupation."

In January, 1895, the appellant company gave to the respondents notice by a circular letter that, as great and continued delays had taken place in discharging loaded coal and coke wagons, involving the appellants in serious expense and impeding the working of the appellants' sidings, yards, and stations, advice would be given daily to the respondents of the arrival of any wagons consigned to them, and that four days would be allowed to the respondents to unload each wagon, exclusive of the day of arrival, and that in the event of any wagon not being unloaded within that period the respondents would, on and from the 1st of March following, be required to pay siding or standage rent at the rate of 6d. per day or part of a day for every wagon not so unloaded and remaining on the appellants' premises. The respondents objected to the charge as unreasonable, and the Board of Trade appointed Major-General C. S. Hutchinson as arbitrator, who, considering his powers limited, and rejecting evidence as to whether the period of four days was reasonable, by his award dated the 28th of February, 1898, directed that 6d. should be paid for the first day, 4½d. for the second day, and 3d. for the third and each succeeding day.

The appellants took out a summons to enforce the award.

The matter was referred back to the arbitrator by the Court of Appeal.

Cripps, Q.C., and W. J. Noble, for the appellants.

Lawson Walton Q.C. (Willes Chitty and Gilchrist Alexander with him), for the respondents.

Lord Macnaghten.—This appeal is an appeal in substance, though not in form, from a decision in the case of the London and North-Western Railway Co. v. Donellan. I do not think you will have any hesitation in affirming the decision in this case and agreeing with the decision which was arrived at by A. L. Smith, L.J., and by that admirable judge whose lamented death has deprived the bench of England of a very great lawyer and of one of its chiefest ornaments.

Notwithstanding the very ingenious argument that we have heard from counsel for the appellants, I think the case is really a very simple one. The provisional order which was confirmed by the Act of Parliament authorizes the company to make charges—reasonable charges—in respect of certain specified services; and then the section goes on to say: "Any difference arising under this section shall be determined by an arbitrator to be appointed by the Board of Trade at the instance of either party." I cannot imagine wider words than those. "Any difference"—of course, it must arise under the section—is to be referred to the arbitrator, and by him is to be determined. I understand that to mean "finally determined"—determined once for all; and I think, in determining it, it is open to the arbitrator to investigate and to determine any question which is incidental to that which is referred to him, which he must determine in order to determine finally the point in difference. I agree entirely with what A. L. Smith, L.J., said—namely, that the duty of the arbitrator "is to adjudicate upon the whole matter once and for all, and that it is not the true reading of the sections to say that a court of law is to be invoked as regards some matters, and that the arbitrator is to be called in with regard to others." I also agree with what Chitty, L.J., said: "It appears to me that all the matters which are material for the decision of a difference arising under the section, whatever the difference may be, are within the competence of an arbitrator appointed by the Board of Trade to decide." I think it would be very much to be regretted if some of these questions were referred to one tribunal and some to another. For my own part, I think if that is the real meaning of the section it would have been very much better if Parliament had not interfered at all. I think the expense and delay of dealing with the matter piecemeal, as counsel for the appellants proposed, would be something to be regretted. I do not think it is necessary to go minutely into the sections. That duty has been performed very fully and very ably by A. L. Smith, L.J. I will simply move your lordships that this appeal be dismissed.

(a.) Reported by C. H. Grafton, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Lord MORRIS.—I am of the same opinion, and I confess, except for the difference of opinion entertained by judges for whom one has very great respect, the case would appear to me to be rather a plain one. Section 5 enables the company to charge for services ultra their tonnage rates, and whenever any difference shall arise under this section the matter is to be determined by an arbitrator selected by the Board of Trade. When we come to sub-section 4 of that section we find that the company are entitled to charge for the use and occupation of their premises for a period ultra the time at which the consignee ought reasonably to have taken delivery; that is the period fixed for which the company are entitled to charge. The period fixed for which they are entitled to recover is the time ultra the period at which the consignee should take delivery. That is left general, and at the conclusion of this argument—I have repeatedly put the question, and I have not been satisfied with any answer I have heard—I fail to know how any human being can enter upon that inquiry until he has first fixed upon the terminus a quo from which he is to start. What is to be his starting-point? It is given in those general terms in the section; those general terms must be reduced to a certainty. By whom? By the arbitrator before whom the case is pending on the application of the company who applied for the appointment of the arbitrator, and upon their demand for a charge ultra that to which alone they would apparently be ordinarily entitled—namely, their tonnage rate. It is said that that must be decided by some court of law. How could it be decided by a court of law? If the company brought an action in a court of law, they would bring an action not to decide the time—that would be an element—but to decide how much they were to get, and the whole thing would be decided by the court of law—namely, the time, and, as following from the time, the amount which the company should recover. But in this case, as the matter is brought by the railway company themselves before the arbitrator, it is essential, as it appears to me, that he must first decide what time he is to start from in order to arrive at a conclusion as to what sum the trader is to pay to the company. It appears to me that that is the starting-point, and that he must decide that, and that it is quite competent for him to decide it. That is what the section of the Act of Parliament, in my opinion, very plainly says; and in addition to that, if one were to use a priori arguments about it, I would say it would be the most excellent solution, that an arbitrator—a man of eminence and experience in such matters—would be a much more competent tribunal, and the Legislature would have acted wisely in trusting it to him rather than to a catch jury, at the trial before a judge and jury.

I am clearly of opinion that the judgment of the Appeal Court should be affirmed.

Lord SHAND.—I do not suppose that there is any difficulty on the part of any of your lordships in affirming the decision which has been now appealed against. For my part, I should regret very much if any other decision were pronounced on this question, because I think nothing would be more lamentable in the conduct of business of this kind than that it should be found, when a trader had a dispute with regard to matters of this description with a railway company, that he had to go to the courts of law—ultimately to the Supreme Court, it may be—to settle some one point in the matter, and that he had to go to an arbitrator to settle another part of the dispute between the parties. I do not think that the statute can be read so as to lead to what I call that lamentable result. The Act provides that the company shall be entitled to a reasonable sum "by way of addition to the tonnage rate" for the use or occupation of their premises, or it may be for the detention of their trucks, "beyond a period" which is "reasonably necessary" for the trader who is using that accommodation or using those trucks. Then the same section provides that the question is to go to arbitration, and "any difference arising under this section" is to be settled by the arbitrator. The point which the arbitrator has to settle is what is "a reasonable sum" for the service rendered, the use of the accommodation, or the use of the trucks.

The railway company maintain that these words, "reasonable sum," are to be taken in a very limited sense, as meaning merely this: that the arbitrator is to ascertain the rate per day which the company is to receive, but that the arbitrator has no power to make any inquiry as to the number of days that he is to take into view. According to the argument, the railway company tell him that number of days and he must accept that from them, and, if a dispute is to arise upon that, that question must go to a court of law.

I think that this provision as to arbitration includes, as my noble and learned friend now on the woolsack has said, the question and all that is incidental to the trial of that question. I do not think it is reasonable to say that the arbitrator is not entitled to take the matter of time into consideration for the purpose of the award he is to give. In this case it so happens that the company have issued a circular stating that after four days they are to make that charge. Supposing there had been no such intimation made, is the arbitrator simply to take the statement of the company—you shall assess upon one day, two days, or twenty days? It appears to me it is essential to his reaching a "reasonable sum" that he should take the element of time into consideration. The company may, as has been put by Mr. Lawson Walton in the argument, have made arrangements that they were to deliver at intervals, and the trader may have an answer that the number of days for these deliveries at intervals have not been allowed him; or it may be that while it was intimated to him that the goods had arrived, there may have been obstructions in the way which prevented the trader getting at his goods, or failure to provide the facilities which he ought to have for his goods. All those things must enter into the question of what is the "reasonable sum" to be given by the arbitrator; and it appears to me it would be most unreasonable to read that word "reasonable" in any other sense than that it should include the sum which should be given day by day, taking into consideration the element of time which I think must be before the arbitrator in order to do justice between the parties. Mr. Cripps pressed upon your lordships that a difficulty might arise, because on this view the arbitrator in some cases might have to decide a question of title; a question might be raised as to whose property the trucks were, or as to whether the land upon which the particular siding was belonged to the company or to a coterminous proprietor. It must be kept in view, however, that an arbitrator with reference to such a question is determining no matter of title for any permanent purpose, or with a view to settle the rights of parties in all time coming. He is deciding, merely with reference to the comparatively small matter, what is to be done in regard to this particular claim for demurrage, or whatever it may be. For that purpose I think it is a great convenience that he should determine that matter of fact, and to that limited effect. If the company are being prejudiced by a series of decisions of that kind, they have it in their power in another proceeding in court to raise the question as to title, and to get a decision upon it finally; and of course that would be binding upon any arbitrator afterwards, if any question as to the use of that particular siding should arise.

I have no difficulty in agreeing with your lordships, and with the judgment of the court from which this appeal has been taken, and I think that the appeal therefore should be dismissed.

Lord DAVEY.—I concur, and I may say I am so entirely satisfied with the reasons given by the learned judges in the Court of Appeal that I do not think it is necessary for me to add anything.

Lord JAMES OF HEREFORD.—I concur.

Lord LUDLOW.—If there had not been so many different opinions delivered by so many different judges, I should not have thought it necessary to say a single word in this case; but I do desire to say that I entirely agree with the decision of the Court of Appeal, and I only wish to add this observation, that it seems to me perfectly impossible for any arbitrator to determine the reasonableness of the charge without at the same time taking into consideration the reasonableness in respect of the limit of time allowed that is to elapse before the charge is to attach. It seems to me perfectly impossible that that can be done. I quite agree with the opinions that have been delivered, and I think the judgment of the Court of Appeal is quite right.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for appellants, Beale & Co.

Solicitors for respondents, Jacques & Co., for George Turnbull, Bradford.

Court of Appeal.

From Q. B. Div.
(Earl of Halsbury, L.C., and A. L. Smith and Vaughan Williams, L.JJ.) July 17.

HOLLIDAY v. NATIONAL TELEPHONE CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Negligence — Principal and agent — Contractor—Dangerous work on highway—Liability of principal for negligence of contractor.

The defendants were engaged in laying down wires in tubes under the pavement of a street. After the wires were laid the connections between the tubes were made by a plumber under a contract with the defendants, whereby he agreed to do the work to the satisfaction of the foreman in charge at a fixed sum per connection, the plumber to supply the necessary men and materials. The soldering material used for making the connections was melted in an iron pot on the foot pavement, and it was necessary, for the purposes of the work, to obtain a flare from a benzoline lamp, which was done by applying heat to the lamp. To obtain the flare the plumber's man plunged the lamp into the molten solder (this being a usual, proper, and necessary operation with a lamp in good order), when, in consequence of the safety-valve being out of order, the lamp exploded, and the molten solder flew up and injured the plaintiff, who was passing by. The evidence was conflicting as to whether one of the defendants' men was assisting the plumber's man in the work.

In an action in the county court to recover damages for the negligence of the plumber's man in plunging a defective lamp into the metal, the judge found that the defendants had in substance the control of and supervised the work which the plumber did; that the plumber was in the position of a servant; and that the defendants were liable.

Held, that the judgment of the county court judge must be affirmed, because there was evidence that the work was being jointly executed by the defendants and the plumber, and that, therefore, the defendants were liable for the negligence of the plumber's man; and, further, assuming that the plumber was an independent contractor, that the defendants were executing on a highway works likely to cause danger to the public unless precautions were taken, and were, therefore, liable for the negligence of the contractor's workman in the execution of the works, such negligence not being a casual or collateral act of negligence.

Decision of the Divisional Court (ante, p. 203, [1899] 1 Q. B. 221) reversed.

Appeal by the plaintiff from the judgment of the Divisional Court (Wills and Lawrance, JJ.) reversing the judgment of the Deputy Judge of the City of London Court (Mr. Pitt Lewis, Q.C.), reported ante, p. 203; [1899] 1 Q. B. 221.

The action was brought to recover damages for personal injuries.

It appeared that the defendants were lawfully laying down telephone wires in a street called The Pavement, at Clapham, and for that purpose they had broken up the pavement of the street, and it was admitted that they had obtained the requisite consents of the vestry to their doing so. They had laid down a number of tubes into which they inserted bundles of telephone wires. The tubes were then socketed together and the joints made tight with rings of lead, and solder was then run into the interstices. The soldering material was melted in an iron pot, which, with the fire underneath it, was on the foot-pavement. The joints of the tubes being below the surface of the ground, it was necessary either for light or for heat (it did not appear for which) to get a flare from a benzoline lamp. To get the vapour necessary to give the flare heat had to be applied to the lamp, and as heated benzoline vapour is highly elastic and may be explosive if unduly confined the lamp was furnished with a safety-valve to prevent undue pressure on the interior. The lamp on the occasion in question was out of order, and the safety-valve would not work, and it was admitted that the workman, Alfred Highmore, who was using it, ought to have known this, and he was negligent in using it as he did. Wanting to heat it quickly, he dipped the lamp into the molten metal, when the lamp exploded, and the molten metal flew up and injured the plaintiff, who was passing by. There was no canvas or other protection round the place where Highmore was working. The lamp and the pot of molten metal belonged to George Highmore. Upon this particular section of the work the defendants had themselves dug the trench, laid the pipes, threaded the bundles of cables through them, and filled in afterwards. In order to make the connections at the joints the defendants left the trench open at those points along the line of piping where the connections were to be made, and they employed one George Highmore, a plumber, to make the connections, the terms of his employment being contained in a document, dated the 24th of November, 1896, with a printed heading, "G. Highmore, Plumber, Zincworker, Hot Water, and Sanitary Engineer," and by it Highmore agreed to make the connections at the joints of the pipes "to the satisfaction of the foreman in charge of the work for the sum of 12s. per connection, bends included." After the connections were made the holes left open for that purpose were filled in by the defendants. The evidence showed that Highmore had at least two men in his employment, and that at the time of the accident he had got employment elsewhere and sent his brother, Alfred Highmore, to do the work; and that the defendants' local manager kept the whole work of laying the cables under his constant supervision. The course of business was for the defendants to send to George Highmore when they wanted the connecting to be done, and he came or sent a man, with whom a second man generally came. On the occasion in question the brother came alone to do the work. There was a conflict of evidence whether one of the defendants' men was in the hole with Highmore assisting him in the work. If the connections were not made to the satisfaction of the foreman the work would have to be done over again.

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The deputy judge, who tried the case without a jury, found that George Highmore was not an independent contractor; that the defendants had, in substance, the control of the work, and they practically supervised the work which Highmore did, and that Highmore was in the position of their servant; that it was a usual and proper thing to plunge the lamp into the molten metal in order to heat it, if the lamp was in proper condition, and that it was necessary for the work to do so; and that the defendants were liable for Highmore's negligence, and he gave judgment for the plaintiff for an agreed sum of £25. The Divisional Court reversed this judgment and entered judgment for the defendants upon the ground that George Highmore was an independent contractor, and that the negligent act of Alfred Highmore was a casual or collateral act of negligence for which the defendants were not liable.

Bowen Rowlands, Q.C., and H. C. Davenport, for the plaintiff.—There was evidence before the deputy county court judge that George Highmore was in the position of a servant acting under the control of the defendants, and was not an independent contractor, and his finding to that effect cannot be disturbed. There was, also, evidence that the defendants and Highmore were jointly engaged in doing the work, and they are both liable for the negligence of one of their servants causing injury to a third person. There was evidence that one of the defendants' men was assisting the man who was soldering the pipe joints. Further, the defendants were executing work on a public highway which would cause danger to passers by unless proper precautions were taken. Plunging a benzoline lamp into molten metal on a highway was likely to cause danger to passers by. The deputy county court judge has found that that is a usual and proper thing to do, and is necessary for the work. The defendants were under duty to take reasonable precautions to protect the public. They cannot, by delegating that part of the work which involves that operation to an independent contractor, avoid liability for not having taken precautions to protect the public from injury: Hughes v. Percival, 31 W. R. 725, 8 App. Cas. 443; Black v. Christchurch Finance Co., [1894] A. C. 48; Penny v. Wimbledon District Council, ante, p. 565, [1899] 2 Q. B. 72. The act of negligence complained of here was not a casual or collateral act of negligence, as in Reedie v. London and North-Western Railway Co., 4 Ex. Ch. 244. The Divisional Court were therefore wrong.

Mattinson, Q.C., and Lawless, for the defendants.—George Highmore was an independent contractor and not a servant of the defendants. He employed his own men and had his own tools for doing the work—the lamp that caused the accident belonging to him. It did not make him the less an independent contractor that he had to do the work at the times fixed by the defendants, and to their satisfaction. This latter is always the case with a builder who has to do the work to the satisfaction of the building owner's architect. Nor was this the case of a joint operation carried out by the defendants and Highmore. The work which Highmore was employed to do was a skilled job distinct from that carried out by the defendants. In regard to the contention that Highmore, assuming he was an independent contractor, was employed to carry out dangerous work, there is no evidence in support of that. There was no danger in plunging the lamp into the molten metal unless the lamp was out of order. The defendants could not foresee that the contractor's man would use a lamp with a defective safety-valve. It was a mere casual or collateral piece of negligence, for which the defendants cannot be held responsible.

EARL OF HALSBURY, L.C.—In my opinion the judgment of the Divisional Court is erroneous and must be reversed, and the judgment of the deputy county court judge restored. It seems to me to be clear upon the evidence that there are two distinct grounds upon which the decision of the deputy county court judge can be supported. There was evidence to show that the work was being done jointly by the defendants and the plumber, and the deputy county court judge upon the evidence was justified in treating them both as liable for the negligent act in question done in the joint execution of the works.

The other ground upon which I think that the plaintiff is entitled to succeed is that the defendants were interfering with a public highway, the interference being authorized by the local authority. The defendants were executing certain works on a highway, and whether they were executing those works by themselves or by a contractor, they had a duty imposed upon them to take reasonable care that the public should be protected from injury arising from the negligence of one acting for them in the execution of the works. In the present case pipes had to be soldered, and the deputy county court judge found, in effect, that it was a usual and proper thing, and necessary for the work, to have the molten metal at the spot ready for use on the instant, and that it was customary to plunge the benzoline lamp into the molten metal in order to get a flare, and I assume that the defendants were familiar with this, because they themselves did part of the works. If the lamp was perfect, the operation of plunging it into the molten metal would be harmless. If, however, the safety valve became stopped up, in the ordinary course of things the lamp must explode. Therefore a performance was going on which in the ordinary course of things might produce an explosion. Can it be said that the defendant company, which authorized this to be done, whether they delegated the work to a contractor or not, were under no obligation to protect passers by from receiving injuries from this performance? In my opinion there was such an obligation upon the defendants, and the appeal must be allowed, and the judgment of the county court judge must be restored.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. I also think that upon the evidence this work may be looked upon as the joint work of the defendants and of the plumber. There is also the other ground. The defendants were executing works on a highway which were clearly of such a nature that they were likely, unless precautions were taken, to cause danger to the public using the highway. To use molten metal in the way in which it was used here was a likely source of danger to passers by. The defendants delegated dangerous work to a contractor named Highmore, and Highmore's servant did what, if the lamp had been in proper order, would have been a usual and necessary thing to do—he plunged the lamp into the molten metal, and the safety valve being out of order the lamp exploded and the molten metal was scattered about and struck the plaintiff and injured him. The plaintiff brought an action to recover damages for personal injuries caused by the negligence of the man who was doing the work. The defendants set up the defence that the man whose negligent act caused the injuries was in the employment of the plumber, who was an independent contractor, and that therefore they were not liable. Speaking for myself, I think that after the decision of the House of Lords in Hughes v. Percival, 31 W. R. 725; 8 App. Cas. 443, and of the Privy Council in Black v. Christchurch Finance Co., [1894] A. C. 48, if a person executes on a highway work likely to cause danger to passers by, if proper precautions are not taken, he can hardly ever now escape liability by saying that he employed an independent contractor to do the work, because a duty is imposed upon the person who has undertaken to execute the work to see that the person who actually does the work, whether he is an independent contractor or not, takes reasonable precautions to protect the public from danger. I only wish to add one other word. I cannot agree with the Divisional Court that the negligence here was a casual or collateral act of negligence.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., agreed.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Gibbs, White, & Strong.

Solicitor for the defendant, W. E. L. Gaine.

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, M.R., Jeune, P., and Romer, L.J.) — July 4.

TWICKENHAM URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. MUNTON. (a.)

Local government—Street—Plans, &c.—Amendment—Adjournment—Jurisdiction of justices—Private Street Works Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 57), ss. 6, 7, 8.

When justices are asked to amend the plans, &c., submitted under the Private Street Works Act, 1892, by a local authority, they have, under section 8, jurisdiction to do so without expressly amending the original resolution of the local authority, and also without directing further notices to be given to persons affected who have had notice of the original scheme and have not given notice of objection. An order made in such circumstances, declaring the local authority entitled to a charge on the property of such persons for their proportion of the expenses, is therefore valid.

(a.) Reported by R. C. MACKENZIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Semble, though section 6 gives the justices a discretion in such cases as to adjourning and directing further notices to be served, it is desirable, in cases of importance, that an adjournment should take place, and that notice should be given to persons affected who are not before the court.

Decision of Stirling, J. (ante, p. 328), affirmed.

Appeal against a decision of Stirling, J. (ante, p. 328, where the facts are sufficiently stated).

R. Cunningham Glen, for the defendant, who appealed, referred to the material sections of the Private Street Works Act, 1892; Whitchurch v. Fulham District Board of Works, 14 W. R. 277, L. R. 1 Q. B., 233; Cooper v. Wandsworth District Board of Works, 11 W. R. 646, 14 C. B. N. S. 180; Hopkins v. Smethwick Local Board, 38 W. R. 499, 24 Q. B. D. 712; and Julius v. Bishop of Oxford, 28 W. R. 726, 5 App. Cas. 214.

Macmorran, Q.C., and The Hon. Frank Russell, for the plaintiffs, were not called upon.

LINDLEY, M.R.—I am unable to take the view which has been contended for on behalf of the appellant, though I cannot help thinking that it would have been much better if the justices had thought fit to adjourn in order to give notice to all persons who might be affected by the order which they were about to make. The real question we have to consider is as to their jurisdiction to make the order without so adjourning and giving notice. For my part, I feel very great difficulty in getting over the construction of the section which I will read presently. I need not go through the other sections in detail, though it is well in dealing with this matter to keep them in mind. I agree entirely with Stirling, J., in the construction he puts on that part of section 8 which says that "the court may quash in whole, or in part, or may amend, the resolution, plans, sections, estimates, and provisional apportionments, or any of them, on the application either of any objector or of the urban authority. The court may also, if it thinks fit, adjourn the hearing and direct any further notices to be given." In this particular case a resolution had been passed to make up the whole road. The present appellant, the defendant in the action, approved of that, and therefore did not object. That was what he wanted. Somebody else, however, sent in an objection. The case then came before the justices, and the justices amended the plans, &c., in such a way as to alter the scheme from a making up of the whole road into a making up of only that portion of the road which was a private road. That was done by the justices under the power contained in section 8, which I have just read; and I have not the slightest doubt myself that they were acting within the power which the legislature has conferred upon them. I do not think the language of section 8, sub-section 1, admits of any other construction. The justices had, I think, ample power to do what they did. There were present before them the Urban Authority of Twickenham on the one side, and the objector on the other, and the justices had ample power to amend the resolution.

So far, I think there is no doubt at all. But then comes this language, which seems to me rather more difficult to deal with. "The court may also, if it thinks fit, adjourn the hearing and direct any further notices to be given." Now, it is the question of the practical application of that power that gives rise to the difficulty in this case. It appears to me that that language, "the court may also, if it thinks fit," do what I have read, gives them a discretion, and puts them in the position of having to decide in each particular case whether it is necessary or proper to adjourn and order notice to be given to persons not before the court. If they think the occasion is one in which they ought to adjourn, and direct notice to be given to certain persons, then of course they ought to act accordingly. But if they look into the matter, and having done so, think it is a small matter, and does not require that any further notices should be given, they are the judges of whether an adjournment should take place, or further notices should be given. To construe the Act otherwise would be to deprive them of the power of deciding such a matter, and it would come to this, that if they were making any alteration at all in the "resolution, plans, sections, estimates, and provisional apportionments, or any of them" (except, perhaps, a merely clerical alteration), they must adjourn for the purpose of giving notices to persons who may be affected. That, certainly, is not what the Act says. The legislature has, it seems to me, entrusted to the court (that is, to the justices) a power to say whether the order or the amendment they are making is of such a character as to make it proper that an adjournment should take place, and notice should be given. I regret that here the justices did not take the opposite view; but I cannot help thinking that what we are asked to do would have the effect of rendering inoperative the statutory provisions which I have read. The appeal, therefore, must be dismissed.

JEUNE, P.—I agree with the Master of the Rolls. My sympathy is entirely with the appellant. I think, indeed, that a plausible argument might be presented on that side. It might be said with great plausibility that, though it is quite true the court may quash part or the whole of the resolutions, &c., yet that is subject to the general principle that a court cannot possibly act without hearing those who may be affected by their order, and that if they do so act their decision is ultra vires and wrong. It might plausibly be contended that the subsequent words are not intended to cut down or abrogate that principle, and that therefore the court was really unable to do what it has here done. That, as I have said, is a plausible argument. But I cannot give effect to it without putting upon section 8 a construction which I think it will not bear. I think the true construction is this: As the court was intended to have power to alter the scheme, there might be cases in which other persons might be affected, and it would be impossible for everybody who might conceivably be affected to be brought before the court. The Act, therefore, intended that very matter, of who should be served with notice, should be left to the justices. It may well be that the Act intended to give to the justices a discretion as to whether to adjourn and have further notices served. Therefore the whole scope of the enactment seems to have been not to cut down the provisions of section 8, and to confer a discretion as to who is to be heard. That there is no obligation, no duty, to hear anybody, I do not say; but I think the justices were within their right in doing what they did. I think as the Master of the Rolls thinks, that it is a great pity they did not come to a different conclusion; but I think, for the reasons he has given, that the judgment of Stirling, J., is right.

ROMER, L.J.—I agree in thinking that Stirling, J., is right in this case, and I do not desire to add anything to what has been said.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, Munton & Morris; Ruston, Clark, & Ruston.

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, M.R., Jeune, P., and Rigby, L.J.) — June 28, 29.

COWEN v. TRUEFITT (a.).

Landlord and tenant—Lease—Construction—Mistake— Falsa demonstratio—Rectification.

The doctrine of falsa demonstratio is only applied where a description intelligible as a whole is rendered unintelligible by a part, so that by eliminating the part the whole is rendered intelligible.

By an underlease rooms on the second floor of Nos. 13 and 14, Old Bond-street were demised to the plaintiff, "together with free ingress and egress for the lessee, her servants and customers, through the staircase and passages of No. 13 to and from the demised rooms." There was a staircase in No. 14, but in No. 13 there was only a lift, and no staircase.

Held, that as the rejection of the words "of No. 13" would not leave a description applicable to the staircase in No. 14, the doctrine of falsa demonstratio did not apply; but that it was the intention of the parties that the plaintiff should have access over the staircase in No. 14, and that the underlease should be rectified accordingly.

Decision of Romer, J., ante p. 29, affirmed on this ground.

This was an appeal from a decision of Romer, J. (reported ante, p. 29).

The facts may be shortly stated as follows: The plaintiff carried on the business of ladies' tea-rooms and a ladies' club. The defendant was owner for a term of years of the premises 13 and 14, Old Bond-street, and by an underlease of the 24th of December, 1895, four rooms on the second floor of Nos. 13 and 14, and one room on the third floor of No. 14, "together with free ingress and egress for the lessee, her servants and customers through the staircase and passages of No. 13 aforesaid, to and from the premises hereby demised on the second floor of the said premises, Nos. 13 and 14 aforesaid." There was no staircase in No. 13 leading directly to the demised premises, the only staircase which gave such access having been pulled down when the lift was made in 1893. There was a staircase in No. 14, which was entered through the defendants' shop. The defendant declined to allow the plaintiff to use this staircase except in the case of fire or other emergency, and insisted that she and her customers must gain access to the demised premises by means of the lift in No. 13. It was admitted that the reference to the staircase in the underlease was not in accordance with the facts, and had been inserted in this form by mistake.

The plaintiff asked for a declaration that she was entitled on the true construction of the underlease to a right of access to the demised premises by the staircase in No. 14.

Romer, J., held that the words "of No. 13" might be rejected as as falsa demonstratio, and that a right of access over the staircase in No. 14 passed to the plaintiff by the underlease.

The defendant appealed.

Levett, Q.C., and J. R. Brooke, for the appellant.—There is no instance where the doctrine of falsa demonstratio has been applied, except where the misdescription has come at the end. What the learned judge has really done is to rectify the deed.

They referred to Wrotesley v. Adams, 1 Plowd. 191; Sheppard's Touchstone, pt. 2, p. 247; Doe d. Smith v. Galloway, 5 B. & Ad. 43.

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The respondent in person.

Levett, Q.C., replied. (RIGBY, L.J., refered to Chamberlaine v. Turner, Cro. Chas. 129).

June 29.—LINDLEY, M.R., referred to the facts and the evidence of the parties as to what was agreed about the plaintiff's use of the back staircase, and continued: The real agreement I have no doubt was that the plaintiff was to have the use of the lift and also the staircase more or less. It was not thought at the time that that would be a matter of importance, but now that the plaintiff's business has developed and become larger, her use of the staircase is a nuisance.

[His lordship then referred to the provisions of the lease and referred to the mistake in the plan which had caused the blunder in the lease, and continued:] There being this blunder, what is to be done? It is said that by a mode of construction we could come to the conclusion that as the right of passage through No. 13 is inapplicable to the building as it actually existed, it must follow, according to the doctrine of falsa demonstratio, that it must be applied to the staircase of No. 14. I do not know that the doctrine is applicable where the court can see what it is that the parties really did mean by the document in question.

I must, however, protest against the way in which the doctrine was stated by counsel for the appellant, that the maxim falsa demonstratio non nocet only applies where there is some incorrect description at the end of the sentence. That is wittling it away and making it ridiculous. It is a misapprehension. I do not know that the principle can be better put than it is in Jarman on Wills (5th ed., vol. 1, p. 742), where it is said the rule means "that where the description is made up of more than of part, and one part is true but the other false, then, if the part which is true describe the subject with sufficient legal certainty, the untrue part will be rejected and will not vitiate the devise." The characteristic of cases within the rule is that the description so far as it is false applies to no subject at all, and so far as it is true applies to one only. Thus in Day v. Trig, 1 P. Wms. 286, where one devised all his freehold houses in Aldersgate-street, London, having, in fact, only leasehold houses there, it was held that the word "freehold" should rather be rejected than the will be wholly void, and that the leasehold houses should pass.

To limit that doctrine in the way that counsel suggested is to deprive it of half its merit. It is a rule of good sense. If the language is clear, but does not fit because of some words which have been inserted, if you can reject the part that makes it inapplicable you do reject it. I should therefore have some difficulty in coming to the conclusion that the plaintiff was entitled to the use of this staircase on the construction of the lease. But on the question of rectification I see no difficulty whatever. On the evidence I think the learned judge was quite right when once the fact is ascertained that it was intended that the plaintiff should have access to her rooms by a staircase, and it is found that there is only a staircase in one house. The judge was right, but the order should be amended by adding the word "back" before "staircase," as everyone agrees that it was the back staircase she was to use. With that addition to the order the appeal will be dismissed with costs.

SIR F. JEUNE.—I agree with the judgment that has been delivered. For some time I thought that the doctrine of falsa demonstratio might be applied here. The learned judge below proposed to apply it by striking out the words "No. 13" as being a mere falsa demonstratio, but I do not think that the principle applies. I doubt whether the words "staircase and passages" are a sufficiently clear description of a back staircase, for there are two staircases in No. 14, a back and a front. I think if the principle is to be applied at all, the words "No. 13" would have to be struck out all through, also as regards the passages of No. 13; but when one considers that, as the Master of the Rolls has pointed out, the real mistake was that it was supposed that there was a staircase in No. 13, I think one sees that it is not really a case of falsa demonstratio at all, but the clear words of the lease apply to something which is non existent, so that the principle cannot be invoked in aid of the construction of this lease. I agree, however, that the doctrine is not to be cut down as was suggested by counsel for the appellant by saying that it is to be limited to cases where the false part of the description follows the true. That is perfectly senseless, and would cut down what is a rational and useful canon of construction. Leaving that aside, there is no difficulty in rectifying the lease. To my mind it is clear that it was owing to a mistake of all parties that these words were inserted. It was intended that the plaintiff should have the use of the back stairs without limit. The extent of her use was left to the good sense and proper feeling of the plaintiff. No doubt the defendant thought that it would not be much used, and in conversation something to that effect was said, but the real intention was that there should be egress and ingress by these stairs to No. 13. Under these circumstances there is no difficulty in rectifying the lease as the Master of the Rolls suggested, so as to show that the ingress and egress is to be by the back stairs.

RIGBY, L.J.—I entirely agree as to falsa demonstratio; one can see plainly what the lease means on its construction. It means that the plaintiff is to have access by the stairs which have been referred to. [His lordship referred to the mistake in the plan, and commented on the fact that none of the persons who knew the premises, and who must have known that no staircase existed in No. 13, corrected the plan. He observed that the mistake was on both sides, and continued:] I will only add on this part of the case that I altogether reject the argument, as my learned brothers have done, that in applying the doctrine of falsa demonstratio it is material in what part of the sentence the falsa demonstratio is found. That would be reducing a very useful rule to a mere technicality, whereas it is in fact a very substantial question. [His lordship then referred to the evidence on the question of rectification, and agreed to the order being made in the form indicated by the Master of the Rolls.]

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the appellant, W. H. Herbert.

Solicitor for the plaintiff, W. Hilton Perkin.

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, M.R., Jeune, P., and Rigby, L.J.) — June 28.

FRIARY, HOLROYD, & CO. v. SINGLETON. (a.)

Landlord and tenant—Lease—Option to purchase freehold—Equitable assignee—Waiver of notice of exercise of option.

Held, by Romer, J. (ante, p. 93), that an equitable assignee of the legal owner of a lease is not an "assign" within the meaning of a covenant therein giving a right of pre-emption of the freehold to the lessee, his executors, administrators, or "assigns"; and, therefore, that the plaintiff, as such assignee, was not entitled in equity, as against the lessor or his assigns, to enforce such right of pre-emption.

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Cox v. Bishop, 5 W. R. 437, 8 De G. M. & G. 815, followed.

Walsh v. Lonsdale, 31 W. R. 109, 21 Ch. D. 9, distinguished.

Held, on appeal, that, upon the facts, the defendant (an assignee of the lessor) had waived his right to receive notice of the plaintiff's option to purchase the freehold, and, therefore, was precluded from taking the objection that the plaintiff was not entitled to exercise the right of pre-emption.

Decision of Romer, J. (ante, p. 93), reversed.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. North, J. — May 10, 11.

STOKE PARISH COUNCIL v. PRICE. (a.)

Local government—Parish council—Right to sue—Main roads—Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), ss. 8, 11, 25.

A parish council cannot sue for an obstruction to a well situate on a main road, from which the inhabitants claim to take water, as main roads are vested in the district council under section 25 of the Local Government Act, 1894, and if the right is a public one, the Attorney-General must be joined as plaintiff.

Action by the Parish Council of Stoke, in the county of Kent, claiming a declaration that the inhabitants of Stoke were entitled to the use of a certain spring or well, and for an injunction to restrain the defendant from blocking up the plaintiffs' pump and from interfering and blocking up the stream.

The council by their statement of claim asserted that by section 8, sub-section 1 (e), of the Local Government Act, 1894, it had power to utilize any spring or well in the parish, and that on the main road from Upper Stoke to Middle Stoke there was a spring or well, and that either by (1) a lost grant, (2) enjoyment from time immemorial, or (3) enjoyment for twenty years the inhabitants of Stoke were entitled to the use of such spring or well. The defendant by his defence denied the alleged user of the stream or well, and said that there was prior to 1894 a depression in his land in which water collected, but that in that year he had filled up the depression. In 1895 the plaintiff council wrongfully made a hole in the defendant's land, and in 1897 put up a pump, and that the defendant removed part of the pump and filled it up with cement in order to assert his right. The defendant further pleaded that the claim made by the parish council was for a public right, and that an action only lay at the suit of the Attorney-General, and counterclaimed for a declaration that the parish council had no right to maintain a pump upon his land.

Morton Smith, for the defendant, having taken the objection that the plaintiffs had no right to sue without joining the Attorney-General, Buckmaster, for the plaintiffs, argued that a right to take water was a profit à prendre not an easement (Manning v. Wasdale, 5 Ad. & E. 758; Race v. Ward, 3 W. R. 240, 4 E. & B. 702), and that a well situate on private land was a public well: Smith v. Archibald, 5 App. Cas. 489, 28 W. R. Dig. 136. Under section 8, sub-section 1 (e), of the Local Government Act, 1894, the plaintiffs have power to utilize the well, and that implies power to sue for an obstruction, and the parish council must be able to sue on behalf of the inhabitants.

Morton Smith.—What is claimed here is a public right, and the plaintiffs have no right to sue on behalf of the public; the Attorney-General must make such a claim: Vestry of Bermondsey v. Brown. 14 W. R. 213, L. R. 1 Eq. 204; Wallasey Local Board v. Gracey, 36 Ch. D. 593; Tottenham District Council v. Williamson & Sons, 44 W. R. 676, [1896] 2 Q. B. 353. The well is not vested in the parish council, even on its own showing. Main roads are vested in the county council, and this is a main road. Section 25 of the Local Government Act, 1894, vests in the district council all duties under the Public Health Act formerly vested in the guardians. The remedy of the plaintiffs would be to appeal to the county council under section 16 of the Act of 1894. The parish council is a body with limited powers and cannot incur expenses beyond threepence in the pound without the sanction of a parish meeting, or more than sixpence in the pound without the approval of the county council: section 11 of the Act of 1894.

Buckmaster, in reply.—The plaintiffs are not asserting a public right, but only a right on behalf of the inhabitants of the parish to take water. Vestry of Bermondsey v. Brown does not apply, as a parish may have a right to take water although it cannot have a right of way. They claim a right for a limited body of persons and not a right for the public. The cases where the Attorney-General has had to be a party have all been cases of a public nuisance; here the plaintiffs have suffered special damage to their pump.

Cabell, amicus curiæ, referred to Ellis v. Duke of Bedford, [1899] 1 Ch. 494.

Morton Smith, having elected not to press his counterclaim,

NORTH, J., said: If the defendant had persisted in his counterclaim I must have heard the evidence, but as it is I think that the preliminary objection is good. I cannot see that the parish council has the right it claims under the Local Government Act, 1894. The parish council might have acquired the right by payment of a small sum, thirty shillings being the amount asked, but it did not think fit to do so. I cannot see that the Act confers upon it any right to sue on behalf of a number of persons. The case of the parish council is that the well is part of a strip of land forming part of the highway. If its case is right, the soil is vested in the district council under the Act of 1894, by which additional powers are given to parish councils. The parish council under that section can use the well so as not to interfere with any corporation or person, but I see nothing giving it the right to sue the owner of the well. It has been held that section 107 of the Public Health Act, 1875, which is in much wider terms, does not give power to take proceedings without making the Attorney-General a party. Wallasey Local Board v. Gracey and Tottenham District Council v. Williamson & Son were much stronger cases than the present. I am assuming that the facts are as stated by the plaintiffs. The action will be dismissed with costs; the counterclaim will be dismissed without costs.

Solicitors, Lewis & Birdseye, for Basset & Boucher, Rochester; Dollman & Pritchard, for Haywood & Smith, Rochester.

(a.) Reported by R. SILLEM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Chan. Div. }
Stirling, J. } March 24; May 17.

In re LACY.

ROYAL THEATRICAL FUND ASSOCIATION v. KYDD. (a.)

Limitation, Statutes of—Will—Charitable gift—Freeholds and leaseholds—Charitable Uses Act, 1735 (9 Geo. 2, c. 36)—Charge of annuities—No trust for payment—Executor—Possession by executor—Real Property Limitation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 57)—Executors Act, 1830 (11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 40)—Law of Property Amendment Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 38), s. 13.

The Royal Theatrical Fund Association is a charity. Spiller v. Maude, 13 W. R. 69, 32 Ch. D. 158n, approved.

An executor is not regarded as an express trustee of residue undisposed of by the will.

A testator, who died in 1873, gave real and impure personal property to the trustees of the Royal General Theatrical Fund, charged with certain annuities, and appointed an executor, who entered into possession and received the income of the property on behalf of the trustees of the fund for nearly twenty years.

Held, that the claims of the heir and next-of-kin were barred.

Salter v. Cavanagh, 1 Dr. & Wal. 668, and Patrick v. Simpson, 24 Q. B. D. 128, 38 W. R. Dig. 113, distinguished.

Originating summons.

Thomas Hailes Lacy, who formerly carried on business as a theatrical bookseller at 89, Strand, by his will dated the 28th of April, 1873, made the following bequest: "I bequeath all my property of every description, excepting only the legacies hereafter named, to the trustees of the Royal General Theatrical Fund, of which I am now a director, the capital and total sum of which property is to be preserved intact under the name of 'The Lacy Bequest,' but the interest, profits, and rentals of which, is to be the property of the said Royal General Theatrical Fund, to be used and disposed of according to the rules of the said fund for its benefit and continuance; but, should the said Royal General Theatrical Fund be dissolved or seriously diverted from its present charitable purpose, then the said capital sum and property forming the 'Lacy Bequest' aforesaid shall become the property of the trustees of the Charing Cross Hospital, the interest and produce to be used by them for the good of the said hospital, the principal remaining intact as before stated; and, in the event of the dissolution or removal to a distance of the said Charing Cross Hospital, the above-named 'Lacy Bequest' is to revert to the public hospital nearest to 89, Strand, under the same conditions, advantages, and liabilities as above stated, and subject to being forfeited by a similar cause of removal or dissolution in favour of any other hospital that may exist being the nearest to 89, Strand, as aforesaid."

The will also contained an account of the items which constituted what was described as "property left for the above-named 'Lacy Bequest' chargeable to the hereinafter bequests, legacies, and annuities," and included both freehold and leasehold estates. The testator appointed Mr. Samuel Kydd, of 7, Serjeant's-inn, Fleet-street, to be one of his executors, and bequeathed to him, as a compensation for the trouble thus entailed, £250. He then appointed another executor, and bequeathed to him £100 and such manuscripts as might be desirable to enable him to complete a proposed publication, and after expressing a desire that the money standing to his account with his bankers should be used for the liquidation of any lawful claims against him, he proceeded as follows: "That all the above is to be as aforesaid the property in trust for the aforesaid Royal General Theatrical Fund and to be subject to the following legacies, bequests, and gifts." He then gave some pecuniary legacies and annuities, and concluded, "the last two annuities to be a charge upon my freehold premises 11 and 13, Garrick-street."

The testator died the 1st of August, 1873, and his will was proved on the 30th of August, 1873, by Samuel Kydd alone, the other executor named having renounced probate.

The testator had been married and had issue one child only—namely, a son Thomas Lacy, who survived him and consequently became his heir-at-law and sole next-of-kin.

Thomas Lacy, who was of sound mind at the time of his father's death, died in a lunatic asylum at Prestwich, Lancashire, on the 5th of July, 1895, without leaving issue and without having made any claim to any part of the property devised by his father's will.

On the 2nd of December, 1875, Samuel Kydd executed a document under seal by which he agreed among other things, that no part of the property, funds or income of the estate belonged to him, and admitted that the whole of the funds, shares, and moneys then at Coutts' Bank standing in the books of the bank in his name were solely the property of the trustees of the fund.

Samuel Kydd entered into possession of the freehold and leasehold estates of the testator. He granted leases and entered into agreements for leases of them, describing himself on some of these documents as acting for and on behalf of the trustees of the Royal Theatrical Fund, and on others as trustee of the Lacy Bequest under the will of Thomas Lacy. He received all the income of the real and personal estate of the testator, and after paying all outgoings (including the annuities given by the will) paid the surplus into Messrs. Coutts' Bank to an account entitled "Mr. Samuel Kydd." He from time to time drew sums out of the bank and invested them in his own name. In July, 1891, Kydd, with the acquiescence of the trustees of the Royal Theatrical Fund, transferred these investments and the balance at the bankers' into the name of himself and Mr. Leopold de Rothschild; and subsequently the income of the testator's real and personal estate was dealt with in a way similar to that pursued when Samuel Kydd acted alone.

Samuel Kydd died on the 21st of December, 1892. After his death the income of the real and personal estate of the testator and of the investments was received by Mr. Hughes, the clerk of Mr. Kydd, and paid into Coutts' Bank to the account of "Samuel Kydd, deceased, and Leopold de Rothschild."

The summons was taken out by the Royal General Theatrical Fund Association and its present trustees against the legal personal representatives of Samuel Kydd, Mr. Leopold de Rothschild, and the Charing Cross Hospital, for the determination, among other things, of the questions whether the plaintiffs were devisees and residuary legatees of the testator's real and personal estate (subject to the two annuities therein mentioned) absolutely unconditionally with gifts over, and a declaration of the plaintiff's rights accordingly, and how the testator's real and personal estate might be dealt with.

On the 26th of February, 1896, an order was made directing that inquiries should be made as to the heir-at-law and next-of-kin of the testator, and that the rest of the summons should stand over. Certificates were made by the Master to the effect that

(a.) Reported by J. F. ISELIN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Thomas Lacy was the testator's heir-at-law and sole next-of-kin at the time of the testator's death, but it had not been ascertained in whom his interest had become vested. Jonathan Potter had, however, become his legal personal representative, and had been appointed to represent his heir-at-law for the purpose of the determination of the question arising on the summons.

The summons was now argued on the questions whether the bequest to the plaintiffs failed under the Charitable Uses Act, 1735, and if so whether the claims of the heir-at-law and next-of-kin of the testator were now barred by the operation of the Statutes of Limitations.

Swinfen Eady, Q.C., Upjohn, Q.C., and De Witt, for the plaintiffs.—The Royal General Theatrical Fund is not a charity. Pease v. Pattinson, 34 W. R. 361, 32 Ch. D. 154, and Spiller v. Maude, 13 W. R. 69, 32 Ch. D. 158n (the latter of which refers to the association), must be read in conjunction with Cunnack v. Edwards, 45 W. R. 99, [1896] 2 Ch. 679, in which Lord Halsbury, C., expressed the opinion that in some of the cases the decisions as to what is a charity are extravagant. Cunnack v. Edwards was distinguished in In re Buck, Bruty v. Mackey, 45 W. R. 106, [1896] 2 Ch. 727. If the association is a charity the plaintiffs have an absolute title under the Statutes of Limitations.

Beale, Q.C., and Darlington, for the legal personal representative of T. Lacy, also appointed to represent the heir-at-law.—The fund is a charity; the testator speaks of it as such in his will, and if it were not there would be a perpetuity. The possession by Kydd will not satisfy the Statute of Limitations, for he was a constructive trustee for the heir-at-law. There was concealed fraud, or mistake, which is the same thing for the purposes of the statute.

They referred to Patrick v. Simpson, 24 Q. B. D. 128; Salter v. Cavanagh, 1 Dr. & Wal. 668; Lyell v. Kennedy, 38 W. R. 353, 14 App. Cas. 437; Reed v. Feem, 14 W. R. 704; Brooksbank v. Smith, 2 Y. & Coll. Ex. 58; Lawrance v. Lord Norreys, 38 W. R. 753, 15 App. Cas. 210; M'Carthy v. Decaix, 2 Russ. & M. 614.

Jenkins, Q.C., and A. Underhill, for the legal personal representatives of Samuel Kydd, referred to Churcher v. Martin, 37 W. R. 682, 42 Ch.D. 312.

Butcher, Q.C., and Austen Cartmell, for the Charing Cross Hospital.

John Henderson, for L. de Rothschild.

Swinfen Eady, Q.C., in reply.—After twelve years' adverse possession of land the right is barred as well as the remedy. There is no trust for payment of the annuities, but only a charge.

He referred to Willis v. Earl Howe, 29 W. R. 70; In re Johnson, Sly v. Blake, 33 W. R. 502, 29 Ch. D. 964.

STIRLING, J., after stating the facts, continued: The first point is whether the Royal General Theatrical Fund is or is not a charity. This was considered in Spiller v. Maude by Sir George Jessel, M.R., who held that the Association was a charity, and with that opinion I agree. I do not consider that Spiller v. Maude was overruled or intended to be overruled by Cunnack v. Edwards. That being so, the devise and bequest of the testator's property in favour of the charity fails as offending against the provisions of 9 Geo. 2, c. 36, so far as that property consisted of realty or impure personalty; and fails, not only as regards the beneficial interest given to the charity, but as to the legal estate given to the trustees, unless the will creates trusts not of a charitable nature which it is their duty to execute: see Doe d. Burdett v. Wrighte, 2 B. & Ald. 710; Churcher v. Martin compared with Doe d. Chidgey v. Harris, 16 M. & W. 517; and Young v. Grove, 4 C. B. 668.

It has, therefore, to be considered whether the trusts imposed by the will on the trustees of the plaintiff association are purely charitable; or whether they are trustees for the payment of the legacies and annuities subject to which the property is devised. In my opinion the latter is the correct view. I think that the trustees of the plaintiff association were meant to take the property of the testator charged with the legacies and annuities, but that the words of the will do not create a trust for the payment of them. The case appears to me to fall within the principle of such decisions as Cunningham v. Foot, 26 W. R. 858, 3 App. Cas. 974, and In re Barker, Buxton v. Campbell, [1892] 2 Ch. 491, 40 W. R. Dig. 128.

Although the gift fails, the plaintiffs nevertheless contend that they have acquired a title thereto under the Statutes of Limitations. Such title is claimed through the acts of Mr. Samuel Kydd, and it was contended on behalf of those claiming under Thomas Lacy that he had so conducted himself towards Thomas Lacy that the plaintiffs could not derive any benefit from his acts. I am unable to see upon the evidence that Mr. Kydd was under or took upon himself any duty or obligation towards Thomas Lacy which he failed to discharge, or that he was guilty of such misrepresentation or concealment as to constitute a concealed fraud: and in my opinion this contention is not well founded.

I proceed now to consider whether the claim, first, of the heir-at-law of the testator to the freeholds, and secondly, of the testator's next-of-kin to the leaseholds is barred by the statutes.

First, as to the freeholds. In these Mr. Samuel Kydd took no estate or interest whatever under or by virtue of the will. He, however, entered into and continued in possession and receipt of the rents and profits for more than twenty years to the exclusion of the heir-at-law, and thereby acquired, as it seems to me, a legal title, whether absolute or as agent for the trustees appears immaterial to be considered, for in any event the title of the heir is barred. This is in accordance with the decision in Churcher v. Martin.

Secondly, as to the leaseholds. These, as regards the possession and receipt of the rents and profits, stand in the same position as the freeholds, but the legal aspect is different in this, that the leaseholds vested in Samuel Kydd as executor. It was contended that the document of the 2nd of December, 1875, was evidence of an assent by him to the bequest of the leaseholds to the plaintiffs the trustees; but the Charitable Uses Act, 1735 (9 Geo. 2, c. 36,) prohibits the giving, granting, aliening, limiting, transferring, assigning, or appointing of any hereditaments in trust for or for the benefit of any charitable uses otherwise than by deed perfected in the manner prescribed, and any assent given by the executors contrary to this prohibition would, as it seems to me, be ineffectual to pass the legal title to the legatees or divest it from the executor. The question then arises whether under those circumstances the executor is to be regarded as an express trustee for the next-of-kin. Now, it was held by the Court of Appeal in In re Rowe, Jacobs v. Hind, 58 L. J. Ch. 703, 37 W. R. Dig. 4; and again in In re Davis, Evans v. Moore, 39 W. R. 627, [1891] 3 Ch. 119, that the claim of a residuary legatee against him was taken out of the operation of 37 & 38 Vict. c. 57, s. 8. In the latter case the present Master of the Rolls says: "An executor was always in a loose sense a trustee for creditors and legatees since he held the personal estate for their benefit and not for his own; but since a trust does not take a case out of the statute, an executor cannot be deprived of the benefit of the statute by showing that he is a trustee; it is necessary to make out that he is an express trustee." Since the passing of the Executors Act, 1830 (11 Geo. 4, c. 30), the right of an executor to the residue of his testator's estate is governed by the enactment therein contained, and as is pointed out by Sir G. Jessel, M.R., in In re Stewart, Stewart v. Stewart, 29 W. R. 275, 15 Ch. D. 539 (see p. 544, 554), the preamble contains an accurate statement of the law as it previously stood. According to that preamble, the executor of a testator who died without making an express disposition of residue became at law entitled to such residue, and courts of equity so far followed the law as to hold such executors to be entitled to retain such residue for their own use unless it appeared to be the testator's intention to exclude them from the beneficial interest therein, in which case they were held to be trustees for the persons or person entitled to such estate under the Statute of Distributions if the testator had died intestate. It was enacted, "That where any person shall die after the 1st day of September next after the passing of this Act, having by his or her will or any codicil or codicils thereto appointed any person or persons to be his or her executor or executors, such executor or executors shall be deemed by courts of equity to be a trustee or trustees for the person or persons (if any) who would be entitled to the estate under the Statute of Distributions in respect of any residue not expressly disposed of, unless it shall appear by the will or any codicil thereto that the person or persons so appointed executor or executors was or were intended to take such residue beneficially." I do not think that the trusteeship created by this Act was intended to be different in its nature from that which existed previously under the rule established in courts of equity, and if prior to the Act executors were not held to be express trustees I do not think they ought to be now so held. There is no express decision on the points, but the cases appear to me to show that (in the absence of special circumstances) executors were not regarded as express trustees.

Take, for example, the case of Bennet v. Batchelor, 1 Ves. Jun. 63, where the testator gave his residuary estate to a legatee who died in his lifetime and appointed executors. It was held that the executors were trustees for the next-of-kin, but Lord Thurlow, C., speaks at the commencement of his judgment of the executors being turned into trustees by implication. I may point out that if the residuary legatee had survived, then, according to In re Rowe and In re Davis, the executors would not have been express trustees for him; it would be strange if they were express trustees for the next-of-kin.

Again, in Dacre v. Patrickson, 8 W. R. 597, 647, 1 Dr. & Sm. 182, 185, Kindersley, V.C., says: "Strictly speaking, a trustee cannot have a trust imposed upon him virtute officii as executor. If a trust is imposed upon him it is in another character—namely, that of trustee, whose duty it is to carry out the trust. Qua executor, he cannot have a trust imposed upon him by the will. The only trust of which he is capable as executor is the trust created by the law for the next-of-kin." The opinion of the Vice-Chancellor therefore seems to have been that they were trustees by implication of law. That of Sir G. Jessel seems to have been the same (15 Ch. D. 544), though he expresses himself less positively than was usual with him when dealing with a question of law. I have found no case in which it has been laid down that an executor who under such circumstances does not take the beneficial interest in the residue is an express trustee.

In the present case no trusts are expressly imposed on the executor by the will, but (independently of the statute) he would be excluded from the beneficial interest in the residue, not merely by the circumstance of that residue being given to another, but also by that of a legacy being given to him as a compensation for his trouble: see White v. Evans, 4 Ves. 21. In my opinion Samuel Kydd was not an express trustee for the next-of-kin of the testator. Consequently the title of the next-of-kin is barred by the Law of Property Amendment Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 38), s. 13: see Willis v. Earl Howe; In re Johnson, Sly v. Blake. The cases of Salter v. Cavanagh and Patrick v. Simpson, which were relied on by the next-of-kin, do not appear to me to govern the present. Both related to devises of real estate, and in neither did anything depend on the law applicable to executors.

I come to the conclusion, therefore, that neither the heir-at-law nor the next-of-kin are now entitled to claim the property in question.

Solicitors, Lumley & Lumley; Field, Roscoe, & Co., for Field & Sons, Leamington; M. & B. Braund; Fladgate & Co.; Dawes & Sons.

Q. B. Div. (Bigham, J.) March 1, 7; April 17.

MARNEY v. SCOTT. (a.)

Negligence — Ship — Charter-party — Unsafe ladder — Accident to stevedore's labourer — Liability of charterer.

A charterer of a vessel who contracts with a master stevedore to load her whilst in dock is under an implied duty to use all reasonable care to ascertain that the vessel and her appliances are reasonably fit and safe for the work which the stevedore and his men are to perform.

The defendant chartered a vessel under a charter-party, which provided that the vessel was in every way fit for service, and was to be so maintained by the owners. In an action by a stevedore's labourer to recover damages from the charterer for injury caused to the labourer by the slipping of a ladder improperly left unfastened by the owners of the vessel when she was placed at the charterer's disposal for loading,

Held, that, inasmuch as the plaintiff was on the ship in the course of fulfilling the contract in which he (or his master) and the defendant both had an interest, the defendant (the charterer) was liable to him in damages, since the slightest examination would have shown that the ladder was unsafe; and the defendant had had an opportunity to make a cursory examination of the ship, but admittedly had not done so.

Action by dock labourer to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by the negligence of the defendant.

The action was heard on the 1st of March, and the jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff, with £220, the agreed damages.

On the 7th of March, the jury having been discharged, the case came on for further consideration on points of law, and on the 17th of April judgment was given.

The facts were as follows: The defendant J. R. Scott was the charterer of the steamer Senator. By charter-party dated the 4th of April, 1898, The Senator was chartered by the defendant for a voyage from London to Goole, as ordered by the charterer. The charter-party contained conditions to the effect that the vessel, being then in every way fitted for the proposed voyage, and to be so maintained by owners, should be placed under the direction of the charterer to be by him employed for the conveyance of goods and passengers between the two ports, the cargo to be laden and discharged in any dock or wharf the charterer might order as customary in the above-mentioned ports; "the said steamer is for the sole use of the said charterers and for their benefit for one voyage, commencing in London, vessel docking about noon, Tuesday, the 5th inst., at which date the vessel is to be at the disposal of the charterer." "The charterer guarantees to complete the vessel's loading by noon on Wednesday next, so that the steamer can leave the dock by the 1.44 p.m. tide that day, or pay a penalty of £30."

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The Senator entered the dock about noon on the 5th of April, and for the purpose of loading her the defendant made a contract with a master stevedore named White, and White engaged the plaintiff and other men to assist him to load the vessel. The work of loading began on the 5th of April, within two hours of the time after the vessel was placed at the defendant's disposal. The defendant went on board The Senator in dock before the loading began, but he made no inspection to see that the tackle and other appliances were safe. In order to carry out his orders the plaintiff had to get into the hold, and as he was attempting to pass down by an iron ladder, the upright supports of which should have been fastened both at the upper and lower ends, the ladder slipped und fell in consequence of not being properly secured, and the plaintiff received by the fall the injuries he sought compensation for.

Cyril Dodd, Q.C., and Watson Moyses, for the plaintiff.—It is admitted that the ladder was unsafe, also that it caused the plaintiff to fall. The not securing of the ladder amounted to negligence on the part of the defendant or one of his servants. The defendant admits that he went on board the vessel after she came into dock and before the work of loading began. He had reasonable opportunity, therefore, of inspecting the vessel. There was a duty cast upon the defendant to exercise reasonable care to ascertain whether the appliances used in loading the vessel were safe and fitted for the work to be done.

The following cases were cited during the argument: Francis v. Cockrell, 18 W. R. 668, L. R. 5 Q. B. 501; Holmes v. North-Eastern Railway, 17 W. R. 800, L. R. 4 Ex. 254; Indermaur v. Dames, 15 W. R. 434, L. R. 1 C. P. 274; Caledonian Railway Co. v. Mulholland, 46 W. R. 236, 14 Times L. R. 41.

Rufus Isaacs, Q.C., and Lennard, for the defendant.—We submit that the defendant being merely the charterer of this vessel cannot be held responsible for any defect in the fitting up of the vessel, which he had no reason to expect existed, and we rely on the condition in the charter-party that the owners were to maintain the ship in the same state as she was when chartered—i.e., "staunch and strong and in every way fitted for the voyage and service." The rights of the plaintiff are founded on tort, not contract, and we say as the defective ladder was not provided or put up by the defendant or his servants that there is no evidence that there has been any want of reasonable care on his part by the exercise of which this accident might have been prevented. By the terms of the charter-party the master and crew were the servants of the owners of the vessel, and not the servants of the charterer, and the owners were bound by the charter-party contract to keep the vessel in every way "fitted for the voyage and service."

April 17.—BIGHAM, J., read his considered judgment, in the course of which he said: I find as a fact that the plaintiff's injuries were due to the unsafe and improper condition of the ladder, and that the plaintiff was not guilty of any contributory negligence. In order to establish his case the plaintiff had to establish that there was a duty or obligation owed by the defendant to him, and that the injuries complained of arose by reason of a breach of that duty or obligation. On behalf of the plaintiff it was contended that although the defendant did not employ him to work for him, he nevertheless must be taken to have invited him to come on board the vessel to work, and to have impliedly promised that if he did so the vessel and its appliances should be in a fit state for the purposes to which they were to be put, and therefore that the defendant was liable on contract. The defendant, on the other hand, submitted that the plaintiff's right depended only upon tort. In my opinion the question whether the defendant's liability arose out of contract or out of tort is immaterial, for the measure of liability would be the same in each case. What, then, is the measure of liability? A man who intends that others should come upon property in his occupation for purposes of work or business in which he himself is interested owes a duty to those who do so, to use reasonable care to see that the property and appliances upon it, which it is intended should be used in the work, are fit for the purposes to which they are to be put, and he does not discharge his duty by merely contracting with competent people to do the work for him. If the parties with whom he contracted failed to use reasonable care, and damage resulted, the occupier still remained liable. That seems to me the true effect of the cases cited. The effect of the authorities is correctly and clearly stated in Pollock on Torts (5th ed.) at pp. 477, 478, and at p. 482. [His lordship read passages from the pages referred to.] The question is how to apply the rule to the facts of the present case. I do not think that the mere fact that the defective state of the ladder was patent, as I think it was, in the sense that a slight examination would have detected it, and that defendant did nothing to remedy it, is sufficient to fix the defendant with a breach of duty. He must have had a reasonable opportunity of ascertaining that a defect existed. The circumstances must have been such that, though he did not know of the condition of the ladder, he ought to have known of it, and if he ought to have known of it and might either have remedied it or warned the plaintiff of the damage, and did neither, and hurt resulted to the plaintiff, then, and then only, could that want of reasonable care be implied to him which would make him liable. I am not prepared to say that a man in the position of the defendant was bound before he allowed the work of loading a vessel to begin to have the vessel surveyed from stem to stern for the purpose of ascertaining that every little appliance that might come into use was in perfect order. Business would be impossible if such a duty were cast upon him, and it would be beyond the scope of reasonable care. But I cannot help thinking that when a vessel comes into a port after a voyage, though it was only a coasting voyage, and though the vessel was in ballast, some slight attention ought to be devoted to the condition of the tackle and appliances which the stevedore's labourers were to use in the work of loading the vessel. What the attention ought to be must depend on the circumstances of each particular case. In the present case it seems to me that the defendant ought to have made some examination of the ladders going down into the hold. The slightest examination would have shown him that the ladder was in such a condition as to really make it a trap, and taking that view I must hold that the defendant was guilty of a breach of the duty which the law imposed on him. As to the point that the defendant was not the occupier of the vessel within the meaning of the authorities, there is nothing in that point. The vessel had been placed at the defendant's disposal, and was in his occupation for the purpose of loading, and it was by his invitation that the plaintiff went on board. That made him, for the purposes of the case, the occupier. For these reasons there must be judgment for the plaintiff with £220 damages, the agreed sum, with costs.

Leave to appeal.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Lovett & Liddle.

Solicitors for the defendant, Downing, Bolam, & Co.

(1901) 2 Ch. 471.

Q. B. Div. (Phillimore, J.) Feb. 1.

CADDICK v. HIGHTON AND OTHERS. (a.)

Friendly society—Policy—Assignment by deed—Validity—Nomination—Death of nominee during lifetime of nominator—Claim by executor—Friendly Societies Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 60), s. 15, sub-section 3.

G. effected a policy on her life for £100 with the defendant friendly society, and assigned all her interest under the same by deed to one J. C., who paid the premiums to the society as they became due. The society refused to treat the assignment as valid, and G. thereupon duly filled up a nomination form and nominated the same J. C. as the person to receive the policy-moneys at her death.

J. C. predeceased G., and the premiums were, during the life of G., paid by C. as the executor of J. C., under the belief that the policy-moneys would become payable under the deed to the estate of the deceased. In an action by C. to recover the policy-moneys upon G.'s death,

Held, that, although a policy granted under the Friendly Societies Acts was not assignable by deed, and therefore that C. could not recover as assignee, yet that he was entitled to the policy-moneys as the executor of the person who had been duly nominated by the assured, since a nomination under section 15, sub-section 3, of the Friendly Societies Act, 1875, if unrevoked, created a vested interest in the nominee.

This was an action brought by Edward Caddick, who sued as executor of his late brother Joseph Caddick against the trustees of the Liverpool Victoria Legal Friendly Society to recover £100 on a policy of insurance effected in 1881 with the defendants on the life of one Mary Gorton.

The facts were as follows: On the 12th of November, 1881, Mary Gorton effected a policy on her life for £100 with the defendants at a monthly premium of 15s. 6d. By this policy the society promised to pay, on the death of the assured, her next-of-kin or "legal nominee" the amount of the policy. By deed dated the 25th of April, 1887, Mary Gorton, as beneficial owner, absolutely assigned the policy to Joseph Caddick. Notice of the assignment was given to the defendants, who refused to recognize it, being of opinion that if Mary Gorton desired the amount to be paid at her death to Joseph Caddick she must fill up the usual nomination form. Accordingly Mary Gorton, on the 8th of July, 1887, filled up a form issued for that purpose in accordance with the Friendly Societies Acts and in it she nominated the same Joseph Caddick as the person entitled to receive at her death the amount of the policy. Joseph Caddick died in March, 1891, in the lifetime of the assured after which date the plaintiff, as executor of Joseph Caddick, paid the premiums as they became due on the policy down to Mary Gorton's death in November, 1896. Upon the death of Joseph Caddick, the plaintiff was called upon by the collector of the society, who said he had heard of Joseph Caddick's death and had come to the plaintiff as his executor for the premiums then due. From that time till the death of the assured the collector regularly called for, and the plaintiff (in the belief that the policy-moneys were due to Joseph Caddick's estate under the assignment) regularly paid and got receipts for the premiums. The plaintiff claimed the policy-money against the trustees of the society on the ground that policies under the Friendly Societies Acts came under the general law of policies of assurance, and were assignable by deed under the Policy of Assurance Act, 1867, and that the plaintiff was entitled (1) as assignee; (2) if not so entitled, that he was entitled under the nomination; or (3) as to the whole or as to the amount paid in premiums under an estoppel raised by the society having demanded and accepted premiums for so long, on the footing that Joseph Caddick or his estate was entitled to the fund.

Montague Lush and Ernest Jelf, for the plaintiff.—The plaintiff is entitled to recover because the original assignment by Mary Gorton to the late Joseph Caddick was valid, at any rate there is no authority that can be cited against us, for the point whether a policy granted under the Friendly Societies Acts is assignable by deed has never yet been decided by any court. Even if such a policy cannot be assigned in the ordinary way by deed by reason of the special provisions contained in the Friendly Societies Acts, we say that the plaintiff is yet entitled to recover as executor, because the rights of a nominee do not lapse at his death, and if Joseph Caddick had survived Mary Gorton he could have claimed as nominee. The defendants, by taking the premiums from the executor, are estopped from disputing the plaintiff's claim; and in any event the plaintiff is entitled to recover the premiums which he has paid as money paid without consideration.

H. H. Asquith, Q.C., and F. Broadbridge, for the society.—By section 15 of the Friendly Societies Act, 1875, and by sections 56 and 57 of the subsequent Act of 1896 these policies are not assignable otherwise than by nomination under the Acts: Bennett v. Slater, ante p. 82, [1899] 1 Q. B. 45. A nomination under the Acts has the effect of an appointment under a power to appoint by will, and therefore, as the nominee died in the lifetime of the nominator, the nomination lapsed. Moreover, a person who claims as nominee must show the society that he is the person mentioned in the nomination paper. As to the question of estoppel the collector had no authority to bind the society, which has done nothing to prevent them from denying that under the policy the plaintiff was entitled to the whole amount assured. If the premiums which the plaintiff had paid were directed to be returned, as money paid without consideration, then, although the society would have to pay the whole of the sum assured to the next-of-kin, it would lose the value of the premiums since the death of Joseph Caddick, which otherwise Mary Gorton would have paid.

Montague Lush, in reply, cited Attorney-General v. Abdy, 1 H. & C., at p. 300, 11 W. R. C. L. Dig. 151; and In re Phillips, 31 W. R. 511, 23 Ch. D. 235. A nomination had the same effect as an appointment by deed. The assured during her lifetime nor by will did nothing to revoke the appointment. The plaintiff therefore, had such an interest in the fund as entitled him to maintain this action.

---

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

PHILLIMORE, J.—This case raises an important question effecting the rights of persons who were the nominees and holders of policies effected with friendly societies, and the first point I have to consider is whether policies of assurance under the Friendly Societies Acts are or are not assignable by deed. It was urged by the defendants that they were not, because these societies were established for the purpose of encouraging thrift among the poorer classes, and it was said that the object of the Legislature would be defeated if such policies were made marketable securities, and people were allowed to raise money upon them. I think that the intention of the Legislature to be gathered from the above sections was that these policies should not be assignable except in the manner laid down in the statutes, and if I am right in thinking that the Legislature from motives of public policy intended that these policies should not otherwise be alienable, then it follows that as assignee the plaintiff cannot recover from the defendants who succeed in that part of their defence.

I fail to see any reason, however, for holding that the estate of a nominee of a policy should be deprived of the benefit intended to be conferred by the nominator simply because the nominee died during the lifetime of the nominator, for, speaking generally, the legal personal representative of a nominee is entitled to stand in the position of the nominee. Then comes the question, Has anything occurred that has deprived the executor of his right to stand in the position of the nominee and to obtain the amount of the policy from the society? I think the plaintiff is right in his contention that the nomination unrevoked created a vested interest in the nominee, and that he, as the executor of such nominee, is entitled to judgment. This decision makes it unnecessary for me to decide the third point. Had I been called upon to do so, I am inclined to think that the plaintiff would have been entitled to a lien on the policy for the amount of the premiums paid by him, but not to the whole fund. However, as I before said, I decide this case on the second ground relied on by the plaintiff, and I direct judgment to be entered for him, with costs, for the amount claimed in the writ.

Judgment for the plaintiff. Leave to appeal granted.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Needham, Tyer, & Barrow, for Edward Caddick, West Bromwich.

Solicitor for the society, Japeth Tickle.

Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. Admiralty. } April 11.

"THE KATE." (a.)

Ship—Collision—Damage—Registrar and merchants—Vessel totally lost in collision—Loss of beneficial charter-party.

The owners of a vessel totally lost in consequence of a collision with another vessel when bound in ballast on a voyage to take in cargo under a charter-party already entered into can, if such other vessel is proved, in an action of damage instituted against her, to have been to blame for the collision, recover against her damages for the loss of any profits which, but for the collision, they would have gained by carrying out the charter-party.

(a.) Reported by C. F. JEMMETT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

This was an action of damage instituted on behalf of the owners of the Norwegian barque Chrysolite against the Austrian steamship Kate, and her owners intervening as defendants. By consent of the plaintiffs and defendants the damages proceeded for in the action were referred to the registrar assisted by merchants to assess the amount thereof on the basis of an agreement come to between the plaintiffs and defendants—namely, that the defendants should pay 90 per cent. thereof.

The reference came on to be heard on the 6th of February last, and the registrar reported that there was due to the plaintiffs in respect of their claim the sums and interest stated in the following schedule:—

SCHEDULE.

	Claimed. £	s.	d.	Allowed. £	s.	d.
1. Value of the Chrysolite	1,500	0	0	1,000	0	0
Less proceeds of sale	375	14	0	375	14	0
	1,124	6	0	624	6	0
2. Loss of charter... ...	504	5	0	470	0	0
3. Loss of provisions and stores	40	10	2	20	0	0
4. Expenses at Southampton	27	13	10	21	0	0
5. Towage	17	0	0	17	0	0
6. Master's expenses ...	9	10	0	0	0	0
ditto ...	1	0	0	1	0	0
7. Surveyor	9	17	0	9	17	0
8. Sending crew home to Norway	24	14	2	24	14	2
9. Agency	21	0	0	0	0	0
13. Owner's telegrams and expenses	5	5	0	5	5	0
	1,785	1	2	1,193	2	2
Deduct 10 per cent., in accordance with terms agreed to	178	10	0	119	6	2
	£1,606	11	2	£1,073	16	0

With interest on £1,073 16s. at 4 per cent. per annum from the 1st of October, 1898, to the 25th of January, 1899, when £765 was paid by defendants to plaintiffs, and on the balance—viz., £308 16s. from the 26th of January, 1899. The registrar in his report further stated: "There is, I think, no difference in principle between such a case and one in which the vessel is in ballast, but proceeding under charter to take in her cargo. In the case of The Columbus, 3 Wm. Rob. 158, a loss of profit in fishing was claimed, which is a different thing from a loss under a distinct engagement. Moreover, it is clear that Dr. Lushington's dicta in The Columbus are not in accord with what was said in The Northumbria, 18 W. R. 188, L. R. 3 A. & E. 6. Therefore, under the circumstances of the present case the plaintiffs are entitled to recover the freight lost. It is desirable to add that we have allowed the value of The Chrysolite as at the date when she would have accomplished the voyage to Havre, and not her value at the date of collision with a charter which it was admitted was a valuable one.

(Signed) E. S. ROSCOE,
Assistant Registrar."

Against the report of the registrar the defendants appealed, on the ground that the report allowed the sum of £470 in respect of the claim for loss of charter, and £1,000 for the value of The Chrysolite at the date when she would have accomplished the voyage to Havre, whereas the defendants contend that the vessel having in law been totally lost the plaintiffs can only recover the value of the vessel at the time of her loss, and that such value did not exceed the sum of £800.

The appeal was heard by consent on motion before the President on the 20th of March last.

Aspinall, Q.C., and Stubbs, for the appellants, in support of the motion.—The ruling of the House of Lords in the case of The Argentino, 14 App. Cas. 519, 38 W. R. Dig. 62, on which the respondents will rely, is only applicable to a case of partial loss, as that case was, and the practice in Admiralty has always been, where there has been a total loss of a vessel in ballast by reason of collision, to allow the market value of the vessel lost, but nothing in respect of any profits which but for the collision the vessel might perhaps have earned. If the profits of one voyage after the collision were allowed, why not the profits for any number of voyages? The damages claimed for loss of charter here are too remote and speculative and have always been so considered: The Columbus; The Clyde, Swa. 23; The City of Rome, Shipping Gazette for May 12, 1887. The value of The Chrysolite, as found by the registrar, is too high. Her value at the time of the collision without regard to her engagements ought to have been given, and that was only £800. There was no evidence given of her value at any other time.

They also referred to The British Columbia Saw Mill Co. v. Nettleship, L. R. 3 C. P. 499; Mayne on Damages (5th ed.), p. 409.

F. Laing, for the respondents, the owners of The Chrysolite, contra.—The registrar was right in allowing the amount he did in respect of the loss of the beneficial charter in this case. The rule of restitutio in integrum which prevails in all actions of damage would not be satisfied if the plaintiffs were to be deprived of what has thus been awarded in respect of the profits it is probable they would have realized by performing the charter. In the case of The Columbus, and those following it, the damages claimed were only disallowed because such damages were too remote and speculative; but it is clear since the decisions in The Argentino, The Consett, 5 P. D. 229, and The Star of India, 25 W. R. 377, 1 P. D. 466, that the loss of a beneficial charter is so far a certainty that in a case of partial loss such damages may be recoverable; and if that is the case, why should the rule be different in case of total loss? The damages claimed on this head are really equivalent to freight lost by reason of the collision (The Northumbria), and on that ground are clearly recoverable. The registrar has considered the evidence given as to the value of The Chrysolite, and has come to a right conclusion on that evidence.

Cur. adv. vult.

April 11.—JEUNE, P.—The facts which give rise to the questions I have to decide are as follows: On the 21st of June, 1898, a collision occurred in the English Channel between the Norwegian barque Chrysolite and the Austrian steamship Kate. The Chrysolite sustained such injury that she was treated as a constructive total loss. The result of proceedings taken in this court by the owners of The Chrysolite to recover the damages arising out of the collision was that, on the basis of an agreement come to between the owners of the two vessels, a decree was made that the owners of The Kate should pay 90 per cent. of the damages sustained by The Chrysolite. The Chrysolite was, at the time of the collision, on a voyage from London to Miramichi under a charter-party, in accordance with which she was to proceed to Miramichi and there load a cargo of timber for Havre.

The plaintiffs, as part of the damages proceeded for, claimed the loss of freight which would have been earned had The Chrysolite reached Miramichi, taken in her cargo, and delivered it at Havre. The learned registrar, assisted by merchants, has, in his calculation of the damages, allowed £1,000 as the value of The Chrysolite at the date when she would have accomplished the voyage to Havre, and has also allowed £470 for loss of charter—that is to say, for loss of the profit which would have been realized under the charter-party had The Chrysolite accomplished her voyage to Havre. The defendants, the owners of The Kate, dispute the right in law of the plaintiffs to recover this sum of £470 or any part thereof, and they also, upon the evidence, challenge the value put upon The Chrysolite.

The first question is one of law, and it is contended on behalf of the defendants that the matter is governed by a rule of law and practice prevailing in the Court of Admiralty. Apart from such special rule it would have appeared to me clear that in some way or other the principles upon which damages are assessed would require account to be taken of the profitable character of the charter-party under which the ship was at the time of her loss. The general principle which governs the assessment of damages is of course restitutio in integrum qualified by the condition that the damage sought to be recovered must not be too remote—that is to say, must be the natural consequence, and not merely a consequence traceable in fact to the wrongful act. It may be nothing more than a question of statement of figures whether the owner of a vessel lost when under a profitable charter-party is recouped this loss by receiving her value at the conclusion of her voyage plus the profits of the charter-party, or by receiving her value at the time of collision, such value being enhanced by the fact that the ship at the time was under a profitable charter-party. But unless in one or other of these ways the owner gets the benefit of the profitable engagement of his ship, he obviously fails to realise a restitutio in integrum.

But it is said that there is a rule of law which prevents account being taken of freight or profit of that nature, if the ship be a total loss. The leading authority relied on in support of this proposition is The Columbus, 3 Wm. Rob. 158, decided in 1849. That was a case in which in a collision off Dungeness a smack was sunk, and her owner claimed not only the value of his vessel, but further sums—first, for wages, which it was said he would have earned as master of the smack, and, secondly, for profits which it was supposed the smack would have made after the time of the collision. Both these further claims were rejected by Dr. Lushington. The learned judge, I think, recognised that even in the case before him the principle of restitutio in integrum was hardly carried out if the claims in dispute were rejected, but he based his decision on the rules and practice of the court. I draw this conclusion from the following passage in the judgment:

"It has been argued on his behalf that the principle upon which this court proceeds in all matters of this kind is a restitutio in integrum; in other words, the principle of replacing the party who has received the damage in the same position in which he would have been, provided the collision had not occurred. As a general proposition, undoubtedly the principle in question is correctly stated; and not only in this court, but in all other courts, I apprehend, the general rule of law is, that where an injury is committed by one individual to another, either by himself or his servant, for whose acts the law makes him responsible, the party receiving the injury is entitled to an indemnity for the same. But although this is the general principle of law, all courts have found it necessary to adopt certain rules for the application of it; and it is utterly impossible, in all the various cases that may arise, that the remedy which the law may give should always be to the precise amount of the loss or injury sustained. In many cases it will of necessity exceed, in others fall short of, the precise amount. To select an example amongst the cases which have occurred in this court, I may here mention the case of The Gazelle, which has been brought to the notice of the court, in which a larger sum was awarded than the actual loss sustained by the party suing in the cause. In respect to the question more immediately under consideration at the present moment, I do not recollect a case, and no case has been suggested to me, where a vessel has been considered as a total loss, and the full value of that vessel having been awarded by the registrar and merchants, any claim has been set up for compensation beyond the value of that vessel. When I first read the papers in this case, I looked with much care and attention to see whether any precedent could be found, whether any single instance had occurred in the numerous cases which have arisen . . . but I found none, and the learned counsel who has argued the case on behalf of Mr. Woodward does not appear to have been more successful in his researches."

It would appear also that the learned judge was impressed by the difficulty of estimating the damage on the possible loss of profits and the speculative character of such an assessment. He says (The Columbus, 3 Wm. Rob, p. 164): "The true rule of law in such a case would, I conceive, be this—namely, to calculate the value of the property destroyed at the time of the loss, and to pay it to the owners, as a full indemnity to them for all that may have happened without entering for a moment into any other consideration. If the principle to the contrary, contended for by the owners of the smack in this case, were once admitted, I see no limit in its application to the difficulties which would be imposed upon the court. It would extend to almost endless ramifications, and in every case I might be called upon to determine not only the value of the ship, but the profits to be derived on the voyage in which she might be engaged, and indeed even to those of the return voyage, which might be said to have been defeated by the collision. Upon this consideration alone, I should not, I conceive, be justified in admitting this claim; but I am further borne out in so doing by the difference which exists between a total loss, and the case of a partial damage—namely, that in the latter case the amount of the additional injury in the loss of the freight is capable of being accurately calculated. It depends upon no contingency; it is, in point of fact, an absolute loss, and, as such, the owner of the ship upon whom it falls is justly entitled to compensation."

It appears to me that, except on the ground of the uncertain and speculative nature of the claim, which certainly was its character in the case before Dr. Lushington, it would be difficult, on principle, to exclude such a claim. It was conceded in the argument before Dr. Lushington, and held by him, that in the case of the partial loss of a vessel an allowance for demurrage may be given, in addition to the cost of repairing the physical damage inflicted; and in the cases of The Consett, 5 P. D. 229, and The Star of India, 1 P. D. 466, it was held by Sir Robert Phillimore that in the case of a partial loss the loss of a profitable charter-party formed a proper element of compensation. The case of The Argentino in the House of Lords is a conclusive authority that the loss of earnings in an employment contracted for is not too remote to constitute an element to be considered in the assessment of damages in the case of a partial loss.

It is, no doubt, a sound principle in the case of a total loss that, speaking generally, to give a sum which will replace the vessel, is to give all that justice demands. It may, in such case, be fairly enough assumed that the substituted vessel will in the future be as profitable to her owner as that which has perished would have been. But to carry this principle so far as to say that a vessel lost at the commencement of her voyage is compensated for by her value, without regard to her profits during the voyage, when the owner could not, in fact, replace his lost vessel and earn those profits, appears to me to press theory into conflict with facts. And, if I am right in thinking that what influenced Dr. Lushington was the uncertain and speculative character of the claim before him, such consideration certainly does not arise in a case like the present, where the claim is regulated by the terms of the charter-party in force at the time of the collision.

The case of The Clyde, Swa 23, was referred to before me as supporting the decision in The Columbus. It might be expected to do so, as it was also a decision of Dr. Lushington. The learned judge, in fact, reiterates and explains his previous decisions. All he says is: "There was another case came before the court where the vessel was totally lost and destroyed. A claim was made for consequential damage, but the court held it had no discretion in the matter. All the remedy it could give was that of putting on the vessel at the time she was lost a market price; whereas in case of partial loss there are other claims such as demurrage and so on, which are always compensated. Therefore, what we have had to look at is, what would the vessel have fetched in the market at the period of its destruction?"

It is to be observed that Dr. Lushington lays down that the value of the vessel to which, in the case of total loss, he confines the damages is to be taken at the time of the loss, and he does not, I should suppose, in the case of a vessel under a profitable charter at the time of loss, intend to exclude the fact of that charter from entering into the computation of the market price of the vessel. If this element of value be admitted, a restitutio in integrum might, no doubt, by this process be effected.

The decision in the case of The City of Rome, Shipping Gazette, May 12, 1887, p. 310, appears to me to be practically identical with that in The Columbus. The owner of a fishing vessel sunk in a collision claimed for the value of the fish which would have been caught between the date of the collision and the termination of the fishing season. The registrar held that the loss was too remote and speculative to be taken into consideration, and Sir James Hannen upheld that view. "I consider," he said, "that the matter is concluded by authority, that when there is a total loss the question of the value of things lost at that time is what is to be taken into account, without reference to what a vessel would have earned if she had gone on a longer or a shorter voyage than the one on which she was engaged at the time."

Here, as in the case of The Columbus, nothing appears to be decided which would exclude a claim for enhanced value of a vessel at the time of her loss by reason of a profitable engagement which had been secured for her.

I should feel the greatest difficulty in even appearing not to follow implicitly a decision of Dr. Lushington on a point which he considers to be decided by the practice of the Admiralty Court, were it not that there is a later decision in this court, and decisions also of registrars, which appear to me to be based on a different view of that practice. I refer first to the case of The Northumbria, L. R. 3 A. & E. 6, decided by Sir Robert Phillimore in 1869. That was a case in which the owners of The Northumbria claimed to limit their liability in respect of damage occasioned by collision to a sum of £8 for each ton of her tonnage, and the question was whether her owners were liable also to pay interest on such amount from the date of the collision. It was held that they were. In his judgment Sir Robert Phillimore stated the practice of the Admiralty Court as follows: "The practice under the old law, which decreed a restitutio in integrum by the wrong-doer to the sufferer, was as follows: In the case of a vessel sunk with a cargo on board, the restitutio in integrum was effected by a calculation of the probable value of the ship at the end of her voyage, and of the freight which she would have earned, making at the same time certain deductions as to the expenses which the owners must have incurred in order to complete the voyage, such as the wages of the crew, &c., and also making a deduction for discount if the value found were paid before the probable end of the voyage. . . . In the event of the vessel sunk having no cargo, then interest upon the value of the ship from the day of the collision was given; the reason being that in the former case by giving freight you had really given the interest on the use of the vessel during the interval between the collision and her arrival in port; whereas, in the case of there being no cargo, there was no freight to represent the interest, and it was therefore expressly given. So that, in the first case, to have given interest as well as freight would have been to place the sufferer in a better position than he would have been but for the collision; and, in the second case, to have refused him interest would have been to place him in a worse position on account of the collision than he would otherwise have been; whereas the principle of restitutio in integrum is to replace the sufferer in the condition in which he was at the time when the wrong was done."

It is clear, therefore, that in the opinion of Sir Robert Phillimore the practice was that if a vessel totally lost had cargo on board, the freight which she would have earned was to be allowed, and the value of the ship calculated as at the end of her voyage; and, if she had no cargo on board, interest was given at the time of the collision. The difference between the views of the practice of the Court of Admiralty taken by Dr. Lushington and Sir Robert Phillimore, both, of course, very high authorities, is perhaps more apparent than real. Dr. Lushington indicates that the value of the vessel is to be taken at the time of the collision, which does not, as I have above suggested, exclude a fact such as the existence of a profitable charter from being allowed to enhance the value of the vessel at that time. Sir Robert Phillimore states that the value should be taken as at the end of the voyage, and therefore lets in freight or interest as an additional compensation. The result of the two calculations in figures should be practically indentical.

The present case, which is that of a vessel without cargo, but under charter, being totally lost, is not exactly that contemplated by Sir Robert Phillimore; but it appears to me to follow from his judgment that the value of the vessel may in such case be taken as at the end of her voyage, and something allowed in respect of the period between the time of collision and the end of the voyage. What is that something? If there be cargo on board, Sir Robert Phillimore says that the freight is to be allowed for, if no cargo be on board, then interest is to be allowed. But if the vessel be under charter it appears to me that a case arises in which the profits under the charter-party should take the place of interest, as more accurately representing the loss to the owner, and may fairly be considered to be the equivalent of freight when a cargo is on board. Indeed, I can see no distinction between the case of freight when a cargo is on board, and the present case of a charter-party, under which cargo is to be taken. The engagement under which, in both cases, the vessel is employed, equally removes the claim from the region of speculation, and in neither case can it be said to be too remote.

I think, therefore, that the proper measure of damage in this case is the value of the vessel at the end of her voyage, plus the profits lost under the charter-party, and this is what the learned registrar has allowed. There is, however, further authority on the practice of the Admiralty Court, to which so much weight was attached by Dr. Lushington. So far as can be judged from the instances collected in Pritchard's Admiralty Digest, claims similar to the present have for more than thirty years invariably been dealt with in the registry in the manner adopted by the learned registrar in the present case. There is an instance of a vessel run down and totally lost in the English Channel while on a voyage from Newcastle with a cargo of coals from Cadiz, whence she was to carry a cargo of salt to South America pursuant to a charter-party entered into before she left Newcastle, in which case it was held that the owners were entitled to net freight not only on the coal, but also on the salt cargo: H.M.S. Fork, Pritchard's Digest, p. 1761. No objection was taken to the report of the registrar. In another case no objection was raised to the decision of the registrar where a steamer on her way to Middlesborough in ballast, and chartered to carry a cargo of pig iron thence to Dantzic, and return with a cargo of oak staves to London, was sunk in a collision, and the freight for both voyages was allowed, less the probable cost of earning it: The Breeze, Pritchard's Admiralty Digest, p. 1762. There is another case decided by the registrar without objection, which is, I think, exactly in point. The plaintiffs, claiming for the total loss of their vessel on her outward voyage, were allowed the homeward freight which would in all probability have been earned under a charter-party in force if the collision had not occurred: The Appendix, Pritchard's Digest, p. 1761. I find on the other hand that when there was apparently no existing charter-party (The Undine, Ibid), and when the claim was in respect of a future voyage for which no preparation had been made (The Kaikoura, Pritchard's Digest, p. 1762), a claim for freight was disallowed; but it was disallowed in the first case for the reason, as expressly stated, that the claim was problematical, and in the second case in all probability for a similar reason.

It was also argued before me that the learned registrar did not calculate the value of the vessel at the end of her voyage, and even if he did that the value he placed on the vessel is exaggerated. To this the reply made seems to me conclusive. The learned registrar clearly did, and says that he did, take the value of the vessel at the end of her voyage, and I am satisfied that there was ample evidence before him to justify the figures at which he arrived. I think, therefore, that the report of the learned registrar is correct, and ought to be confirmed.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Botterell & Roche.

Solicitors for the defendants, Stokes & Stokes.

House of Lords.

From C. A. (England). } May 18.

HUNTER AND OTHERS v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL AND OTHERS. (a.)

Charity—Will—Gift to purchase advowsons—General charitable intention—Uncertainty.

A testator gave his pure personalty to special trustees upon trust to invest, and with power to apply the income or any portion of the capital (1) in grants for or towards the purchase of advowsons or presentations; (2) in creating or contributing to the creation, improvement, or endowment of churches, chapels, or schools; or (3) in paying or contributing to the salaries or incomes of rectors, vicars, or incumbents, masters, or teachers, upon certain expressed conditions upholding certain religious doctrines, but not in terms applying to (1).

Held, that there was not any general trust for charity binding the whole fund, and that, as the trustees, having a discretion, were not bound to apply the funds to purposes strictly charitable, and as the other purposes to which, in their discretion, they were stated to be applicable were too indefinite to constitute a trust, the whole gift was bad as a charitable gift and void.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (45 W. R. 610, [1897] 2 Ch. 105), reversed.

This was an appeal from an order of the Court of Appeal (Lindley, Lopes, and Rigby, L.JJ.), dated the 21st of May, 1897, and reported 45 W. R. 610, [1897] 2 Ch. 105, reversing a decision of Romer, J. (45 W. R. 344, [1897], 1 Ch. 518).

The testator, Edward Hunter, who died in July, 1896, by his will made in May, 1877, after various specific bequests, gave all his residuary estate to trustees on trust to convert, invest, and to pay the income of one moiety to his sister during her life, and the income of the other to his brother-in-law during his life, and subject thereto the testator directed that the whole of his estate should be transferred to special trustees to be held and applied by them upon the trusts and in manner following—that is to say, "The special trustees may retain or invest such part of my residuary estate as shall come to or devolve upon them in or upon any stocks, funds, shares, or securities which they may think proper and whether of the class hereinbefore prescribed by me or not, and they may apply the income or any portion of the capital in grants for or towards the purchase of advowsons or presentations or in creating or contributing to the erection, improvement, or endowment of churches, chapels, or schools or in paying or contributing to the salaries or income of rectors, vicars, or incumbents, masters, or teachers, but upon the following conditions: (1) That only such churches or chapels shall be subscribed or contributed to wherein the service shall in the opinion of the special trustees be conducted upon pure Protestant and Church of England principles, by which I mean the principles of the Church of England as held and inculcated by those of her divines, clergy, and members who are distinguished as Evangelical and loyal to the work and fruits of the Reformation, and as holding doctrines and principles free from all Popish or Roman Catholic tendency, and opposed thereto. (2) That only such schools shall be subscribed or contributed to wherein true Protestant and Church of England principles are distinctly taught and inculcated, with preference to those established for children of the poorer classes. (3) That only such masters and teachers receive grants who best show forth by their teaching and example true Protestant and Church of England principles. (4) That no payment shall be made directly or indirectly to or for the benefit of any rector, vicar, or incumbent unless upon condition that he shall, if not prohibited in law, at the principal Sunday morning service in his church, selecting a time and state of weather when the congregation is supposed to be greatest, read the Thirty-nine Articles of the Church of England, and which I recommend he should make the subject of his discourse from time to time. And upon further condition that he shall on the first Sunday of every month, at the chief morning service, preach a sermon on 'Love' from a text taken from the Gospel, Epistles, or Revelation of St. John. And I declare that if the special trustees shall find or consider that any rector, vicar, or incumbent, master, or teacher shall preach, teach, publish, inculcate, encourage, adopt, or follow any doctrines or practices which shall be contrary to or at variance with true Protestant and Church of England principles he or she shall be disqualified from receiving any benefit under this my will. And it being my wish that as much as possible of my residuary estate shall be applicable and available for administration by special trustees in manner aforesaid, I declare that all my debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and the duty on all legacies under this my will or any codicil not payable by the legatees shall be raised and paid out of such parts of my residuary estate as are not legally applicable to charitable purposes to the exoneration of the residue thereof, and that no part of my residuary estate which shall be so legally applicable shall be invested or dealt with so as to make the same inapplicable or unavailable for those purposes." The testator further declared "that on the death of each of them, my said sister and brother-in-law, the moiety in which she or he shall have had a life interest as aforesaid, as shall not be legally applicable to charitable purposes, shall be held by my general trustees" for various nieces or such of them as should survive him in equal shares.

An originating summons was taken out for the determination of the questions—(a) Whether the objects of the residuary gift were of a charitable nature; (b) in the event of the failure of the charitable gift, whether there was a valid gift to testator's nieces or an intestacy. Romer, J., held that the whole gift was bad as a charitable gift, but the Court of Appeal took a different view, holding that there was a general charitable intention expressed and that the gift was a good charitable disposition.

Cozens-Hardy, Q.C., and Levett, Q.C. (George Lawrence with them), for the appellants.—No trust is declared of the advowsons when purchased. You can hold an advowson for a charity but there is no trust at all to carry the advowsons here. A trust of this kind cannot be a charity. The object being too indefinite, there is no trust: Morice v. Durham (Bishop), 9 Ves. 399, 10 Ibid. 522. A trust of this kind does not bring any further property into charity; it does not augment the sum total. A trust to purchase advowsons is not a charity. The option given is fatal: Vezey v. Jamson, 1 Sim. & St. 69; James v. Allen, 3 Mer. 17; Ommanney v. Butcher, Turn. & Russ. 260; Williams v. Kershaw, 5 Cl. & Fin. 111 (n); Ellis v. Selby, 1 My. & Cr. 286; and In re Macduff, 45 W. R. 154, [1896] 2 Ch. 451.

Sir R. E. Webster, A.G., and Ingle Joyce (Dibdin with them), for the respondent.—The general intent is charitable and the court will enforce it. [They referred to In re St. Stephen, Coleman-street 36 W. R.

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

837, 39 Ch. D. 492; Foley v. Attorney-General, 7 Bro. P. C. 249; Wilson v. Dennison, Amb. 82; Augmentation of Benefices Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 120).] When you get an overriding intent the court finds out away: In re Douglas, Obert v. Barrow, 35 W. R. 740, 35 Ch. D. 472; Sinnett v. Herbert, 20 W. R. 270, L. R. 7 Ch. App. 232; Pocock v. Attorney-General, 25 W. R. 277, 3 Ch. D. 342.

W. C. Druce, for the respondent Hood.

Cozens-Hardy, Q.C., replied.

The House took time for consideration.

Earl of HALSBURY, L.C.—In this case it does not appear to be doubted that if Romer, J., was right in holding that the first purpose, which the testator in this case has described as being a purpose to which some part or all, according to the discretion of the trustees, may be applied, is not "charitable" in the sense in which that word is understood by the Court of Chancery, then the whole gift must fail. It is undoubtedly the law that where a bequest is made for charitable purposes and also for an indefinite purpose not charitable, and no apportionment is made by the will so that the whole might be applied for either purpose, the whole bequest is void, and I do not understand any of the judges of the Court of Appeal to question that doctrine, but in a manner I shall refer to presently each of the learned judges gives reasons tending to show that Romer, J., was wrong in saying that the first purpose in question was not a charitable gift.

Now, it will hardly be contended that, if the words stood alone, the purchase of advowsons and presentations is a charitable purpose, and it certainly cannot be said that the trustees appointed by the testator might not devote every farthing of the fund in their hands to that one purpose. It is equally clear that he has declared no trust in respect of the advowsons or presentations when purchased.

The process of reasoning by which the Court of Appeal has come to the conclusion that they have the right to read the testator's will as establishing a charitable trust on the words to which I have referred is this: They say that they are sufficiently satisfied of the testator's intention by referring to other parts of his will; and I so far agree that, judging of his religious views by what he has said in other parts of his will, I have no doubt whatever that his general intention was to aid the particular school of religious thought in the Church of England to which he was himself attached; but it would be a strange canon of construction for a will to say that wherever you can discover what a testator's desires and wishes were, although you cannot find express words in the will which give the authority sought for, nevertheless you can supply words and declare trusts which are not to be found in the will itself; that, to put it plainly, the testator's intention is to be judged by the general desire that he has expressed to have his money devoted to such a purpose. To create a trust by such a process of argument as that appears, to my mind, to be not interpreting the will, but making a will for the testator. The Master of the Rolls says, with the candour which always distinguishes that learned judge, "I do not say the words fit them, but you can see plainly enough what the testator is driving at."

Again, he says, "It is true that he" (the testator) "has not said in so many words that that part of his residuary estate which may be applied for the purpose of advowsons or presentations is to be held when obtained upon the particular trusts." Again, he says: "The court ought to look at the drift of the whole will; and looking at it from that point of view, although I quite feel it is difficult to fit the words in so as to make the conditions accurately applicable," and so on. Lopes, L.J., puts the argument in a more compendious but I think in a more obviously fallacious way when he says "What object could he" (the testator) "have in view when he directed these special trustees to spend large sums of money in buying advowsons or presentations, except to advance religion — that particular form of the Protestant religion to which he was himself attached." Rigby, L.J., says: "I will take a more general view of the will. What did the testator mean? He meant to carry out his object by means of churches and chapels and schools." He says: "Churches and chapels and schools—it is 'churches, chapels, or schools'—and through the instrumentality of rectors, vicars, and incumbents, and masters or teachers. From that it appears to me plain that he was intending as far as he could to devote his property capable of being applied to charitable purposes for the purpose of religion or education." I do not say that we have got quite through, but we are advanced. We find that by means of churches, chapels, or schools, and rectors, incumbents, or teachers, he was going to have this money made available. Now I venture to say that if you were to suppose that every one of the words which the lord justice has used was in the will itself, it would advance the lord justice's argument no whit further. The point is this: Whatever his general intention may be, the testator has not done it. I must not omit to notice what the Master of the Rolls put as the cardinal and crucial question. Suppose the trustees here had proceeded to appoint a ritualistic clergyman, would not the court restrain them? I admit that that is a plausible mode of putting the difficulty, but is it anything else than giving a startling illustration of what the consequences would be if the testator, notwithstanding his general intentions, had not made sufficient provision for giving effect to his intentions? Is it any more than again stating the very question your lordships have to decide—that which the Master of the Rolls has described as the crucial question? Is it not only another mode of putting the point which he has already dealt with, and—with all respect to him I venture to say—not successfully? And after all it is only what always happens when the testator forgets to give verbal expression to what may nevertheless be in his mind.

Admitting freely what each of the learned judges has said, I am unable to agree that such general intention not carried out by appropriate words in the will itself can give any court the right to place the words there for him—that is, as I have said, to make a will—not to interpret the will. You might as well argue that because you can discover that someone was the object of the testator's affection, you should invent a bequest for him, since he did not mean to die intestate, and he must therefore have meant to leave something to the object of his affection—that because you find general expressions in a will of affection and regard for certain persons, although there are no words in which provision is made for them, you are to interpret the will in such a way as in a large and general sense may be said to satisfy the wishes of the testator. The plain fact remains in this will that the testator has not declared the trust that the Court of Appeal have imagined for him, and no apt words have been found to fit or give effect to his supposed intention; and I think we are not justified in taking such a liberty of interpretation. That certainly would be a strange mode of construing a will, that because you cannot find what else he must have intended to be done with his money, except something of that nature, although it is admitted that there are no words in the will to convey the intention which is suggested he had in his mind, you can invent provisions and impose conditions which the testator himself has not introduced. With the utmost respect for the learned judges of the Court of Appeal, I say that that would be admitting a latitude of interpretation and a looseness in the application of words in wills expressing the general intentions of the testator which, although in this particular case it might do no harm, would let in a mode of interpreting wills which would cast upon the court in almost every case of a defectively made will the necessity of making the will for the testator, not interpreting the words which he has actually used.

For these reasons I am of opinion that the judgment of the Court of Appeal ought to be reversed, and the judgment of Romer, J., restored.

Lord WATSON.—I have had an opportunity of considering and I entirely concur in the terms of the judgment prepared by Lord Davey.

Lord SHAND.—After very careful consideration induced by the circumstance that the House is about to reverse the unanimous decision of the Court of Appeal, I agree in thinking that this House should revert to the judgment of Romer, J. That learned judge has held that while the testator, with reference to the first of the several purposes to which he has authorized the residue of his estate to be applied has stated that his trustees "may apply the income or any portion of the capital in grants for or towards the purchase of advowsons or presentations," yet there is no provision to be found in his will that the advowsons or presentations so purchased, or for or towards the purchase of which grants may be given, shall be affected by any charitable trust, or, indeed, by any definite trust whatever, and I concur in that view.

The testator has authorized his special trustees to apply the income or any portion of the capital of the residue of his estate in three different ways—first, in the purchase of advowsons or presentations; or, secondly, in the erection, improvement, or endowment of churches, chapels, or schools; or thirdly, in paying or contributing to the salaries or income of rectors, vicars, or incumbents, masters or teachers. There is no direction to apportion the funds and apply part to each of these purposes. The trustees might in their discretion apply the whole income and capital to any one of the three, and it follows that if it be held that one of the purposes is not charitable the deed is not effectual as a charitable bequest of the residue as a whole.

I agree with the learned Master of the Rolls that the words "but upon the following conditions," which immediately succeed the enumeration of the three trust purposes, taken grammatically, apply to all that has gone before; but so reading the will I can find no condition which has application to advowsons or presentations. These conditions, which make it clear as regards the second and third trust purposes, relating to churches, chapels, or schools, and to rectors, vicars, and teachers, have by the language used no application and no relation to advowsons or presentations. It is said in his lordship's judgment, "I do not say that the words fit them, but you can see plainly what the testator is driving at." With the utmost respect for the learned judge, I should say that is not enough. I see much in the provisions of the will relating to the endowment of churches or schools, and the contributions to the income of rectors or teachers, which leads me to think the testator intended to make similar provisions in regard to grants for the purchase of advowsons or presentations; but assuming he had that intention, he has, in my opinion, failed to express it, and I say so, of course, taking the will as a whole. The question is not one for speculative reasoning: "What do you think was the testator's intention?" but "What has he expressly or by implication (but by necessary implication where implication only is relied on) expressed by the terms used?"

On a sound construction of the will I am of opinion that the testator has not affixed any condition to the application of the residue or part of it in the purchase of advowsons or presentations which makes that an application to a charitable purpose, and as the whole of that residue might thus be applied to a purpose not charitable, I am of opinion that the appeal must be allowed.

Lord DAVEY.—The primary question in this case is the construction of the testator's will. Reading the will shortly, the testator gave his pure personalty to special trustees upon trust to invest, and with power to apply the income or any portion of the capital in—first, grants for or towards the purchase of advowsons or presentations; or secondly, in creating or contributing to the creation, improvement, or endowment of churches, chapels, or schools; or, thirdly, in paying or contributing to the salaries or incomes of rectors, vicars, or incumbents, masters or teachers, but upon certain conditions which I will discuss presently.

There is no doubt that the second and third purposes (which are not numbered in the will, but which I have numbered for convenience of reference) are in themselves charitable, assuming that schools are not schools of a private character; and there is equally little doubt that a trust for making grants for or towards the purchase of advowsons or presentations is not in itself a charitable purpose. The learned judges in the Court of Appeal have, however, thought that they could spell out of the words of the will a charitable purpose in connection with the advowsons or presentations expressed with sufficient definiteness for the court to give effect to it. What one ought to find is some trust imposed upon the holders of the advowson or presentation, when purchased, as to the manner in which the right of patronage is to be exercised. The mere purchase or contribution to the purchase of the property in an advowson or right of presentation is in truth a mere change of investment, and the charitable purpose must, in my opinion, be found in the use to be made of the property when purchased. I agree with Rigby, L.J., that we must take the whole will together, and see what, as a fair result, is the meaning of the testator, if by that phrase is understood the meaning of the words he has used. I agree, too, with the lord justice that the circumstance that the testator makes a separation between the portion of his property which he can by law devote to charity and that which he cannot, and that he appoints special trustees to administer the trusts of the former portion of his property, are matters for serious consideration. But I further agree with the lord justice that you are not, because he has done that, to do violence to the language of any part of the will, or to import words which you do not find there to make the purposes charitable because of those prefatory dispositions which the testator has made. You must construe the words of the will fairly, and if you can find a charitable purpose sufficiently clearly expressed the court will give effect to it. If you do not find any such definite expression you are not at liberty to supply it from more or less well-founded speculation of what the testator would probably have wished or intended if his attention had been drawn to the omission. It may be that voluit sed non dixit. Now, apart from the expressed conditions, there is nothing except the prefatory disposition already referred to, and the direction to his general trustees, in case the special trustees named decline to act, to nominate persons who may be depended on to respect and fulfil the testator's wishes. There is no suggestion made of any secret trust. These words, therefore, mean his expressed wishes, and do not seem to me to carry the matter any further. I am doubtful whether evidence that the nominated trustees were in fact the then trustees of the well-known Simeon trust is admissible for the purposes of construing the will. It is not pretended that the trusts of the Simeon foundation are imported by implication into the will, and if so I do not see the relevance of the evidence. It shows, indeed, what appears from other parts of the will, that the testator was a man of strong Evangelical principles, but it does not assist the court to arrive at the trusts intended to be imposed upon the advowsons and rights of presentation to be purchased wholly or in part out of the testator's estate: see on this point Doe d. Toone v. Copestake, 6 East 328.

I turn now to the expressed conditions, and I assume for the purposes of this case that, if applicable to the first purpose, there would be a good charitable trust. The first is that only such churches or chapels shall be subscribed or contributed to wherein the service shall, in the opinion of the special trustees, be conducted in the particular manner prescribed. These words, it is admitted, do not in terms fit or apply to the purchase of advowsons. The learned judges have, however, endeavoured to apply the words to the first purpose. "I do not say that the words fit them," says the Master of the Rolls, "but you can see plainly enough what the testator is driving at. What are these advowsons or presentations to be bought for except for the purpose of advancing religion as he understands it? And he has told you plainly enough how he understands it in the words I have just read." With unfeigned respect for the Master of the Rolls' opinion, this seems to me to be making a will for the testator, and not interpreting the words he has used. In no intelligible sense can the purchase of advowsons be called subscribing or contributing to churches or chapels; and to apply these words to the first purpose seems to be doing violence to the language of the will. The words are directly and plainly applicable to the second purpose, and, in my opinion, to that only. The second and third conditions I need not dwell on, because they relate to schools and masters and teachers only. The fourth condition provides that no payment shall be made directly or indirectly to or for the benefit of any rector, vicar, or incumbent, except upon certain conditions; and this is followed by a declaration disqualifying any rector, &c., who shall preach or adopt or follow any doctrines or practices at variance with the testator's views of religion as stated. These provisions, again, are directly and properly applicable to the third purpose of the trust, and cannot be made to fit grants for the purchase of advowsons and presentations. Possibly, if the first purpose were the only purpose of the trust, the court would, however difficult it might be, endeavour to make the conditions fit that purpose. But where you have other purposes to which the conditions, according to the ordinary construction of the words, are properly and directly applicable, it would, in my opinion, be wrong to strain and do violence to the language to make them fit the first purpose.

I quite agree that advowsons may be made the subject of charitable trusts, as was decided by Kay, J., in In re St. Stephen's, Coleman-street. But I am unable to find that the testator has by his will annexed any trust either for a particular charitable purpose or for charitable purposes generally, or indeed any trust whatever, to the advowsons or rights of presentation which he empowers his special trustees to make grants for the purchase of. The Attorney-General pointed out that the advowsons and rights of presentation were not intended to be, or, at any rate, might not be, purchased or held by the trustees themselves. The testator therefore has left his special trustees free to make grants to other persons, whether trustees or not, in their discretion, or, if the purchasers be trustees, without any definition or limitation of the trusts upon which such persons are to hold the purchased property. The court is always properly desirous of upholding a testator's will, but after anxious consideration I am unable to say that the will discloses any trust as regards the first purpose which the court can either execute or control the execution of by the trustees.

What, then, is the law applicable to the case? There are two classes of authorities. On the one hand, there is a long series of cases extending from Morice v. Durham (Bishop), decided by Sir William Grant and Lord Eldon, to In re Macduff, decided by the Court of Appeal in 1896, and including two decisions of Lord Cottenham. In these cases it has been held that where charitable purposes are mixed up with other purposes of such a shadowy and indefinite nature that the court cannot execute them (such as "charitable or benevolent," or "charitable or philanthropic," or "charitable or pious" purposes), or where the description includes purposes which may or may not be charitable (such as "undertakings of public utility"), and a discretion is vested in the trustees, the whole gift fails for uncertainty. In Vezey v. Jamson the trust was to dispose of the residue in or towards such charitable or public purposes as the law of the land would admit, or to any persons as the trustees in their discretion should think fit, or as they should think would have been agreeable to him if living, and as the laws of the land did not prohibit. Sir John Leach said: "The testator has not fixed upon any part of this property a trust for a charitable use. I cannot, therefore, devote any part of it to charity. . . . The necessary consequence is, that the purposes of the trust being so general and undefined that they cannot be executed by this court, they must fail altogether, and the next-of-kin become entitled to the property."

On the other hand, it has been decided in cases such as Attorney-General v. Doyley, (1735) 4 Vin. Abr. 485, and Salusbury v. Denton, 5 W. R. 865, 3 K. & J. 529, that where the trustees have a discretion to apportion between charitable objects and definite and ascertainable objects non-charitable, the trust does not fail; but in default of apportionment by the trustees the court will divide the fund between the objects charitable and non-charitable equally.

I have come to the conclusion that the present case falls within the first class of cases. As Sir William Grant, M.R., says, in Morice v. Durham (Bishop), "The question is, not whether the trustee may not apply it upon purposes strictly charitable, but whether he is bound so to apply it?" The answer to that question in the present case can only be that there is no such obligation. On the other hand, the other purposes to which conceivably the trustees may apply the whole fund in their discretion are not described with sufficient definiteness for the court to attach any trust upon them.

A third class of cases was relied on by the respondents, of which Sinnett v. Herbert and In re Douglas Obert v. Barrow, are examples, in which there is a general overriding trust for charitable purposes, but some of the particular purposes to which the fund may be applied are not strictly charitable, or one of two alternative modes of application is invalid in law. In such cases the trust is good, and the court will give effect to the general charitable trust, but the trustees are restricted from applying the fund to the purposes or in the manner which are objectionable. But in my opinion those cases have no application to that before this House, because, as I have already said, I think that there is not here any general trust for charity binding the whole fund.

The result is that, in my opinion, the order of the Court of Appeal should be discharged, except so far as it relates to costs, and that of Romer, J., restored. The appellants here will have their costs out of the estate. The respondent, the executor, must also have his costs as between solicitor and client out of the estate.

Sir R. E. Webster, A.G., asked that his costs might be paid out of the estate.

Earl of HALSBURY, L.C., said: Considering that the Attorney-General was made a defendant, and in a public capacity as the guardian of a large charitable fund, as this was supposed to be, and that he had the judgment of the Court of Appeal which asserted that it was a charity, I think it would have been contrary to his duty, as Attorney-General, if he had not appeared in support of the judgment of the Court of Appeal which pronounced this to be a charity. I think the circumstance also that it is a very large estate ought not to be left out of account. For these reasons I am of opinion that he ought to have his costs, but I wish to guard myself against saying that it is to be established, as an absolute precedent, that in all such cases the Attorney-General ought to have his costs.

The other Lords concurred.

Order of the Court of Appeal appealed from reversed, except as to costs. Order of Romer, J., restored.

Solicitors for appellant, Hollams, Sons, Coward, & Hawksley.

Solicitor for Attorney-General, Solicitor to the Treasury.

Solicitors for the respondent, Hood, West, King, Adams, & Co.

Court of Appeal.

Appeal.
(A. L. Smith, Rigby, and Vaughan Williams, L.JJ.) July 14.

CHANDLER v. SMITH. (a.)

Master and servant—Employers' liability—Accident to workman—Disablement for two weeks from earning full wages—Payment of same wages after accident as before—Amount of compensation—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 1, sub-section 2 (a).

In an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, it appeared that the applicant was a foreman in the employment of the respondents, who were carpet manufacturers. His main work consisted in supervision, but he used also frequently to set up and adjust the machines. While adjusting a machine, he received an injury to his thumb, which had to be amputated. He returned to his work the next day, but after the accident he was unable to set up or adjust the machines, and his work was confined to supervision. He received the same wages after the accident as before.

Held, that he was disabled for two weeks from "earning full wages at the work at which he was employed" within the meaning of section 1, sub-section 2 (a), of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

Held, also, that the proper course was to make a declaration of liability, and to adjourn the question of the amount and duration of compensation.

Appeal from a decision of the judge of the Derby County Court in an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

The applicant was employed by the respondents, who were carpet manufacturers, as the foreman of their weaving department. His main work consisted in the general supervision of the hands engaged in the department, but he used also frequently to set up and adjust the machines and cut the cards for and set up the work upon the Jacquard frames. While adjusting a machine he received an injury to his thumb, which had to be amputated. He was able to return to his work on the next day, and he continued to work regularly at the respondents' factory, with the exception that during the next few weeks he attended daily at the hospital for about an hour to have his hand dressed. After the accident the applicant was unable to set up or adjust the machines, or to cut the cards for and set up the work upon the Jacquard frames, and another man was engaged by the respondents to do this work, the applicant's work being confined to the supervision of the department. His wages before the accident were £3 a week, and he continued to receive the same wages after the accident, the respondents having no intention of discharging him from their employment.

The county court judge found that the wages after the accident were paid, not as a matter of grace, but in performance of the contract of service, and that the applicant had not been disabled for a period of two weeks from "earning full wages at the work at which he was employed" within the meaning of section 1, sub-section 2 (a), of the Workmen's Compensation Act; and he held therefore that the applicant was not entitled to compensation.

Section 1, sub-section 2 (a), is as follows; "The employer shall not be liable under this Act in respect of any injury which does not disable the workman for a period of at least two weeks from earning full wages at the work at which he was employed."

The applicant appealed.

Parfitt, for the applicant.

Hextall, for the respondents.

Cur. adv. vult.

July 14.—A. L. SMITH, L.J., read the following judgment: The question is whether, when a workman by reason of an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment has had his right thumb cut off, and has thereby become a mutilated and injured man for life, he is prevented from obtaining compensation from his master under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, by reason of sub-section 2 (a) of section 1 of that Act, which sub-section runs thus: "Provided that the employer shall not be liable under this Act in respect of any injury which does not disable the workman for a period of at least two weeks from earning full wages at the work at which he was employed." It was proved that the injured workman at the time of the accident was in the service of the respondent at a weekly wage of £3, that his duties consisted in part of adjusting machinery and in part of general supervision over the other employees of his master, that in the course of this employment he met with the injury complained of, that for the two weeks after the accident he continued to give supervision, but was unable by reason of the loss of his thumb to adjust machinery, that he was absent from his work for short periods in order to have his injury dressed at the hospital, and that his master nevertheless continued to pay him the weekly wage of £3. The difficulty in this case arises from the finding of the learned county court judge, who has found that the wages for the week of the accident and for the following weeks were paid, not as matters of grace, but in the performance of the contract of service, and that the applicant had not been disabled for a period of at least two weeks from earning full wages at the work at which he was employed. The meaning of sub-section 2 (a) of section 1 in my judgment is that, if the accident be of such a nature that the man is by law entitled during the two weeks immediately following the accident to recover full wages from his master at the work at which he was employed as before the accident, then such an accident is not to give rise to a claim by the workman against his master under the Act. The meaning of this sub-section is well exemplified by the maxim De minimis non curat lex. If the master out of feelings of compassion and generosity, as, happily, is often the case, continues to pay the full wages, though not under legal obligation to do so, that does not bring the case within the sub-section. We have ever held that a finding of fact of a county court judge binds us, and that it is only on a matter of law that there is an appeal. But if a learned county court judge decides a fact when there is no evidence upon which he could find it, this is a matter of law, for in such a case he has misdirected himself, and this is law. Now, where is the evidence that a man maimed and mutilated for life by the loss of his thumb is by law entitled to recover from his master the same wage as he could have recovered before he was so mutilated? And, indeed, the evidence in the present case is that the workman was disabled from performing part of the work for which he theretofore was entitled to receive £3 per week, and that he had also to absent himself from his work during portions of the time when he should otherwise have been working for his master to entitle him to earn the £3; and, moreover, the master had to employ another workman at an extra wage to do the work upon the machinery which the injured workman theretofore had to do. In my judgment there was no evidence that the workman could at law have exacted from his master the full wage to which he had been entitled before the accident, and, indeed, he could not have done so, and, consequently, there is no evidence that the payment of the full wage was not an act of grace of the master, as found by the learned judge. For these reasons I am of opinion that the appeal of the workman must be allowed with costs here and below, and I think that the case must go down to the learned county court judge to assess the amount of compensation to which the applicant is entitled; but, as my brethren think that the assessment of compensation should be postponed as mentioned by them, I will not disagree with them as to this.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

RIGBY, L.J., read the following judgment: The only question arising on this appeal is whether the county court judge was right in holding this to be a case to which the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, does not apply, on the ground that the applicant was not disabled for a period of at least two weeks from earning full wages at the work at which he was employed. William Chandler, the applicant, had been for many years in the employ of Thomas Smith & Son as foreman of the weaving department. The terms on which he was employed are not in dispute. He had to mount or set up every machine in his department, and if anything went wrong he had to adjust it if the single fitter employed could not make the machine right. He also had to cut and put into the Jacquard machines all the pattern cards, and had the general supervision of the weavers. For all this work he received wages at £3 a week. On the 3rd of November, 1898, whilst adjusting a machine that was out of order, being, as is admitted work for which he was employed, he had his thumb lacerated and torn so that it had to be amputated, and it is admitted that he is now unable to set up or adjust a machine, or so quickly to cut the cards for and set up work on a Jacquard frame; that, consequently, his wage-earning power as such foreman as aforesaid in any factory where he might seek employment, should he leave the respondents' service, is materially decreased. He is, however, and from the date of the accident, with the exception of short absences for the necessary purpose of attending at the infirmary to have his wound dressed, always has been as capable of doing the work of superintending the weavers as he was before. Since the day of the accident the applicant has received for each and every week the amount of his full wages—namely, £3 a week. The respondents state that they have no intention of parting with the applicant, but they have had to employ an additional fitter to adjust the machines, and, when work requires to be set up on a Jacquard frame a certain weaver is taken from other work for the purpose. In this state of things the learned county court judge has found that the wages for the week of the accident and for the following weeks were paid not as matters of grace, but in performance of the contract of service. If this means that the employers were bound by the contract to go on paying him his full wages until notice was given determining the contract, it may be true, subject to the right to a deduction for any time during which he was absent from work—a deduction which the county court judge has fixed at 10s. for the first week and at 7s. for each of the following three weeks; but however this may be, I cannot agree with the learned judge that the applicant has not been disabled for a period of at least two weeks from earning full wages at the work at which he was employed at the time of the accident. Ever since the date of the accident he has been absolutely disabled from doing a substantial part of the work which at the time of the accident he was employed to do, and the disability seems likely to be permanent. Clearly the employers were under no legal—whatever may have been the moral—obligation to retain him in their service at full wages under the altered circumstances. In my judgment the disability referred to in section 1, sub-section 2 (a), of the Act cannot depend upon the greater or smaller liberality of the employer; it must be a physical disability, and must depend upon the question whether the workman is capable of performing the work at which he was employed at the time of the accident as efficiently as he did before. In a case like the present, where a substantial part of the work cannot be done at all, the exception introduced by sub-section 2 (a) does not apply at all. I concur in the judgment about to be delivered by Vaughan Williams, L.J., as to the course that ought to be pursued.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., read the the following judgment: I agree in the result. It is contended in this case in answer to the claim for compensation that the injury sustained by the workman did not disable him for a period of two weeks from earning full wages at the work at which he was employed; and further, that the applicant is entitled to no compensation because there has been no difference between the amount of his average weekly earnings before the accident and the average amount which he has been able to earn since the accident, even assuming that it can be truly said that there has been a period of partial incapacity for work.

Now, section 1, sub-section 2 (a), of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, provides that the employer shall not be liable under this Act in respect of any injury which does not disable the workman for a period of at least two weeks from earning full wages at the work at which he was employed. The workman in the present case was employed at a wage of £3 a week in a weaving factory as a foreman. As such foreman he was required to supervise the work of the female machinists and to adjust and oil the machines in cases where the machinist required assistance. The result of the accident was that the workman lost his thumb, and can no longer do the whole of the work of adjusting and oiling the machines, but he can still do so much of his former work as consisted of supervising the work of the female machinists, and he has, ever since the accident, been continued as a foreman and has received £3 a week as before the accident.

Now the fact that the workman has been paid full wages as before the accident does not conclusively show that he has not been disabled from earning full wages at the work at which he was employed, because part of the wages which he has received may not have been earned by him, but may have been paid to him as an act of grace, notwithstanding the fact that the loss of his thumb might disable him from earning as much as £3 a week as the market value of his services as foreman, now that he has lost his thumb, the proof of this being that he could not earn so much if he had to go elsewhere to find employment as a foreman. The county court judge has found as a fact that the wages received by the workman ever since the accident were paid, not as matters of grace, but in performance of the contract of service.

The contract in the present case is a contract by the week, and the fact that the master chooses to re-engage the workman at the end of each week at the old wage is some evidence that the master considers the workman worth that wage, notwithstanding the loss of his thumb. This is a very different thing from the master refraining from making a deduction from the wages of a workman employed under a continuous contract for a year or other period exceeding two weeks, notwithstanding the partial incompetence of the workman to do the whole of his work as formerly by reason of the loss of a thumb resulting from accident.

The importance of this is that we are bound by the findings in fact of the county court judge, if there is any evidence to support them, and it seems difficult to me to say that the re-engagement at the end of each week is not some evidence that the master considered the workman to be worth the full wage of £3 a week, notwithstanding the loss of his thumb. In such a case I should hesitate to say that the re-engagement was no evidence that the man's services were worth the old wage, notwithstanding the fact that there was some of the work formerly done by the workman which by reason of the accident he was no longer able to do, but in the present case my hesitation is increased by the fact that the adjusting of the machinery does not seem on the evidence to be essential to the work of a foreman, although it happened to be included in the work habitually done by this particular foreman.

Assuming that this difficulty of the finding of the county court judge is got over, there still remains the difficulty that the county court judge by his judgment orders that the applicant do recover nothing from the respondents as compensation, that is, as compensation for the personal injury which is alleged to have resulted in the partial incapacity of the workman for work. Now Schedule I., clause 1 (b), gives, together with clause 2, the measure of compensation. Those clauses run thus: "Where total or partial incapacity for work results from the injury, a weekly payment during the incapacity after the second week not exceeding 50 per cent. of his average weekly earnings during the previous twelve months, if he has been so long employed, but if not, then for any less period during which he has been in the employment of the same employer, such weekly payment not to exceed one pound. In fixing the amount of the weekly payment, regard shall be had to the difference between the amount of the average weekly earnings of the workman before the accident and the average amount which he is able to earn after the accident, and to any payment, not being wages, which he may receive from the employer in respect of his injury during the period of his incapacity." Now this measure will give the workman nothing unless it can be truly said that there is a difference between the amount of the average weekly earnings of the workman before the accident and the amount which he is able to earn after the accident, regard being had to any payment, not being wages, which he may receive from the employer in respect of his injury during the period of his incapacity. I cannot see how any difference can be arrived at, having regard to the statutory definition of the measure, and I cannot say, therefore, that the judgment of the county court judge is wrong as far as it goes in awarding nothing to the applicant; but, having regard to the provision in section 1, sub-section 1, of the Act, that the employer shall be liable to pay compensation if in any employment personal injury by accident arising out of and in the course of the employment is caused to a workman, and to the provision in section 1, sub-section 3, that the question of liability as well as the question of the amount or duration of compensation is to be settled by arbitration, it seems to me that the county court judge in this case might and should have made a declaration of liability and adjourned the question of the amount and duration of compensation. This seems to me to be in accordance with the spirit of the provision of clause 12 of Schedule I., which provides that the weekly payment may be reviewed at the request either of the employer or of the workman, and on such review the weekly payment may be ended, diminished, or increased. If you may review the award where the facts have been ascertained for certain, it seems only reasonable that you may postpone the fixing of the amount of compensation until facts are ascertained to which the measure is to be applied, and I prefer this course to that of awarding a weekly payment of a penny and then applying the provisions of clause 12 of Schedule I.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Warriner & Co., for J. T. Wykes, Derby.

Solicitors for the respondents, Hind & Robinson, for Wells & Hind, Nottingham.

From Q. B. Div.
(A. L. Smith, Vaughan Williams, and Romer, L.JJ.) July 6.

WILLIAMS v. BIRMINGHAM BATTERY AND METAL CO. (a.)

Master and servant—Negligence—Common law liability of master—Defect in plant—Servant's knowledge of danger—Risk voluntarily incurred.

A workman in the employment of the defendants was killed by a fall while descending, in the course of his work, from an elevated tramway on the defendants' premises. In an action by his widow under Lord Campbell's Act, the jury found that the defendants did not exercise due care to have the tramway in a safe and proper condition so as to protect their servants working upon it against unnecessary risks; that it was dangerous to descend from the tramway without the means of a ladder; that the deceased had the same means of knowing that it was dangerous as the defendants had; that he did know that it was dangerous; and that he had not been guilty of contributory negligence; and they assessed damages.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment.

Appeal from the judgment of Darling, J., at the trial of an action with a jury.

The action was brought under Lord Campbell's Act by a widow to recover damages in respect of the death of her husband. The plaintiff's case was that the deceased, who was at the time of his death and had been for many years in the employment of the defendants, was killed by a fall while descending in the course of his work from an elevated tramway on the defendants' premises in consequence of the negligence of the defendants in not providing proper means and appliances for enabling their workmen to ascend to and descend from the tramway.

The learned judge left questions to the jury, which with the answers thereto were as follows: (1) Did the defendants exercise due care to have the tramway in a safe and proper condition so as to protect their servants working upon it against unnecessary risks? No. (2) Was it dangerous to descend from the tramway without the means of a ladder? Yes. (3) Had the deceased the same means of knowing that this was dangerous as the defendants had? Yes. (4) Did the deceased know that it was dangerous? Yes. (5) Was the deceased guilty of contributory negligence? No. The jury assessed the damages at £130. Upon these findings the learned judge entered judgment for the defendants.

The plaintiff appealed on the ground that on the findings of the jury she was entitled to judgment.

Cecil Walsh, for the plaintiff.

Hugo Young, Q.C., and Shakespeare, for the defendants.

The following cases were cited in argument: Smith v. Baker, 40 W. R. 392, [1891] A. C. 325; Yarmouth v. France, 36 W. R. 281, 19 Q. B. D. 647; Mellors v. Shaw, 9 W. R. 748, 1 B. & S. 437; Watling v. Oastler, 19 W. R. 388, L. R. 6 Ex. 73; Griffiths v. London and St. Katherine Docks Co., 33 W. R. 35, 13 Q. B. D. 259; Skipp v. Eastern Counties Railway Co., 9 Exch. 223, 2 W. R. Dig. 192; Woodley v. Metropolitan District Railway Co., 2 Ex. D. 384, 25 W. R. Dig. 155; Thomas v. Quartermaine, 35 W. R. 555, 18 Q. B. D. 685; Membery v. Great Western Railway Co., 38 W. R. 145, 14 App. Cas. 179; Seymour v. Maddox, 16 Q. B. 326.

Cur. adv. vult.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

July 6.—A. L. SMITH, L.J., read the following judgment: This is an action at common law for damages brought by the widow of a deceased workman, by the aid of Lord Campbell's Act, against the masters of the deceased man for having been guilty of negligence whereby the workman lost his life, and the first two questions left to the jury by the learned judge were: Did the defendants exercise due care to have the tramway in a safe and proper condition so as to protect their servants working upon it against unnecessary risks? And the answer was, No. Secondly, Was it dangerous to descend from the tramway without the means of a ladder? Answer, Yes. I will deal with the other questions left to the jury hereafter. This case was remarkably well argued before us on each side, and I believe almost every case bearing upon the liability of a master for injuries to his servant in the course of his employment and the applicability thereto of the maxim, Volenti non fit injuria, was brought out in review before us; but when the case is rightly apprehended the judgment may be comparatively short. In the first place, there can be no doubt as to the duty of a master to his man, and I will take a passage upon this subject from Lord Herschell's judgment in Smith v. Baker in the House of Lords. The noble lord says: "It is quite clear that the contract between employer and employed involves on the part of the former the duty of taking reasonable care to provide proper appliances, and to maintain them in a proper condition, and so to carry on his operation as not to subject those employed by him to unnecessary risk." This being the master's duty towards his man, if the master knowingly does not perform it, it follows that he is guilty of negligence towards the man; and the first two findings of the jury in this case show that the defendants had not performed this duty, and had therefore been guilty of negligence towards the deceased, and it is not disputed that it was by reason of the absence of the ladder caused by this neglect of duty that the deceased man met with his death. In my opinion there was ample evidence to support the above findings, for it was proved that the absence of the ladder, which was the cause of the accident, had been well known to the defendants, and that they neglected to provide it, and hence the occasion of the man's death. This is not the case where a master has provided proper appliances and done his best to maintain them in a state of efficiency, in which case the man has no action against his master if the appliances became unsafe whereby the man has been injured, unless he avers and proves that the master knew of their having become unsafe, and that the man was ignorant of it: Griffiths v. London and St. Katharine Docks. When proper appliances have been supplied by a master to a man they may well become unsafe to the knowledge of the man and without the knowledge of the master, and so it is that each issue must in such a case be established by the man when he sues his master. This is the case of no proper appliances having been supplied by the master at all, so that the man might carry on his operation in such a way as not to be exposed to unnecessary risk. The case is similar to that of Mellors v. Shaw. If this case had stopped here it appears to me clear that there must have been judgment for the plaintiff, she having proved personal negligence in the defendants whereby the deceased man met with his death; and how do the defendants seek to get rid of this case so far successfully made and proved against them? They plead in their defence that "the alleged defect and want," i.e., of a ladder, was known to the deceased, and also that he was guilty of contributory negligence. As regards this last defence, the jury have negatived it. But what as to the defence set up that "the defect and want (of the ladder) was known to the plaintiff"? What defence is that to the proved personal negligence of the masters? The defendants have advisedly abstained from raising the defence of the deceased man having contracted or covenanted or undertaken to run the risk of the defect, i.e., the want of the ladder, so as to raise the defence summarized by the maxim, Volenti non fit injuria. That the mere knowledge of the risk does not necessarily involve consent to undertake the risk has now beyond question been settled by the House of Lords. See the judgments in Smith v. Baker, and specially the judgment of Lord Halsbury, citing with approval Bowen and Lindley, L.JJ. The sole question which was asked of the jury as to this was, Had the deceased the same means of knowing that this was dangerous as the defendants had? Answer, Yes. Did the deceased know it was dangerous? Answer, Yes. How does this prove that he either contracted, or consented, or undertook to accept the risk? The defendants called no evidence. They did not even attempt to show what was the contract under which the deceased man served. Nor did they ask that any question as to whether the man had contracted to take the risk should be left to the jury. As Lord Watson said in Smith v. Baker, "When, as is commonly the case, his acceptance or non-acceptance of the risk is left to implication, the workman cannot reasonably be held to have undertaken it, unless he knew of its existence and appreciated or had the means of appreciating its danger. But, assuming that he did so, I am unable to accede to the suggestion that the mere fact of his continuing at his work, with such knowledge and appreciation, will in every case necessarily imply his acceptance. Whether it will have that effect or not depends, in my opinion, to a considerable extent upon the nature of the risk and the workman's connection with it, as well as upon other considerations, which must vary according to the circumstances of each case." If the defence of Volenti non fit injuria was to be insisted upon, which the defendants not only in their pleadings, but also at the trial, did not raise, they must have obtained a finding of the jury upon it in their favour. They have not done so, and for the reasons above I think that the judgment entered by the learned judge for the defendants must be set aside, and judgment entered for the plaintiff for the £130 damages assessed by the jury in favour of the plaintiff, with costs here and below. My brother Vaughan Williams agrees with this judgment.

ROMER, L.J., read the following judgment: Many authorities bearing on the question we have to decide have been cited and discussed. I do not propose to review them. They appear to me to establish the following propositions as to the liability at common law of an employer of labour. If the employment is of a dangerous nature, a duty lies on the employer to use all reasonable precautions for the protection of the servant. If by reason of a breach of that duty a servant suffers injury, the employer is primâ facie liable, and it is no sufficient answer to the primâ facie liability for the employer to show merely that the servant was aware of the risk and of the non-existence of the precautions which should have taken by the employer, and which, if taken, would or might have prevented the injury. In order to escape liability the employer must establish that the servant has taken upon himself the risk without the precautions. Whether the servant has taken that upon himself is a question of fact to be decided on the circumstances of each case. In considering such a question the circumstance that the servant has entered into or continued in his employment with knowledge of the risk and of the absence of precautions is important, but not necessarily conclusive against him.

I will now apply the above propositions to the case before us. The tramway, as left by the defendants, without ladders or other safe means for ascending to and descending from it, was clearly dangerous. The defendants in not providing these ladders or other safe means were, in my opinion, guilty of breach of duty to the workmen employed about the tramway. This is in substance what the jury have found by their answers to the two first questions left to them by the judge. That the workman Williams was injured by reason of the absence of the precautions above-mentioned which should have been taken by the defendants is clear. For that injury, then, the defendants are primâ facie liable. The question then is, have the defendants established a case to free themselves from the primâ facie liability? The only findings of the jury favourable to the defendants are that Williams had the same means of knowing the danger as the defendants, and did know the danger. These two findings are not sufficient to free the defendants from liability, unless they amount to a finding that Williams took upon himself the risk of working on the tramway in the absence of the ladders or other safe means of ascending and descending. It appears to me that such a conclusion cannot be drawn from these two findings of the jury. This being so, on the findings of the jury as a whole there shall be judgment for the plaintiff. No doubt there was evidence before the jury on which the defendants, if they had taken the point, might have asked the jury to hold that Williams had taken upon himself the risk. But no such finding was asked for by the defendants, and, indeed, I cannot see that the point as to Williams having taken upon himself the risks was at all taken by the defendants prior to this appeal. I presume they thought it hopeless to expect to succeed on the point. At any rate, they cannot now ask us to decide as a matter of fact that Williams had taken upon himself the risk, or call upon us to act as if a finding to that effect had been obtained from the jury. It appears to me, therefore, that the appeal should be allowed and judgment entered for the plaintiff for the ascertained amount of damage with costs here and below.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Thomas White & Sons, for W. H. Egginton, Birmingham.

Solicitors for the defendants, Timbrell & Deighton, for Shakespeare & Co., Birmingham.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div.
Kekewich, J. } June 15, 16, 27.

SOUTH AFRICAN BREWERIES (LIMITED) v. KING. (a.)

Contract—Conflict of laws—English and South African law — Place of performance — Restriction against trading—Injunction—Intention.

Where a contract is entered into between parties residing in different countries, where different systems of law prevail, the law by which to determine the intrinsic validity and effect of the contract will be selected by the English courts on substantial considerations, the preference being given to the law of the country with which, according to the intention of the parties, the transaction has the most real connection.

(a.) Reported by R. J. A. MORRISON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Where a British subject resident in Johannesburg entered into a contract with a company registered in England, but formed for the purpose of carrying on business "in the Transvaal, the colony of Natal, and elsewhere in South Africa," to serve the company in their business carried on "at Johannesburg and in the colony of Natal or elsewhere in South Africa," and thereby undertook not to engage in any similar business in South Africa within a period of ten years after the determination of the contract without the consent of the company.

Held, in an action by the company for an injunction to restrain the defendant from committing a breach of his undertaking, that the contract was governed by the law of the South African Republic, as being the law of the country with which, according to the intention of the parties, the transaction had the most real connection.

Action.

The question raised in this case was whether an English contract entered into in a foreign country between a British subject resident there and an English company having its registered office in England and carrying on business only in the foreign country, should be governed by the law of England or of the foreign country. The contract related to the business of the company.

The facts were as follows: By an agreement of the 14th of October, 1892, the Natal Brewery Syndicate (South-East Africa) (Limited)—an English company formed for the purpose of carrying on the business of brewers in the Transvaal, the colony of Natal, and elsewhere in South Africa—engaged the defendant, a brewer, then resident in England, to go out and serve in their brewery at Johannesburg upon the terms therein mentioned, the defendant undertaking not to engage in the business of a brewer in South Africa within five years from the determination of the agreement, except with the consent of the company, and also in the event of the company's business being transferred to another company to carry out the agreement with such other company.

The defendant went out to Johannesburg and remained in the service of the syndicate until the month of November, 1892, when the syndicate's business was transferred to another English company, the South African United Breweries (Limited). The defendant continued to serve the latter company on the terms of the above-mentioned agreement until the 11th of April, 1895, when, by an agreement of that date, and made between the company or its successors of the one part and the defendant of the other part, the defendant agreed to serve the company for five years "as brewer or otherwise in their business carried on at Johannesburg and in the colony of Natal, or elsewhere in South Africa," from the 1st of October, 1894, determinable by the company alone upon the terms therein contained, and the defendant thereby agreed "not to engage in any brewing business in South Africa within a period of ten years after the termination of his engagement by the company except with the consent in writing of the board of directors in London of the company." Upon the reconstruction of the last-named company in 1895, the plaintiff company, another English company, took over the whole of the undertaking and the defendant continued in their employ as brewer upon the terms of the agreement of the 11th of April, 1895. In March, 1897, the plaintiff company in exercise of their power in that behalf determined the defendant's service under the agreement. Thereupon, as was alleged, the defendant became interested in the formation of a company registered in Scotland as "The Durban Brewery Syndicate (Limited)" for the purpose of carrying on a brewery at Durban under the management of the defendant, without the consent of the plaintiff company. The plaintiff company then brought the present action for an injunction restraining the defendant from committing this alleged breach of his agreement of the 11th of April, 1895. At the trial of the action the question arose as to whether the agreement should be construed according to English law or the law of the South African Republic. The evidence and the further facts material to this report are set forth fully in the judgment.

Warrington, Q.C., and Younger, for the plaintiff company.—The contract of the 11th of April, 1895, is an English contract both as regards form and parties, and is intended to be governed by English law. It is a continuation of the prior contract of the 14th of October, 1892, which is in every respect an English contract, and the parties must have meant the later contract to be construed according to English law. Hamlyn & Co. v. Talisker Distillery, [1894] A. C. 202.

Buckmaster, for the defendant.—The contract of the 11th of April, 1895, was executed out of, and was to be performed out of the jurisdiction. The locus contractus and the locus solutionis being the same, there is a strong primâ facie case against the plaintiffs which they must rebut. It is a question of intention, and the circumstances indicate that the parties intended the contract to be governed by the law of South Africa. Jacob & Co. v. Crédit Lyonnais, 32 W. R. 761, 12 Q. B. D. 589, at p. 601; In re Missouri Steamship Co., 37 W. R. 696, 42 Ch. D. 321, at p. 340.

Warrington, Q.C., in reply.—There is no law of South Africa. The locus contractus in the circumstances is more important than the locus solutionis.

He referred to Dicey's "Conflict of Laws," p. 568.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 27.—KEKEWICH, J.—The only question now to be decided is whether the meaning and effect of the contract of the 11th of April, 1895, ought to be governed by the law of England or by any other and what law. That question may otherwise be stated in the language of Fry, L.J., in In re Missouri Steamship Co., 42 Ch. D., at p. 340: "Looking at the subject of this contract, the place where it was made, the contracting parties, and the thing to be done, what ought to be presumed to have been the intention of the contracting parties with regard to the law which was to govern this contract?" It is to be observed that this mode of stating the question is agreeable to other authorities on the point, and particularly the last of all on which the plaintiffs relied, Hamlyn & Co. v. Talisker Distillery, [1894] A. C. 202. I do not propose to recapitulate the facts at length, but some of them must be mentioned. The contract was made at Johannesburg, in the South African Republic, where the South African United Breweries (Limited), predecessors in the title of the plaintiffs, were carrying on business, and where the defendant was then residing, he being at that time in the employ of the South African United Breweries. The defendant thereby agreed to serve the South African United Breweries as brewer, or otherwise, in their business carried on at Johannesburg, and in the colony of Natal, or elsewhere in South Africa. Under this contract the defendant could of course have been required to serve anywhere "in South Africa" (whatever that may mean), but it is common ground that the original agreement of the 14th of October, 1892, made with still earlier predecessors in title of the plaintiffs, contemplated immediate employment at Johannesburg; that from the date of his arrival there he had been engaged as brewer there and not elsewhere; and that on the 11th of April, 1895, it was intended that he should still remain there. In considering by what law the contracting parties intended—or rather, by which they may justly be presumed to have intended—to bind themselves, it is convenient first to inquire what the contract itself contemplated as the law which was to regulate the contract; and this I conclude to be the view of the present Lord Chancellor expressed in his judgment in the Missouri Steamship Co. case, from which I have borrowed the phrase just used. On page 336 he says that, in order to determine whether stipulations are enforceable or not, you must have regard to the law of the contract, "by which I mean law which the contract itself imports is to be the law governing the contract." I cannot but think that, if this were all, the contract ought to be governed by the law of the South African Republic, where the contract was executed, and where it was intended, though not exclusively, to be performed. That, however, is not all. Many other considerations require attention. Among other things, it is to be noticed that the successive employers of the defendant, including the plaintiffs, were English companies which may be, and often are, stated, though with some inaccuracy of language, to be resident or domiciled in England. The fact cannot be neglected, the residence of the contracting parties always being noticed, as an important element in the decision of such a question as arises here; but to attribute a large measure of weight to it in the present case would, I think, be to offend against a ruling of Bowen, L.J., in Jacob & Co. v. Crédit Lyonnais, 12 Q. B. D., at p. 601. He is dealing with the argument that the contract there under consideration, like that of the 11th of April, 1895, was partly to be performed in one place and partly in another, and he uses this language: "In such a case the only certain guide is to be found in applying sound ideas of business convenience and sense to the language of the contract itself with a view to discovering from it the true intention of the parties." It is not, in my opinion, according to sound ideas of business, convenience, or sense to say that a company having a registered office with directors and secretary in England, not, however, otherwise carrying on business here but carrying on business in South Africa, must be treated as resident in England for the purpose of ascertaining whether a contract entered into by them respecting their business in South Africa was intended to be good by English or South African law. It is to be observed that in Hamlyn & Co. v. Talisker Distillery, that contract was entered into between parties residing in different countries where different systems of law prevailed, and the point is noticed by the Lord Chancellor (Lord Herschell), who moved the judgment of the House of Lords, and by other learned lords who took part in the discussion; but there the different residences were real, and the parties carried on business where they resided. The form of the contract is, according to the authorities, a more serious matter. Mr. Warrington called my attention to Mr. Dicey's work on "Conflict of Laws." The learned author states, on p. 568 under sub-rule 2, the question falling for decision in all these cases, as defined by all the authorities, including Hamlyn & Co. v. Talisker Distillery, and proceeds to give four illustrations. In three out of the four illustrative cases the form of contract was noticed and was treated as, to some extent at least, influencing the decision; and this is, I think, entirely agreeable to general rules, it being the constant practice on the argument of the construction of contracts—as for instance a Scotch settlement dealing with property in England—to regard the form in which the contract is expressed. Here undoubtedly the form is English. It may reasonably be said that the expired contract of the 14th of October, 1892, was taken as a rough draft on which to frame the new contract of the 11th of April, 1895; but, apart from that, the latter contract is not merely in the English language, but follows familiar English forms, and is just such a one as would be entered into between a company carrying on business in England and a person intended to be employed by them. The plaintiffs are entitled to whatever benefit follows from this consideration. Their argument went further than that and urged that the contract of the 11th of April, 1895, was really a continuation of the former contract, and that, inasmuch as that must be regarded as an English contract, the same character must be attributed to the other. Admitted that the contract of the 14th of October, 1892, was an English contract, which it is unnecessary to determine, I doubt the consequences. That contract had expired, and the defendant, at the date of the contract of the 11th of April, 1895, was serving the South African United Breweries, and not under the expired contract, though, I gather, on similar terms as regards wages and the like, but under a temporary agreement abiding only until a new contract could be settled. This extension of the argument on the form of the contract I think fails. Turn now to what, in my mind, is a far more difficult question. It is said that the stipulation which the plaintiffs seek to enforce, though valid according to English law provided it be reasonably required for the protection of the plaintiffs (a point which has not yet been discussed), is invalid according to the South African law; and, therefore, if the latter law be held applicable, stipulations of the contract which the plaintiffs might and do regard as of its essence will fall to the ground, so that in the events which have happened the contract will not be enforceable. It has occurred to me that there may be some difficulty in completely dealing with this part of the case without knowing what is the South African law on the subject. The parties have been anxious to avoid the expense and delay incident to inquiries into the foreign law until the question by what law the contract ought to be governed has been decided, and I have desired to assist them as far as possible. The difficulty which I have noticed is not, I think, under the circumstances of this case insuperable; but it may appear to others so to be, and I have therefore uttered this note of warning. That the inability to enforce a contract according to our system of law will influence the court in determining whether the contract is to be governed by that law or by some other under which it is enforceable is beyond question. This is recognized in Hamlyn & Co. v. Talisker Distillery, and also, as I read the judgments, in Jacob & Co. v. Crédit Lyonnais and the Missouri Steamship Co. It seems commonsense to hold, if it can otherwise be reasonably done, that the plaintiffs intended their contract to prevail and be enforceable, and that stipulations into which they had solemnly entered should not be defeated by the application of one of two systems of law, when the other can, having regard to all the circumstances, be fairly taken to have been intended to govern the contract. The evidence reveals a strange state of facts peculiar to the present case. The defendant has sworn that, after having objected to the stipulation restricting his business engagements on the termination of the proposed contract, he consulted a lawyer in Johannesburg and was advised by him that such stipulation would not be enforced according to South African law; that he told Mr. Mead, the agent of the South African Breweries who signed the contract on their behalf, that he had received this advice, and that then he signed the contract. I do not know whether Mr. Mead took advice or not, or whether he gave credit to the defendant's statement or not; nor, as already mentioned, do I know whether the advice given to the defendant was sound or otherwise; but the strange fact remains that both parties executed the contract knowing that there was a question open on this very point. It may be said, on the one hand, that the plaintiffs' predecessors must have intended to enter into a contract which could be enforced, and, on the other hand, that the defendant never intended to enter into a contract which could be enforced against him in this particular respect. The reasonable conclusion is that they intended to make and accept the stipulation for what it was worth; and I cannot bring myself to think that, under such circumstances, the judgment of the court on the question whether the contract should be governed by English or other law depends on the possibility or even probability that the restrictive stipulation can be enforced in one event but not in the other. If this be a sound view, the only point clearly in the plaintiffs' favour is that arising on the form of the contract. Ought that, having regard to all the circumstances, to be allowed to outweigh other considerations prevailing in the contrary direction? I have not thought it worth while closely to study any decided cases other than the three cited in argument, which not merely cover the whole ground, but refer to numerous authorities, some more or less bearing on the question under consideration. But I have consulted Mr. Westlake's book on Private International Law. At the date of the publication of the last edition (the third) Hamlyn & Co. v. Talisker Distillery had not been decided in the House of Lords, and with that before him the learned author may hereafter accept the intention of the parties as a more complete guide than apparently he has hitherto done; but in substance his general statement of the law agrees with that decision in that case and the previous authorities, as also with Mr. Dicey's statement, to which reference has already been made. This is what Mr. Westlake says in section 212, on p. 258: "It may probably be said with truth that the law by which to determine the intrinsic validity and effects of a contract will be selected in England on substantial considerations, the preference being given to the country with which the transaction has the most real connection, and not to the law of the place of contract as such." That seems to me to be as precise and accurate a statement as one can expect to find in any judgment or treatise, having regard to the necessarily infinite variety of facts which require consideration in cases of this character. Can it be doubted that the country with which the transaction here had the most real connection was South Africa, and particularly that part of South Africa which is comprised in the South African Republic? I have already pointed out that the contract was executed there and intended to be performed there; that the defendant, though an Englishman, had been and was residing in Johannesburg and intended it to be his place of business, and therefore of residence; and that although the other party to the contract was strictly an English company, yet it was there, and not in England, that their business had been and was intended to be carried on. And the stipulation in question has reference to South Africa and not to England, where the defendant is free to carry on business as he pleases. In my opinion the principles of the decided cases and the rules there laid down compel me to hold that this contract was not intended to be governed and is not governed by English law. Then comes the question by what law it ought to be governed. It was certainly intended to be performed, if and when circumstances so required, throughout South Africa, the limitation of which I am not called upon to define. It therefore falls within the class under which the contract may be said to be intended to be performed partly in one place and partly in another. I have found no authority for holding that it might at any time and for some purposes be governed by one law, and at another time and for other purposes by a different law. If bound to select one system of law as that governing the contract, I must select that with which, to repeat Mr. Westlake's phrase, "the transaction has the most real connection," and that is undoubtedly the South African Republic, which for this purpose at least must be treated as an independent sovereign State, just as according to the Constitution of the United States of America the State of Massachusetts was in the Missouri Steamship case. I hold the contract to be governed by South African law. The result is that the further trial must be adjourned in order to give the parties the opportunity, until now conveniently deferred, of producing evidence respecting that law. There must be a declaration that the contract is governed by the law of the South African Republic.

Solicitors, Loughborough, Gedge, Nisbet, & Drew; H. G. Campion & Co.

Chan. Div.
Cozens-Hardy, J. } July 8, 22.

In re MADDOCK.
BUTT v. WRIGHT. (a.)

Practice—Costs—Taxation—Employment of two counsel—Trustee—Hostile attack—Severance of defence.

A hostile attack being made in a creditor's administration action against one of two trustees and defendants, the attacked trustee was allowed to appear separately, and, the attack having substantially failed, was given his costs as between solicitor and client. The plaintiff had employed two counsel.

Held, that the attacked trustee was to be allowed his costs of employment of two counsel.

Summons.

This was a summons to review taxation of costs in a creditor's action commenced in the Liverpool Registry to administer the estate of Mary Ann Maddock. The defendants were the executors and trustees of her will, and the question was as to the right of one of the trustees, Wright, to have his costs of the employment of two counsel at the hearing on further consideration. Wright was a member of the firm of solicitors who acted for the executors and trustees. There was a clause in the will authorising the solicitor-trustee to act and be paid in the ordinary way, but that direction was inoperative as against creditors, the benefit taken by the solicitor or his firm being in the nature of a legacy.

The action, although begun as a simple creditor's administration action, was by arrangement turned into a more complicated proceeding, raising the question of the validity of certain voluntary settlements of which the defendants were also trustees. The plaintiffs, by minutes submitted before further consideration, sought to take away the conduct of the sale of the unsold property from the defendants, and to obtain an order of a hostile nature against the defendant Wright alone in respect of a sum of £2,400, which in the executorship accounts had been treated as expenses of executorship, and which represented sums paid to his firm for costs. The matter came on for further consideration in January, 1899, before Byrne, J., who gave the plaintiffs the conduct of the sales, but not on the ground of misconduct on the part of the defendants, to whom he gave their costs as between solicitor and client. He also directed that in taxing the costs of the defendants in respect of their appearances on further consideration, the district registrar was to allow a separate set of costs to each defendant. With regard to the £2,400 the court drew no distinction between the defendants, but directed the bills to be taxed or moderated, and the registrar was, without prejudice to any question, to distinguish between profit costs and other costs, charges, and disbursements.

(a.) Reported by NEVILLE TEBBUTT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The registrar, in taxing the costs of the action, allowed the present plaintiff (there had been an order of revivor) the costs of the two counsel, but refused to allow the defendant Wright the costs of more than one counsel. The defendant Wright took objection to this on the grounds that the plaintiff had been allowed a leader; that the registrar had been informed of the counsel whom the defendant was going to brief, and of his fees, and had made a note of the facts in his minute book, and that there had been a large amount of argument in court. The registrar stated in answer: "5. The fact that the plaintiff has been allowed the fees of two counsel does not seem to me to be material. The plaintiff is a creditor administering the estate on behalf of the creditors. The persons beneficially interested in the estate, other than the plaintiff, appeared by one counsel only, as did Mr. Hall, one of the defendants who appeared separately, and was allowed by the judge his costs of doing so. The two counsel therefore appeared for Mr. Wright alone, and inasmuch as he is only one of two trustees not beneficially interested, I do not, in the exercise of my discretion, consider he was justified in putting the estate to the expense of two counsel. The argument in court, so far as the trustees were concerned, referred mostly to their own costs and the conduct of the sale, which was given by the judge to the plaintiff."

The defendants thereupon took out the present summons.

Astbury, Q.C., and MacConkey, for the applicants.

F. M. Preston, for the respondents.

Cur. adv. vult.

July 22.—COZENS-HARDY, J.—I think that it is evident that there was a serious matter of litigation between the plaintiffs and the defendant Wright, involving a liability forthwith to pay into court a very considerable sum of money. This question was in substance decided against the plaintiffs, and in favour of Wright. The registrar has refused to allow him the costs of more than one counsel.

That it is competent for the court to over-rule the decision of the taxing master in such a matter as this is clear. I may refer to the case of Kirkwood v. Webster, 26 W. R. 812, 9 Ch. D. 239, where Fry, J., on a party and party taxation, allowed the costs of a third counsel which had been disallowed by the taxing master. But I have felt considerable doubt whether it is right for me to review the taxation in this respect, for I recognise fully that the discretion of the taxing master ought not to be lightly interfered with. There are, however, circumstances in this case which I think justify me in referring it back to the registrar to allow the proper costs of a second counsel. When a trustee is attacked, and sought to be rendered liable for a considerable sum of money, and when the attack fails and the judge directs taxation of his solicitor and client costs, I think that it is not reasonable to refuse to allow him the same assistance from counsel as the plaintiff, the attacking party, had. The registrar seems to have proceeded upon a wrong principle, and to have been influenced by the fact that Byrne, J., thought fit to allow a separate set of costs to each of the defendants; but I do not think that this circumstance makes any difference. The right given to the defendant Hall to appear by separate counsel ought not to prejudice the defendant Wright. The position of a trustee is at all times one of difficulty, and I am not disposed to say that Mr. Wright acted unreasonably or improperly in instructing two counsel to represent him.

Solicitors, Wright, Becket, & Co., Liverpool; Gibbons & Arkle, Liverpool.

Q. B. Div. (Phillimore, J.) July 10.

QUEEN OF THE RIVER STEAMSHIP CO. (LIMITED) v. CONSERVATORS OF THE THAMES. (a.)

Thames—Landing stage—Authorized toll of sixpence for use of pier—"Every time of calling"—Illegal charges—Right to recover excess so paid—Thames Conservancy Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. clxxxvii.), ss. 68, 165.

By section 165 of the Thames Conservancy Act, 1894, the conservators are authorized to levy a toll of sixpence "for each and every time of call" on any vessel using any of their piers or landing stages to embark or discharge her passengers and goods.

The plaintiffs owned a pleasure steamer which ran day trips between the Old Swan Pier, London Bridge, and Hampton Court. The steamer was brought alongside the Old Swan Pier about three-quarters of an hour before the advertised starting time and remained there until she started, her officers meanwhile doing all they could to get persons to take tickets for the trip.

The conservators by resolution decided that the plaintiffs used the pier for a longer period daily than would be covered by a mere "call" at the pier by their vessel, for which the 6d. toll was payable, and they alleged their right to impose a terminal charge for this use of the pier by the plaintiffs of £2 a week. For a time this increased charge was paid.

Held, that, although the conservators might have a right to ask for special payment from a vessel using the pier other than for the purpose merely of embarking passengers or goods, that would be based on contract; but there was nothing in the Act which gave the defendants the right to levy more than the 6d. toll on a vessel merely because she was more than a few minutes alongside a pier embarking or discharging her passengers or goods; and that the extra charge already paid, being unauthorized, was paid without consideration, and could be recovered back.

The plaintiffs were the owners of the steamship Queen Elizabeth, which during the summer months ran between London and Hampton Court, using the Old Swan Pier at London Bridge as the starting point of the trip, and competed with The Cardinal Wolsey, the property of the Thames Steamboat Company.

By section 165 of the Thames Conservancy Act, 1894, the conservators, in whom the Old Swan Pier is now vested, are entitled to charge a toll of 6d. each time a steamer calls at that pier for the purpose of embarking or disembarking passengers or goods.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law

During 1897 the defendants received from the plaintiffs this toll of 6d., but as it was the custom of the plaintiffs to bring The Queen Elizabeth alongside the Old Swan Pier about three-quarters of an hour before the advertised starting time, and to remain there until the steamer started, soliciting passengers, the defendants alleged that they were entitled to make a special charge to steamers using the pier in this way.

Accordingly the conservators passed a resolution that a toll of 10s. a day should be demanded from all steamers making more than a passing call at the pier. The plaintiffs paid this increased sum down to February, 1899, when it was agreed, after negotiations had been going on for some time between the parties, that the defendants should charge them a fixed sum of £2 a week, instead of 10s. a day. While these negotiations were pending, the plaintiffs were advised to take up the position that the defendants had no power to demand more than the statutory toll, and in spite of the agreement come to, they brought this action to decide the question of the legality of the charge, and to recover back £54, the amount of the excess of the toll so paid.

G. Spencer-Bower, for the plaintiffs.—The charge made by the defendants over and above 6d. is illegal, and ought never to have been demanded, and being money paid by us under a mistaken belief of fact, can be recovered.

J. Eldon Bankes, for the defendants.—The additional charge is permissible, because the plaintiffs received for it extra privileges. The ordinary toll of 6d. is for a passing call for the purpose of taking on board passengers or goods, but the plaintiffs lie alongside the pier for a much longer period than in the ordinary course of things would be necessary to take on board or discharge passengers and goods. Not only is that the case, but they have representatives on and about the pier and its approaches touting for passengers. They have got something beyond what they are entitled to demand under the statute, and their use of the pier and the sum they are to pay for the privilege is consequently a matter of agreement, being outside the statute altogether. At any rate, money already paid at the increased rate cannot be recovered, for it was paid not under any compulsion, but under a mistake of law, and the consideration for the payment by the plaintiffs was the many facilities afforded them for carrying on their trade.

G. Spencer-Bower, in reply.—The special facilities offered us are only the same as those granted to The Cardinal Wolsey, which is charged only the authorized toll of 6d. Nor do we remain alongside the pier a longer time than is reasonably necessary to embark our passengers. As for the defendants' contention that the excess paid cannot be recovered, that is clearly wrong on the authority of Cooper v. Phibbs, 15 W. R. 1049, L. R. 2 H. L. 149. Lord Westbury, at page 170, says: "It is said that Ignorantia juris haud excusat, but in that maxim the word jus is used in the sense of denoting general law, or the ordinary law of the country. But when the word jus is used in the sense of denoting a private right the maxim has no application." In West London Commercial Bank v. Kitson, 32 W. R. 757, 13 Q. B. D. 360, Bowen, L. J., in his judgment says: "Where there is a representation made as to a mere matter of law, it is in nineteen cases out of twenty made by a person who does not know the law better than the person to whom it is made, and at whose risk it is taken and acted upon. Still, I am not prepared to say, and I doubt whether, if a man who wilfully misrepresented the law would be allowed in equity to retain any benefit he got by such misrepresentation." If we remain at the pier a longer time than is reasonable, or cause an obstruction, the Act gives the defendants a remedy.

PHILLIMORE, J.—The main question turns in this case upon section 165 of the Thames Conservancy Act, 1894, which gives the conservators power from time to time to demand, and receive in respect of steam and other passenger vessels landing or embarking passengers or goods from any pier or landing place belonging to them, tolls not exceeding 6d. for each and every time of call at the same, or demand such other toll as by byelaws of the conservators for the time being may be appointed, and if the conservators think fit they may permit a vessel to use the landing stage without payment of any toll whatever. Another difficulty arises from the correspondence that has passed between the parties on the subject of the 10s. toll. [His lordship read the correspondence and continued:] The whole difficulty arises from the ambiguity in the words "each and every time of call." The defendants contend that the lying alongside a pier for the purpose of taking on board a number of passengers was different from a passing call at the pier by a steamer in the course of her passage up or down stream, and that they were entitled to make an extra charge in the former case. But is there really any difference, beyond the fact that a steamer would have to make a longer stay at the pier from which she started than at intermediate piers? There is power given to the defendants under the Act to order a vessel to leave the pier, if the steamer remained an unreasonably long time, and I see no reason why the parties should not come to some arrangement by which the defendants should be paid an increased sum in return for their granting the plaintiffs any additional or special facilities at their piers. But that is not the ground upon which the increased toll has been demanded. The defendants said they were entitled to make a terminal charge for the use of the Old Swan Pier. In my opinion, such a charge as they sought to enforce was an improper one, in the sense that it was illegal as unauthorized by the Act of 1894. If my view is right, then the payments made by the plaintiffs were made without consideration, and they are entitled to recover.

Then, as to the complaint of preferential treatment. I do not see that the plaintiffs have made out any case within section 68 of the Act. That section is in these words: "If any officer or servant of the conservators shall give undue preference to or unnecessarily retard or obstruct any vessel . . . . embarking, landing, loading, or unloading persons or goods at any pier . . . . he shall for every such offence be liable to a penalty not exceeding 40s."

All they allege is that the defendants permitted the rival company to have a man on the pier to act as a sign-post in directing passengers to steamers of that company. The question has arisen since this action was brought, and I cannot therefore grant an injunction as otherwise I might have done, but I think that whatever privileges of this sort are granted to one company by the defendants must also be granted to the other, and if the defendants fail to do so in the future and an action claiming an injunction be brought it should succeed. In my judgment the plaintiffs are entitled to the amount claimed on the writ, with costs.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Barlow & Barlow.

Solicitor for the defendants, James Hughes.

Q. B. Div.
(Lawrance and Channell, JJ.) Feb. 11, 17.

ROWLANDS (Appellant) v. MILLER (Respondent). (a.)

Ship—Seamen—Wages—Seaman engaged abroad—Advance of wages abroad by master—Right to deduct—8 Geo. 1, c. 24. s. 7—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), ss. 140, 163.

When a ship is in a foreign port, the master of the vessel can make a valid contract with a seaman whom he is there engaging for the homeward voyage for an advance to the seaman of any sum on account of his wages conditionally on his shipping. Such advance is not limited to one month's wages, and if the master pays the sum so advanced to the seaman, or to any person authorized by the seaman to receive it, he can at the end of the voyage deduct from the seaman's wages the whole sum advanced, as such advances are not prohibited by section 163 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, or otherwise.

Case stated by justices of the peace in and for the borough of South Shields.

At a petty sessions held at South Shields a complaint was preferred by Fred Miller (the respondent) against Morris Rowlands (the appellant) under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, charging the appellant with refusing to pay to the respondent the sum of £11 0s. 6d., being a balance of wages alleged to have been earned and due to the respondent as an able seaman on board of the sailing ship Hutton Hall, of which the appellant was the master, from the 7th of February to the 10th of September, 1898, on a voyage from San Francisco to Antwerp and the Tyne at the rate of £4 per month.

This complaint was heard and determined by the justices on the 15th of September, 1898, when the appellant was ordered to pay to the respondent the sum of £6 17s. 8d. and 15s. 6d. costs.

The appellant being dissatisfied with the decision of the justices to the extent of £4 2s. 10d., as being erroneous in point of law, applied for and obtained this case.

It was proved before the justices that the vessel Hutton Hall was lying at San Francisco wanting a crew, and the appellant (the master) had requisitioned a Mr. Herman, a crimp, to secure him one. Mr. Herman procured the respondent and others, who were entered on the articles as A.B.'s.

The master had made no inquiry as to their ability, but three or four days after sailing from San Francisco, he had the men before him, including the respondent, and he then disrated the respondent and some others from £4 per month to £2 10s. per month, being the rate of ordinary seamen's wages. It was one of the terms of the engagement of the men by the appellant that they should receive an advance of forty dollars (equal in British sterling to £8 5s. 8d.); thereupon a note of which the following is a copy was drawn up (it was not clear by whom) and passed from the respondent to the crimp. It was not signed by the appellant, nor by any one on his behalf, and contained no obligation whatever on the part of the appellant to pay it. No evidence of the payment of the note was tendered before the justices, but there was merely the production of the note.

The note was as follows: "Forty dollars. San Francisco, the 11th of April, 1898. Received on board the ship Hutton Hall. Fred Miller, as seaman, who acknowledges to having shipped and received the sum of forty dollars in advance and who hereby assigns this note to Mr. Herman, Officer Commanding."

This note bears the following endorsement, namely: "San Francisco, the 11th of April, 1898. For value received I hereby assign this note to Mr. Herman.—Fred Miller."

The respondent (who had never been to sea before) and was apparently unacquainted with the usages of crimps, did not raise any objection to this, expecting to receive some money from Herman; but he stated that as a matter of fact he got no money from him whatever, but only some odds and ends towards an outfit.

On arriving in England the respondent was offered his wages at the rate of £2 10s. per month, less the advanced deduction of £8 5s. 8d. The respondent refused to accept it, and made this complaint to the justices.

The justices decided that the disrating of the respondent was right and proper; but that the deduction of £8 5s. 8d. for two months' advance at San Francisco on the form above given was not authorised by law, and they allowed a deduction of £4 2s. 10d. only (being one month's wages and a small sum for the difference in exchange) under the limitation contained in section 140 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, sub-section 1.

It was contended on the part of the respondent that by section 140 of the Merchant Shipping Act the utmost advance which could be made, assuming that section applied to the present case, was to the extent of one month's wages.

The appellant contended that the law permitted advances abroad to be made to any extent, and insisted upon the whole deduction.

The respondent, however, relied upon section 163 of the same Act as a distinct prohibition against any advance whatever abroad, and that besides this prohibition the note given to the crimp was not a document binding the appellant to pay it, and therefore not binding upon the respondent at all; that it was not signed by the appellant or by anyone on his behalf, and that it was to all intents an assignment or charge made by the seaman prior to the accruing of wages, which by clause (b) of sub-section 1 of section 163 is declared not binding upon the seaman making the same.

On the other hand, the appellant further contended that neither of these sections applied to advances made to seamen abroad; that, in fact, there was no restriction on advances made abroad, and that these two sections had reference to vessels sailing from the United Kingdom only, and that even if section 163 did apply, the transaction was not an assignment within the meaning of the section.

The justices decided that section 163 was controlled by section 140, and that the first part of the section authorized an advance made anywhere but only to the extent of one month's wages, and thereupon they adjudged the appellant to be entitled to deduct one month's wages only from the respondent's claim.

The appellant was dissatisfied, and insisted upon claiming the full deduction of £8 5s. 8d.

The questions for the opinion of the court were: (1) Were the justices correct in their interpretation of section 140, sub-section 1, as applicable to this case, which they held to authorize an advance to the extent of one month's wages, no matter where the ship might be in which the seaman was about to sail; and, if so, were they right in allowing a deduction of one month's wages only? (2) Is section 163 controlled by section 140? If not, and the court should be of opinion that section 163 altogether prohibits advances anywhere out of the United Kingdom, then the respondent should be entitled to receive the whole balance of his wages properly due to him without deducting any part of the alleged advance of two months' wages. (3) If the court should be of opinion that the justices were wrong in their interpretation of these two sections, and that there is no limit to advances which may be made to seamen abroad, and that the advance was lawfully and properly made, and is not otherwise void for want of the appellant's signature making it binding on him, then the order is to be reversed to the extent of £8 5s. 8d., the advance claimed to have been made.

(a.) Reported by Sir SHERSTON BAKER, Bart., Barrister-at-Law.

It was admitted in argument that the money had been paid by the appellant to Herman.

The Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict c. 60), provides: Section 140.—(1) (a) "Where an agreement with the crew is required to be made in a form approved by the Board of Trade, the agreement may contain a stipulation for payment to or on behalf of the seaman, conditionally on his going to sea in pursuance of the agreement, of a sum not exceeding the amount of one month's wages payable to the seaman under the agreement; and (b) stipulations for the allotment of a seaman's wages may be made in accordance with this Act. (2) Save as aforesaid an agreement by or on behalf of the employer of a seaman for the payment of money to or on behalf of the seaman conditionally on his going to sea from any port in the United Kingdom shall be void, and any money paid in satisfaction or in respect of any such agreement shall not be deducted from the seaman's wages, and a person shall not have any right of action, suit, or set-off against the seaman or his assignee in respect of any money so paid or purporting to have been so paid."

Section 163.—(1) "As respects wages due or accruing to a seaman or apprentice to the sea service —(a) they shall not be subject to attachment or arrestment from any court; (b) an assignment or sale thereof made prior to the accruing thereof shall not bind the person making the same; (c) a power of attorney or authority for the receipt thereof shall not be irrevocable; and (d) a payment of wages to the seaman or apprentice shall be valid in law, notwithstanding any previous sale or assignment of those wages, or any attachment, incumbrance, or arrestment thereof. (2) Nothing in this section shall affect the provisions of this Act with respect to allotment notes."

Horridge, for the appellant.—The master of the ship—the appellant—was entitled to deduct from the respondent's wages the whole sum advanced. He could make a valid agreement with the seaman in this foreign port for an advance to him of any part of his wages and he has done so in this case. Such an agreement made in a foreign port is binding unless it is prohibited by any statute. It is said that it is prohibited, and that by reason of section 140 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, the appellant could deduct at the most a sum equal to one month's wages; but sub-section 2 of that section shows that it has no application where, as in this case, the seaman was engaged in a foreign port. That section deals entirely with cases where the seaman goes to sea from a port in the United Kingdom, and it was so held by this court on the 26th of January, in the case of Ritchie v. Larsen, ante, p. 413, 80 L. T. Rep. 259, which really governs and concludes this case. Here there was very little doubt, as the magistrates seem to have thought, that this sum of money was paid by the appellant to Herman by the respondent's authority. It was therefore a payment made to him, and section 163 does not apply to or affect such payments, as it does not prohibit advances at all.

J. D. Johnson, for the respondent.—The justices ought to have held that the respondent was entitled to receive the whole of his wages on the termination of the voyage. They were wrong in allowing the appellant to make any deduction whatever, even of the one month's wages. Section 163 of the Act governs this case. That section deals with wages due or accruing to the seaman, and it says in clause (b) that an assignment or sale of such wages made prior to the accruing thereof shall not bind the seaman, and in clause (c) that an authority for the receipt of the wages shall not be irrevocable. What took place in this case was either an assignment or sale by the seaman of his wages, which would not be binding, or an authority to Herman to receive the money, which would not be irrevocable. For the purposes of this case I concede that the money was paid by the appellant to Herman, but I contend that, whether the appellant paid the money to Herman or did not pay it to him, the money cannot be deducted from the respondent's wages. I rely, therefore, on the express words of section 163 as showing that no deduction can be made; and I rely also on the words of section 7 of the Act 8 Geo. 1, c. 24, which is still in force. That section prohibits all payments of wages abroad except to the extent of one-half the wages actually due, and here no wages were due. The case of Ritchie v. Larsen, which has been referred to, was decided upon section 140, and the sections 163 of the Act of 1894 and 7 of 8 Geo. 1, c. 24, were not referred to.

Horridge replied.

Cur. adv. vult.

Feb. 17.—The judgment of THE COURT (LAWRANCE and CHANNELL, JJ.) was read by CHANNELL, J.—This was a case stated by justices on proceedings before them taken by a seaman under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, to recover wages claimed by him, and it raised a question very similar to that in a case of Ritchie v. Larsen, ante, p. 413, decided by us on the 26th of January last. The magistrates, however, in the present case based their decision on section 163 of the Act of 1894, a section to which our attention was not called on the argument of the former case, and in addition our attention was called by counsel for the respondent in the present case to the statute 8 Geo. 1, c. 24, the 7th section of which appears to be still in force, though almost all the Act has been repealed. It became necessary, therefore, for us to consider not only whether the present case differed in any essential particular from the former case, but also whether our former decision was correct. We accordingly took time to consider the matter. In Ritchie v. Larsen we decided that advances to seamen conditional on their shipping from a foreign port—although there was a British consul there—were not forbidden by the combined effect of sections 124 and 140 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894. We assumed that they were not forbidden by any other statute, as none was called to our attention. Our former judgment was given immediately on the conclusion of the argument, as the case then appeared quite clear. I have now fully reconsidered the whole matter, and I am confirmed in the view I took on the former occasion as to the effect of the sections which we then had under consideration. I still think the effect of those sections is clear, and I think it unnecessary to repeat what I then said. I have also come to the conclusion, though with considerable doubt, that the sections to which we have since been referred do not affect the matter, and that our former decision was correct. I will deal first with the old statute 8 Geo. 1, c. 24, which was "an Act for the more effectual suppressing of piracy." I think the 7th section of that statute is certainly unrepealed. It is printed in the revised edition of the statutes, the rest of the Act being omitted. In the Law Reports Index of Statutes Repealed the other sections are shown to be repealed, but this not. It is also referred to as existing in most of the editions of Abbott on Shipping, down to the eleventh, though it has been dropped out in the two last editions, apparently because it is considered superseded rather than repealed. The words of the 7th section of that Act are as follows: "And for prevention of seamen or mariners deserting merchant ships or vessels abroad in the plantations, or in any other parts beyond the seas, which is the chief occasion of their turning pirates, and of great detriment to trade and navigation, and is chiefly occasioned by the owner or owners of ships or vessels paying wages to the seamen or mariners when abroad; be it enacted by the authority aforesaid, that no master or owner of any merchant ship or vessel, shall pay or advance, or cause to be paid or advanced, to any seaman or mariner during the time he shall be in parts beyond the seas, any money or effects upon account of wages, exceeding one moiety of the wages which shall be due at the time of such payment, until such ship or vessel shall return to Great Britain or Ireland, or the plantations, or to some other of His Majesty's dominions whereto they belong, and from whence they were first fitted out; and if any such master or owner of such merchant ship or vessel shall pay or advance, or cause to be paid or advanced, any wages to any seaman or mariner above the said moiety, such master or owner shall forfeit and pay double the money he shall so pay or advance to be recovered in the High Court of Admiralty, by any person who shall first discover and inform of the same." Now I think, reading this as a whole and noting that the object is to prevent desertion, that it does not apply to the terms of the engagement of seamen abroad. It applies to seamen already on the ship on its touching at the foreign port, and it forbids payment to them there of more than half of the money which has then become due to them in respect of the outward voyage and the advancing to them of any future wages, with the object of giving them substantial inducement to remain on the ship for the homeward voyage. I do not think that this enactment prevented a master from engaging a man in a foreign port, on the terms that he should be paid so much money down on joining the ship and the balance at the end of the voyage. That might be the only means of replacing deserters, and it could not increase pirates. Even if this view be wrong, I think the only consequence of a breach of the enactment would be that an informer might sue in the Admiralty Court. The case would probably come within the rule that where an enactment and a penalty for breach of it are contained in the same clause, the penalty is the only remedy for the breach; but in any case it seems to me that it would be impossible for a seaman who had been paid in a foreign port a sum in excess of the moiety allowed by this enactment to sue successfully on his return to this country for his whole wages. That would make the master forfeit the sum paid to the seaman as well as forfeiting double the sum to the informer, or treble the sum altogether. I think, therefore, that this enactment does not forbid an advance to a seaman engaged abroad, and, further, that if it did, it would not enable a seaman to recover the sum advanced again as unpaid wages, but would merely enable him or any other informer to recover double the money as a penal sum in the Admiralty Court.

Next, to deal with the 163rd section of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894. This is as follows: [His lordship then read the section, and proceeded:] It is contended that sub-sections (b) and (c) of this section in effect make advance notes void as against the seaman, and further that, even if that is not so in all cases, at all events the transaction described in this special case was invalid. It is convenient to consider first the general question, and then see how far the present case differs from the ordinary one. Advances and advance notes have been known for many years and have been for many years the subject of legislation. They have been dealt with in a separate part of this very statute, and it is unlikely that it could have been intended to alter the effect of that part of the statute by this section coming in a later part and not mentioning advances. Sub-section 2 saves allotments under the Act from the operation of the section, and it was necessary to do so as they are clearly assignments. If advance notes were within the section one would expect that the advance notes authorised by section 140, sub-section 1, would be excepted, but they are not. Now it seems clear that unless section 140 does so there is no section of this Act, nor any other Act (other than that of Geo. 1, with which I have dealt) which in any way forbids a contract by a master with a seaman whom he engages abroad to pay that seaman a sum on account of his wages immediately on his joining the ship. Section 163 could only touch payments not to the seaman, but to some one on his behalf and by his order, and then only if the transaction were an assignment by the seaman of the wages before they had accrued due, or an authority to receive wages. Now advance notes really are not mere assignments. The master generally makes himself liable conditionally to a third party, the holder of the note. It is true that it has been held in The Cardiff Boarding Masters' Association v. Cory & Sons, 9 Times L. R. 388, that advance notes promising to pay the seaman "or order," are not negotiable instruments because they are conditional. But they may be so framed as to be payable directly to the third person either by name or on his fulfilling a condition: see McKune v. Joynson, 6 W. R. 658, 5 C. B. N. S. at p. 228. I think that advance notes signed by the master in any of the usual forms cannot be considered merely as assignments by the seaman. There is another ground on which they might be considered as not coming within section 163. Section 163 relates, according to its heading, to "wages due or accruing due." Now wages cannot strictly be considered to be "accruing" until the service has commenced. Consequently a sum contracted to be paid when the seaman ships on board, and conditionally upon his so shipping, cannot in strictness be said to be a sum which before he ships is "accruing," notwithstanding that if it becomes payable it is to be taken into account as part of his wages. This is perhaps somewhat fine, but to hold that section 163 is confined to dealings with wages after the service has commenced brings about a result which accords with what appears to be the scheme of the Act, and leaves advances and agreements as to advances made before the commencement of the service to be governed by the earlier sections of the Act. On the whole I come to the conclusion that advance notes signed by the master and in an ordinary form are not struck at by section 163, and that our decision in Ritchie v. Larsen was correct. Before dealing with the facts of the present case there is another point to be noted in reference to section 163. It does not contain the words which are in section 140, that money paid under the documents referred to shall not be deducted from the seaman's wages, and that a person paying shall have no right of action or set-off against the seaman.

I think, therefore, that a payment made under an assignment before it is avoided, or a power of attorney or authority before it is revoked, must be good. Take sub-section (c) as to powers of attorney not being irrevocable. This would seem to mean that they should not be irrevocable by reason of the party in whose favour they have been given having an interest in the money, but not that they should be revocable after payment had been made under them. In the same way I think that assignments under sub-section (b) which are declared not binding on the seaman must be voidable only and not void, and consequently could not be avoided after they had been acted on. This latter point might, perhaps, be doubtful, inasmuch as the master paying must necessarily have notice of the invalidity if it exists, as it is created, if at all, by the statute.

Now, to deal with the facts of the present case. The case first states it was one of the terms of the engagement of the respondent by the appellant that he should receive an advance of forty dollars. At common law such a contract would of course be good, and I have failed to find any statute forbidding it. The case then states that thereupon a document set out in the case was made out. It is dated the 11th of April, 1898, and it purports to state that the respondent admitted having shipped. Probably, however, he had not done so, as it appears from the next paragraph that he did not get his outfit until after signing. The document is not signed by the appellant. The facts are not at all clearly stated, and the documents are not easy to construe. The documents, however, whether an assignment or not, and whether an assignment of wages made before they had accrued due, appear certainly to amount to an authority to receive the money. The case states in the early part that there was no evidence of payment, but Mr. Horridge for the appellant contended that later on in the case the magistrates had assumed the payment, and had decided the case on the assumption that the forty dollars had been paid to Herman; and although Mr. Johnson at first contended the contrary, upon our proposing to send back the case to the magistrates to clear up this point, he elected to argue the case upon the footing that the money had been paid to Herman. That being so, it seems to me that the forty dollars which by a valid contract between the respondent and the appellant was to be paid to the respondent, was paid to Herman by the respondent's actual authority. It is stated that the respondent made no objection and there is nothing to indicate that he did so until long after it was paid, if it ever was paid. Under these circumstances it seems to have been a valid part payment of his wages, and there is nothing in the statutes empowering him to recover it over again. If we were to assume that the money was not paid, but that the appellant was merely relying on a supposed liability to Herman, I should have great doubt on the case. I do not think the facts stated in the case show a hability of the appellant to Herman. The appellant not having signed the document was not directly pledged by it to pay. It is doubtful whether it is an assignment, and, if an assignment, whether it is an assignment of a debt already due, or of accruing wages which had not at the time actually accrued. If it had not been agreed that we should decide the case on the assumption that the money had been paid, I should think it necessary to remit the case to the magistrates to find further facts. As it is I think the appellant was entitled to deduct the whole sum paid and that judgment should be given for the appellant. The answers to the three questions put in the case should be—first, the magistrates were not right in allowing a deduction of one month only; secondly, section 163 does not prohibit advances at all; thirdly, there is no limit to advances made abroad, and in this case on the facts agreed the payment was by the respondent's authority and was binding on him. Our judgment, therefore, is that the appellant is entitled to deduct a further sum of £4 2s. 10d. beyond the deduction allowed by the magistrates, and the respondent must pay the costs.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Walker, Son, & Field, for Botterell, Roche, & Temperley, Newcastle-upon-Tyne.

Solicitors for the respondent, Pattinson & Brewer, for R. Jacks, South Shields.

Court of Appeal.

From Q. B. Div. (Lindley, M.R. and A. L. Smith and Romer, L.JJ.) — July 6.

PRESCOTT v. LEE. (a.)

Election law — Registration — Parliament — Notice of objection — Place of abode of objector — Mistake — Amendment — Parliamentary and Municipal Registration Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 26), s. 28, sub-section 2 — Registration Order, 1895, Sched. III., Form I.

In signing a notice of objection to a name being retained on the occupiers' list of voters in a borough, the objector, instead of stating his place of abode, as required by the Registration Order, 1895, gave the address of a shop within the borough, which was his qualifying property. His place of abode was outside the borough, and he thought he ought to give his address within the borough and not an address outside it. No one was in any way affected by the mistake.

Held, that the revising barrister had power to amend the mistake.

Judgment of the Queen's Bench Division (ante, p. 139) affirmed.

Appeal from the judgment of a Divisional Court on a case stated by a revising barrister, ante, p. 139.

At a court held for the revision of the lists of voters for the Parliamentary borough of the Strand an objection was made to the name of Thomas Prescott being retained on Division I. of the occupiers' list of voters for the parish of St. Martin-in-the-Fields.

The notice of objection given to Thomas Prescott was signed as follows: "Francis C. Hunt, of 106, Drury-lane, on Division I. of the occupiers' list of Parliamentary electors and county electors for the parish of St. Martin-in-the-Fields." The objector's true place of abode was 50, Nelson-road, Wimbledon, and not 106, Drury-lane. The address 106, Drury-lane was inserted by a mistake on the part of the objector, who thought that he ought to give his address within the borough and not an address outside the borough. The address 106, Drury-lane was the objector's qualifying property in the borough, and was a shop in which the objector could be found the greater part of every week-day. The objector's place of abode was stated in the second column in the overseers' list as 50, Nelson-road, Wimbledon. Neither the said Thomas Prescott nor anyone else was affected in any way by the incorrect statement of the objector's place of abode.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The revising barrister amended the objection by adding the words, "and of 50, Nelson-road, Wimbledon"; and, the grounds of objection having been proved to be good, he struck the name of Thomas Prescott off the list.

Prescott being desirous of appealing, the revising barrister stated this case for the opinion of the court, the question being whether, in the circumstances of the case, the revising barrister had power to amend the notice of objection.

Section 28, sub-section 2, of the Parliamentary and Municipal Registration Act, 1878, enacts that a revising barrister "may correct any mistake which is proved to him to have been made in any claim or notice of objection."

By the Registration Order of the 25th of March, 1895, made by the Queen in Council under the provisions of section 76, sub-section 7, of the Local Government Act, 1888, certain forms relating to the registration of electors are prescribed. Form (I.) No. 2 in Schedule III. to that order is the form of notice of objection to the party objected to; and it ends thus: "(Signed) A. B., of (place of abode) on the lists of Parlimentary electors and county electors for the parish of ——."

The Divisional Court (Lord Russell of Killowen, C.J., and Lawrance, J., Wills, J., dissenting) held that the revising barrister had power to make the amendment, and dismissed the appeal.

The appellant appealed to the Court of Appeal.

Daldy, for the appellant.

Lawless, for the respondent.

Lindley, M.R.—I have no doubt that the revising barrister had power to make this amendment. The section applicable to the case is section 28 (2) of the Parliamentary and Municipal Registration Act, 1878, which is as follows: "He may correct any mistake which is proved to him to have been made in any claim or notice of objection." The revising barrister has found that Thomas Prescott was a claimant for a vote, but that he was not entitled to a vote, and that therefore the objection which was made to his claim was a good objection. But in the form of objection the objector, after his signature, put, not his place of abode, as prescribed by the registration order, but his place of business, which was his qualifying property within the borough. No one was misled by this mistake, nor was there any deception. The revising barrister, in the exercise of his discretion, amended the mistake. The question is, had he power to do so? The Divisional Court held that he had, but Wills, J., dissented. I think the judgment of the majority of the court was right, and I cannot agree with the judgment of Wills, J. In my opinion we ought to be slow to say that a revising barrister cannot in the exercise of his discretion make any amendment, unless we are satisfied that he has no power to make such an amendment. Two cases were cited before us for the purpose of showing that the revising barrister had no power to make the amendment which he did make in this case—viz., Bridges v. Miller, 36 W. R. 509, 20 Q. B. D. 287, and Smith v. Chandler, 37 W. R. 351, 22 Q. B. D. 208. But in my opinion those cases do not support that contention. In Bridges v. Miller the court held that the revising barrister had no power to amend a bad objection so as to make it a good one, which seems an intelligible decision. Smith v. Chandler was a case of a notice of claim, and the notice was clearly bad, inasmuch as the declaration of the attesting witness was not dated. The ratio decidendi of that case was that a form was used which omitted a material part of the prescribed form. In the present case the objection itself was a good objection, and there was only a mistake in the address of the objector. In such a case the revising barrister, in my opinion, clearly has power to amend. The appeal must therefore be dismissed.

A. L. Smith, L.J.—The Act says the revising barrister may correct any mistake in a claim or notice of objection. I cannot see how we can cut that down and say that he can only correct some mistakes. Wills, J., said this was not a mistake, because the objector did what he did on purpose. It seems to me that he did make a mistake and that he did not do it on purpose. He thought that after the word "of" he ought to put his place of business, which was his qualifying property within the borough. In my opinion this case comes within the purview of the section allowing the amendment of mistakes.

Romer, L.J., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Ayrton, Biscoe, & Barclay.

Solicitors for the respondent, Troutbeck & Co.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. } Byrne, J. } July 5.

In re Trustees of Hollis' Hospital and Hague's Contract. (a.)

Vendor and purchaser—Specific performance—Grant to uses subject to a proviso for re-entry to the heirs of grantor—Common law condition subsequent—Shifting use—Rule against perpetuities in reference to a common law condition—Application of the principles of the common law.

A proviso that lands shall revert to the right heirs of the grantor for condition broken, following on a grant to uses, is a common law condition subsequent, and not a shifting use.

The rule against perpetuities applies to a common law condition for re-entry.

A title which for its validity depended on the application of the rule against perpetuities to a common law condition for re-entry was not forced on a purchaser, the point not formerly having been the subject of a judicial decision, and there being danger of litigation.

Summons.

This was a vendor and purchaser summons on the part of Mr. Ernest Hague, of Castle Dyke, near Sheffield, the purchaser of the hereditaments the subject-matter of the application.

The vendors were the trustees of a charity known as Hollis' Hospital.

The summons asked for a declaration that a good title had not been shown to the hereditaments contracted to be sold.

The facts of the case were as follows: By an agreement dated the 3rd of October, 1898, a contract was entered into by an agent acting on behalf of a majority of the trustees of Hollis' Hospital to sell to the said E. Hague certain freehold property situate at Castle Dyke, near Sheffield, containing 25a. 1r. 17p. for £5,750.

Matters had proceeded so far that the purchaser was willing to accept the title and the draft conveyance had been approved by the trustees' solicitor, when a letter dated the 16th day of November, 1898, was received by the purchaser's solicitors, written by a Mr. W. H. Anthony, one of the trustees who had not concurred in the sale, to the effect that as the heir-at-law of one Thomas Hollis, sen. (and also of John Hollis), he thought it his duty to intimate to them that he was no party to the sale of the property and to call their attention to a clause in the title deeds as to the property reverting to the heir-at-law in case of its being devoted to any other purpose than that intended by the settlor. This letter led to the present proceedings. The history and title of the property was as follows: By indentures of lease and release bearing date the 26th and 27th of August, 1703, Thomas Hollis (father of Thomas Hollis, sen.), with the intent to found suitable habitations for sixteen poor persons to be selected from the poor of Sheffield, conveyed certain hereditaments in Sheffield then converted into sixteen small apartments to certain persons therein named as trustees to their use and behoof upon the trusts and subject to the powers, declarations, and agreements therein mentioned and expressed.

(a.) Reported by J. Arthur Price, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

By an indenture of assignment dated the 24th of January, 1704, Thomas Hollis (father of Thomas Hollis, sen.) assigned to Thomas Hollis, sen., his executors, administrators, and assigns, certain Government terminable annuities amounting to £90 per annum, and by deed-poll dated the 26th of January, 1704, the said Thomas Hollis, sen., declared that the same annuities were so assigned to him upon trust that he should pay the same towards maintaining the said almshouses and for several other purposes in the said deed mentioned.

By a writing under seal dated the 21st of February, 1715, and annexed to the said deed of assignment, Thomas Hollis, the father, revoked several payments in that deed contained, and left his son, Thomas Hollis, sen., at liberty to continue or discontinue them as he, his executors or assigns, should think fit without being accountable to any person, and after the death of the said Thomas Hollis, the father, the before-mentioned annuities were turned into South Sea annuities and South Sea stock, which annuities and stock were sold by Thomas Hollis, sen., for £1,500.

Thomas Hollis, sen., for the augmentation of the said charities and for the better settlement thereof, added to the £1,500 the sum of £610, and with these two sums purchased certain hereditaments. At the date of the next-mentioned indenture the hereditaments comprised in the indenture of 1703 had become legally vested in Thomas Hollis, sen., Thomas Hollis the younger, and others.

By an indenture of lease dated the 17th of May, 1726, and made between Thomas Hollis, sen., and John Williams, the said Thomas Hollis bargained and sold the property purchased by him, including the hereditaments the subject-matter of this application, to J. Williams for a year to the intent that the said J. Williams might be in possession, and so that he might be enabled to accept a grant and release of the reversion on such trusts as should be by such release expressed, and the trustees of the premises comprised in release of 1703 conveyed their lands by a similar indenture of the same date to the said J. Williams.

By an indenture of release bearing date the 18th of May, 1726, made between the said T. Hollis, sen., of the first part, the ten trustees in whom the lands originally given to the charity were vested, the said J. Williams of the third part, and four new trustees of the fourth part, the said hereditaments so purchased as aforesaid were granted and released to the said J. Williams to have and to hold unto the said J. Williams, his heirs and assigns, for ever to the use and behoof of the said Thomas Hollis, sen., and the other old and new trustees, their heirs and assigns for ever, nevertheless upon the several and respective trusts, and to and for the several and respective intents and purposes thereunder mentioned. Then followed the trusts with regard to the management and maintenance of the charity, and afterwards followed the following proviso upon which the question at issue arose. "Provided always, and it is hereby agreed and declared by and between the said parties to these presents, that if at any time hereafter the premises hereby conveyed or any part thereof, or the rents, issues, and profits of the same or of any part thereof shall be employed or converted to or for any other use or uses, intents, or purposes than as are hereinbefore mentioned and specified, then and from thenceforth the buildings, lands, and premises hereinbefore conveyed to the uses and upon the trusts hereinbefore mentioned shall revert to the right heirs of the said Thomas Hollis, sen., party hereto, anything herein contained to the contrary thereof in any wise notwithstanding." The indenture contained no power of sale.

Anthony was served with the summons, but his counsel stated at the hearing that he declined to take part in the argument.

Farwell, Q.C., and Bristowe, for the applicant.—A good title to the property purchased has not been shown. The effect of the release of the 18th of May, 1726, was to vest the hereditaments in the trustees subject to a common law condition subsequent of re-entry in favour of the heirs of Thomas Hollis, sen., in the event mentioned. A common law condition subsequent is not subject to the rule against perpetuities. [They referred to Challis on the Law of Real Property (2nd ed.), pp. 174-177.] In any case, having regard to the claim set up by W. H. Anthony, the title is too doubtful to be forced on a purchaser.

Levett, Q.C., and Stewart Smith, for the vendors, the trustees other than W. H. Anthony.—In the first place we contend that this proviso is not a common law condition subsequent but a shifting use. There is under the conveyance only a momentary seisin given to the grantee Williams, and the proviso can only operate to transfer the use. But if so, it is subject to the rule against perpetuities, and so is void. Further, the condition is bad at common law as it was not always ready to operate, since it could not take effect during the lifetime of the grantor.

Leigh Clare, for W. H. Anthony.

Farwell, Q.C., in reply.—This is a proper common law condition, and the release operated at common law: Co. Litt. 271, 272*a*.

BYRNE, J. (after stating the facts of the case).—It is contended on behalf the purchaser that a good title cannot be made by reason of the clause in the deed of the 18th of May, 1726, providing for the reverter to the right heirs of Thomas Hollis, sen., inasmuch as the sale would be a breach of the condition, and alternatively that the title shown is not one which ought to be forced on a purchaser.

It is contended on behalf of the vendors—that is, the trustees other than W. H. Anthony—that the condition is void as tending to a perpetuity, and that that is so whether the clause in question be construed as operating by way of shifting use, as they say it should be, or by way of condition subsequent. The effect of the method of conveyance which was adopted was as follows: The lease for a year operated, and the bargainee, J. Williams, was in possession by the Statute of Uses. The release operated by enlarging the estate or possession of the bargainer to a fee, this was at the common law, and the use being declared in favour of persons other than the bargainee the statute again intervened and annexed or transferred the position of the releasee to the use of the trustees to whom the use was declared, subject to the proviso: see Butler's notes to the Coke upon Littleton, 272 (a), note 6 (2).

I think that this clause is in terms and form a true express common law condition subsequent, being aptly worded and being in favour of the heirs of Thomas Hollis, sen.: see Sheppard's Touchstone, edition by Preston, p. 124.

It was conceded in argument that if this clause ought to be construed as a limitation or as creating a shifting use it would be void as infringing the rule against perpetuities, and it was argued that the clause ought to be construed as one intended to shift the use which was vested by virtue of the release in the trustees, upon the happening of the contemplated event, in the heirs of the original bargainer, and that it was not possible for it to operate otherwise, having regard to the fact that the estate to be defeated was one existing only by virtue of the statute.

I do not think that this argument can prevail. It is laid down in terms in Sheppard's Touchstone, p. 120, that a condition may be annexed to a limitation of uses, and thereby the same (viz., the uses or estates arising from the uses) may be made void. To which statement a note is appended by Mr. Preston: "And shall be executed by statute 27 Hen. 8, so that the donor and his heirs may take advantage of the condition (Savile 77). See further in Vin. Abr., Condition (N)." In Serjeant Rudhall's case, Savile 76, at p. 77, case 155, "Wm. Rudhall, Serjeant-at-Law, being cestui que usi in fee, devised certain lands before the Statute of Uses by his will in writing to Charles his younger son and the heirs male of his body with remainder to John his eldest son in fee, with this condition, That neither the said Charles nor any of his heirs of his body should aliene or discontinue any of the said lands, but only to the jointure of his wife for the time being and for the use of the said jointures of the said wives of the said heirs for term of life of the said wives; and after the said Wm. Rudhall died and Charles his own son entered and after the year 4 Ed. 6 by his indenture leased the land to the defendants for term of their lives rendering the ancient rent to him his heirs and assigns. Then (1 Eliz.) the said Charles levied a fine to certain persons and their heirs with proclamations, which was to the use of the said Charles and Alice his wife and the heirs male of the body of Alice by him begotten and for default of such issue to the use of the heirs of the said Charles begotten, and for default of such issue to the use of the right heirs of the said Wm. Rudhall the father. And it was averred that the use of this fine was for the jointure of the said Alice for term of her life. And the plaintiff, as heir of Serjeant Rudhall, entered for the condition broken. And in this case three doubts arising: one, if it was condition or limitation of estate in use; another, if the condition was broken; and the third, if the heir of the cestui que use should take advantage of condition broken by the Statute of Uses. And it appears that this is condition, because condition destroys the estate and returns the land to the donor and his heirs; and limitation of estate is when the first estate is destroyed and new estate limited by way of remainder or otherwise. And here is condition, because there is not a new estate limited over, but the estate to which it is annexed is destroyed. And then arises for consideration if the condition is broken, and it appears that lease for lives of the defendants, reserving the ancient rent being made according to the statute, is not a discontinuance. For the statute has given power to make such estates, that they are legal, and legal estates cannot make injurious discontinuances. Therefore the condition in this respect is not broken, but the limitation of other uses by which other heirs are inheritable than were at first, is to break the condition. For the limitation of use on fine in special tail is contrary to the will of Serjeant Rudhall and the limitation of the fee to the heirs of Serjeant Rudhall is other limitation to heirs than as he himself limits; for he limits the fee to John Rudhall his eldest son, and his heirs, and it might be that John Rudhall and his heirs are heirs of the half blood to the direct heirs of Serjeant Rudhall, whence it is other inheritance than as was in the first limitation which is breach of the condition. And as to the taking advantage of condition annexed to the use, it appears that the Statute of Uses has given this advantage when the uses and possession are united, that the heir of the father enter, by which it appears by the opinion of all the justices that the entry was allowable and the plaintiff shall recover, and it is adjudged that his entry was allowable for the condition was broken by limitation of use in special tail, and of the other remainder in fee in the heirs of the father; but lease for life, according to the statute, is not discontinuance, and therefore no breach of condition. Also this entry for condition is guaranteed (?) by the Statute of Uses, and also it was agreed that this was condition and not limitation." I have translated the report out of the Law French, and I think that the case (which is also reported Moore 212 and Leonard 298) is an authority for the statement in Sheppard's Touchstone.

The next question is, whether or not the condition being an express common law condition subsequent is void for perpetuity. I have not been referred to any case deciding the question, nor have I since the argument after a considerable search been able to find any authority in the reports enabling me to say that the point has ever been judicially decided.

For the exposition of our very complicated real property law it is proper, in the absence of judicial authority, to resort to text-books which have been recognized by the courts as representing the views and practice of conveyancers of repute. Except in the comparatively recent although most valuable book of the late Mr. Challis (whose loss we all regret), to which I shall have to refer more fully later on, I cannot find any definite statement of opinions adverse to the views expressed by Mr. Sanders and by Mr. Lewis in their well-known treatises, and I will first refer to Sanders on Uses and Trusts (5th ed.), vol. 1, at pp. 206, 207, and also at p. 213. [His lordship read the passages, and continued:] I find in Lewis on Perpetuity the opinion of the learned author expressed in clear and unambiguous language: see Lewis on Perpetuity (ed. 1843), at pp. 615, 616. [His lordship read the passage which concludes "Any event, consequently, ascertained to be too remote in reference to remainders and executory limitation, will vitiate a common law condition limited to arise upon it."] Amongst quite modern text-writers I find a similar expression of opinion: see the work of the learned American author Mr. Gray, who has written on the law of perpetuity, at p. 215, where he states his views, in spite of the fact that there are American authorities tending the other way, the point not having been taken or argued in such authorities; and see also Marsden on Perpetuity, at p. 4.

I have purposely avoided referring to certain dicta in recent cases until I come to examine Mr. Challis's argument, which was in fact the basis of the argument put forward on the part of the purchaser in the present case. That argument and the learned author's expression of opinion are to be found at pp. 174, 175, 176, and 177 of Challis on Real Property (2nd ed.).

Mr. Challis there says: "The question whether a common law condition in defeasance of an estate of freehold is within the rule against perpetuities in the sense that it is void, if it may defeat the estate at a time more remote than is allowed by the rule, may perhaps, in view of the present disposition of the courts, which leans strongly in favour of the rule, be a question requiring to be treated with some degree of caution. The affirmative reply is open to the objection that the rules relating to common law conditions had been settled for some centuries before the rule against perpetuities had been thought of, and that there is not only no case to be found in the old common law authorities of any disposition to apply what may be called a 'time test' to common law conditions, but their language by the clearest implication asserts the absence of any such rule. "In the old common law authorities, down to and including Lord Coke, there are innumerable references to conditions in defeasance of a freehold expressed simpliciter without any hint of a restriction within any period whatever, and not only do such references invariably assume that the validity of such conditions had never been called in question upon this ground, but in some cases they affirm, by the clearest implication, that the benefit of a condition of re-entry may be claimed at any distance of time by the heirs of the grantor. At a subsequent time it became necessary to devise a novel restriction to be applied to novel forms of limiting, or otherwise conferring an estate or interest unknown to the common law. Upon what principle can it be said that the emergence of novel matter into the law had simultaneously introduced into the common law a new rule of construction, made applicable to matters with which the common law was familiar, but previously unknown to the common law. The prescription upon which the common law depends is of much greater antiquity than the reign of Henry 8. No court except the High Court of Parliament has any jurisdiction or authority to alter the common law: Co. Litt. 115*b*. When any part of the common law is found to require amendment, the Legislature alone is competent to apply the remedy: Cunliffe v. Brancker, 3 Ch. D. 393, at p. 416, 25 W. R. Dig. 339. In imposing the rule against perpetuities upon the novel limitations and interests to which by universal acknowledgment it is applicable, the inferior courts did not alter the common law, but merely laid down certain terms upon which they would interpret certain statutes in relation to the creation of legal estates and upon which they would give legal effect to equitable interests of a certain type. Much more than this is needed in order to bring matters previously settled by the common law within the scope of the new rule." [His lordship continued reading to the end of p. 177, and continued:]

Pausing at the introductory paragraphs, I do not propose to embark upon a consideration of the origin or development of the rule or rules against perpetuities about which there has been, and will continue to be, grave differences of opinion amongst real property lawyers. I find a clear and well recognized rule certainly applicable to all ordinary methods of disposition in vogue since the Statute of Uses; and what I have to do is to see whether or not that rule applies to prevent the effectuating by means of a common law condition of that which is forbidden by the law in the case of all other methods of disposition of property.

Mr. Challis is right, of course, when he says that when any part of the common law requires amendment the Legislature alone is competent to apply the remedy. But the courts have first to find what is the common law—that is, the principle embodied in what is called the common law, and to apply it to new and ever-varying states of facts and circumstances. The common law is to be sought in the expositions and declarations of it in the decisions of the courts and in the writings of lawyers. New statutes and the course of social development give rise to new aspects and conditions which have to be regarded in applying the old principles. The policy of the law against the creation of perpetuities was certainly asserted at a very early date, as was also the policy of discountenancing restraints upon alienation. I may give, by way of illustration, what was said by Lord Macnaghten in the case of Nordenfelt v. Maxim, &c., Co., [1894] A. C. 534, pp. 564-5: "In the age of Queen Elizabeth all restraints of trade, whatever they were, general or partial, were thought to be contrary to public policy and therefore void: Colgate v. Bacheler, Cro. Eliz. 872. In time, however, it was found that a rule so rigid and far-reaching must seriously interfere with transactions of every-day occurrence. Traders could hardly venture to let their shops out of their own hands; the purchaser of a business was at the mercy of the seller; every apprentice was a possible rival. So the rule was relaxed. It was relaxed as far as the exigencies of trade for the time being required, gradually and not without difficulty, until it came to be recognized that all partial restraints might be good, though it was thought that general restraints — that is, restraints of general application extending throughout the kingdom, must be bad. Why was the relaxation proposed to be thus limited? Simply because nobody imagined in those days that a general restraint could be reasonable, not because there was any inherent or essential difference between the two cases."

"When the restraint is general," says Lord Macclesfield in Mitchel v. Reynolds, 1 P. Wms. 181, "not to exercise a trade throughout the kingdom," the restraint "must be void, being of no benefit to either party and only oppressive, as shall be shown by-and-by." Later on he gives his reason: "What does it signify," he says, "to a tradesman in London what another does at Newcastle; and surely it would be unreasonable to fix a certain loss on one side without any benefit to the other." "Any deed," says Best, L.C.J., in Horner v. Ashford, 3 Bing. 322, at p. 326, "by which a person binds himself not to employ his talents, his industry, or his capital in any useful undertaking in the kingdom would be void, because no good reason can be imagined for any person's imposing such a restraint on himself."

Might it not be said from Mr. Challis's point of view that if it was the common law in the reign of Elizabeth that all restraints of trade, general or partial, were void, that they must be still void? The answer would appear to be that the principle was that restraints of trade were contrary to public policy; and that is the principle still; it is the application of it that has varied. An illustration of a void condition because impossible of fulfilment is given in Sheppard's Touchstone, p. 133—viz., that if one give or grant land on condition that a man shall go to Rome in three days. That which was impossible at the time when the illustration was given has now become possible owing to a change of circumstances, and though the old principle stands, the application of it has changed. In reference to the suggestion as to devising a novel restriction to be applied to novel forms of limiting, &c., I may point out that in the present case the object of the grantor could not have been obtained without adopting a novel form of assurance. He wanted to vest the estate in himself jointly with others. It is right here to mention that the present case being one of a gift for charitable purposes that the question could not have arisen had the deed been dated ten years later than it was, having regard to the provisions of the Mortmain Act (9 Geo. 2, c. 36), which provides that the gift or conveyance must be without any power of revocation, reservation, trust, condition, limitation, clause, or agreement whatsoever for the benefit of the donor or grantor or of any person or persons claiming under him. I think that some of Mr. Challis's criticisms of the dicta of the late Master of the Rolls in the case of In re Macleay, 23 W. R. 718, L. R. 20 Eq. 186, are not quite reasonable. The use of the expression "tenant in tail" at p. 190 in the L. R. 20 Eq. is an obvious slip either verbal or clerical for "tenant in fee," as is clear by reference to p. 187, where the learned judge says: "Looking at the will I have no doubt there is a condition annexed to the gift in fee," and this is followed in the next sentence by the remark, "First of all it is to be observed that the condition good or bad is confined within legal limits; it is applicable merely to the devisee himself, and therefore is not void on any ground of remoteness."

This being so, I find in the passage I have read, coupled with the passage at p. 190, referred to by Mr. Challis, a clear expression of opinion by Sir G. Jessel that had the condition in question not been limited in point of time, as it was, it would have been void for remoteness.

The decision of North, J., in Dunn v. Flood, 32 W. R. 197, 25 Ch. D. 629, at p. 632, as to the remoteness of the power of re-entry in that case was obiter in the sense that it was unnecessary for the purposes of the decision to determine it—although it was a question raised and argued—but I think that Mr. Challis, in saying that nothing was said on appeal to support the obiter dictum, appears to have overlooked the observation of Baggallay, L.J., 33 W. R. 315, 28 Ch. D. 586, see p. 592, where he says "This right of re-entry was held by North, J., to be void for remoteness. We have not heard the counsel for the defendant, but as at present advised I concur with North, J., that this right could not be enforced, being void under the rule against perpetuities."

I must also notice that Mr. Challis makes no reference whatever to the opinions of Sanders and Lewis which I have quoted. The result appears to be that there are expressions of opinion by Sir George Jessel, North, J., and Baggallay, L.J., and the opinion of two great real property lawyers and text-writers in favour of the invalidity of such a condition as the one in question, besides the opinions of two modern text-writers; while on the other hand there is nothing definite except the opinion and reasoning of the late Mr. Challis in his work on real property.

I am of opinion that the condition in question is obnoxious to the rule against perpetuities. But this still leaves another question for consideration—viz., is the title one which ought to be forced upon a purchaser? The rule which should be followed in such cases is stated by Chitty, J., in the case of Thackwray and Young's Contract, 37 W. R. 74, 40 Ch. D. 34 (pp. 38, 39, 40). I have not, in the present case, any decisions or dicta of judges to lead me to a contrary conclusion to that to which I have come, and the question is one of general law, upon which I have the dicta of eminent judges and opinions of text-writers of authority which I consider justify the view I have expressed.

At the same time the point is one of some obscurity and difficulty, and one which cannot be said to have been the subject of exact judicial decision. Moreover, regard must be had to the fact that the person claiming to be heir-at-law of Thos. Hollis, sen., has given a notice which must be taken to be notice of his intention to claim the benefit of the breach of condition if the condition is broken, and he has declined to argue or to be bound by the present decision, so that the purchaser, if he completes, will be in danger of immediate litigation—an element which must have very great weight in considering whether or not the title ought to be forced on a purchaser: Pegler v. White, 12 W. R. 455, 33 Beav. 403; Fry's Specific Performance (3rd ed.), p. 408.

Upon a consideration of all the circumstances I do not think that I ought to say that such a title has been shown as ought to be forced upon the purchaser if he is unwilling to complete.

Declaration accordingly.

Solicitors, Johnson, Weatherall, & Sturt, for Burdekin & Co., Sheffield; R. Sutton Clarke; Torr & Co., for Anthony & Imlach, Liverpool.

Chan. Div. } Wright, J. } June 14, 15.

In re BANGOR AND NORTH WALES MUTUAL PROTECTION ASSOCIATION (LIMITED). (a.)

Company—Winding up—Company limited by guarantee—Contributories—Debts.

A member of a mutual marine insurance company limited by guarantee is not liable to be placed on the list of contributories, in the event of the company being wound up, for a larger amount than is prescribed by the company's memorandum of association. He may be a debtor to the company or to the other members of it for losses, but, though he may be sued in respect of such losses, he cannot be made a contributory in the winding up in respect of them.

The applicant, J. Baird, had been a member of the association which was now being wound up, but had withdrawn in 1893.

The association had been incorporated in December, 1891, as a company limited by guarantee, and not having a capital divided into shares. The principal object of the company was the mutual insurance of ships belonging to members.

The memorandum of association contained the following clause:

"Every member of the company undertakes to contribute to the assets of the company in the event of the same being wound up during the time that he is a member, or within one year afterwards, for payment of the debts and liabilities of the company contracted before the time at which he ceases to be a member, and the costs, charges, and expenses of winding up the same, and for the adjustment of the rights of the contributories amongst themselves, such amount as may be required, not exceeding £1 per cent. on the value of his tonnage indemnified in the association, at £15 per ton."

The articles of association which are material were as follows:

Art. 4.—"Every person shall be deemed to have agreed to become a member of the association who insures any ship or share in a ship in pursuance of the regulations hereinafter contained."

Art. 11.—"The admission of a ship shall be deemed to have been effected and the member's right to insurance and liability to contribute shall begin at 12 o'clock at noon on the day of the date of its entry on the register; and such insurance and liability shall thenceforth continue without intermission until terminated in the manner hereinafter named."

(a.) Reported by C. W. MEAD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Art. 13.—"A member may withdraw his ship wholly or in part by giving not less than thirty days' written notice of his desire to withdraw on the 31st of December following, and, if such notice be given, this insurance and the liability to contribute to future claims shall cease on the expiration of such notice and the payment of then all unpaid subscriptions and (or) calls."

Art. 14.—"In the event of the total loss of a ship her insurance and liability to contribute shall cease on the owner giving a written notice thereof, and on payment of all unpaid subscriptions and (or) calls."

Arts. 15 to 18 provided for the termination of membership or insurance on bankruptcy, or in certain events by notice from the directors for non-payments of calls. Art. 20 made the insurance mutual, each member insuring the other members in consideration of their insuring him.

Art. 29.—"There shall be paid to the association for each ship on admission an entrance fee of 1s. per cent. on the sum insured, and on or before the 1st of January in every succeeding year the like sum of 1s. per cent."

Art. 30.—" . . . Calls shall be made for the payment of allowed claims and of current expenses at such dates as the directors may direct."

Art. 33.—"If any member neglect or refuse to pay any subscription and (or) call, after demand made in writing (as provided by Art. 32), the member so neglecting or refusing shall be excluded from all benefit in respect of any insurance effected by him, but he shall, notwithstanding such exclusion, remain liable for his contribution of any liability incurred during his membership."

Art. 34.—"Unpaid subscriptions and (or) calls shall bear interest . . . and shall be recoverable, with interest, by action at the suit of the association, although the defaulter may have ceased to be a member of the association."

Art. 77.—"The calls on members for the payment of claims and for the necessary expenses of the association may be made in such manner and at such dates as the board in its discretion deems right; and payment thereof may be enforced by action at the suit of the association in any county court or in any division of the Supreme Court of Judicature."

Another article provided that the secretary was to keep a register of members and ships insured which was to show the name of the member and of the ship insured, the tonnage for which it was insured, and its value at £15 a ton, and if necessary when and how the insurance ceased. The secretary was also authorized to admit members and ships for insurance.

A compulsory winding-up order was made against the company in April, 1897, Baird being placed on the list of contributories on the ground that there were calls due from him in respect of the year 1893, and that by article 13 of the articles of association he continued a member until the payment of such calls.

Baird now applied to have his name removed from the list of contributories.

R Younger, for Baird.—My client is not liable to be placed on the list of contributories under section 38 as he ceased to be a member in 1893, which is more than a year prior to the commencement of the winding up. Even if he is still a member he cannot be placed on the list of contributories with regard to the calls made in 1893, as they are not sums which he is liable to contribute to the assets of the company under section 38.

A. J. Chitty, for the liquidator.—By article 13 the applicant is still a member of the association. To cease to be a member a man must strictly comply with the requirements of the articles of association. In re Marlborough Club Co., 16 W. R. 668, L. R. 5 Eq. 365, is distinguishable, as this is a company limited by guarantee.

He also quoted Maxwell's case, 23 W. R. 646, L. R. 20 Eq. 585; M'Ewan's case, 25 W. R. 857, 6 Ch. D. 447; and Lion Insurance Association v. Tucker, 32 W. R. 546, 12 Q. B. D. 176.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 15.—WRIGHT, J.—On the evidence and admissions in this case it must be taken, for the purpose of this application, that Baird duly withdrew his ships at the end of 1893, and that no subscriptions or calls in respect of 1893 have ever been demanded from him. But, as I understand the matter, I am asked to decide the case on the supposition that there are calls due from him in respect of 1893, the amount of which is, if necessary, to be the subject of an inquiry or action. Even on that supposition, he ceased to be a member at the end of 1893, unless by force of the 13th article of association he continued to be a member until payment of all due subscriptions and calls. The true construction of this article is not easy to determine. Membership seems ordinarily to be constituted by insurance of a ship, which insurance involves a corresponding liability to the other insured owners, but by article 11 the insurance and liability are to continue until terminated "in the manner hereinafter named." These last words apparently refer to articles 13 to 18. Article 13 provides that "a member may withdraw his ship wholly or in part by giving not less than thirty days' written notice of his desire to withdraw on the 31st day of December following, and, if such notice be given, this insurance and the liability to contribute to future claims shall cease on the expiration of such notice and the payment of all then unpaid subscriptions and (or) calls." If this article is to be literally construed, it makes the insurance itself continue until calls in arrear are paid, although the ship has been withdrawn, and this without any further subscription. So, on the similar words in article 14, the insurance of a ship which has been lost or sold would continue in like manner. I think that cannot be the true meaning. The meaning seems to me to be that the insurance and liability are to cease subject to the continuing liability for arrears of subscriptions or calls, which liability is by articles 34 and 77 enforceable by action. It is to be observed that article 13 does not in terms say that membership is to continue, and article 34 shows that a person may have ceased to be a member although he is in arrear with his subscriptions or calls. I think, therefore, that Baird ceased to be a member at the end of 1893, although he may still be liable to actions for unpaid subscriptions or calls. Further, I think that, even assuming Baird to continue to be member, he is not liable as a contributory beyond the amount prescribed by the memorandum of association. Section 38 of the Act of 1862 seems to me too clear to admit of much doubt. The two decisions of Malins, V.C., which were cited for the liquidator—viz., Maxwell's case and M'Ewan's case—turned upon a different Act and related to companies limited by shares. Whether they are authorities on the construction of the Act of 1862 even as to companies limited by shares, it is not necessary to consider. The case of Lion Insurance Association v. Tucker shows that he is liable to be sued for these losses, but it is not there suggested that he can be made a contributory in the winding up in respect of them. He is a debtor to the company or to the other members in respect of them, not, as it seems to me, a contributory in the winding up.

Solicitors, Wynne, Holme, & Wynne, for H. Forsh & Hawkins, Liverpool; Simpson & Co, for Hughes, Pritchard, & Rodway, Bangor.

Q. B. Div.
(Day and Lawrance, JJ.) June 8.

Ex parte FLINN & SONS. (a.)

Licensing Law—Spirits—Sale of spirits without licence—Second conviction—Disqualification to hold licence—Application by owner to carry on business—Justices—Jurisdiction to entertain application—Licensing Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 94), s. 3—Licensing Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 49), s. 15.

A beerhouse-keeper was upon the same day twice convicted under section 3 of the Licensing Act, 1872, of selling spirits without a spirit licence, and upon such second conviction he was disqualified for two years from holding any licence, and by the operation of the section he also, upon such second conviction, forfeited his licence to sell beer. Upon an application being made after the second conviction by the owner of the premises under section 15 of the Licensing Act, 1874, for an authority to carry on the business until the next special sessions,

Held, that the justices had jurisdiction to entertain the application, although made after the second conviction, as the words "for the first time" in section 15 were to be construed as governing the latter part of the section as well as the former, and that the application could be made after the first conviction which caused a personal disqualification or a forfeiture of the licence, which, in the case of selling spirits without a spirit licence, was the second conviction.

Case stated by justices for the borough of Saffron Walden, in the county of Essex.

On the 13th of February, 1899, an information was laid against Walter Peachey, of the Royal Oak beerhouse in Saffron Walden, beerhouse-keeper, for having on the 20th of December, 1898, unlawfully sold by retail intoxicating liquor—to wit, rum—which he was not then licensed to sell by retail, contrary to section 3 of the Licensing Act, 1872.

On the 14th of February, 1899, a second information was laid against Peachey for having on the 14th of January, 1899, unlawfully sold by retail intoxicating liquor—to wit, whisky—which he was not then licensed to sell by retail, contrary to section 3 of the Licensing Act, 1872.

Both these informations were separately heard and determined at the petty sessions for the borough held on the 18th of February, 1899, and the defendant was convicted on the first information and was adjudged on such first conviction to pay the sum of five pounds and costs, and was subsequently convicted on the second information and was adjudged on such second conviction to pay the sum of twenty-five pounds and costs, and ordered to be disqualified for two years from holding any licence for the sale of intoxicating liquor.

By the operation of section 3 of the Licensing Act, 1872, Peachey thereupon forfeited his licence to sell beer.

At the petty sessions held on the 25th of February, 1899, application was made on behalf of the owners of the Royal Oak beerhouse for an authority under section 15 of the Licensing Act, 1874, to carry on until the next special sessions for licensing purposes the business of beersellers, being the same business as had previously to his convictions been carried on by Peachey at the Royal Oak beerhouse, but the justices finding as a fact that prior to such application Peachey had been convicted for the second time of the offence of selling spirits without a spirit licence, held that they had no jurisdiction to hear and determine the application under section 15 of the Licensing Act, 1874, inasmuch as the opening words of that section limit the right to make such applications to cases where a person is convicted for the first time, and that any application for a licence for the premises could only be entertained at the general annual licensing meeting for the borough.

The question of law for the opinion of the court was whether or not on the facts as above stated it was open to the justices to hear and entertain an application on behalf of the owners of the beerhouse, under section 15 of the Licensing Act, 1874, to carry on the same business on the same premises until the then next special sessions.

Section 3 of the Licensing Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 94), provides: "No person shall sell or expose for sale by retail any intoxicating liquor without being duly licensed to sell the same. . . . Any person selling or exposing for sale by retail any intoxicating liquor which he is not licensed to sell by retail . . . shall be subject to the following penalties: (1) For the first offence he shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding fifty pounds, or to imprisonment with or without hard labour for a term not exceeding one month; (2) for the second offence he shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding one hundred pounds, or to imprisonment with or without hard labour for a term not exceeding three months, and he may, by order of the court by which he is tried, be disqualified for any term not exceeding five years from holding any licence for the sale of intoxicating liquors. In addition to any other penalty imposed by this section, any person convicted of a second or any subsequent offence under this section shall, if he be the holder of a licence, forfeit such licence."

Section 15 of the Licensing Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 49), provides: "Where any licensed person is convicted for the first time of any one of the following offences: (1) Making an internal communication between his licensed premises and any unlicensed premises; (2) forging a certificate under the Wine and Beerhouse Acts, 1869 and 1870: (3) selling spirits without a spirit licence; (4) any felony; and in consequence either becomes personally disqualified or has his licence forfeited, there may be made by or on behalf of the owner of the premises an application to a court of summary jurisdiction for authority to carry on the same business on the same premises until the next special sessions for licensing purposes, and a further application to such next special sessions for the grant of a licence in respect of such premises."

Foote, Q.C. (H. O. S. Ellis with him), for the appellants.—The construction placed by the justices upon section 15 of the Licensing Act of 1874 is too narrow. The words of that section are that where a licensed person is convicted "for the first time" of any one of the four offences specified, and "in consequence" of such conviction becomes disqualified or has his licence forfeited, then the owner may make the application under the section. The words "for the first time" are to be read as governing, not only the word "convicted," but also the words "becomes personally disqualified or has his licence forfeited"; so that the owner can apply under the section upon or after the conviction which for the first time causes a forfeiture of the licence or a personal disqualification. It is only upon the happening of the compound event, the conviction and the forfeiture of the licence or disqualification, that the owner's right to apply arises, and the time for the owner to apply is upon the conviction which for the first time causes a forfeiture or a disqualification. There are four offences specified in the section. With regard to three of these offences forfeiture or disqualification arises upon the first conviction, and an application in such cases under the section might require to be made after such first conviction; but with regard to the fourth offence—namely, selling spirits without a spirit licence—under section 3 of the Licensing Act, 1872, it is only upon a second conviction that the licence is forfeited or that a person can be declared disqualified, and in fact it was upon the second conviction that Peachey in this case was so declared disqualified. The owner can therefore, after such second conviction of Peachey, make his application under section 15 for authority to carry on the same business on the same premises until the next sessions. The justices were therefore wrong in holding that they had no jurisdiction under the section to hear and entertain the application.

(a.) Reported by Sir SHERSTON BAKER, Bart., Barrister-at-Law.

The justices did not appear as respondents.

DAY, J.—I think the construction now contended for on behalf of the appellants is the most reasonable construction to be placed upon this difficult section. I think, therefore, that the justices had jurisdiction to hear this application, and the case must be remitted to the justices with the direction that they had jurisdiction to hear and entertain the application of the owners of the premises.

LAWRANCE, J.—I am of the same opinion.

Appeal allowed; case remitted.

Solicitors for the appellants, Thorneycroft & Willis, for Baker & Thorneycroft, Bishop's Stortford.

Q. B. Div. (Darling and Channell, JJ.) } April 18; May 6.

MOSS (Appellant) v. HANCOCK (Respondent). (a.)

Criminal law—Larceny—Restitution and recovery of stolen property—Current coin of the realm—Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), s. 100—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 49), ss. 27 (3), 33 (1).

A current coin of the realm which has not been passed into circulation may be sold as a curiosity, and if such coin has been stolen from its owner by the vendor, and the latter is subsequently convicted of larceny, an order of restitution of the coin to the owner may be made against the purchaser under section 100 of the Larceny Act, 1861.

Semble, that, if the thief has dealt with the coin as current coin and has passed it into circulation, no order of restitution can be made against a bonâ fide receiver, notwithstanding that the coin may be able to be identified.

A. stole a five-pound gold piece, which had never passed into circulation, from B., who had kept it as a curiosity, and changed it with a dealer of curiosities for five sovereigns.

Held, that an order of restitution might be made under section 100 of the Larceny Act, 1861, against the purchaser.

Case stated by justices.

On the 25th of December, 1898, at a court of summary jurisdiction sitting at Hove, in the county of Sussex, Thomas Neale was charged for that he while being a servant in the employ of one Hancock, the respondent, feloniously did steal, take, and carry away one gold five-pound piece the property of his master.

Neale was convicted and sentenced and the justices then made an order of restitution under section 100 of the Larceny Act, 1861, of the gold coin by the appellant Moss to the respondent.

From the facts stated in the special case it appeared that the prisoner was butler in the service of the respondent, to whom the gold coin had been presented by the Goldsmiths' Company in the Jubilee year 1887. The coin, though a current coin of the realm, had never been in circulation, and it was kept by the respondent in a case in a cabinet in his drawing-room. When the prisoner stole the coin he took it to the shop of the appellant, a dealer in new and second-hand clothing and other articles, where he changed it for five sovereigns.

The questions for the court were whether the justices had power to make the order of restitution, whether the appellant was a person aggrieved so as to be entitled to require a case to be stated when neither party to the proceedings did so, and whether the whole question was not one of fact.

By the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), s. 100, "If any person guilty of any such felony or misdemeanour as is mentioned in this Act in stealing, taking, obtaining, extorting, embezzling, converting, or disposing of or knowingly receiving any chattel, money, valuable security, or other property whatsoever, shall be indicted for such offence by or on behalf of the owner of the property or his executor or administrator and convicted thereof, in such case the property shall be restored to the owner or his representatives, and in every case in this section aforesaid the court before whom any person shall be tried for any such felony or misdemeanour shall have power to award from time to time writs of restitution for the said property, or to order the restitution thereof in a summary manner. Provided that if it shall appear before any award or order made that any valuable security shall have been bonâ fide paid or discharged by some person or body corporate liable to the payment thereof, or being a negotiable instrument shall have been bonâ fide taken or received by transfer or delivery by some person or body corporate for a just and valuable consideration without any notice, or without any reasonable cause to suspect that the same had by any felony or misdemeanour been stolen, taken, obtained, extorted, embezzled, converted, or disposed of, in such case the court shall not award or order the restitution of such security."

By the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 49), s. 27, "Where an indictable offence is authorized to be dealt with summarily—

"(3) The conviction for any such offence shall be of the same effect as a conviction for the offence on indictment, and the court may make the like order for the restitution of property as might have been made by the court before whom the person convicted would have been tried if he had been tried on indictment."

Section 33, sub-section 1.—"Any person aggrieved who desires to question a conviction, order, determination, or other proceeding of a court of summary jurisdiction, on the ground that it is erroneous in point of law, or is in excess of jurisdiction, may apply to the court to state a special case setting forth the facts of the case and the grounds on which the proceeding is questioned, and if the court decline to state the case, may apply to the High Court of Justice for an order requiring the case to be stated."

Firminger (E. Bowen Rowlands with him), for the appellant).—The justices had no jurisdiction to make the order of restitution. The "money" referred to in section 100 of the Larceny Act of 1861 is not current coin, but is specific money in a box or bag. The earliest statute on the subject is 21 Hen. 8, c. 11, and under that statute it was held in Holiday v. Hicks

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Cro. Eliz. 638, 661, that restitution could be ordered of money found on the prisoner or money that was in some way ear-marked; but money once passed in circulation could not be the subject of such an order, because there could be no identification: Miller v. Race, 1 Smith's Leading Cases (10th ed.), p. 447. The statute of Hen. 8 was repealed by 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 27, but was re-enacted by section 57 of 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29. Section 100 of the Larceny Act, 1861, now governs the matter. No new right, however, is conferred by that section. The appellant was a person aggrieved within the meaning of section 33 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879.

The following cases were also cited: Lindsay v. Cundy, 24 W. R. 730, 1 Q. B. D. 348; and Clarke v. Shee, Cowp. 197.

Boxall, for the respondent.—The order made by the justices was right. The gold coin, although current coin, had never been passed in circulation. It was kept as a curiosity and sold as such. Even if it had been in circulation it might be ordered to be restored if it could be identified. The word "property" in section 100 of the Larceny Act, 1861, includes money.

The following cases were cited: Reg. v. Horan, 6 Ir. R. C. L. 293; Scattergood v. Sylvester, 15 Q. B. 506; Taylor v. Plumer, 3 M. & S. 562; Rex v. Stanton, 7 C. & P. 431; Bentley v. Vilmont, 36 W. R. 481, 12 App. Cas. 471.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 6.—DARLING, J., read the following judgment: This was a special case stated by justices, and the following facts were stated as proved or agreed. The prisoner, a butler in the service of the respondent, was convicted of having stolen from his master a five-pound gold piece, presented by the Goldsmiths' Company to the respondent in the Jubilee year, 1887, the year of its date. The gold piece had been kept in a cabinet until November, 1898, when it was stolen by the prisoner, and had never been in circulation. The appellant is a dealer in new and secondhand clothes, jewellery, and other articles, and the prisoner changed the gold piece with the appellant's son in the appellant's shop for five sovereigns. Upon the prisoner's conviction the justices found that the five-pound gold piece stolen by the prisoner was the respondent's property, and they made an order for its restitution to the respondent, acting under the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), s. 100, and the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. 49), s. 27, sub-section 3. It was admitted during the argument that the gold pieces of the issue to which this one belonged are, by Royal proclamation, constituted current coin of the realm; and for the appellant it was contended that the order for restitution was therefore wrong. By section 100 of the Larceny Act, 1861, it is provided that, on the prosecution to conviction of a thief the court may order the restitution of the things stolen to the prosecutor, and among other stolen things may order the restitution of money. It was contended before us in this case that, although even after they had been sold by the thief in market overt and so the property in them had passed, stolen goods might still, by virtue of an order under this statute, be revested in the owner from whom they had been stolen, yet no such restitution could be ordered of money, unless it were money in a bag or otherwise "ear-marked," as it was said. For this proposition decisions given in actions for trover and conversion of money were cited such as Holiday v. Hicks, Cro. Eliz. 638, 661. But section 100 of the statute distinctly applies to "money," and long before this it was stated in Hale's Pleas of the Crown, p. 542: "So if money be stolen, and the thief taken, and the money seized, he (that is, the true owner) shall have restitution of the money." Reliance was also placed on the case of Miller v. Race, 1 Burr. 452, 1 Sm. L. C. (10th ed.), p. 447, which was an action of trover upon a bank-note, in which case it was held that the property in such a note passes like cash by delivery. And Lord Mansfield there said: "Now they (bank-notes) are not goods, nor securities, nor documents for debts, nor are so esteemed, but are treated as money, as cash, in the ordinary course and transaction of business, by the general consent of mankind, which gives them the credit and currency of money to all intents and purposes. They are as much money as guineas themselves are, or any other current coin that is used in common payments as money or cash." Further on in his judgment Lord Mansfield said, referring to some expressions attributed to Holt, C.J.: "'Tis a pity that reporters sometimes catch at quaint expressions that may happen to be dropped at the bar or bench, and mistake their meaning. It has been quaintly said that 'the reason why money cannot be followed is because it has no ear-mark'; but this is not true. The true reason is upon account of the currency of it; it cannot be recovered after it has passed in currency. So, in case of money stolen, the true owner cannot recover it after it has been paid away fairly and honestly upon a valuable and bonâ fide consideration; but before money has passed in currency an action may be brought for the money itself." Now, here it is plain that the mere fact that the stolen gold piece was money would not render it unfit for the application to it of an order for restitution. The true question seems to me to be whether by the manner of dealing with it which the thief adopted the gold piece passed in currency. The exchanging of a coin for other coins is not conclusive proof that the exchanging was that of dealing with current coin on both sides. Many coins which yet have not been formally withdrawn from currency have a price far beyond their denominated value by reason of their antiquity or rarity, or for their beauty of design or execution (though this last is perhaps merely to say again by reason of the coins being struck in another age and mint than ours). Money as currency, and not as medals, seems to me to have been well-defined by Mr. Walker in Money, Trade, and Industry (F. A. Walker in Money, Trade, and Industry. p. 4, cited in Encyclopædia Britannica, subtitle "Money") as "that which passes freely from hand to hand throughout the community in final discharge of debts and full payment for commodities, being accepted equally without reference to the character or credit of the person who offers it and without the intention of the person who receives it to consume it or apply it to any other use than in turn to tender it to others in discharge of debts or payment for commodities." Bearing in mind all the foregoing considerations, and applying them to the facts stated for us by the magistrates, I ask myself, Was this gold piece passed on in its character as coin of currency, or was it rather the subject of a sale as an article of vertu? We are permitted to draw inferences from the facts stated to us, and besides it was stated in the course of the argument that this piece was of somewhat greater value than that of its denomination and so was worth more than the five pieces given in exchange for it, though each of those was of a fifth of the nominal value of this gold piece. Upon the facts stated I come to the conclusion that this gold piece never passed in currency, though it was the subject of a sale (as a medal might have been) to a dealer in old or curious things; and that therefore the magistrates acted within their powers in making an order for its restitution.

CHANNELL, J., read the following judgment: I entirely agree with the judgment that has just been delivered, but as I have prepared a judgment of my own, I think it well to deliver it.

In this case, stated by magistrates, an appellant appeals against an order made under section 100 of the Larceny Act ordering him to restore to the prosecutor a five-pound gold piece stolen from him by a thief who has been convicted. The magistrates suggest a doubt whether they have power to state a case, but I think that there is no foundation for this doubt. The magistrates next suggest that the whole question is one of fact. They leave us, however, in some doubt as to what they mean to find. In one view it is a question of fact, in another one of law. They state certain facts, but they do not state what inference they draw from them. That being so, we have power under the Rules of Court to draw any inferences which the magistrates might have drawn. The facts have been already fully stated, and I think the proper inference to be drawn from those facts is that the thief did not pass the coin as current money, but sold it for £5. It is true that, by Royal proclamation issued under the Acts of Parliament relating to the coinage, this piece is made current coin of the realm, and might have been used in payment of a debt or otherwise as money; but though it might be so used, it might also be dealt with as if it were a medal, or ancient coin, or other curiosity. I think it was offered to the appellant because he dealt in curiosities, and was taken by him as such.

It is also doubtful whether the magistrates meant to find the transaction bonâ fide. Without meaning to suggest that the appellant's son could be found guilty of receiving the coin knowing it to be stolen, I still think the circumstances were such that the magistrates might well find that it was not taken bonâ fide, so that, if it had been a bill of exchange or other negotiable instrument no better title would have been taken than the thief had. If that was the view of the magistrates, they would be right in considering the question one of fact; and if it was not their view, much that they state in the case is wholly immaterial. Under these circumstances we ought to draw the inference ourselves, and upon that inference I think the order of the magistrates a good one.

If the coin had been dealt with and transferred as current coin of the realm, as, for instance, in payment for goods purchased or in satisfaction of debt, or bonâ fide changed as money for money of a different denomination, I think a question of law of great difficulty would arise. If that were the case, no doubt the property would have passed to the appellant; but the operation of the statute is to revest in the prosecutor, on conviction of the thief, the property in the thing stolen notwithstanding that the property in it has previously passed effectively to a transferee as by sale in market overt: Horwood v. Smith, [1788] 2 T. R. 750; Scattergood v. Sylvester, 15 Q. B. D. 506. The history of the matter is to be found in 2 Hawkins' Pleas of the Crown, c. 23, ss. 49-57. The mere fact of the property in the coin having passed would not, therefore, prevent the statute operating, and it is curious that in all the statutes, beginning with that of 21 Hen. 8, c. 11, money stolen is placed on the same footing as chattels stolen. Unless, therefore, there is something exceptional in the way in which property in money passes, it would appear that, in all cases where by some accident the particular coin or coins stolen could be identified at the date of the conviction, the person then owning them would lose his property though the money had been taken bonâ fide. But we have to consider the proviso, which was in the statute of Geo. 4 as well as in the present statute, protecting persons who had bonâ fide taken a negotiable instrument. Now, all the considerations which could have induced the Legislature to protect holders of stolen negotiable instruments must equally apply to stolen money taken bonâ fide. In fact, it is because bills of exchange, &c., are like currency that they are negotiable: see Miller v. Race, 1 Sm. L. C. (10th ed.), p. 447. It may be that the Legislature did not think it necessary to protect, by including them in the proviso, persons who had bonâ fide taken stolen money, because in the great majority of cases it would be impossible, in fact, to identify the money, so that only in rare cases would protection be wanted; but that seems hardly satisfactory. It seems to me that the Legislature must have assumed that persons having bonâ fide taken stolen money did not come within the statute. The matter is very doubtful; but, on the whole, I think the explanation may be this: it may be that the true meaning of the saying that money has no ear-mark is that when current coins of the realm have passed bonâ fide from hand to hand as currency and as money they are considered, for all purposes of property in them, not to be identifiable. They become merely so much money in the possession of the person to whom they have passed. If it is a sovereign, then for all purposes of the property twenty shillings or eight half-crowns are the legal equivalent of the sovereign. If the payment to the man has been made in error the right against him is, as a rule, merely to recover so much money, and not the identical coins. A man cannot, as a rule, be convicted of larceny as a bailee of money: Reg. v. Hassall, 9 W. R. 708, 30 L. J. M. C. 173. Of course, this view in no way prevents a servant or agent being liable to hand over identical coins received to his master. The point only arises upon the passing or the coins from one person to another as money. The doctrine that money has no ear-mark, whatever it means, is undoubtably a doctrine of our law. Lord Mansfield in Miller v. Race, 1 Sm. L. C. (10th ed.), p. 447, criticized the expression, not as being incorrect, but as not being the true reason why the property in money passed on transfer independently of the title of the transferor. The doctrine is discussed and explained both in Taylor v. Plumer, 3 M. & S. 562, and in the judgments of Sir George Jessel and Thesiger, L.J., in In re Hallet's Estate, 28 W. R. 732, 13 Ch. D. 696. I think the view which I have suggested as to money, on its being dealt with and passed as money bonâ fide, being treated in law as having lost its identity, and being merely so much money in the hands of the person who took it, is really consistent with all the cases, if not with all the dicta. If it is correct, it makes the 100th section of the Larceny Act, 1861, work as one would expect. I cannot think that if a thief steals a sovereign and buys some article of small value with it in a shop, and goes away with the article and the change, and then by reason of some accidental circumstance such as the shopkeeper happening to have no other sovereign in his till at the time, the coin can be identified in fact, that upon conviction of the thief the shopkeeper loses his title to the sovereign. I incline to think that the effect of the 100th section of the Larceny Act, so far as money is concerned, is limited to cases where the money stolen or proceeds of it are found on the thief or in the possession of someone taking from him otherwise than by the money passing as currency. When the statute of Hen. 8 was passed its most important effect probably was the same as the effect of an appeal and writ of restitution in the old rocedure: see 2 Hawkins' Pleas of the Crown, . 23, ss. 49-57—namely, to prevent forfeiture to ie Crown or to any lord having right to waifs or trays or goods of felons; but all that is now bsolete.

I have thought it right to discuss the questions of iw which were argued before us; but as I have ready said, the points do not arise upon the iference which I think it right to draw from the icts stated. I think that the appeal must be dis-issed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for appellant, H. Clifton, for Plumbridge, righton.

Solicitors for respondent, Venn & Woodcock, for . A. Goodman, Brighton.

Q. B. Div.
Darling and Channell, JJ.) May 2.

WILLIAMS v. MACDONALD. (a.)

icensing Acts—Traveller—Sale during prohibited hours —Travelling in order to obtain refreshment—Licensing Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 94), s. 25—Licensing Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 49), s. 10—Sunday Closing (Wales) Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 61), s. 4.

A person cannot be convicted under section 25 of the icensing Act, 1872, of falsely representing himself to be traveller and obtaining intoxicating liquor at a railway ation refreshment room during the hours when licensed emises are closed if, at the time he obtains the drink, has taken a ticket and intends to travel by railroad, id does so travel, even though he only took such ticket id travelled so as to be able to obtain such drink.

Case stated by the justices of the peace for the unty of Glamorgan sitting as a court of summary risdiction in the petty sessional division of Aberavon the said county under the Summary Jurisdiction it, 1879.

On the 8th of November, 1898, an information was id by Alexander MacDonald, inspector of police Aberavon aforesaid, the respondent, against lward Williams, of Margam-street, Cymmer, in the id county, the appellant, charging that he on the h of November, 1898, by falsely representing mself to be a traveller unlawfully did obtain from e Rhondda and Swansea Bay Railway Co. at sir refreshment rooms at Cymmer railway station tain intoxicating liquor—to wit, beer—in contra-ntion of the provisions of section 10 of the Licensing t, 1874. The justices convicted the appellant, who w appealed.

The facts of the case as found and stated by the gistrates were as follows: The Rhondda and Swansea y Railway Co. were at all material times duly nsed to sell intoxicating liquor in and upon their reshment rooms at the station at Cymmer aforesaid. On Sunday, the said 6th of November, 1898, the d Edward Williams was in the refreshment rooms the station aforesaid at 9.40 a.m., and he repre-ited that he intended to depart from the said mmer station by railroad to Blaengwynfi, another tion on the Rhondda and Swansea Bay Railway o miles distant from Cymmer station, and asked and obtained from the servant of the company in rge of the said rooms a glass of beer. The said ward Williams then had and produced to the pondent at his request a ticket from the said Cymmer station to the said Blaengwynfi station. He did in fact depart from the said Cymmer station by the train leaving for Blaengwynfi aforesaid at 9.48 a.m.

The place where the said Edward Williams lodged during the night previous to the said 6th of November, 1898, was within three miles of the said refreshment rooms.

The said Edward Williams was not a bonâ fide traveller at the time he entered the said refreshment rooms and obtained the said glass of beer, and obtained his said ticket and entered the train as aforesaid for the purpose of obtaining intoxicating liquor at the said refreshment room before starting.

It was contended on behalf of the said appellant that as he was a person intending to depart by train he was entitled to ask for and to be supplied with the said glass of beer as aforesaid, and that the provisions as to bonâ fide travellers in the said 10th section of the Licensing Act, 1874, did not apply to this case; and also that upon the said facts the said Edward Williams had not committed any offence against the provisions of the said 10th section, and could not be prosecuted or convicted under such section or under section 25 of the Licensing Act, 1872.

The justices were of opinion and determined against the said contentions that inasmuch as the said Edward Williams had lodged within three miles of the said refreshment rooms during the previous night he was not a bonâ fide traveller, and that he obtained his ticket and departed by the train for the purpose as aforesaid of obtaining intoxicating liquor before starting, and that he had no right to ask for and to be supplied with the said beer, and that on the facts stated he was guilty in law of the offence charged.

The question for the opinion of the court was whether the determination and conviction were right in law.

By section 25 of the Licensing Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 94), it is enacted that "Every person who by falsely representing himself to be a traveller or a lodger buys or obtains, or attempts to buy or obtain, at any premises any intoxicating liquor during the period during which such premises are closed in pursuance of this Act shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding five pounds."

By section 10 of the Licensing Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 49), it is enacted that "Nothing in this Act contained as to hours of closing shall preclude the sale at any time at a railway station of intoxicating liquors to persons arriving at or departing from such station by railroad. . . . A person for the purposes of this Act and the principal Act shall not be deemed to be a bonâ fide traveller unless the place where he lodged the preceding night is at least three miles distant from the place where he demands to be supplied with liquor, such distance to be calculated by the nearest public thoroughfare."

By section 4 of the Sunday Closing (Wales) Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 61), it is provided that "Nothing in this Act contained shall preclude the sale at any time at a railway station of intoxicating liquors to persons arriving at or departing from such station by railway."

S. T. Evans, for the appellant.—The magistrates were wrong, and the conviction ought to be quashed. The appellant was a traveller within the meaning of the Act. Section 4 of the Sunday Closing (Wales) Act, 1881, specially exempts railway travellers. The words in this section are disjunctive, "arriving at or departing from such station by railway."

He quoted Fisher v. Howard, 13 W. R. 145, 34 L. J. M. C. 42; Peache v. Colman, 14 W. R. 439, 35 L. J. M. C. 118.

(a) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

J. E. Bankes, for the respondent.—The Sunday Closing (Wales) Act, 1881, enacts that railway station refreshment rooms shall be closed on Sundays except to travellers by railroad. A person who only goes from one station to another for the purpose of obtaining refreshment is not such a traveller as is referred to by the Act. The justices may find as a fact that a man bought a ticket not intending to travel but merely to obtain drink, and such a man would not be a person arriving at or departing from a station by railroad within the section. They are also entitled to consider whether the man is a traveller, and, if so, whether he is a person travelling for other purposes than to obtain drink. But for the appearance of the inspector the appellant might not have departed by train. Apart from this the mere going by a train does not constitute a man a traveller. In Penn v. Alexander, 41 W. R. 392, [1893] 1 Q. B. 522, it was held that persons who had come more than three miles in order to obtain beer at a licensed house were not bonâ fide travellers within the meaning of the Licensing Act of 1874.

DARLING, J.—In this case the appellant went to a railway station in Wales and obtained a ticket during the time that public-houses were closed, which entitled him to travel to a place two miles off on the railway, and the magistrates found that he obtained the ticket and departed by the train. They also found that he obtained his ticket and departed by the train for the purpose of obtaining intoxicating liquor before starting. Upon behalf of the appellant it is contended that he was wrongly convicted, because by section 10 of the Licensing Act, 1894, it is provided that "Nothing in this Act contained as to hours of closing shall preclude the sale at any time at a railway station of intoxicating liquors to persons arriving at or departing from such station by railroad." The appellant was charged under section 25 of the Act of 1872 with falsely representing himself to be a traveller; and if he had falsely represented himself to be a traveller and got drink at a railway station at a time when public-houses ought to be closed, I do not think that anything in section 10 of the Act 1874 would have availed to save him. But he did depart by the train, and the section entitled him to be served with intoxicating liquors if he was arriving at or departing from the station by railway. If he was to be supplied on departing from the station, he must be supplied before departing by the train. If he departed, he certainly travelled by railway; but upon behalf of the respondent it was contended that the appellant was not a real genuine traveller within the meaning of the word "traveller"—I do not use the term "bonâ fide traveller" in this case, because it applies perhaps specially to another branch—so as to exempt him from the operation of section 25 of the Act of 1872. It was contended that the appellant was not a traveller, because he did not intend to depart when he bought the drink; that when he obtained his ticket and departed it was for the purpose of obtaining intoxicating liquor. There is nothing in section 10 of the Act of 1874 enacting that a traveller must be a traveller for a particular purpose—that he must be a traveller engaged on business and not on pleasure. The only pleasure of some people is to drink. In my opinion a person does not cease to be a traveller because he takes a ticket and makes a journey with the object of obtaining drink at the station from which he starts, and probably more at the station at which he arrives, and again at the same station before he returns. If the appellant had taken a ticket, never meaning to travel, and in fact did not travel, he would not have been a traveller nor a person arriving at or departing from a station. The appellant, whatever his motive, did actually depart from the station. Consequently he cannot possibly be said to be a person falsely representing himself to be, what in fact he actually was—namely, a traveller, and the appeal must be allowed, and the conviction quashed.

CHANNELL, J.—I am of the same opinion. Section 10 of the Act of 1874 must be read as saying that persons arriving at or departing from a railway station are, for the purposes of their being supplied at that station, bonâ fide travellers within the meaning of the Act. Read in that way there is no inconsistency. If a person is not, in fact, departing from the station at the time when he is supplied—that is to say, about to depart—he would not be entitled to be served either as a bonâ fide traveller or a traveller in any sense of the word. There would have been no difficulty if the justices had found that when he was being supplied with liquor the appellant did not intend to go by train, and he only afterwards intended to go by train because a police inspector came in. In those circumstances the conviction would have been right; but they have not found that. In my opinion the appellant was a person departing from the station by railway, and therefore entitled to be supplied. The latter part of the section does not appear to me to cause any difficulty, because, if the proprietor of the refreshment rooms at the station had been prosecuted for serving the appellant, and proved that he had represented himself to be departing by the train when he was not, the licence-holder would come within the provision of the latter part of the section, and the proper course to take would be to prosecute the person supplied under the Act of 1872 for falsely pretending that he was departing from the station. Thus construed, the whole section becomes consistent. It is quite true that it is left open to a person to travel to a station two miles off, or any other distance, when his real motive is to get drink; but it is impossible to so draw an Act of Parliament that no person can evade it or keep himself outside it, and that is what the appellant appears to have succeeded in doing. As to this case I entertain no doubt that the conviction ought to be quashed.

Conviction quashed.

Solicitors for the appellants, Sharpe, Parker, & Co., for Cuthbertson & Powell, Neath.

Solicitors for the respondent, Norris, Allen, & Chapman, for Tennant & Jones, Aberavon.

Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. } May 11.
Admiralty. }

"THE CARLOTTA." (a.)

Ship—Collision—Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, art. 4 (a)—Vessel aground—Whether Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea apply in Thames.

Plaintiffs' vessel, while proceeding up the Thames, ground at Limehouse Reach about 3.20 p.m., and remained hard and fast. She sounded the four-blast signal prescribed by article 40 of the Thames Bye-laws to signal that she was out of command. Defendants' vessel, which was following her up the river, disregarded these signals and ran into her stern.

In an action by the plaintiffs to recover damages, the defendants alleged that the plaintiffs' vessel had failed to carry two black balls as prescribed by article 4 (a) of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea in the case of vessels out of command.

(a.) Reported by C. F. JEMMETT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Held, that, assuming without deciding that the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea applied to the River Thames, article 4 (a) of those regulations was not applicable, as it applied only to vessels not under command whilst afloat; and, further, even if that article did apply to vessels aground, the case was governed by article 40 of the Thames Bye-laws.

This was an action of damage instituted on behalf of the owners of the steamship Dundee against the steamship Carlotta to recover the damages arising out of a collision which occurred between the two vessels in Limehouse Reach of the River Thames on the afternoon of the 21st of November, 1898, about 3.25 p.m., when The Dundee whilst on a voyage from Dundee to London with a general cargo and passengers, in charge of a duly qualified pilot and proceeding up Limehouse Reach, took the ground in about mid-channel heading straight up the reach, and remained aground with her engines stopped.

The action was heard on the 27th of April before Barnes, J., assisted by two of the Elder Brethren of the Trinity House, when evidence was given, inter alia, that before the collision, on The Carlotta approaching The Dundee four short blasts in rapid succession had been sounded on the steam whistle of The Dundee, but that she had not exhibited the signals mentioned in the 4th article, sub-section (a), of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea.

Pickford, Q.C., and Head, for the plaintiffs.—Those on board The Dundee obeyed all the material bye-laws of the Thames Conservancy, and made the signals required by article 40 of those bye-laws when they found The Dundee was aground and The Carlotta was approaching. The power given to her Majesty by Order in Council to make rules for preventing collisions at sea under section 418 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, clearly appears from that section and the provisions of section 421 of the same Act not to extend to the making of rules for preventing collisions in waters connected with the sea, and any clause in the Order in Council of the 27th of November, 1896, purporting to give a wider authority to the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea is ultra vires.

They referred to The Franconia, 2 P. D. 8; The Ripon, 33 W. R. 659, 12 P. D. 65; The Monte Rosa, 41 W. R. 304, [1893] P. 23.*

Carver, Q.C., and Stubbs, for the defendants.

Their argument appears from the judgment. In addition to the authorities there cited they referred to The Leverington, 11 P. D. 117, 34 W. R. Dig. 175.

BARNES, J.—It was argued on behalf of the defendants that The Dundee must in any event be held to blame, on the ground that she ought to have complied with article 4 (a) of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea by putting up two black balls to indicate that from an accident she was not under command. There is no doubt that those in charge of The Dundee did not do that, though after the collision they were put up for a short time but hauled down again, as the pilot considered that their exhibition was wrong in the river; at any rate they were not there at the time of the collision, and the defendants say that if the balls had been put up prior to the collision the fact that the vessel was aground would have been more readily noticed. I doubt whether it would have made any difference, for it seems to me on the evidence that those on board The Carlotta were so careless as not to be keeping a proper look-out; still, I must deal with the point, because it was argued on behalf of the defendants that it might have affected the case. This is really a point of law.

On behalf of the plaintiffs it was argued that article 40 of the Thames Bye-Laws was complied with, and that as that article deals with the case of a vessel not under command, the sea rules do not apply, and that therefore article 4 (a) does not apply. On the defendants' side it was contended that the sea rules do apply, and that when they are applied article 4 (a) applies to this particular case, so that a sight signal was required as well as the sound signal by article 40 of the Thames rules.

The first question is whether the sea rules apply. The Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea at present in force—namely, those of 1897, are made under the authority of section 418 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, which provides for the making of "Regulations for the Prevention of Collisions at Sea." The regulations themselves, as drawn, commence with a preliminary statement, "These rules shall be followed by all vessels upon the high seas, and in all waters connected therewith navigable by sea-going vessels." It is also provided by article 30 of those regulations that "Nothing in these rules shall interfere with the operation of a special rule duly made by local authority relative to the navigation of any harbour, river, or inland waters." For reasons which I will give presently, I do not think it is absolutely necessary for me to determine whether the sea rules apply or not, though—assuming that there are either no rules, or no rules which ought reasonably and properly to prevent their application, my present opinion is that they would apply—that is to say, I think that the sea regulations in such circumstances are intended, and ought, to apply to tidal waters connected with the high seas navigable by sea-going vessels. There is no doubt that the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea for the time being in force have from time to time been treated as so applying. For instance, in the cases of The Concordia, L. R. 1 A. & E. 93, 15 W. R. Adm. Dig. 28; The Velocity, 18 W. R. 264, L. R. 3 P. C. 44; and The Cologne and The Ranger, 21 W. R. 273, L. R. 4 P. C. 519, the sea rules as then existing were treated as applying to the Thames.

I felt a little difficulty in understanding why they were assumed to apply, and why the Thames rules were not considered in those cases; but the explanation appears to be that at the time those cases were decided the "steering and sailing" part of the rules of the Thames, as we now have them, had not been framed. As far as I can ascertain, the rules at that time in the Thames were those which were made in the years 1860, 1862, and 1864 as bye-laws under the provisions of the Thames Conservancy Act, 1857. These bye-laws only contain a general rule that vessels are to be navigated in a careful manner, together with certain provisions as to lights. It was not until 1872 that the sailing and steering parts of the rules applicable to the Thames seem first to have been put forward in their present shape. This seems to be the reason why no reference is made in the cases I have mentioned to anything but the sea rules. Then, again, the sea rules have been treated as applying in the Humber in the case of The Germania, Maude & Pollock's Merchant Shipping, vol. 1, p. 606 (note), and in the Clyde in The Ariadne,

* See The C. S. Butler, 23 W. R. 113, L. R. 4 A. & E. 238, at p. 241, and The Fyenoord, Swa. 374, which latter case seems to explain why in some cases where no special local rules for preventing collisions in rivers have been made by lawful authority. The Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea have been applied as binding.

9 Ct. Sess. Cas. 4 ser. 118, where, as far as I can see, there was nothing to prevent their application. If, therefore, this case were to depend upon an absolute decision whether the sea rules applied in the Thames, I should be disposed to hold that they did apply.

But whether the sea rules apply in the Thames or not, it seems to me that article 4 (a) of those rules does not apply to a case like the present. That article is applicable in its terms to "a vessel which from any accident is not under command," and in my opinion those words do not apply to a vessel which is fast aground. They apply to a vessel which is afloat. They might apply to a vessel touching and moving, but I do not think they apply to a vessel which is hard and fast aground. The words I have read lead me to that view, and that view is fortified by the fact that in article 11 of the sea rules there is an express provision for "a vessel aground in or near a fairway" to carry the light or lights mentioned in that article, and the two red lights prescribed by article 4 (a). Article 11 therefore deals with the case of a vessel aground at night, but does not provide for the case of a vessel aground in the daytime. The view I have expressed is further fortified by what is to be found in article 15, sub-section (e), of the same rules—namely, that "a vessel under way, which is unable to get out of the way of an approaching vessel through not being under command or unable to manœuvre as required by these rules, shall . . . at intervals of not more than two minutes, sound three blasts in succession." It is also material to notice that there is, in the present Thames rules (article 30), a provision for "a vessel of 150 feet or upwards aground in or near a fairway" carrying certain anchor lights, which shows that the Thames rules, when dealing with a ship aground require that at night certain lights shall be carried but make no provision with regard to the ship aground in the daytime. The reason suggested to me by the Elder Brethren for this apparent omission is that in the daytime you can see that a ship is aground, and that if you cannot see her by reason of fog or other analogous cause, then she must make some signal—I have not considered exactly what—to warn other vessels of her position. But there is this further consideration, that even if article 4 (a) were to apply to a vessel aground it would not in my opinion apply to a vessel aground in the Thames; because, assuming that the words in that article "vessel which from any accident is not under command," apply to a ship aground, there is an express provision in article 40 of the Thames rules for giving a signal "by four blasts of the steam whistle," and there is no provision for putting up balls in the daytime. It seems to me that if you find an article in the Thames rules which—assuming that article 4 (a) of the sea rules applies to a ship aground—would also apply to a ship in that position, then it is not consistent with the whole scope of those rules, or with some decisions, to require that the provisions in article 40 of the Thames rules should be supplemented by the provisions in the sea rules. In other words, article 30 of the sea rules comes into operation and prevents the interference of the sea rules with the operation of what is a special rule duly made by local authority.

The argument for the defendants was that, assuming article 40 of the Thames rules applied, and required one signal, article 4 (a) of the sea rules added another, to be given at the same time. To my mind this argument is not sound, because I think that where there is a certain rule which deals with the whole scope of the subject, to add parts of provisions of the sea rules would be to interfere with the operation of the Thames rules.

I am strengthened in this view by the decision of Butt, J., in The Ecossaise, Shipping Gazette Weekly Summary, 1885, p. 806. That was a case of collision in the Thames, and in a part of the Thames in which there is no starboard-hand rule as there is in the sea rules, but, according to the argument for the defendants there would be nothing inconsistent, where the Thames rules are silent, in adding to the Thames rules from the sea rules. Butt, J., however, held that they did not apply, for it is obvious, when considering that case, that the starboard-hand rule in that part of the Thames was left out because it is necessary for the navigation of the Thames that there should not be any such rule in that part of the river. To imply such a rule from the sea rules would, therefore, be inconsistent with the general scope of the Thames rules.

On these grounds, in my opinion, the signal which it is contended by the defendants should have been given by The Dundee was not required, and there was no breach by her of the sea rules, even if those rules are to be considered as applying to the Thames.

I only desire to notice one other point urged by the defendants—namely, that under article 38 of the Thames rules The Dundee ought to have rung a bell. That rule does not, in my opinion, apply to this case. In the result, and for the reasons I have already given, I find The Carlotta alone to blame for this collision, and that her owners are liable.

Solicitors for plaintiffs, Cooper & Co.

Solicitors for defendants, Stokes & Stokes.

[THE END.]

THE

WEEKLY REPORTER DIGEST

OF ALL THE

CASES DECIDED IN THE SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE;

WITH

APPEALS TO THE HOUSE OF LORDS AND PRIVY COUNCIL;

FROM THE 24TH OF OCTOBER, 1898, TO THE 12TH OF AUGUST, 1899.

VOL. XLVII.

LONDON: 27, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

1899.

A DIGEST

OF ALL THE

CASES DECIDED IN ENGLAND,

FROM

THE 24TH OF OCTOBER, 1898, TO THE 12TH OF AUGUST, 1899,

AS REPORTED IN

VOL. XLVII. OF THE WEEKLY REPORTER, 1898-99;

AND IN

CERTAIN OTHER LEGAL REPORTS DURING THE SAME PERIOD,

TOGETHER ALSO WITH CERTAIN OTHER CASES REPORTED THEREIN DURING THE SAME PERIOD, BUT DECIDED PREVIOUSLY THERETO.

 In the following Digest the letters H.L. after a case indicate the House of Lords; P.C., the Privy Council; C.A., the Court of Appeal; LUN., Lunacy; CH.D., the Chancery Division; Q.B.D., the Queen's Bench Division; BKCY., the Queen's Bench Division sitting in Bankruptcy; P.D. & AD.D., the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division; C.C.R., the Court for Crown Cases Reserved.

 This Digest will contain at the end thereof a Tabular Index of the Names of all Cases Reported up to the end of August, 1899, as well in this Volume (47) of the WEEKLY REPORTER as in certain other Contemporaneous Reports. In this Digest, figures following the name of a case denote the page in the WEEKLY REPORTER at which it will be found. Where the name of a case has no figures attached, the case is not reported in this Volume of the WEEKLY REPORTER; but the references to the case in other Reports are given in this Digest.

ADMINISTRATION:—

1. Assets—Assignment of policy and investment of money on mortgage—Protection of creditors—Injunction—13 Eliz. c. 5.—The court has jurisdiction before judgment in an administration action to secure, for the benefit of creditors, the proceeds of moneys which have been received under a deed which is impeached as void by virtue of 13 Eliz. c. 5.—MOWAT, RE, KINGSTON COTTON MILL CO. v. MOWAT, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 506; [1898] 1 Ch. 831; 68 L. J. Ch. 390; 80 L. T. 406.

2. Claims against estate of deceased person—Evidence of claimant—Corroboration.—There is no rule that the court must necessarily reject a claim against a deceased person's estate merely because it is supported only by the uncorroborated evidence of the claimant. Such uncorroborated evidence should be examined with care, and even with suspicion, but if in the result it convinces the court that the claim should be allowed, the court should allow the claim.

In re Hodgson, Beckett v. Ramsdale, 31 Ch. D. 183, followed.

In re Finch, Finch v. Finch, 23 Ch. D. 267, dissented from.—RAWLINSON v. SCHOLES, Q.B.D.; 79 L. T. 350.

3. Creditor's action—Right of retainer—Decree for administration—Form of administration bond.—The form of a creditor's administration bond as now used still permits a creditor who has taken out letters of administration to retain his own debt, even out of assets come to his hands after a decree for administration obtained by other creditors.

Nunn v. Barlow (1824), 1 Sim. & St. 588, followed.

Jones v. Evans (1876), 24 W. R. 778, 2 Ch. D. 420, distinguished.—DAVIES v. PARRY, Ch.D. Romer, J., 429; [1899] 1 Ch. 602; 68 L. J. Ch. 346.

4. Executor—Retainer—Money paid into court.—An executor does not lose his right of retainer in respect of money which he has paid into court on his own application.—LANGLEY, RE, JOHNSON v. LANGLEY, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 68 L. J. Ch. 361.

5. Insolvent estate—Priority of specialty debts.—An executor has no power to pay simple contract creditors in full, to the prejudice of specialty creditors.

In re Ormond, 58 L. T. Rep. 24, 36 W. R. Dig. 5, not followed.—HANKEY, RE, CUNLIFFE SMITH v. HANKEY, Ch.D. North, J., 444; [1899] 1 Ch. 541; 68 L. J. Ch. 242; 80 L. T. 47.

6. Locke-King's Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 113).—Republication—Statute of Limitations—Money charged on land—Presumption of payment—Real Property Limitation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 57), s. 8.—A testator made a will in 1845, leaving real estate on trust for sale, and, after directing payment of his debts, directed that the income should be paid to his widow during her life. By a codicil in 1855 the testator specifically devised certain portions of the real estate to his wife for life, with remainder over, and in other respects confirmed his will. The testator's whole property was subject to a mortgage for £3,000, not created by the testator, and also to charges created by him.

The testator died in 1855, and in 1865 the real estate (other than the specifically-devised portion) was sold, and the mortgage debt of £3,000 and the charges paid out of the proceeds. The widow died in 1895. After the sale, and until her death, she received the income of the residue of the proceeds of sale, and also the rents of the unsold specifically-devised real estate.

Held, that the property specifically devised by the codicil was liable to contribute towards payment of the £3,000, as it was not a debt of the testator; and, as the codicil confirmed the will, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113 applied.

But held, that, owing to the delay from 1865 to 1895, the liability was barred by the Statute of Limitations.—ALLEN, RE, BASSET v. ALLEN, Ch.D. North, J., 55; [1898] 2 Ch. 499; 79 L. T. 207.

7. Practice—Creditor of the executors—Executors continuing the business.—Administration of testator's estate ordered in an action by a creditor of the executors who had continued to carry on the testator's business.—SHOREY, RE, SMITH v. SHOREY, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 188; 79 L. T. 349.

8. Practice—Staying proceedings—Laches—Knowledge of proceedings in Chancery—Subsequent delay—Order—Suit dismissed.—The plaintiff, who had been aware of, and had taken steps in, administration proceedings in the Chancery Division in the year 1894, and who also had knowledge at the time that the claim of parties in those proceedings and her own claim (if any) depended upon the legitimacy or illegitimacy of the mother of the intestate, took no steps until 1898 to prosecute her claim as the alleged next-of-kin of the intestate.

On the 21st of April, 1896, an order was made for the balance of the estate to be distributed among the persons who were found, in the Chancery proceedings, to be the next-of-kin, all further proceedings therein were stayed; and on the 7th of June, 1898, the writ in the present action in the Probate Division was issued by the plaintiff claiming, as next-of-kin of the deceased, administration to his estate.

Held, that although it was necessary to determine whether the matter was res judicata, the plaintiff had practically acquiesced in the Chancery proceedings and had been guilty of such laches as to disentitle her to maintain, against those who had shared the estate under the orders in the Chancery proceedings, a suit to compel them to refund their shares; and, that as the only object of the present suit, which was in form to revoke letters of administration granted in 1892 and obtain a grant in her own favour, was to aid her in an attempt to recover the property which had been distributed, this court ought not to assist her attempt to obtain a grant which, if obtained, would be useless to her.

Held, that the suit must be dismissed with costs.—MOHAN v. BROUGHTON, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1899] P. 211; 68 L. J. P. 91.

9. Testamentary expenses—Probate costs—Costs of unsuccessfully opposing probate.—By his will, a testator charged his residuary real and personal estate with the payment of his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses. His personal estate was insufficient for the payment of his debts. An action was brought in the Probate Division by a person claiming to revoke the probate of the will, and to have an earlier will established; but that action was dismissed, and the costs of all parties were directed by the Probate Division to be paid out of the testator's estate.

Held, that the plaintiff's costs of such action were not testamentary expenses within the meaning of the provision in the will, and that they were therefore not payable out of the testator's real estate.—PRINCE, RE, GODWIN v. PRINCE, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 25; [1898] 2 Ch. 225.

See also Bankruptcy, 2, 3; Executor, 2; Married Woman, 4; Trustee, 7.

ADMIRALTY:—

1. County Court—Appeal—Amount of damage under £50—County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 71), ss. 26, 31.—A plaintiff in a collision action, instituted on the admiralty side of the county court, whose damages are less than £50, has no right of appeal from a judgment dismissing the suit on a question of fact although he institutes his action in a sum exceeding £50.—"BURMA," THE (No. 2), P.D. & Ad.D.; 80 L. T. 839.

2. County court—Jurisdiction—Service of summons—Agent—County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 71), s. 21, sub-section 2.—By the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868, s. 21, "Proceedings in an admiralty cause shall be commenced—(2) in the county court having admiralty jurisdiction in the district of which the owner of the vessel or property to which the cause relates, or his agent in England, resides. . . ."

In an action in personam instituted in the City of London Court by the plaintiffs, the owners of a barge damaged by collision with the defendant's steamship within the jurisdiction, the summons described the defendant as "George Smith, of 75, Boswell-street, Glasgow, the owner of the steamship or vessel City of Agra, whose agents in England are Messrs. Montgomerie & Workman, of 36, Gracechurch-street, E.C., within the jurisdiction of this court." The summons was served on a member of the firm of Montgomerie & Workman; but the City of Agra had been lost before the commencement of the action.

Held, by Gorell Barnes, J., that the service of the summons be set aside, as "agent in England" means a person acting for another person in relation to the vessel or property proceeded against at the time the service of the process is effected, and, at that time, the agency had ceased.

The cases of The County of Durham, [1891] P. 1, and Pugsley v. Ropkins, [1892] 2 Q. B. 184, explained.—"CITY OF AGRA," THE, P.D. & Ad. D.; [1898] P. 198; 79 L. T. 307.

3. County Court—Practice—Payment into court with denial of liability—Meaning of word "tender"—Final Order—County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868, s. 26—County Court (Admiralty) Rules, 1892, Ord. 39b, rr. 48-50.—Order 39*b* of the County Court Rules of 1892 contains special rules to be applied in admiralty actions in county courts having admiralty jurisdiction, and certain rules of such Order are headed "Tenders." Of these rules so headed, rule 48 requires a notice of tender to be given, and provides, further, that money may be paid into court with a denial of liability, and that if this is done the form of notice of tender shall be altered accordingly; and rule 49 directs that within forty-eight hours after receipt of such notice of payment into court the adverse party shall file a notice of acceptance or rejection of "the tender," whilst rule 50 is in terms as follows: "A party accepting a tender shall be entitled to his costs of suit, and shall be at liberty to tax and enforce payment of the same without the necessity of an application to the court for the purpose."

Held, that the term "tender" in rules 49 and 50 of the above-mentioned Order referred to and included both a payment into court without denial of liability and a payment into court with a denial of liability.

An order of the judge of a county court having admiralty jurisdiction refusing the taxation of his costs to a party entitled to the benefits given by the latter of these two last-mentioned rules is a final order within section 26 of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868, and is consequently appealable without the permission of the judge of the court appealed from.—"VULCAN," THE, P.D. & Ad.D., 123; [1898] P. 222.

4. Limitation of liability—Practice—Costs—Objection to registrar's report—Discretion of registrar.—In a limitation of liability suit the plaintiffs objected to certain items of the defendants' claim for damage to cargo sustained in consequence of the collision, upon the ground that a large proportion of the damage was owing to the defendants' failure to use due diligence after the collision to minimize the damage. The registrar found that the plaintiffs' objections were well founded, and allowed only a portion of the defendants' claim, and ordered each party to pay their own costs of the reference. From this order the defendants appealed by motion.

Held, confirming the report of the registrar, that though there is a general rule of practice that the plaintiff in a limitation of liability suit must pay the costs, that practice is not invariable; that the registrar has discretion in a proper case to make such order as to costs as he thinks just; and that his order was right.—"RIJNSTROOM," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.; 80 L. T. 422.

5. Limitation of liability—Unregistered steam-tug under fifteen tons burden entitled to limit her liability—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), ss. 2, 3, 72, 503—Meaning of ship "not exceeding fifteen tons burden."—The 2nd section of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, provides: "(1) Every British ship shall, unless exempted from registration, be registered under the Act. (2) If a ship required by this Act to be registered is not registered under this Act, she shall not be recognized as a British ship"; whilst amongst the ships exempted from registration under the Act are, by section 3 of the same Act, "ships not exceeding fifteen tons burden employed solely in navigation on the rivers or coasts of the United Kingdom." By section 503 the owners of a steamship shall not, where without their actual fault or privity any loss or damage is caused to any other vessel by reason of the improper navigation of their steamship, be liable to damages beyond £8 for each ton of the "gross tonnage" of the steamship without deduction on account of engine room, but deducting the space "certified" under the Act to be occupied by seamen.

Held, that the words "tons burthen" in section 3, meant the tonnage measured in accordance with the provisions of the Act and the tonnage regulations thereof.

Held, consequently that a ship, employed solely in navigation on the rivers or coasts of the United Kingdom and not exceeding fifteen tons burthen so ascertained, was properly exempted from registry; and that her owners were entitled to limit their liability under section 503 to £8 per ton of her "gross tonnage."—"BRUNEL," THE, P.D. & Ad.D., 288; [1899] P. 45; 68 L. J. P. 1; 79 L. T. 527.

6. Practice—Action of restraint—Minority owners—Value of shares—Amount of bail.—In an action of restraint the amount of bail to be put in by the defendants is the same proportion of the whole value of the vessel as the number of shares held by the plaintiff bears to the whole number of shares in the vessel.—"CAWDOR," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.; 79 L. T. 357.

ADULTERATION:—

1. Milk—act of stranger—Liability of innocent vendor—Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 63), s. 6; Amendment Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 30), s. 3.—A vendor of milk under a contract, consigned milk to a railway company for carriage to Paddington Station, where it was to be delivered to purchasers. On arrival at that station the milk was found to be adulterated by the addition of 9 per cent. of water. The adulteration took place without the knowledge of the vendor during the railway transit.

Held, that the vendor was liable to be convicted, under section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, for selling, to the prejudice of the purchaser, milk which was not of the nature, substance, and quality demanded; but that the vendor's personal innocence of the adulteration was a fact to be taken into account in mitigation of punishment.—PARKER v. ALDER, Q.B.D., 142; [1899] 1 Q. B. 20; 68 L. J. Q. B. 7; 79 L. T. 381.

2. Food and drugs—Facts within justices' own knowledge—Application of.—Upon the hearing of a charge of adulterating food, the justices are entitled to take into consideration facts within their own knowledge as to whether or not the food has been adulterated.

Reg. v. Field, Ex parte White, 64 L. J. M. C. 158, followed.—SHORTT v. ROBINSON, Q.B.D.; 68 L. J. Q. B. 352; 80 L. T. 261.

ADVANCEMENT.—See Will, 2.

ADVOWSON.—See Charity, 6; Will, 11.

AGENT.—See Contract, 6; Negligence, 1, 2; Principal and Agent.

ANIMAL:—

1. Cruelty to — Killing — Intention to commit cruelty.—An intention to commit cruelty is no part of an offence under section 2 of the Cruelty to Animals Act, 1849. The question is, whether in fact there is cruelty.—DUNCAN v. POPE, Q.B.D.; 80 L. T. 120.

2. Cruelty—Summary conviction—"Cause" act of cruelty—"Knowingly advise and counsel" commission of offence—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 43), s. 5—Cruelty to Animals Act, 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. 92), s. 2.—By section 5 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, a person who shall counsel the commission of any offence which is punishable on summary conviction shall be liable to be proceeded against and convicted, either together with the principal offender or before or after his conviction.

Therefore a person who knowingly counsels the owner of a horse to perpetrate an act of cruelty upon the animal may be convicted upon an information under section 2 of the Cruelty to Animals Act, 1849, for causing to be cruelly ill-treated the horse, although his advice to the owner was the remote, and not the proximate, cause of suffering to the animal, and no proceedings had been instituted against the owner.—BENFORD v. SIMS, Q.B.D., 46; [1898] 2 Q. B. 641.

ARBITRATION:—

1. Damages—Arbitration under Public Health Acts—Diseased meat—Value—Costs of defending prosecution—Duty of arbitrator.—Upon an arbitration under section 308 of the Public Health Act, 1875, all that is to be considered by the arbitrator is whether the person claiming compensation has suffered damage and the amount of such damage.

The costs of successfully defending a prosecution for exposing for sale unsound meat, which meat is the subject of the claim for compensation, cannot be recovered as damages.—DAVIES v. RHONDDA DISTRICT COUNCIL, Q.B.D.; 80 L. T. 696.

2. Ship—Salvage—Authority of master—Lloyd's salvage agreement—Committee of Lloyd's—Staying proceedings—Arbitration Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 49), s. 4.—The master of two steamships signed an agreement known as "Lloyd's salvage agreement," by clause 1 whereof they agreed to perform salvage services to another steamship for a fixed sum, and that in the event of any dispute arising as to the adequacy or otherwise of such sum, the remuneration should be fixed by the Committee of Lloyd's

By another clause (11 (4)) of the agreement it was provided that the Committee of Lloyd's might itself object to the sum named in the salvage agreement.

The owners of the salving steamers instituted salvage actions in the Admiralty Court, whereon the defendants applied to have the actions stayed under section 4 of the Arbitration Act, 1889.

Barnes, J., refused to stay the actions.

Held, by the Court of Appeal (affirming Barnes, J.) that in refusing to stay the actions the learned judge had rightly exercised the discretion given him by section 4 of the Arbitration Act, upon the grounds that there is great doubt whether the master of a vessel has authority to bind his owners to arbitration.

Held also, by Rigby, L.J., that the fact that the Committee of Lloyd's were to be the arbitrators, and that it also had the right to send the matter to arbitration was a good ground for refusing to stay the actions.

Query, whether the master of a vessel has authority to bind the owners to submit to arbitration.—"CITY OF CALCUTTA," THE, C.A.; 79 L. T. 517.

See also Company, 42; Industrial Society; Landlord and Tenant, 3; Limitation Statutes, 1; Local Government, 15; Master and Servant, 3; Railway, 3, 8, 13, 16.

ASSIGNMENT:—

1. Chose in action—Assignment of a debt to accrue arising out of a contract—Agreement to form fund to promote company—Advance by bank on agreement—Notice to subscribers to agreement—Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 25 (6).—By an agreement dated the 1st of June, 1897, the defendant for the consideration therein appearing promised and agreed to pay to one V. the sum of £100 or his nominees or assigns within fourteen days after being called upon so to do.

On the 3rd of June, 1897, V. assigned all his rights and interests under that agreement to the plaintiff bank, and notice of such assignment was given to the defendant. On the 18th of March, 1898, the bank's solicitors gave the defendant notice to pay the bank the £100 within fourteen days.

Held, that the bank were entitled to recover on the authority of Walker v. The Bradford Old Bank, 12 Q. B. D. 511.—MERCANTILE BANK OF LONDON v. EVANS, Q.B.D.; 79 L. T. 496.

2. Debt—Chose in action—Notice—Judicature Act, 1873, s. 25 (6).—Where a notice of assignment of a debt under section 25, sub-section 6, of the Judicature Act, 1873, stated a wrong date for the assignment, Held, that the notice was invalid.—STANLEY v. ENGLISH FIBRES INDUSTRIES, Q.B.D.; 68 L. J. Q. B. 839.

3. Debt — Negotiable instrument — Assignment of consideration — Notice of assignment after negotiation—Duty of debtor.—A debtor who, after giving a negotiable instrument for his debt, receives notice that the debt itself has been assigned, may properly disregard such notice and pay to the assignor who still holds the instrument.—BENCE v. SHEARMAN, C.A., 350; [1898] 2 Ch. 582.

4. Voluntary gift—Banker's deposit receipt—Indorsement and delivery—Donee appointed executor.—The indorsement and delivery of a banker's deposit receipt, with the intention to make a gift, operate as a good equitable assignment of the amount on deposit at the bank; but, if anything be required to complete the gift, the appointment of the donee as executor of the donor perfects the gift.—GRIFFIN, RE, GRIFFIN v. GRIFFIN, Ch.D. Byrne, J.; [1889] 1 Ch. 408; 68 L. J. Ch. 220; 79 L. T. 442.

AUCTIONEER.—See Solicitor, 1.

BAILMENT:—

Loan of chattel—Defect in chattel—Injury to borrower therefrom—Liability of lender to borrower.—In the case of a gratuitous loan of a chattel the lender is not liable to the borrower for injury caused by a defect in the chattel unless he knew of the defect at the time of the loan, and either concealed it from the borrower or was guilty of gross negligence in not informing him of it.

Blakemore v. Bristol and Exeter Railway Co., 6 W. R. 336, 8 E. & B. 1035, and MacCarthy v. Young, 9 W. R. 439, 6 H. & N. 329, approved.—COUGHLIN v. GILLISON, C.A., 113; [1899] 1 Q. B. 145; L. J. Q. B. 147; 79 L. T. 627.

BANKER:—

1. Cheque—Defective title—Payment in good faith and without negligence—Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61), s. 82.—By section 82, where a banker in good faith and without negligence receives payment for a customer of a crossed cheque, and the customer has no title or a defective title, the banker is under no liability to the true owner.

A rate collector who had been in the habit of receiving cheques for rates and cashing them at a branch bank of the defendants, where he was known, but had no account, obtained a cheque from the plaintiffs by falsely pretending that a rate was due; the cheque was drawn to his order and crossed and marked "not negotiable." The cheque was presented by the rate collector at the defendants' branch bank and cashed, and he appropriated the proceeds.

In an action by the plaintiffs against the defendants to recover the cheque or its proceeds it was found as a fact that the defendants received payment in good faith and without negligence, and that the rate collector was a "customer."

Held, that the defendants were protected by section 82 of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882.—GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY CO. v. LONDON AND COUNTY BANKING CO., Q.B.D.; [1899] 2 Q. B. 172.

2. Cheque—Effect of drawee bank certifying cheque—Usage—Effect of crediting customer with amount of cheque deposited.—Unless a specific usage is proved, the only effect of a drawee bank initialling a cheque drawn upon it is to certify that it has funds of the drawer in its hands sufficient to meet its payment.

Held, that the respondent bank, by accepting a deposit of a certified cheque and crediting the depositor with the amount thereof in her account, must be deemed to have accepted it for the purpose of cashing it as the depositor's agent, and could not, in the absence of express agreement to that effect, be deemed to have acquired title to it in consideration of the credit entry, and thus to have gratuitously guaranteed its payment by the drawee bank.—GADEN v. NEWFOUNDLAND SAVINGS BANK, P.C.; [1899] A. C. 281; 60 L. J. P. C. 57; 80 L. T. 329.

3. Trust fund—Account not ear-marked as trust account—Set-off.—Where a company received from the respondents trust moneys paid them to the credit of a separate account between it and the appellant bank, and failed,

Held, in an action by the respondents, that as the bank was not shown to have received the moneys as trust funds, or to have received during the currency of the account notice of their trust character, the bank was entitled to set them off against its own claim against the company in liquidation.—UNION BANK OF AUSTRALIA (LIMITED) v. MURRAY-AYNSLEY, P.C.; [1898] A. C. 693.

See also Limitation Statutes, 4; Railway, 1.

BANKRUPTCY:—

1. Act of bankruptcy—Substantial assignment of whole property for past debt—Trader whose property chiefly consists in implements of his trade—Assignment of implements of his trade rendering him unable to continue trading.—R., a retail trader, within three months of the making of a receiving order against him, assigned to V., a trade creditor, in consideration of a past debt of £174 6s. 6d. and a money payment of £2 13s. 6d., the goodwill of his business, which was of very small value, together with the trade fixtures, three horses and cart and van, and also his household furniture.

At the date of the assignment R. was the owner, in addition to the property comprised in the assignment, of two life policies which produced £46 6s. 3d., and of three leases which were very heavily mortgaged, two of which the trustees disclaimed.

Held, that, as the property of the bankrupt consisted chiefly in the implements of his trade, the assignment which rendered him incapable of carrying on his trade was in substance an assignment of all his property and void as against his trustee.—RAYMENT, RE, TRUSTEE, EX PARTE, Bkcy.; 80 L. T. 807.

2. Administration—Insolvent estate—Executor's right of retainer—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 125.—The executor of an insolvent testator, against whose estate an order for administration in bankruptcy has been made, is entitled to exercise his right of retainer, notwithstanding that, in ignorance of his rights, he has paid over to the official receiver all the assets he has collected, and has put in a proof (afterwards withdrawn) for the amount of the debt due to him.

Judgment of Wright, J., ante 432, affirmed.—RHOADES, RE, OFFICIAL RECEIVER, EX PARTE, C.A., 561; 68 L. J. Q. B. 804; 80 L. T. 742.

3. Administration—Insolvent estate—Execution creditor—Completion of execution—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), ss. 45, 125.—Section 45 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, which disentitles an execution creditor to retain the benefit of his execution against the trustee in bankruptcy of the debtor unless he completes the execution before the date of the receiving order, is not applicable to an administration of the estate of a deceased debtor under section 125.—HASLUCK v. CLARK, C.A., 471; [1899] 1 Q. B. 699; 68 L. J. Q. B. 486; 80 L. T. 454.

4. After-acquired property—Solicitor's bill of costs—Chose in action—Assignee for value—Notice by trustee—Priority—Out of pocket expenses.—An undischarged bankrupt assigned for value the amount of his taxed bill of costs as solicitor for the petitioning creditors of a company in liquidation. His trustee in bankruptcy gave notice, before the assignee, to the liquidator of the company claiming the amount of the taxed bill as part of the after-acquired property of the bankrupt.

Held, that the trustee was entitled to the amount in priority to the assignee.

Mercer v. Vans Colina, [1897] 67 L. J. Q. B. 424, followed.

In such a case the bankrupt's out of pocket expenses will, if properly vouched, be allowed to him out of the amount.—BEALL, RE, THE OFFICIAL RECEIVER, EX PARTE, Bkcy.; [1899] 1 Q. B. 688; 68 L. J. Q. B. 462; 80 L. T. 267.

5. Charging order on dividends in favour of stranger to bankruptcy—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 102—Solicitors Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 127), s. 28.—The court sitting in bankruptcy has no power to make a charging order under the Solicitors Act, 1860, upon dividends payable under the bankruptcy to the client of the solicitor seeking the charging order.—COOK, RE, CRIPPS, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 524; [1899] 1 Q. B. 863; 68 L. J. Q. B. 597; 80 L. T. 495.

6. Contempt of court—Evidence of public examination—Offer of money to bankrupt to suppress.—It is a contempt of court to offer money to a bankrupt to induce him at his public examination to suppress evidence which, although capable of satisfactory explanation, would be liable to misconstruction, and which might damage a limited liability company of which the offerer is a director.—HOOLEY, RE, RUCKER'S CASE, Bkcy.; 79 L. T. 306.

7. Contempt of court—Publication of official receiver's report before presentation to the court—Comment thereon—Limited company.—Comment on the report of the official receiver in bankruptcy before it has been read to the court may amount to contempt of court. The court will not, however, commit except in a case where a real attempt has been made to interfere with the course of justice.

A limited company cannot be committed for contempt of court.—HOOLEY, RE, HOOLEY, EX PARTE (No. 1), Bkcy.; 79 L. T. 706.

8. Costs—Taxation—Retaining fees—Discretion of master—Bankruptcy Rules, 1886 and 1890, r. 353—Scale of Solicitors' Costs General Regulations, rr. 1, 2.—On the taxation in bankruptcy of the bill of costs of a solicitor of the trustee in bankruptcy, the taxing-master has a discretion to allow retainers to counsel; but, unless in very exceptional circumstances, such retainers will not be allowed.—NORDMANN, RE, HASLUCK, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 151.

9. County court—Jurisdiction of county court judge in bankruptcy—Certiorari—Order for arrest of debtor—"Has absconded or is about to abscond"—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), ss. 25, 100, 102 (2)—Bankruptcy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 71), s. 7.—A writ of certiorari does not lie to bring up an order made by a county court judge sitting in bankruptcy.

The effect of section 25 (1) (a) of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, as amended by section 7 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1890, is that an order may be made for the arrest of a debtor if, after a bankruptcy notice or a bankruptcy petition, it appears to the court that there is probable reason for believing that the debtor has absconded before, or has absconded or is about to abscond after, the notice or petition for any of the purposes mentioned in the section.

Decision of the Court of Appeal, ante, p. 68, affirmed.—REG. v. NORTHALLERTON COUNTY COURT JUDGE, H.L.; [1899] A. C. 439.

10. Damages in the Divorce Court—Bankruptcy of co-respondent—Provable debt—Judgment summons—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), s. 33—Bankruptcy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 71), s. 10.—Damages awarded to a petitioner in a divorce suit constitute a debt provable in the bankruptcy of the co-respondent, although no order directing the damages to be paid to the petitioner has been made at the date of the receiving order.—O'GORMAN, RE, BALE, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 543; [1899] 2 Q. B. 62; 68 L. J. Q. B. 650; 80 L. T. 501.

11. Discharge—Bankrupt convicted under Debtors Act—Special reasons for not refusing discharge—Bankruptcy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 71), s. 8 (2)—Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62), ss. 14, 15.—By section 8 (2) of the Bankruptcy Act, 1890, "The court shall refuse the discharge in all cases where the bankrupt has committed any misdemeanour under the Debtors Act, 1869, . . . unless for special reasons the court otherwise determines."

The court has no discretion to grant a discharge in cases falling under the above section, unless there are circumstances in the case upon which special reasons can clearly be founded, and such circumstances should be particularly set forth in the order of discharge. — STEVENS, RE, BOARD OF TRADE, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 61; [1898] 2 Q. B. 495; 79 L. T. 80.

12. Discharge—Transfer from registrar to judge in bankruptcy—Reason—Issues of great importance—Order for prosecution of bankrupt under the Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62).—The fact that a bankrupt's application for his discharge raises issues of great importance is a good and sufficient reason for transferring the hearing of such application from the registrar to the judge sitting in bankruptcy.

The fact that the registrar has been concerned in the making of the order for the prosecution of the bankrupt for offences committed under the Debtors Act, 1869, does not prevent the registrar from determining the bankrupt's application for his discharge on its merits, and does not constitute a sufficient reason for transferring the hearing of such an application to the judge.—HOOLEY, RE, HOOLEY, EX PARTE (No. 2), Bkcy.; 80 L. T. 495.

13. Execution—Sheriff's right to poundage—Goods seized but not sold—Sale stopped by official receiver—Bankruptcy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 71), s. 11, sub-section 1—Order as to fees (31*st August*, 1888) under the Sheriffs Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 55).—A sheriff who has seized goods under a judgment, but has, by notice of a receiving order and a request (under section 11 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1890) to deliver the goods to the official receiver, been prevented from selling, is not entitled to poundage.—THOMAS, RE, SHERIFF OF MIDDLESEX, EX PARTE, C.A., 259; [1899] 1 Q. B. 460; 79 L. T. 356.

14. Execution—"Tools and implements of trade"—Sheriffs Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 127), s. 8—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), ss. 44 (2), 45, 54 (1)—Bankruptcy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 71), s. 11.—Where the goods of a debtor are seized in execution, and bankruptcy supervenes, unless the official receiver requires the sheriff to hand over the goods seized before sale, the bankrupt will only be entitled to retain the tools of his trade, &c., to the value of £5, as provided by the Sheriffs Act, 1845, s. 8, instead of to the value of £20, as provided by the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, s. 44 (2).—DAWSON, RE, DAWSON, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 524; [1899] 2 Q. B. 54; 68 L. J. Q. B. 668; 80 L. T. 498.

15. False and malicious prosecution—Bankruptcy petition—Reasonable or probable cause—Motive—Abuse of remedy sought—Fraud upon court.—A plaintiff or petitioner who institutes and insists in a process before the bankruptcy or any other court, in circumstances which make it an abuse of the remedy sought, or a fraud upon the court, cannot be said to have acted in that proceeding either with reasonable or probable cause. But to constitute an abuse of process or fraud upon the court, mere motive, however reprehensible, will not be sufficient; it must be shown that the remedy would be unsuitable and would enable the persons obtaining it fraudulently to defeat the rights of others.

It is not the duty of a judge to submit any issue of fact to the jury which is not fairly raised by the evidence.

The jurisdiction of the Registrar in Bankruptcy is confined to a discretion to grant or refuse a receiving order. No question as to res judicata arises thereon.

Ex parte Vitoria, 42 W. R. 529, [1894] 2 Q. B. 387, approved.—KING v. HENDERSON, P.C., 157; [1898] A. C. 720; 79 L. T. 37.

16. Fraudulent conveyance by insolvent trader—Sale of business to limited company—Bankruptcy of vendor—Winding up of company—Rights of trustee in bankruptcy and liquidator respectively—13 Eliz. c. 5—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 4, sub-section 1 (b); ss. 43, 44.—Where an insolvent trader, for the purpose of defeating his creditors, transfers his business to a limited company, the transfer is an act of bankruptcy within sub-section 1 (b) of section 4 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883; and if he is made bankrupt on a petition presented within three months after the transfer, the title of his trustee in bankruptcy relates back to the date of the transfer, so as to enable the trustee to avoid the transfer and to claim the property fraudulently transferred to the company, even after a winding-up order has been made.

Salomon v. Salomon & Co. (Limited), 45 W. R. 193, [1897] A. C. 22, distinguished.

Decision of Wright, J. (ante, p. 192), reversed.—HIRTH, RE, THE TRUSTEE, EX PARTE, C.A., 243; [1899] 1 Q. B. 612; 68 L. J. Q. B. 287; 80 L. T. 63.

17. Inland Revenue—Proof for income tax—Inquiry by Court of Bankruptcy into assessment—Income Tax Act, 1845, ss. 52, 111, 113, 118.—The Court of Bankruptcy has no power to inquire into the validity of an assessment by Commissioners of Income Tax.—CALVERT, RE, CALVERT, EX PARTE (No. 1), Bkcy., 523; [1899] 2 Q. B. 145; 68 L. J. Q. B. 761; 80 L. T. 504.

18. Married woman trading separately from her husband in firm name—Non-compliance with bankruptcy notice—Act of bankruptcy—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), s. 1 (5)—R. S. C., ord. 48a, rr. 4, 5, 8, 11.—Where a judgment has been obtained against a married woman trading separately from her husband in the name of a firm, even if in the form prescribed by Scott v. Morley, 36 W. R. 67, 20 Q. B. D. 120, as applicable to married women, she is not liable to be made a bankrupt upon a bankruptcy notice founded on that judgment. The judgment is merely a judgment against her separate estate.—HANDFORD & CO., RE, C.A., 391; [1899] 1 Q. B. 566; 68 L. J. Q. B. 386; 80 L. T. 125.

19.—Payment of dividends to assignee of debts—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), ss. 58, 63; r. 225, form 126.—An assignee of debts in a bankruptcy cannot obtain payment of dividends on such debts from the trustee except by proving in place of the creditors who have assigned, or producing to the trustee written authorities from each of such creditors in accordance with form 126.—FROST, RE, OFFICIAL RECEIVER, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 512; [1899] 2 Q. B. 50; 68 L. J. Q. B. 663; 80 L. T. 496.

20. Practice—Evidence—Examination of bankrupt.—Either party is entitled to elicit from a bankrupt any previous account he has given of a matter, without regard to who calls him.—CUNNINGHAM, RE, OFFICIAL RECEIVER, EX PARTE, Bkcy.; 80 L. T. 503.

21. Practice—Disputed proofs—Motion against creditors to expunge—Service of notice of motion out of the jurisdiction.—Where leave was given a debtor to serve notices of motion to expunge their proofs on creditors, some of whom were out of the jurisdiction, it was directed that the Scotch directors should be served with the notices of motion by registered post, and that the notices of motion on the creditors in Western Australia should be served on the solicitors in London who had lodged their proofs.—CALVERT, RE, CALVERT, EX PARTE (No. 2), P.D. & Ad.D.; 80 L. T. 499.

22. Preference — Trust for creditors — Right in security—Pledge—Private manager.—By trust deed executed July, 1895, S., a farmer, conveyed his whole estate to M., "as trustee and in trust and as my commissioner (but hereinafter called trustee) for the uses, ends, and purposes after specified," "with full power to manage the farm until expiry or renunciation of the lease, to sell the stock, &c., to sue and defend actions, pay rent and wages, and out of the remainder pay the creditors" of S.; "or if the remainder was inadequate, to call for claims and divide the sums." S. was declared bankrupt on the 10th of July, 1896. M. claimed a preferential right to be paid a balance due to him in respect of his actings in the management of the farm. He alleged that at the date of the bankruptcy he held the whole estate in security and for payment of his advances, expenses, and remuneration as trustee, and claimed full payment of his debt. And in virtue of his having paid for the seed and labour of sowing and caring for the crop of 1896, he specially claimed to be preferred to the whole sum arising from the realization of the crops, or such part as would recoup him for his expenses, advances, and remuneration. The trustee rejected M.'s claim so far as it included law expenses after the date of the bankruptcy and other small sums, and under deduction of these sums the trustee admitted M.'s claim to be an ordinary debt, rejecting the debt altogether as a preferable one.

Held, affirming the decision of the Second Division of the Court of Session, (1898) 25 R. 398, that M. had no right to a preferable claim, on the ground that he had never held the bankrupt's estate in security, and that the payments made for seed and labour did not entitle him to a preferable ranking.—MESS v. HAY, H.L. (Sc.); [1899] A. C. 233.

23. Proof—Application to expunge—Claim by the Crown to dividends on the proof of an extinct corporation—Bona vacantia—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), Schedule II., rr. 23, 25.—A corporation was admitted to proof in a bankruptcy, and subsequently became extinct, having been dissolved by order of the court. Some years after such dissolution a fund became available for the payment of further dividends in the bankruptcy.

Held, that the dividends due to such corporation in respect of its proof passed to the Crown as bona vacantia.—HIGGINSON & DEAN, RE, ATTORNEY-GENERAL, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 285; [1899] 1 Q. B. 325; 68 L. J. Q. B. 198; 79 L. T. 673.

24. Proof—Bill of exchange—Secured creditor—Consolidation of debts and securities.—The holder of four dishonoured bills of exchange sent in a proof, in the liquidation of the estate of a firm which had endorsed each bill, for the aggregate amount of the four bills, with noting expenses. The trustee in the liquidation had different rights of indemnity in respect of the four bills. In respect of two of the bills the holder had received more than 20s. in the £ upon his proofs against the various parties to the said bills, but the total amount received by him was considerably less than the aggregate amount claimed in respect of the four bills.

Held (affirming Romer, J., 46 W. R. 627, [1898] 2 Ch. 413), that the holder could not be allowed to retain the surplus beyond the amount due on either of the two overpaid bills, and attribute it to payment of the amounts due on the other bills.—MORRIS, RE, JAMES v. LONDON AND COUNTY BANKING CO., C.A., 324; [1899] 1 Q. B. 485; 68 L. J. Ch. 299; 80 L. T. 37.

25. Proof—Partnership—Loan of money at rate of interest varying with profits of business—Partnership Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 39), ss. 2 (3) (d), 3.—In 1893 a creditor advanced various sums of money to a firm of Bryan & Mason under an agreement to take a share of profits in lieu of interest. In 1895 the firm dissolved partnership, and Mason took over the business and liabilities, entering into a fresh agreement with the creditor to pay five per cent. interest on the money advanced. Mason became bankrupt in 1898, and the creditor proved for the moneys advanced.

Held, that the money must be considered to have been advanced under the agreement of 1893, and not under that of 1895, and that the proof could not be admitted until all the other creditors should have been paid in full.—MASON, RE, BING, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 270; [1899] 1 Q. B. 810; 68 L. J. Q. B. 466; 80 L. T. 92.

26. Proof—Postponement—Sale of goodwill in consideration of an annuity—Partnership Act, 1890, ss. 2 (3) (e), 3.—Where a business had been sold in consideration of the payment of an annuity to the vendor, not expressed to be payable out of the profits of the business,

Held, by the Court of Appeal (reversing Wright, J.), that, upon the bankruptcy of the purchaser, the vendor was entitled to prove in respect of such annuity, and was not, under section 3 of the Partnership Act, 1890, postponed to other creditors. —GIEVE, RE, SHAW, EX PARTE, RE, C.A., 616; 80 L. T. 737.

27. Receiver—Title of official receiver under Bankruptcy Act, 1883—Registration in Middlesex—"Conveyance"—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), ss. 20, 54, 121—Middlesex Registry Act, 1708 (7 Anne, c. 20), s. 1.—An order of adjudication in bankruptcy is not a "conveyance" within the the meaning of the Middlesex Registry Act (7 Anne, c. 20), s. 1.

A debtor entitled to land in Middlesex was adjudged bankrupt, and an order was made under section 121 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, that his estate should be administered in a summary way, so that no appointment of a trustee was made. He never disclosed to the official receiver the fact of his having the land, and he subsequently mortgaged it to a mortgagee who forthwith registered his mortgage.

Held (reversing the decision of Kekewich, J.), that the title of the official receiver was not postponed to that of the mortgagee by reason of the order of adjudication not having been registered. —CALCOTT AND ELVIN'S CONTRACT, RE, C.A.; 46 W. R. 673; [1898] 2 Ch. 460.

28. Receiving order—Order made on judgment summons—No formal order drawn up—Subsequent action against debtor—Staying action—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), ss. 9, 103 (5).—Upon the hearing of a judgment summons under section 5 of the Debtors Act, 1869, Cave, J., in lieu of an order of committal, made a receiving order against the debtor under section 103 (5) of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883. The judge wrote upon the summons "Receiving Order," and signed this with his initials, but no formal order was ever drawn up and nothing further was done.

Held, that a receiving order had been made, within the meaning of section 9 (1) of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, when the order was made by the judge, and that thereafter a creditor could not bring an action against the debtor in respect of a debt provable in bankruptcy.—BLOUNT v. WHITELEY, C.A.; 79 L. T. 635.

29. Release of trustee—Revocation of release by Board of Trade—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 82 (3); r. 309.—By sub-section 3 of section 82 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, the Board of Trade may revoke an order releasing a trustee in bankruptcy "on proof that it was obtained by fraud or by suppression or concealment of any material fact."

Held, that an order of release ought not to be revoked on the ground that it was obtained by "suppression or concealment of any material fact" unless there is such suppression or concealment as has in it some element of fraud.—HARRIS, RE, HASLUCK, EX PARTE, Bkcy, 544; [1899] 2 Q B. 97; 68 L. J. Q. B. 769; 80 L. T. 499.

30. Scheme of arrangement—Debt carrying interest exceeding 5 per cent.—Bankruptcy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 71), s. 23—Construction—Retrospective effect. —The Bankruptcy Act, 1890, was passed upon the 18th of August, 1890, but did not come into operation until the 1st of January, 1891.

Section 23 of that Act provides: "Where a debt has been proved upon a debtor's estate under the principal Act, and such debt includes interest or any pecuniary consideration in lieu of interest, such interest or consideration shall, for the purposes of dividend, be calculated at a rate not exceeding 5 per cent. per annum, without prejudice to the right of a creditor to receive out of the estate any higher rate of interest to which he may be entitled after all the debts proved on the estate have been paid in full."

Held, that the above section was not retrospective in its effect, and did not apply to a scheme of arrangement approved by the court upon the 25th of June, 1890.—ATHLUMNEY, RE, WILSON, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 144; [1898] 2 Q. B. 547, 79 L. T. 303.

31. Sheriff—Execution—Notice to sheriff of landlord's claim for rent—Promise by sheriff to pay landlord—Sale of portion of goods with consent of landlord—Notice to sheriff of receiving order—Completion of sale by sheriff on account of official receiver—No notice to official receiver of landlord's claim—Title of official receiver to whole proceeds of sale—8 Anne, c. 14, s. 1—Bankruptcy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 71), s. 11, sub-section 1.—A sheriff, who had levied on goods under a writ of fieri facias, received notice of the landlord's claim for rent. Before sale he promised to pay the rent, and a portion of the goods were sold with the assent of the landlord. On the following day a bankruptcy petition was presented against the debtor, of which the sheriff had notice. After the making of a receiving order, of which the sheriff also had notice, the sale was completed on account of the official receiver. The official receiver had no notice of the claim for rent.

Held, that the sheriff must account to the official receiver for the whole net proceeds of the sale without deducting the landlord's rent.

The sheriff might have protected himself and the landlord by giving notice as in Cocker v. Musgrove, 9 Q. B. 223, but having obtained the leave of the official receiver to complete the execution on his account, without giving any intimation of the landlord's claim, he could only sell on the terms on which he obtained the official receiver's leave to sell—i.e., on the account of the official receiver.—DRIVER, RE, Bkcy.; 80 L. T. 840.

32. Sheriff—Possession for fifteen months—Act of bankruptcy, when committed—Possession money—Consent of execution creditor and execution debtor—"Costs of execution"—Order of 31st of August, 1888, under Sheriffs Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 55)—Bankruptcy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 71), ss. 1, 11 (2).—Where the sheriff seizes goods and remains in possession for a period greatly exceeding twenty-one days (e.g., fifteen months) there is, under section 1 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1890, one act of bankruptcy, which is committed at the expiration of twenty-one days, but not a continuing act of bankruptcy or a succession of such acts.

In such a case, therefore, if both execution creditor and execution debtor assented to the sheriff retaining possession, he will be entitled, under section 11 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1890, to possession money for the whole time he remained in possession, notwithstanding that the debtor has been made a bankrupt on a petition presented more than three months after the expiration of the twenty-one days. The only cases in which the sheriff would not be so entitled are cases coming within the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, as to reputed ownership and the relation back of the trustee's title, and cases to which the Act 13 Eliz. c. 5 applies.

In re Hurley, 41 W. R. 653, 10 Morrell 120, approved.—BEESTON, RE, BOARD OF TRADE, EX PARTE, C.A., 475; [1899] 1 Q. B. 626; 68 L. J. Q. B. 344; 80 L. T. 66.

33. *Sheriff's fees—Fieri facias—Levy by sheriff on debtor's goods—Receiving order against debtor before sale—Notice by official receiver requiring delivery of the goods—Sheriff's right to poundage—Bankruptcy Act*, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 71), s. 11, sub-section (1) —Sheriffs Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 55)—Order as to fees of August, 1888.—A sheriff in possession of goods under a writ of fieri facias, who before sale has received a notice under the Bankruptcy Act, 1890, s. 11, sub-section 1, that a receiving order has been made against the execution debtor, and also a demand from the official receiver for the delivery of the goods of the debtor in his possession, is not entitled to poundage.—THOMAS, RE, TRUSTEE, THE, EX PARTE, C.A.; 80 L. T. 62.

34. Voluntary settlement—Gift of jewels and money—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 47.—Gifts of personal property made by a bankrupt within two years of his bankruptcy, without restricting the donee's power of alienation, but with intention that the donee shall use or retain the property for an indeterminate time, are voluntary settlements within the meaning of section 47 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, and void as against the trustee in bankruptcy, but without prejudice to any sale or disposition of the property made by the donee before bankruptcy in good faith and without notice of an available act of bankruptcy. But the donee may have to account for the proceeds of any such sale or disposition remaining in his hands at the commencement of the bankruptcy.—TANKARD, RE, OFFICIAL RECEIVER, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 624; [1899] 2 Q. B. 57; 68 L. J. Q. B. 670; 80 L. T. 500.

See also Company, 35, 41; Vendor and Purchaser, 1.

BETTING.—See Gaming, 1-5; Metropolis, 7.

BILL of EXCHANGE:—

1. Acceptance—Indorsement by way of security—Subsequent indorsement by drawers—Incomplete bill—Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61), ss. 55, 56.—The plaintiffs agreed with C., who owed them money, to draw a bill on him, and that C.'s father should indorse it as a surety for its payment. They thereupon drew a bill on C. to their own order, and, without indorsing it, handed it to C., who accepted it and then obtained his father's indorsement. He returned it to the plaintiffs, and they then indorsed it beneath the indorsement of C.'s father. The bill was dishonoured at maturity, and the plaintiffs then sued C.'s father as the indorser.

Held, that he was not liable as indorser under section 55 of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, nor was he liable under section 56, as the bill was not negotiable at the time he wrote his name on it, as it was irregular and incomplete, owing to the plaintiffs not then having indorsed it.

Held, further, that he was not liable as guarantor, since the requirements of the Statute of Frauds had not been complied with.

Steele v. McKinlay, 29 W. R. 17, 5 App. Cas. 754, is still a binding authority, and the principles therein laid down have not been altered by the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882.—JENKINS v. COOMBER, Q.B.D., 48; [1898] 2 Q. B. 168.

2. Oral agreement to renew—Inadmissibility of evidence—Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61), s. 21, sub-section 2 (b); s. 29, sub-section 2.—Evidence of a contemporaneous oral agreement to renew a bill of exchange is inadmissible on the ground that its effect would be to contradict the terms of the written agreement.

Young v. Austen, L. R. 4 C. P. 553, followed.—NEW LONDON CREDIT SYNDICATE (LIMITED) v. NEALE, C.A.; [1898] 2 Q. B. 487; 79 L. T. 323.

See also Banker, 1, 2.

BILL of SALE:—

1. Mortgage—Trade fixtures—Freehold land—Power to sell trade fixtures separately from land—Bills of Sale Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 36).—A mortgage of land, whether by demise or by conveyance of the freehold, if it contain a power to the mortgagee to sell trade fixtures separately from the land, is a bill of sale as to those fixtures.

The principle was established by Ex parte Daglish, In re Wilde, 21 W. R. 893, L. R. 8 Ch. App. 1072, and Ex Parte Barclay, In re Joyce, 22 W. R. 608, L. R. 9 Ch. App. 576, and is not limited to mortgages by demise.—JOHNS v. WARE, Ch.D. Romer, J., 202; [1899] 1 Ch. 359; 68 L. J. Ch. 155; 80 L. T. 112.

2. Validity—Address of grantee—Bills of Sale Act (1878) Amendment Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 43), s. 9, Schedule.—A bill of sale given by way of security for the payment of money is void, under section 9 of the Bills of Sale Act of 1882, if the address of the grantee be omitted. It makes no difference that the grantee is a registered company. —ALTREE v. ALTREE, Q.B.D., 60; [1898] 2 Q. B. 267.

3. Validity—Variation in address of grantors in bill and affidavit—Misdescription.—In a bill of sale the grantors were described as W. D., of 25, B. F.-road; L. D., of 93, B. F.-road; K., of 94, W.-road. In the affidavit the addresses were 23, B. F.-road; 23, B. F.-road; 24, W.-road.

Held, that the bill of sale was void for misdescription.

Murray v. Mackenzie, L. R. 10 C. P. 625, followed. —MARKS v. DERRICK, Q.B.D.; 80 L. T. 60.

BOND.—See Guarantee; Practice, 18; Principal and Surety, 1; Trustee, 6.

BUILDING SOCIETY:—

Society known to be insolvent—Rule passed to enable society to facilitate realization—Rule ultra vires*—Breach of trust—Classes of shareholders—Distribution of assets.*—It is competent for a building society, even when in a state of insolvency, to pass a new rule for the purpose of facilitating the realization of the assets of the society, provided that such rule is bonâ fide passed for such purpose and does not affect the rights of the members of the society inter se in respect of their liability or in respect to the distribution of assets.—SIXTH W. KENT BUILDING SOCIETY v. HILLS, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 647; [1899] 2 Ch. 60; 68 L. J. Ch. 476.

See also Trustee, 8.

BURIAL.—See Ecclesiastical Law, 1.

BYE-LAW.—See Corporation, 1; Local Government, 2, 3.

CANADA, LAW of:—

1. Customs Tariff Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 33), s. 4—R. S. C. (1886) 49 Vict. c. 32, s. 150—Construction—Date of importation of goods.

Held, that by the true construction of the Customs Tariff Act, 1894, s. 4, as amended by the Tariff Act, 1895, which in effect directs that duty be paid upon raw sugar "when such goods are imported into Canada or taken out of warehouse for consumption therein," the date at which duty both attaches thereto and becomes payable is when the goods are landed and delivered to the importer or to his order, or, when they are taken out of warehouse, if instead of being delivered they have been placed in bond.

Section 150 of the Customs Act, 1886, which directs that the precise time of the importation of goods shall be deemed to be the time when "they came within the limits of the port at which they ought to be reported," refers on its true construction to the port at which the goods are to be landed—that is, where the effective report is to be made. Such construction is required in order to place a consistent, rational, and probable meaning on the context and other clauses of the Act.—CANADA SUGAR REFINING CO. v. REG., P.C.; [1898] A. C. 735; 79 L. T. 146.

2. Quebec—Corporation, property of—Liability to taxation—Municipal Code of Quebec, art. 712, sub-section 3—Construction.—By the true construction of art. 712, sub-section 3, of the Municipal Code of Quebec, property belonging to a corporation "for the ends for which they are established, and not possessed solely by them to derive a revenue therefrom," is not taxable.

But held, that a farm belonging to the appellant corporation and worked by them as a farm in order to derive revenue therefrom, is taxable, although not detached from the residue of the corporate property and occasionally used for the above ends.—LE SÉMINAIRE DE QUÉBEC v. LA CORPORATION DE LIMOILOU, P.C.; [1899] A. C. 288; 80 L. T. 331.

3. Railway Committee of Privy Council—Canada Railway Act (51 Vict. c. 29), s. 262, sub-sections 3, 4—Construction.

Held, that under the true construction of the Railway Act (Canada), 51 Vict. c. 29, the power conferred by sub-section 4 of section 262 upon the Railway Committee of the Privy Council to exonerate a railway company during a specified portion of the year from the duty of filling certain spaces specified in sub-section 4, did not apply to the duty imposed by sub-section 3 of filling certain other spaces specified by sub-section 3. Such extension of power was not authorized by the grammatical construction of the sub-sections, nor rendered imperative by the context.—GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY CO. OF CANADA v. WASHINGTON, P.C.; [1899] A. C. 275; 68 L. J. P. C. 37; 80 L. T. 301.

4. Quebec—Railways—British North America Act 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 3), s. 91, sub-section 29, and s. 92, sub-section 10—Municipal Code of Quebec—Powers of provincial legislature—Municipal legislation affecting Dominion Railway.—By the true construction of British North America Act, 1867, s. 91, sub-section 29, and s. 92, sub-section 10, the Dominion Parliament has exclusive right to prescribe regulations for the construction, repair, and alteration of the appellant railway; and the provincial legislature has no power to regulate the structure of a ditch forming part of its authorized works.

But held, that the provisions of the municipal code of Quebec, which prescribe the cleaning of the ditch and the removal of an obstruction which had caused inundation on neighbouring land, are intra vires of the provincial legislature.—CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY CO. v. CORPORATION OF THE PARISH OF NOTRE DAME DE BONSECOURS, P.C.; [1899] A. C. 367; 68 L. J. P. C. 54; 80 L. T. 434.

5. Railway company—Contract by company ultra vires—Effect of consent judgment—Estoppel—Terms on which contract will be set aside—Relief—Parties—Misjoinder.—Where by contract ex facie legal and regular, the appellant company purported to incur liability to the respondent for railway construction in an amount which was in reality calculated to cover the amount of bonus and of price of issued shares payable by agreement between the respondent and all the shareholders of the company irrespective of either actual or estimated cost of construction,

Held, that the contract was ultra vires of the company.

Held, further, that a consent judgment obtained on the contract declaring the respondent's lien on the company's railway and other property, the question of ultra vires not having been raised either in the pleadings or on the facts stated, was of no greater validity than the contract.

In a suit by the company to set aside the contract and judgment, held, that they must be set aside on terms which were consented to of paying to the respondent the balance due to him for construction on a quantum meruit, securing the amount thereof by bonds of the company if and when issued, the whole to be taken by him subject to first and other charges in favour of sub-contractors and banks in advance to them who had acted on the faith of the judgment to which they were not parties without notice of the illegalities of the contract.

The company having joined some of their bondholders and shareholders as co-plaintiffs, raising questions affecting them individually, held, that the action of the court should be confined to issues between the company and the defendants.—GREAT NORTH-WEST CENTRAL RAILWAY v. CHARLEBOIS, P.C.; [1899] A. C. 114; 68 L. J. P. C. 25; 79 L. T. 35.

CHARITY:—

1. Ecclesiastical Charity—"Member of Church of England as such"—Appointment of trustees—Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), ss. 14, 19, 70, 75.

In re PERRY ALMSHOUSES.

The founder of a charity required that the objects of it should be selected from persons who should have (1) regularly attended Divine service at the parish church for a fixed period; (2) been partakers of the Holy Communion; (3) lived a godly, righteous, and sober life, to the glory of God's holy Name; and that the trustees should be members of the Church of England.

Held (affirming Stirling, J., 46 W. R. 360, [1898] 1 Ch. 391), that this was a charity for the members of the Church of England "as such"; and was therefore an ecclesiastical charity within the meaning of section 75 of the Local Government Act, 1894; and that therefore the parish council had no power to appoint new trustees under section 14 of the same Act.

In re ROSS'S CHARITY.

A testatrix charged certain lands with the payment of £3 a year, to be paid on a certain day annually to the churchwardens of A., to be laid out by them in the purchase of clothing to be given to six old and poor widows of the said parish whom they should judge to be the properest objects to receive the same, with preference to those who, not being disabled by infirmity or sickness, were most constant in their attendance on the public services of the Church.

Held (affirming North, J., 46 W. R. 27, [1897] 2 Ch. 397), that this was not an ecclesiastical charity within the meaning of section 75 of the Local Government Act, 1894, and that, therefore, under section 14 (2) of that Act, the power to appoint new trustees was vested in the parish council, and not in the churchwardens.—PERRY ALMSHOUSES, RE; ROSS'S CHARITY, RE, C.A., 197; [1899] 1 Ch. 21; 68 L. J. Ch. 66; 79 L. T. 366.

2. Condition precedent—Perpetuity—Statutes of Mortmain.—A testator, who died in March, 1894, by his will dated in July, 1893, after devising his residuary real estate to trustees upon trust for sale, and to hold the proceeds upon the trusts declared of his residuary personal estate, gave the sum of £10,000 to his trustees upon trust to transfer the same to trustees to be appointed by them, or the trustees for the time being of his will (such appointed trustees to be not less than three or more than six in number), to be held by them upon trust, "as soon as any land shall at any time be given or obtained for the purpose, to employ the same in erecting almshouses" in a certain parish for the deserving poor of that parish, without regard to religious denomination, and in making weekly or other periodical allowances to the inmates of such almshouses; and he empowered the trustees so appointed, in conjunction with the trustees of his will, to make rules for the regulation and maintenance of such almshouses. And, after giving other charitable and general legacies, the testator gave all his residuary personal estate to his trustees upon trust for sale and conversion, and to pay debts and legacies, and hold the residue of the moneys upon trust, to pay or transfer the same to trustees to be nominated and appointed by the trustees of his will, upon trust, "as soon as any land shall at any time be given or obtained for the purpose, to employ the same in erecting and maintaining" a certain orphanage or institution; and the will contained directions for the management and regulation of such institution.

Held, that the language of the will did not constitute a condition precedent to the gifts, but was introduced for the purpose of mere machinery so as to avoid the provisions of the Statutes of Mortmain; and that the principle to be applied to the present case was that explained in Chamberlayne v. Brockett, L. R. 8 Ch. App. 206.

Held, therefore, that, without prejudice to any question, if land could not be obtained, there must be a declaration that the sum of £10,000 and the residue were well given to charities; and that special trustees thereof must be appointed as directed by the will, and liberty given to apply.—GYDE, RE, WARD v. LITTLE, C.A.; 79 L. T. 261.

3. Gift for political and religious purposes.—The vicar of a parish by his will dated in 1897 devised to the vicar for the time being a building used as a village club and reading-room "to be maintained for the furtherance of Conservative principles and religious and mental improvement, and to be kept free from intoxicants and dancing."

Held, a good charitable gift.—SCOWCROFT, RE, ORMROD v. WILKINSON, Ch.D. Stirling, J.; [1898] 2 Ch. 638; 79 L. T. 342.

4. Industrial school—Endowment—Mortgage of property—Petition—Consent of Charity Commissioners—"Cathedral, collegiate, chapter, or other schools"—Words ejusdem generis—Charitable Trusts Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 137), ss. 62, 66.—The proviso at the end of section 62 of the Charitable Trusts Act, 1853, that the "exemption" thereby conferred shall not extend to "any cathedral, collegiate, chapter, or other schools," does not extend to all schools, but only to the schools there mentioned and others of a similar description.

Decision of Stirling, J. (46 W. R. 455, [1898] 1 Ch. 610), affirmed.

Government grants and contributions by school boards and other public bodies to an industrial school are not voluntary contributions within the meaning of section 62.

The trustees of an industrial school which possessed land and buildings occupied by the school, and was maintained partly by voluntary subscriptions and partly by a Government grant and contributions from public bodies, presented a petition asking for the consent of the court to a mortgage of the school lands and buildings.

Held, that the consent of the Charity Commissioners was required to the presentation of the petition and the proposed mortgage, the property to be mortgaged being a permanent endowment.

Whether the Charity Commissioners have jurisdiction over the voluntary subscriptions of a charity which is maintained by voluntary subscriptions and possesses a permanent endowment yielding no income, quære.—STOCKPORT RAGGED AND INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS, RE, C.A., 166; [1898] 2 Ch. 687; 68 L. J. Ch. 41; 79 L. T. 507.

5. Institution for education—Church of England—Beneficiaries to be brought up in a particular religion—Beneficiaries from another country—Deceased Persons Estates Duties Act, 1881 (New Zealand), Exemption Act, 1883—Land and Income Assessment Act, 1891 (New Zealand), Exemption Act, 1892.—A testator, who died in 1894, bequeathed the residue of his estate, both real and personal, to trustees for the purpose of founding and endowing an institution for the maintenance and education of boys who were orphans, or the sons of persons in straitened circumstances, resident in the provincial district of Auckland, or in the province of Ulster, Ireland; and the institution was to be managed by persons of a particular religion, and the inmates were to be brought up and instructed in that religion.

Held to be a charitable devise or bequest, and a "public" institution within the New Zealand Estates Duties Exemption Act, 1883;

Also, as to the land devised, that the institution was "carried on for charitable purposes" within the New Zealand Land and Income Tax Exemption Act, 1892.—DILWORTH v. LAND AND INCOME TAX COMMISSIONERS, P.C., 337; [1899] A. C. 99; 68 L. J. P. C. 1; 79 L. T. 473.

6. Will—Gift to purchase advowsons—General charitable intention—Uncertainty.—A testator gave his pure personalty to special trustees upon trust to invest, and with power to apply the income or any portion of the capital (1) in grants for or towards the purchase of advowsons or presentations; (2) in creating or contributing to the creation, improvement, or endowment of churches, chapels, or schools; or (3) in paying or contributing to the salaries or incomes of rectors, vicars, or incumbents, masters, or teachers, upon certain expressed conditions upholding certain religious doctrines, but not in terms applying to (1).

Held, that there was not any general trust for charity binding the whole fund, and that, as the trustees, having a discretion, were not bound to apply the funds to purposes strictly charitable, and as the other purposes to which, in their discretion, they were stated to be applicable were too indefinite to constitute a trust, the whole gift was bad as a charitable gift and void.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (45 W. R. 610, [1897] 2 Ch. 105) reversed.—HUNTER v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL, H.L., 673; [1899] A. C. 309; 68 L. J. Ch. 449; 80 L. T. 732.

CHEQUE:—

Securities—Sale of a business for all book and other debts and the full benefit of securities for such debts—Debt paid by cheque not cashed until after date of sale—Conditional payment.—The sale of a business in consideration, inter alia, of all book and other debts due to the vendor in connection with the said business, and the full benefit of all securities for such debts, will not pass debts for which the vendor has received cheques prior to the sale and which he cashed subsequent to it, payment by cheque amounting to a conditional payment, and the debt only reviving if the cheque is dishonoured.—HADLEY (FELIX) & CO. v. HADLEY, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 238; [1898] 2 Ch. 680; 79 L. T. 299.

COMMON:—

Commonable rights—Agreement for sale—Action for specific performance—Counterclaim—Finding of jury on trial of issue of fact—Motion for new trial—Evidence—Admissibility—Reputation—Deposition in suit to perpetuate testimony—Survey and report as to manor made under statute.—In an action in the Chancery Division by a statutory committee of commoners for specific performance of an agreement to purchase commonable rights, an order was made directing the trial before a jury in the Queen's Bench Division of the following issue of fact—namely, whether a certain piece of land was common land or subject to any commonable rights either of the commoners of the parish of C., or of the commoners of the parish of L.,

Held, that evidence of reputation was admissible on the trial of such an issue.

Earl Dunraven v. Llewellyn, 19 L. J. Q. B. 388, 392, and Warrick v. Queen's College, Oxford, L. R. 6 Ch. 716, observed upon.

A deposition made in the year 1815, in a suit to perpetuate testimony by a witness examined on commission on behalf of a predecessor in title of the defendants, was admitted in evidence at the trial of this issue as being a statement made by a person vouched by the party on whose behalf the deponent was examined, and consequently an admission by conduct of a predecessor in title of the defendants. This deposition had been sealed up by the examiners, but was now found unsealed.

Held, that the mere fact that the deposition was now found to be unsealed was not evidence of user or adoption by the party on whose behalf the deponent was examined, and that, in the absence of evidence of such user or adoption, the deposition was inadmissible on the ground on which it was admitted.

Richards v. Morgan, 4 B. & S. 641, observed upon.

A survey and report made by a surveyor in 1816, in discharge of a duty imposed upon him by the 8th section of the statute 34 Geo. 3, c. 75, upon the occasion of a sale of Crown lands, and produced out of the proper custody, is admissible in evidence as a public document within the decision in Sturla v. Freccia, 5 App. Cas. 623. Phillips v. Hudson, L. R. 2 Ch. 243, distinguished.—EVANS v. MERTHYR TYDFIL URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL, C.A.; [1899] 1 Ch. 241; 68 L. J. Ch. 175; 79 L. T. 578.

COMPANY:—

1. "Amalgamation" with other company—Sale of assets—Legality of consideration—Meeting—Closure—Refusal to put amendment.—A clause in a company's memorandum of association empowering the company to "amalgamate" with other companies, authorizes a sale to another company, for shares in the purchasing company, of all the selling company's assets, except certain shares already held by it in the purchasing company.

The majority of a general meeting of a company is entitled, after allowing a reasonable hearing to the minority, to pass a resolution closing the debate.

When a general meeting is called for the single purpose of confirming or rejecting a particular resolution, an amendment altering the terms of the resolution is irrelevant, and ought not to be put by the chairman.—WALL v. LONDON AND NORTHERN ASSETS CORPORATION (No. 1), C.A., 219; [1898] 2 Ch. 469; 68 L. J. Ch. 248; 79 L. T. 249.

2. Articles of association—Classes of shareholders—General meetings of each class—Quorum.—The articles of association of a limited company provided that whenever the capital was divided into different classes of shares, the rights of each class might be modified by agreement duly confirmed by resolution passed at a general meeting of that class, the quorum at the meeting being members holding or representing three-fourths of the nominal amount of the issued shares of that class. Another article provided that the quorum at general meetings of the company were to be at least three members present, and holding or representing not less than one-tenth of the issued capital of the company. If the meeting was adjourned, a quorum not being present, the members present at the adjourned meeting should form a quorum for the transaction of the business of such meeting.

Held, that the provisions with regard to the general meetings of the company did not apply to general meetings of classes of shareholders; and therefore, at a meeting of a particular class of shareholders summoned to deal with the rights and privileges of that class, the necessary quorum was members of that class holding or representing three-quarters of the nominal amount of such issue, and not members holding or representing one-tenth of the issue of the company.—HEMANS v. HOTCHKISS ORDNANCE CO., C.A., 276; [1899] 1 Ch. 115; 68 L. J. Ch. 99; 79 L. T. 681.

3. Contract—Consideration for shares other than cash—Registration of contract—Matter of prejudice—"Just and equitable"—Companies Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 26), s. 1.—Before granting relief under the Companies Act, 1898, the court will consider the consideration given for the shares which were issued and the nature of the contract sought to be registered. It lies on the applicant to show that, when entering into the contract which he is applying to register, he acted with due caution and consider-tiousness, and that he did nothing to disentitle him to a relief at the cost of innocent persons.—ROXBURGHE PRESS, RE, SPIERS & BEVAN'S CASE, Ch.D. Wright, J., 281; [1899] 1 Ch. 210; 68 L. J. Ch. 111; 80 L. T. 280.

3. Contract—Filing of memorandum in lieu of contract—Practice—Procedure—Application for relief—Rectifying Register—Motion—Summons—Shareholders, application by some only—Forms of order and memorandum—Companies Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 26), s. 1.—An application under the Companies Act, 1898, s. 1, for leave to file a contract or a memorandum in lieu of a contract, may be made either by motion or summons, but preferably by summons, and if by summons it should be heard in open court and not in chambers, following the better practice on applications to rectify the register of shareholders.

The application, if made by shareholders, may be made by some only, and not necessarily by all, of the shareholders affected.

Where a memorandum in lieu of a contract is approved by the court and ordered to be filed with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies under sub-section 4, it is not necessary to file a copy of the order as well as the memorandum, but the memorandum should state on the face of it that it has been approved by the court and directed to be filed by the order.

Forms of order and memorandum under the Act.—WHITEFRIARS FINANCIAL CO., RE, REEVES & SON (LIMITED), RE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; [1899] 1 Ch. 184; 68 L. J. Ch. 79; 79 L. T. 546.

4. Contract—Shares—Contract to issue fully paid shares in satisfaction of debt—Issue of shares not fully paid—Failure of consideration—Right of shareholder, as assignee of the debt, to prove in winding-up—Interest—3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 29.—Where a company contracts to issue to a creditor a certain number of fully paid shares in satisfaction of a debt due by it to him, and some of the shares are in fact issued as unpaid, there is pro tanto a failure of consideration, and the creditor can, notwithstanding that he has become a member of the company, prove in its winding-up for such part of his debt as is represented by the unpaid shares.

Interest cannot be claimed upon such a debt, except either by contract or by way of damages under section 29 of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42.—RAILWAY TIME TABLES PUBLISHING CO., RE, WELTON'S CASE, C.A., 133; [1899] 1 Ch. 108; 68 L. J. Ch. 50; 79 L. T. 679.

5. Contract — Shares — Fully-paid shares — Consideration—Omission to file sufficient contract—Leave to file contract after commencement of winding-up—Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 131), s. 25—Companies Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 26).—Certain shares in a company had been allotted by it, in pursuance of two agreements, to one S., as fully paid, in consideration of costs, charges, and expenses incurred by him in the promotion of the company. Only one of the agreements had been filed by the company, and that was insufficient to satisfy the requirements of section 25 of the Companies Act, 1867.

The company subsequently went into liquidation, and S. was placed by the liquidator on the list of contributories in respect of the shares.

Upon an application by S. for relief under section 1 of the Companies Act, 1898, Held, that S. was entitled to relief and that the originals of the agreements not being in his possession, copies of them should be stamped and filed, together with an office copy of the order on this application, with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies.—MAYS' METAL SYNDICATE, RE, SMITHSON'S CASE, Ch.D. Wright, J.; 68 L. J. Ch. 46; 79 L. T. 663.

6. Contract—Shares—Issue of shares before contract filed—Memorandum—Motion—Companies Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 26), s. 1, sub-sections 1 and 4.—A company was formed on the reconstruction of another company the shareholders in which took shares credited as partly paid up in the new company.

These shares were issued pursuant to two agreements, but before these agreements were filed with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies the directors allotted a number of the shares. Subsequently the agreements were filed. The company moved for an order that the two filed contracts should operate as if they had been filed at or before the issue of the shares.

Held, that as the contracts were actually on the file, an order could not well be made under sub-section 1 of section 1 of the Companies Act, 1898, that the same contracts should be filed; the case came under sub-section 4 of section 1, and a memorandum must be filed in accordance with that section.—LUCKY GUSS CO., RE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 79 L. T. 722.

7. Contract—Shares—Issue of fully-paid shares—Registered contract—Sufficient statement of consideration—Property purchased described merely by reference to prior contract—Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 131), s. 25.—Where the contract registered under section 25 of the Companies Act, 1867, on the issue of fully paid-up shares merely described (by way of recital of a prior contract entered into between the vendor and a trustee for the company) the property sold, as "certain leasehold messuages, shops, and premises, together with the goodwill of the several businesses carried on by the vendor upon the same, together with the machinery, plant, horses, vans, carts, fixtures, and fittings used in connection with the said several businesses."

Held, that the consideration for the issue of the shares was sufficiently stated.

In re Maynards (Limited), 46 W. R. 346, [1898] 1 Ch. 515, not followed.

Decision of Romer, J. (ante, p. 27), affirmed.—FROST & CO., RE, C.A.; 68 L. J. Ch. 544; 80 L. T. 849.

8. Contract—Shares—Issue of shares at a discount—Companies Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 16)—Companies Clauses Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 118)—Companies Clauses Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 48).—A company governed by the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and the Acts amending it may issue fully paid-up original shares at a sum less than their nominal value in the same manner as new shares can, under the authority of those Acts, be issued.—STATHAM v. BRIGHTON MARINE PALACE AND PIER CO., Ch.D. Romer, J., 185; [1899] 1 Ch. 199; 68 L. J. Ch. 172; 80 L. T. 73.

9. Contract—Shares—Leave to file contract after issue of shares as fully paid—Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 131), s. 25—Companies Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 26).—An order may be made on motion under the Companies Act, 1898, on the application of the parties interested in the shares, with notice to the company; but, semble, that in future cases the court may direct notice to be given of the day for hearing the application, and that anyone desiring to oppose can attend.

Cf. Palmer's Company Law (2nd ed.), p. 379.—NORTHERN CREOSOTING CO., RE, Ch.D. Byrne, J.; 79 L. T. 407.

10. Contract—Shares—Omission to file—"Inadvertence"—Sufficiency—Supplemental contract—Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 131), s. 25—Companies Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 26), s. 1, sub-sections 1, 4.—By a contract in writing dated the 18th of October, 1897, the owner of a business agreed to sell it to a company for a specified sum of money to be paid wholly or partly in cash, shares, or debentures as the directors should determine. Subsequently the directors allotted specified shares to the vendor as fully paid up in respect of a part of the purchase-money, but no written contract to that effect was entered into. The original contract was not filed as required by section 25 of the Companies Act, 1867, the omission to file it being due to the fact that the parties were ignorant of the provisions of the Act. Upon an application by the vendor for an order for the filing of the original contract with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies under the provisions of section 1 of the Companies Act, 1898,

Held, that the omission to file the contract was due to "inadvertence" within the meaning of the Act:

Held, however, that the contract was not sufficient within the meaning of the Act, inasmuch as the determination by the directors as to the mode in which payment was to be made was supplemental to the original contract, and without this determination there was no complete contract:

Held, therefore, that there must be an order that a supplemental contract be entered into, that the supplemental contract be filed with the original contract, and that the entire contract when so filed should operate as if it had been filed at the time of the issuing of the shares.—JACKSON & CO., RE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; [1899] 1 Ch. 348; 68 L. J. Ch. 190; 79 L. T. 662.

11. Contract—Shares—Omission to file contract—Relief—Going concern—Practice.—The judge to whom the companies (winding-up) business is assigned has jurisdiction to hear applications for relief for non-compliance with section 25 of the Companies Act, 1867, under the Companies Act, 1898, in the case of companies where no winding-up order has been made; but it is more convenient that they should be disposed of by the other judges of the Chancery Division exercising their ordinary Chancery jurisdiction.—CONCESSIONS ACQUISITION SYNDICATE, RE, Ch.D. Wright, J.; 79 L. T. 666.

12. Contract—Shares—Paid-up shares—Payment—Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 131), s. 25.—The adoption and confirmation by directors of a contract made before the formation of a company by persons purporting to act on behalf of the company does not create any contractual relation between the company and the other party to the contract.

Where a sum is payable by a shareholder in cash to a company it is sufficient to satisfy the requirements of the 25th section of the Companies Act, 1867, if the company agrees with the shareholder to accept, as a set-off and discharge, a like sum then payable by the company to the shareholder.

Spargo's case, 21 W. R. 306, L. R. 8 Ch. App. 407, approved.

Larocque v. Beauchemin, 45 W. R. 639, [1897] A. C. 358, followed.—NORTH SYDNEY INVESTMENT AND TRAMWAY CO. v. HIGGINS, P.C., 481; [1899] A. C. 263; 68 L. J. P. C. 42; 80 L. T. 303.

13. Contract—Shares—Shares issued as fully paid—Filed contract—Consideration—Sufficiency of identification—Estopped—Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 131), s. 25.—It is sufficient to satisfy section 25 of the Companies Act, 1867, if an enforceable contract is filed, which states with reasonable plainness the nature of the consideration which is substituted for cash, although it may not be a complete identification.

A statement in a share certificate that the shares are fully paid is not a representation that a sufficient contract has been filed under section 25 of the Companies Act, 1867, so as to estop the liquidator from denying it.—AFRICAN GOLD CONCESSIONS, &C., CO., RE, MARKHAM AND DARTER'S CASE, Ch.D. Wright, J., 509; [1899] 1 Ch. 414; 68 L. J. Ch. 215; 80 L. T. 282.

14. Contract—Vendor signatory to memorandum for 6,500 shares—Contract for sale to company subsequently filed—Consideration 6,500 shares—Shares earmarked—Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 131), s. 25—Companies Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 26), s. 1, sub-sections 1, 4.—An arrangement was made between J. and others that a company should be formed to take over and work J.'s business of a maltster, and that J. should sell the business and premises to the company for 6,500 fully paid-up £1 shares. On the formation of the company J. signed the memorandum of association for 6,500 shares. Subsequently a contract was drawn up setting out the terms of his sale to the company, and this was duly filed in accordance with section 25 of the Companies Act, 1867. It was considered and intended that the 6,500 shares for which J. signed the memorandum were those issuable to him under the contract. Doubts having arisen as to this, an application was made for an order under section 1 of the Companies Act, 1898, that a sufficient contract might be filed, or, in the alternative, a memorandum specifying the consideration for which the shares were issued.

Held, that, as there was a sufficient contract filed within the meaning of section 25 of the Companies Act, 1867, the court had no power under the Companies Act, 1898, to grant the relief sought.—JARVIS & CO., RE, Ch.D. Romer, J., 186; [1899] 1 Ch. 193; 68 L. J. Ch. 145; 79 L. T. 727.

15. Debenture — Condition — Notice to trustees before commencing action or taking any proceedings—Action to enforce covenant to pay—No notice.—Certain debentures were issued by the defendants by which they acknowledged they were bound to pay the registered holder the sum of £100 and interest, and by which they charged their property with such £100 and interest.

These debentures were issued subject to the conditions indorsed on the back, of which condition 13 was as follows: "The holder hereof shall not commence any action or take any proceedings to enforce the security hereby created, or to procure the appointment of a receiver, or to procure a sale to be ordered of the property subject hereto or for foreclosure . . ." unless he had served a notice on the trustees requiring them to do certain acts, which they had neglected to comply with for six months.

Held, that this condition prevented the registered holder from bringing an action on the covenant to enforce the security, or on the covenant contained in the security, until such notice had been given.—STEWART v. BRITISH AND COLONIAL COLLIERY ASSOCIATION, Q.B.D.; 68 L. J. Q. B. 14; 79 L. T. 494.

16. Debenture payable to bearer—Usage.—The plaintiffs, a limited company, were possessed of certain debentures, issued by an English company in England and payable to bearer, which by reason of the conditions indorsed thereon were not promissory notes. These debentures were kept in a safe, the key of which was entrusted to the plaintiffs' secretary. The secretary, in fraud of the plaintiffs, took the debentures from the safe and pledged them with the defendants for advances made to him by them. The defendants received the debentures in good faith. It was proved that the usage in the mercantile world and on the Stock Exchange for many years had been to treat such debentures as negotiable instruments transferable by mere delivery.

Held, that although the plaintiffs were not estopped by their conduct from denying the defendants' title, yet the defendants were entitled to the debentures as against the plaintiffs on the ground that the debentures were negotiable instruments transferable by delivery.

Crouch v. Crédit Foncier of England, L. R. 8 Q. B. 374, has been in effect overruled by Goodwin v. Robarts, L. R. 10 Ex. 337, 1 App. Cas. 476.—BECHUANALAND EXPLORATION CO v. LONDON TRADING BANK, Q.B.D.; [1898] 2 Q. B. 658; 79 L. T. 270.

17. Debenture—Floating security—Sale of assets of company—Dissentient creditors.—The B. company, which was registered in 1887, was authorized by its memorandum of association to form, or assist in the formation of, any subsidiary company. It had issued debentures for a large amount.

By an agreement dated the 29th of November, 1898, and made between the B. company and the trustee for an intended new company, the B. company agreed to pay all its assets to the new company for £320,000, paid as to £100,000 either in cash or shares at the option of the purchaser, as to £150,000 either in cash or cumulative preference shares at the option of the purchaser, and as to £70,000 in ordinary shares.

The plaintiff, the holder of certain debentures in the B. company, alleged that the rights of the debenture-holders would be destroyed if the arrangement were carried out; that the words of the memorandum of association could not interfere with the rights of secured creditors; and that the right to enforce his security arose when the whole or substantially the whole of the assets were parted with and B. company ceased to be a going concern. He accordingly moved for an interlocutory injunction to restrain the carrying out of the arrangement. It was decided by North, J., [1899] 2 Ch. 130, that the B. company was destroying the substratum of its existence, and therefore the floating charge which the debenture-holders held upon the whole assets attached; and, that an injunction must be granted to restrain the B. company from parting with its property.

The B. company appealed. It appeared that subsequently to the decision of North, J., many of the debenture-holders who had previously dissented had given their assent to the scheme of arrangement.

Held, that if the money owing to the entire number of the still dissentient debenture-holders were brought into court the order of North, J., [1899] 2 Ch. 130, would be discharged.—BORAX CO., RE, FOSTER v. BORAX CO., C.A.; 80 L. T. 637.

18. Debentures—Hypothecation of remittances—Receiver—Priorities.—A limited company owned a railway and also valuable coal mines in a foreign country. In 1888 it issued 5 per cent. debentures on the security of its railway, it being provided by the trust deed securing the same that the security should not, except in the case of suspension of payment by or liquidation of the company, affect its other property.

In 1892 it issued 6 per cent. debentures charged on all its property, and ranking as a first charge on its property other than its railway, in respect of which the 1892 debentures ranked as a second charge after the 1888 debentures, it being provided by the trust deed securing the 1892 debentures that the company, notwithstanding that issue, should be at liberty in the ordinary course of its business, and for the purpose of carrying on the same, to sell, lease, and deal with its property for the time being, but not to create any mortgage or charge on its railway or coal mines in priority to the debentures, and not to sell its undertaking or any substantial part thereof without the concurrence of the trustees for the debenture-holders.

The ordinary course of business was for its foreign agents when they had sufficient cash in hand on account of the company to remit it to the company by bills through its agents in England, who sent the bills to the company's bankers for discounting or for collection on account of the company, and the bankers placed the proceeds to the credit of their account with the company.

In August, 1896, the company being in need of money to pay interest on its 6 per cent. debentures, obtained an advance from its bankers on the security of a letter hypothecating all remittances to be received from its foreign agents; and in September the company, being in need of money to pay off certain debentures, obtained another advance from its bankers on a similar letter of hypothecation.

In March, 1897, the company made default in payment of interest on its debentures, and a debenture-holder's action was brought against it and a receiver appointed on the 27th of March.

On the 18th of March, and again on the 27th of March, the foreign agents having no notice of the appointment of the receiver sent remittances to the company, which were handed to the receiver on the 23rd of April and the 3rd of May respectively.

Held, that the bankers, by virtue of the two letters of hypothecation, were entitled to these remittances in priority to the debenture-holders.—ARAUCO CO., RE, Ch.D. North, J.; 79 L. T. 336.

19. Debenture—Issue of part of series—Issue of writ in debenture-holder's action—Issue of further debentures of series — Time of fixing security — "Ordinary course of business"—Security for solicitor's costs.—In November, 1895, the directors of H. & Co. (Limited) duly resolved upon the issue of a series of debentures as a floating security, and accordingly issued a portion only of the series.

In October, 1897, the interest on the debentures having fallen into arrear, a debenture-holder's action was commenced.

Subsequent to the issue of the writ, but before the appointment of a receiver in this action, further debentures in the same series were issued to the company's solicitor as security for the costs of defending the action.

The question now arose whether the directors had power to issue further debentures of the series after the action had been commenced.

Held, following the judgment of Jessel, M.R., in In re The Colonial Trusts Corporation, Ex parte Bradshaw, 15 Ch. Div. 465, and Lindley, L.J., in The Governments Stock Investment Co. v. The Manila Railway Co. and Others, [1895] 2 Ch. 551, that the security was not fixed till the appointment of a receiver on the making of a winding-up order, and that the debentures had been duly issued.—HUBBARD & Co., RE, Ch.D. Wright, J.; 68 L. J. Ch. 54; 79 L. T. 665.

20. Deceased member—Notices—Service—Calls—Forfeiture—Special resolutions.—Where the articles of association of a limited company define "member" as "a registered holder of any stock or share of the company," and provide that the company may serve notices "upon any member, either personally or by sending the notice prepaid by post addressed to such member at his registered address as appearing in the register of the company," but make no provision as to the service of notices in the case of a deceased member, notices relating to calls, forfeiture, and special resolutions affecting a deceased member's shares, will not be effectively served by being sent by post addressed to such member at his registered address, if the company, at the time of sending the same, know that such member is already dead.

Where one of the articles of association provides that the company "shall have a first and paramount lien for all debts, obligations, and liabilities of any member to or towards the company upon all shares (not being fully paid) held by such member," and there are calls upon partly-paid shares due from a member who is also the only holder of fully-paid shares in the company, the other members cannot by special resolution alter the article by striking out the words "not being fully paid" so as to retrospectively affect, to the prejudice of the non-consenting holder of such fully-paid shares, his rights already existing under the said article.

New Zealand Gold Extraction Co. v. Peacock, [1894] 1 Q. B. 622, and James v. Buena Ventura Nitrate Grounds Syndicate (Limited), 44 W. R. 372, [1896] 1 Ch. 456, considered.—ALLEN v. GOLD REEFS OF WEST AFRICA (LIMITED), Ch. D. Kekewich J., 568; [1899] 2 Ch. 40; 68 L. J. Ch. 540; 80 L. T. 750.

21. Director—Misfeasance—Payment of dividends out of capital—Representations amounting to fraud—Statute of Limitations.—The N. Bank of W. (Limited), which was incorporated in 1873, went into voluntary liquidation in 1893, and the liquidator took out this misfeasance summons to ascertain to what amount, if any, the respondent, J. C. (one of the former directors), was liable (besides other claims) to repay certain sums which had been, as alleged, wrongly paid as dividends out of capital while he was a director.

In the opinion of the court the evidence showed that sufficient provision had not been made in each year for debts which were either known to be bad or likely to turn out so; that the respondent had a general knowledge of the affairs of the bank, and had full means of ascertaining its financial position; and that he had admittedly completely neglected his duties, and had been party to the issue of misleading and fraudulent representations of the state of the bank's business in annual reports to the shareholders by the directors, the truth of which he had taken no steps to ascertain.

Held, that the respondent was liable to pay the sum of £3,700 with interest at 5 per cent., being the amount of the dividends wrongly paid out of capital in the years in which he had joined as director in the false representations, and for which he could therefore not claim the benefit of the Statute of Limitations.—NATIONAL BANK OF WALES, RE, Ch.D. Wright, J.; 79 L. T. 667.

22. Director—Place of profit.—Articles of association provided that the office of director should be vacated by a director "if he accepts or holds any other office or place of profit under the company except that of managing director."

Held, that a director who accepted the trusteeship of a debenture deed given by the company at a salary ceased to be a director.—ASTLEY v. NEW TIVOLI, Ch.D. North, J., 326; [1898] 1 Ch. 151; 68 L. J. Ch. 90; 79 L. T. 541.

23. Director—Qualification—Implied contract to acquire—Remuneration—Apportionment.—The terms of the implied agreement between a director who has accepted office and acted, and the company—viz., on his part to serve the company on the terms of the articles, and on the company's part that he shall receive the remuneration provided by the articles—are cross-contracts, and are not interdependent.

An article providing that the office of a director shall be vacated if he cease to hold the due qualification, does not apply to the case of a qualification never possessed.

An article providing a sum for the remuneration of the board in each year applies to every member of the board, including a de jure director who has not acquired his qualification shares under the articles.

The omission to apply for and obtain such shares from the company is not such a breach of duty as to constitute a defence to any claim for remuneration.

Where the articles provide a sum for the remuneration of the board "in each year," no remuneration can be claimed except for a complete year, and there is no apportionment in respect of an incomplete year.—SALTON v. NEW BEESTON CYCLE Co., Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 462; [1899] 1 Ch. 775; 68 L. J. Ch. 370; 80 L. T. 521.

24. Director—Unauthorized payment of capital to shareholders—Liability of shareholders to refund.—The directors of a company owning ships, having received a sum of money under a policy of insurance of one of the ships which had become a total loss, distributed the money among the shareholders in the company, with their knowledge and consent. Subsequently the company was wound up. An order was made in the winding up, under section 10 of the Companies Act, 1890, declaring that the payments to the shareholders were payments in reduction of the capital of the company, and were unlawful, and the directors were ordered to repay the amount to the liquidator. This order was made without prejudice to the right of the directors to be recouped by the shareholders.

Held, that the directors were entitled to recover from the shareholders the money paid to them.—MOXHAM v. GRANT, Q.B.D., 282; [1899] 1 Q. B. 480; 68 L. J. Q. B. 283; 80 L. T. 356.

25. Illegal association—Action to administer funds—Claim by contractors to rank as creditors—Quantum meruit.—In an action to administer the funds of the defendant syndicate brought by a subscriber against the syndicate the supervising committee and the bankers certain inquiries were ordered, in the course of which it transpired that the syndicate consisted of more than twenty members, and was illegal, not being registered under the Companies Acts, and advertisements were issued for creditors, on which a claim was made by U. Brothers for printing and posting prospectuses. It appeared that U. Brothers were already suing the committee and others in the Queen's Bench

Division for payment of their debt. On a summons to disallow their claim in this action it was Held, that the only ground for the claim was that the syndicate had taken the benefit of the work, and therefore the claim must rest on a quantum meruit. That the doctrine did not apply where other persons were liable, and that as the persons, or some of them, sued in the Queen's Bench Division appeared to be liable, the claim in this action ought not to be allowed.—HUME v. RECORD REIGN JUBILEE SYNDICATE, Ch.D. Stirling, J.; 80 L. T. 404.

26. Memorandum of association — Subscribers — Liability to pay calls.—Persons who subscribe their names to the memorandum of association of a company, though they thereby agree to become members of the company, do not become debtors to the company for the full amount of the shares they take. They are only liable, like any other member of the company, to pay calls if and when made upon them in the manner provided by the articles. —ALEXANDER v. AUTOMATIC TELEPHONE CO., Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J.; 68 L. J. Ch. 514; 80 L. T. 753.

27. Prospectus—Directors—Shares — Statement in prospectus that directors would take shares—Liability to take shares—List of contributories.—A prospectus of a company, approved by the directors at their first meeting, stated that the whole of the ordinary shares not taken by the vendors to the company would be taken by the directors. The register of shareholders did not contain the names of any of the directors, nor were any shares allotted to them. In the winding up of the company the liquidator applied for a balance-order against B., one of the directors, in respect of 367 unallotted ordinary shares.

Held, by the Court of Appeal (reversing Wright, J.), that there was no evidence of an agreement by B. to take any definite number of shares, and that therefore he was not liable to be put on the list of contributories.—MOORE BROTHERS & CO. (LIMITED), C.A., 401; [1899] 1 Ch. 627; 68 L. J. Ch. 302; 80 L. T. 104.

28. Prospectus—Untrue statements—Liability of directors and promoter—The Directors' Liability Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 64), s. 3 (1) (a)—Non-disclosure of contract by promoter—Waiver—Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 131) s. 38.—A shareholder brought an action against a limited company, its directors and promoter, for rescission of his contract to take shares and for compensation and damages, on the ground that he had been induced to take shares by untrue statements in the prospectus, and that the prospectus was fraudulent for non-disclosure of an agreement to which the promoter was a party, but which did not relate to the formation of the company or the subscription to its capital. Notice of the agreement was alleged to be waived by a clause in the prospectus which provided that "there may be other agreements as to the formation of the company or the subscription to the capital or otherwise. . . . Subscribers will be held to have had notice of all these contracts and to have waived all right to be supplied with particulars, &c."

Held, (1) that the shareholder had been induced to take shares on the faith of statements in the prospectus which were untrue and misleading, and that he was entitled to rescission of his contract with the company; (2) that the directors and promoter were severally liable to pay compensation to the shareholder under the Directors' Liability Act, 1890, s. 3, because, although they believed the untrue statements to be justified by the facts, yet their want of care as business men was such that they could not be held to have had "reasonable ground" for their belief; and (3) that the prospectus must be deemed fraudulent within the Companies Act, 1867, s. 38, as against the promoter for non-disclosure of the agreement, which the court, assuming but not deciding that a statutory provision could be waived, held was not covered by the waiver clause.—GREENWOOD v. LEATHER-SHOD WHEEL CO., Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 80 L. T. 462.

29. Reconstruction scheme — Special resolution — Notice of meeting — Sufficiency — Non-disclosure of interest of directors—Underwriting—Injunction.—In a notice convening an extraordinary general meeting for the discussion of the reconstruction of a company by the sale of the undertaking to another company, it was stated, inter alia, that the full issue of debentures had been guaranteed by a third company.

By another notice, convening a second extraordinary general meeting, the proposal to adopt the said reconstruction scheme was made conditional upon the non-acceptance of an alternative scheme. Neither notice disclosed the fact that the directors of the selling company were directors of or largely interested in the guaranteeing company. The resolutions as to the said reconstruction scheme were passed and confirmed.

Held, that the notices did not sufficiently disclose the interests of the defendant directors, and that therefore the resolutions were not binding upon shareholders absent from the meeting (Kaye v. Croydon Tramways Co., 46 W. R. 405, [1898] 1 Ch. 358, discussed and followed); but that all the shareholders had been sufficiently informed of the conditional proposal announced in the second notice.

Alexander v. Simpson, 38 W. R. 161, 43 Ch. D. 139, distinguished.—TIESSEN v. HENDERSON, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 459; [1899] 1 Ch. 861; 68 L. J. Ch. 353; 80 L. T. 383.

30. Shares—Shares partly paid up—Forfeiture—Sale—Credit for amount paid up.—The articles of association of a company provided that the directors might sell, re-allot, or otherwise dispose of forfeited shares in such manner as they thought fit. A number of shares on which at least £3 per share had been paid having been forfeited, the directors entered into an agreement for the sale of these shares with £2 5s. credited as paid up, for 30s. per share.

Held, that the company could deal with the shares as partly paid up to an extent not exceeding the amount which had been paid up on each at the time of forfeiture, and that the transaction did not amount to an issue of shares at a discount.—MORRISON v. TRUSTEES, &C., INSURANCE CO., C.A.; 68 L. J. Ch. 11; 79 L. T. 605.

31. Voting—Conditional allotment of shares—Issue of shares—Shareholder—Name on register—Right to vote—Condition unfulfilled—Conditional agreement to issue shares—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 86), ss. 23, 30 — Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 131), s. 25.—An allotment of shares is an appropriation by the directors or managing body of a company of shares to a particular person, but it does not necessarily create the status of membership. The allotment may be subject to a condition —e.g., that the allottee should not only indicate his acceptance, but perform some other act such as make payment of a sum of money; a company therefore may offer specified shares to a person on the terms that no title to the shares shall arise until a condition provided for in the contract to accept the shares has been fulfilled, and, after the allotment and registration of such shares, the company may decline to treat such person as a member if he has neglected to comply with the condition.

A person who agrees to become a member of a company and whose name is entered on the register of shareholders as the holder of certain shares is not thereby constituted a member entitled to vote at meetings of the company in respect of such shares unless it can be shown that the company have agreed to accept such person as a member; when, therefore, a company have agreed to give a person certain shares upon certain conditions which remain unfulfilled, such person does not become a member, notwithstanding the allotment of shares to him in part performance of the agreement incorporating such conditions and registration of the same in his name, so long as the certificates for such shares are deposited with the intention that they shall not operate according to their purport until the event happens on which they are to issue.—SPITZEL v. CHINESE CORPORATION, Ch.D. Stirling, J.; 80 L. T. 347.

32. Voting—Evidence—Articles of association.—An article provided that votes tendered at a meeting and not disallowed at the meeting or an adjournment thereof should be valid for all purposes.

Held, that in the absence of fraud or mala fides a resolution for voluntary winding up could not be impeached upon the ground that votes had been improperly received. — WALL v. LONDON AND NORTHERN ASSETS CORPORATION (No. 2), Ch.D. North, J.; [1899] 1 Ch. 550; 80 L. T. 70.

33. Winding up—Company limited by guarantee—Contributories—Debts. — A member of a mutual marine insurance company limited by guarantee is not liable to be placed on the list of contributories, in the event of the company being wound up, for a larger amount than is prescribed by the company's memorandum of association. He may be a debtor to the company or to the other members of it for losses; but, though he may be sued in respect of such losses, he cannot be made a contributory in the winding up in respect of them.—BANGOR AND NORTH WALES MUTUAL PROTECTION ASSOCIATION, RE, Ch.D. Wright, J.; 68 L. J. Ch. 521; 80 L. T. 870.

34. Winding up — Costs — Order against official receiver personally—County Court—Right of appeal. —An appeal will lie against an order on an official receiver or liquidator to pay costs personally, for such an order is equivalent to a declaration that such official has been guilty of misconduct.—RAYNES PARK GOLF CLUB (LIMITED), RE, OFFICIAL RECEIVER, EX PARTE, Q.B.D., 499; [1899] 1 Q. B. 961; 68 L. J. Q. B. 529; 80 L. T. 388.

35. Winding up—Creditor also contributory—Unpaid calls of company—Debt of company—Set-off—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 38—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), ss. 16, 38, 101—Judicature Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 77), s. 10. —A company in liquidation which owns shares on which unpaid calls are due in another company which is also in liquidation, and is also a creditor of that company for money lent, is not entitled to set off the debt against such calls, as the bankruptcy law as to set-off is not imported by section 10 of the Judicature Act, 1875, into the law of companies so as to allow set off against calls.

But the debtor company is entitled, when paying a dividend, to retain such part of that dividend as is payable to the creditor company until the calls made on the shares held by the creditor company are paid in full.

Gill's case, 27 W. R. 934, 12 Ch. D. 755, and Grissell's case, 14 W. R. 1015, L. R. 1 Ch. 528, followed.—AURIFEROUS PROPERTIES, RE, Ch.D. Wright, J., 75; [1898] 2 Ch. 428; 79 L. T. 71.

36. Winding up—Injunction—Transfer of shares —Registration—Lis pendens—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), ss. 35, 131.—Where an interlocutory injunction has been granted to restrain the voluntary liquidator and the directors of a company from acting upon resolutions to wind up the company, the directors, in refusing to register transfers of shares pending the trial of the action are not acting "without sufficient cause" within section 35 of the Companies Act, 1862; the jurisdiction of the court extends equally to shares the transfers of which were executed before the commencement of the winding up, and to transfers executed after the winding up.—VIOLET GOLD MINING CO, RE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 68 L. J. Ch. 535; 80 L. T. 684.

37. Winding up—Jurisdiction—Proceedings commenced before winding up—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 143—Stay of proceedings—Defendant preparing affidavits.—Where proceedings have been commenced before the period after which, under section 143 of the Companies Act, 1862, a company ceases to exist, the court has jurisdiction over such proceedings after that period.

In re Crookhaven Mining Co., 15 W. R. 28, L. R. 3 Eq. 69, followed.

When a motion stands over to enable the defendant to file affidavits by a certain date, the defendant may prepare his evidence and file affidavits, although in the meantime the defendant has got an order ordering the plaintiffs to give security for costs and staying proceedings until such security has been given. — WHITELEY EXERCISER CO. v. GAMAGE, Ch.D. North, J., 296; [1898] 2 Ch. 405; 79 L. T. 20.

38. Winding up — Official receiver's report — "Further report"—Allegation of fraud—Order for public examination—Jurisdiction—Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 63), s. 8, sub-sections 2, 3, 7.—In the winding up of a company the further report of the official receiver, made under section 8, sub-section 2, of the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890, must allege that fraud has been committed by some specified person or persons in the promotion or formation of the company, and must set out such facts as the basis of his opinion as will warrant the judge in calling upon such person or persons to undergo public examination.

Ex parte Barnes, 44 W. R. 433, [1896] A. C. 146, discussed and explained. — CIVIL, NAVAL AND MILITARY OUTFITTERS, RE, C.A., 233; [1899] 1 Ch. 215; 68 L. J. Ch. 164; 80 L. T. 241.

39. Winding up—Misrepresentation—Rescission of contract to take shares—Proceedings commenced between petition and order for winding up.—Notwithstanding the observations of Lord Westbury in Reese River Silver Mining Co. v. Smith, L. R. 4 H. L. 64, 77, 78, there is nothing in that case throwing doubt on the decision of Lord Cairns, L.C., in Kent v. Freehold Land Co., L. R. 3 Ch. 493, that a shareholder cannot be relieved from liability on his shares on the ground of misrepresentation in an action or proceeding commenced after the presentation of a winding-up petition, but before the order for winding up on that petition is made.

Where an affidavit, in opposition to an application for final judgment under the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, ord. 14, in an action by the company for calls, setting up misrepresentation as a defence, and stating an intention to counterclaim for rescission on that ground, was followed by an order giving leave to defend, and all these matters occurred before the presentation of a winding-up petition, but the counterclaim for rescission was delivered after the petition and before the winding-up order made upon it.

Held, that the shareholder was too late to apply for relief.

Observations on In re Scottish Petroleum Co., 23 Ch. D. 413.—GENERAL RAILWAY SYNDICATE, RE, WHITELEY'S CASE, Ch.D. Wright, J.; [1899] 1 Ch. 770; 68 L. J. Ch. 365; 80 L. T. 868.

40. Winding up—Private examination under section 115 of the Companies Act, 1862—Subsequent proceedings—Interrogatories—Right to inspect depositions—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 115—Companies (Winding-up) Rules, November, 1895.—A witness is not now entitled as of right to see the depositions of his examination under section 115 of the Companies Act, 1862, but must obtain the leave of the court to do so; and even if the court considers that the witness ought to be allowed to see his depositions, it does not follow that such leave will be granted to him at any moment which he may choose, but the court will consider the circumstances of each case.—MERCHANTS FIRE OFFICE, RE, Ch.D. Wright, J., 480; [1899] 1 Ch. 432; 68 L. J. Ch. 211; 80 L. T. 285.

41. Winding up—Proof—Costs of proceedings commenced before winding up—Contingent liability—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 35—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 37.—An application under section 35 of the Companies Act, 1862, to rectify the register and for a return of money paid is not a claim for unliquidated damages.

After a successful application to rectify the register of shareholders, sums paid by applicants for shares are provable debts in the liquidation of the company; and the costs of rectifying the register, being costs of obtaining an order without which the debts could not be recovered or admitted to proof, may properly be added to the provable debts.—BRITISH GOLDFIELDS OF AFRICA (LIMITED), RE, C.A., 552; [1899] 2 Ch. 7; 68 L. J. Ch. 412; 80 L. T. 638.

42. Winding up—Purchase of undertaking—Dissentient shareholder—Arbitration—Award of umpire—Validity of award—Arbitration Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 49), First Schedule (c) (d)—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), ss. 161, 162.—The articles of association of a company do not constitute an agreement within section 162 of the Companies Act, 1862.

The appointment of an umpire by arbitrators constitutes an act in the arbitration within the meaning of clause (c) in the First Schedule to the Arbitration Act, 1889.

Decision of Stirling, J. (ante, p. 23, [1898] 2 Ch. 633), reversed.—BARING-GOULD AND SHARPINGTON, &c., SYNDICATE (LIMITED) ARBITRATION, RE, C.A., 564; [1899] 2 Ch. 80; 68 L. J. Ch. 429; 80 L. T. 739.

43. Winding up — Supervision order — Pending action—Costs prior to winding up—Payment in full.—The costs of an action begun by a company while a going concern and continued, with leave, by the liquidators after the company has been ordered to be wound up under supervision, and in which judgment was entered in favour of the defendant with costs, are payable in full even when the order granting the liquidators leave to continue the action is silent on the subject.—LONDON DRAPERY STORES, RE, Ch.D. Wright, J., 118; [1898] 2 Ch. 684; 79 L. T. 592.

44. Winding up—Supervision order—Private examination under section 115 of the Companies Act, 1862—"Due regard to interests of creditors or contributories"—Public examination—Petition by the official receiver—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 115—Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. 63) ss. 8, 14.—The powers which section 14 of the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890, gives the court to order a company to be wound up compulsorily on the application of the official receiver includes every case where the powers of the voluntary liquidator are proved, in the opinion of the court, to be insufficient for the purposes of the winding up in so far as the interests of the creditors or contributories are concerned. An order, however, ought not to be made as a matter of course, but a strong case ought to be made out to justify the interference of the court under that section.—JUBILEE SITES SYNDICATE (LIMITED), RE, Ch.D. Wright, J., 606; [1899] 2 Ch. 204; 68 L. J. Ch. 427; 80 L. T. 869.

45. Winding up—Surplus assets—Distribution—Fully-paid and partly-paid shares.—One of the articles of association of a company contained the following clause: "If upon the winding up of the company the surplus assets shall be more than sufficient to repay the whole of the paid-up capital, the excess shall be distributed among the members in proportion to the capital paid, or which ought to have been paid, on the shares."

The capital of the company consisted of 60,000 shares of £1 each, of which 26,000 were vendors' shares issued as fully paid, besides which 30,357 other shares had been issued on which 10s. only had been paid up. On the voluntary winding up of the company there remained a large sum for distribution among the shareholders after paying all debts and the expenses of liquidation.

Held, that the distribution must be in accordance with the agreement shown in the articles—viz., the balance, after repaying the paid-up capital, must be distributed in proportion to the paid-up capital.—MUTOSCOPE AND BIOGRAPH SYNDICATE (LIMITED), RE, Ch.D. Wright, J., 520; [1899] 1 Ch. 896; 68 L. J. Ch. 417.

See also Bankruptcy, 16; Inland Revenue, 24, 27; Insurance, 2; Practice, 24; Trade Name, 1.

CONTEMPT.—See Bankruptcy, 6, 7; Patent, 4.

CONTRACT:—

1. Amount recoverable—Two stages in contract—Liquidated damages.—In an action on a contract, and alternatively on a quantum meruit, to recover the price of certain specified work, if the contract is not properly carried out, the plaintiff can only recover the real value of the work done and the materials supplied.

Chapel v. Hickes, 2 C.&M. 214, followed.

A contractor undertook to deliver the whole of certain work in connection with wiring and blocks for electric light within twenty days of signing the contract; and, further, to properly fix and connect the fittings within fourteen days of the delivery to him of such fittings. He then wrote: "I undertake to carry out the work in connection with the cables, wires, and fittings in strict accordance with the specification and schedule within the times stated in the said specification for the sum of £76 10s., and I consent to pay the sum of £5 for liquidated damages and not as a penalty for every day exceeding the number of days within which the work has to be completed."

Held, that £5 per day was payable for delay at either stage of the contract.—STEGMANN v. O'CONNOR, Q.B.D.; 80 L. T. 234.

2. Commercial traveller—Refusal by employer to send on journey—Travelling expenses.—A commercial traveller was engaged for a term. By the contract he was to travel in certain countries, and was to receive a salary of £500 and a fixed allowance per day as travelling expenses. During the continuance of the engagement his employers found that, owing to a fall in prices, it was no longer profitable to take orders in the countries travelled by him. They thereupon refused to send him on further journeys, and refused to pay him the allowance for travelling expenses or any part thereof, but continued to pay him his salary.

He sued them for damages for the injury done to the goodwill of his trade connection by their refusal to send him on journeys, and for the loss of the proportion of his allowance for travelling expenses which by economy he was able to save when travelling.

Held, that the action would not lie.—LAGERWALL v. WILKINSON, Q.B.D.; 80 L. T. 55.

3. Conflict of laws—English and South African law — Place of performance — Restriction against trading—Injunction—Intention.—Where a contract is entered into between parties residing in different countries, where different systems of law prevail, the law by which to determine the intrinsic validity and effect of the contract will be selected by the English courts on substantial considerations, the preference being given to the law of the country with which, according to the intention of the parties, the transaction has the most real connection.

Where a British subject resident in Johannesburg entered into a contract with a company registered in England, but formed for the purpose of carrying on business "in the Transvaal, the colony of Natal, and elsewhere in South Africa," to serve the company in their business carried on "at Johannesburg and in the colony of Natal or elsewhere in South Africa," and thereby undertook not to engage in any similar business in South Africa within a period of ten years after the determination of the contract without the consent of the company.

Held, in an action by the company for an injunction to restrain the defendant from committing a breach of his undertaking, that the contract was governed by the law of the South African Republic, as being the law of the country with which, according to the intention of the parties, the transaction had the most real connection.— SOUTH AFRICAN BREWERIES v. KING, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 681; [1899] 2 Ch. 173; 68 L. J. Ch. 530.

4. Joint covenantors—Contribution—Evidence of intention — Inference from circumstances. — The doctrine of contribution between joint covenantors is based on a broad principle of equity, or, as it has sometimes been expressed, on an implied contract, and depends on the intention of the parties contracting. Evidence of such intention is admissible after the death of one of such covenantors; and when a father, on the marriage of his son, had entered, together with the son, into a joint and several covenant with the trustees of the marriage settlement to pay a certain sum of money six months after his death and had specifically charged some of his own property with payment of the same, and the son, at the date of his marriage, was possessed of a reversionary interest only which he brought into settlement, and, the father having died insolvent, the security had to be realised, the court declined to infer, in the absence of express contract, an intention on the part of the father to reserve a right to his executors to sue his son for contribution.—BENTINCK v. BENTINCK, Ch.D. Stirling, J.; 80 L. T. 71.

5. Master and servant—Negative stipulation against engaging in similar business—Breach of contract—Validity—Injunction.—H., the confidential clerk of R. & Co. covenanted that he would not, during his engagement, carry on or be engaged, directly or indirectly, in any trade or business of a similar nature to that of R. & Co., or any other business whatever, on pain of instant dismissal and forfeiture of salary.

Held (reversing North, J.), on motion to restrain H. from engaging, directly or indirectly, in any business relating to goods of the description sold or manufactured by R. & Co., that such a covenant, limited to the period of H.'s engagement, was not unreasonable, and ought to be enforced by injunction.—ROBINSON v. HEUER, C.A., 34; [1898] 2 Ch. 451; 79 L. T. 281.

6. Principal and agent—Introducing purchaser—Contract except as to time for carrying out—Implied term—Withdrawal by vendor—Liability for commission.—When all the terms of an agreement are stated except the term as to the time when it is to be carried out, and there is no express stipulation as to the time, then it is an implied term that the agreement is to be performed within a reasonable time.

The plaintiff was instructed by the defendant to find a purchaser for his house for £4,000.

On the 16th of January he found one S. ready and willing to pay that sum who required possession by the 15th of March.

The defendant refused the offer on the ground that he could not give up possession on the 15th of March.

The jury found that from the 16th of January to the 15th of March was a reasonable time.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to his commission.—NOSOTTI v. AUERBACH, Q.B.D.; 79 L. T. 413.

7. Railway—Interest on shares—Payment out of penalties due from contractors.—By a contract for making the line of the plaintiff railway, it was to be completed to the satisfaction of the engineer of the company in two years from the commencement of the works. The contract price was to be paid in debentures and shares of the company, which were to be issued at the request of the contractors to their nominees, or offered for public subscription. The contractors having requested the debentures and shares to be offered for public subscription entered into an agreement to pay to the company interest on the debenture and preference stock issued by the company until the railway was completed.

The works were commenced on the 15th of January, 1890, but the time for completion was afterwards extended to the 31st of May, 1892.

They were not completed for more than a year after the time fixed. Interest on the debentures and preference stock in the meantime became due, which was not paid by the contractors, and was therefore paid by the company.

This action was afterwards brought, and certain of the matters in dispute were referred to arbitration, but the award was to be enforced only in the present action.

Held (affirming the decision of Stirling, J., 76 L. T. 542), that the contractors had not completed the line within the time fixed, and were liable to pay the interest between the 1st of October and 31st of December, 1892; but that the arbitrator having found that the company were liable for not taking over the line when it was completed, the contractors were entitled to have the amount for which the company was so liable applied in reduction of the interest, but (reversing the decision of Stirling, J., 76 L. T. 542) that the contractors were not liable for the interest between the 15th of January and the 31st of May, 1892, between which dates the time for completion was extended.

Held also (reversing the decision of Stirling, J.), that it was not ultra vires the company to apply penalties due from the contractors in payment of interest on shares as such penalties were not capital, and dividends can be paid out of other money besides profits.—ALCOY AND GANDIA RAILWAY CO. v. GREENHILL, C.A.; 79 L. T. 257.

8. Shipment to be made by sailing ship between specified dates—Condition precedent—Implied condition—Measure of damages.—By agreement in writing the defendants sold to the plaintiffs 250 bales of Manila hemp, shipment to be made from a port or ports in the Philippine Islands by sailer or sailers between the 1st of May and the 31st of July, 1898. The agreement contained a clause that if the goods did not arrive from loss of vessel or other unavoidable cause the contract was to be void. In consequence of the Spanish-American war it was in a business sense impossible for the defendants to ship hemp by sailer between the specified dates, but in September they shipped hemp (which would otherwise have satisfied the contract) by steamer, and on the 27th of October declared it against the contract. The plaintiffs refused to accept this declaration, and returned it to the defendants, who, on the 4th of November, wrote that it was the only declaration that they were in a position to make.

Held, that the stipulations as to shipment by sailer or sailers between the specified dates were conditions precedent, and the declaration was bad; that it was not an implied condition of the contract that it should be possible to ship by sailer between those dates; that the defendants were not protected by the express condition as to non-arrival of the goods, the non-arrival not having been occasioned by any unavoidable cause within the meaning of the contract; and that the damages were to be ascertained by reference to the market price on the 4th of November, the day on which the defendants finally notified their inability to make a declaration in accordance with the contract.—ASHMORE & SON v. COX & CO., Q.B.D.; [1899] 1 Q. B. 436; 68 L. J. Q. B. 72.

9. Voluntary trust—Intended transfer of property—Representations influencing conduct.—N., a promoter of, and vendor to, an unsuccessful mining company, publicly and in good faith promised to create a trust, under which the company and its shareholders would have benefited, but died before the trust was created.

Held, that a person who heard of the contemplated trust could not, in virtue of the fact that he bought or held shares of the company in confidence of N.'s promise being carried out, establish a case of contract as against N., and, in the absence of any fraud or special representation, neither N. nor his executors would be estopped from denying liability, notwithstanding that N. himself might have benefited by the promise having been made.—COLEMAN v. NORTH, Ch.D. Romer, J., 57.

See also Company, 3-14; Damages, 1, 2; Foreign Enlistment Act, 1; Frauds, Statute of, 1, 2; Infant, 1; Insurance, 3; Married Woman, 3; Master and Servant, 1; Practice, 39; Principal and Agent, 3; Railway, 2; Restraint of Trade, 1, 2; Vendor and Purchaser, 3.

CONVEYANCING ACTS.—See Landlord and Tenant, 11, 14; Mortgage, 12; Vendor and Purchaser, 12.

COPYHOLD:—

1. Coal—Special custom for tenant to sell and work—"Not hindering lord's sale."—In an action by the lord of the manor to restrain copyhold tenants from working and selling coal under their tenements the defendants set up a special custom for the tenants of the manor to work and sell the coal so long as the sale thereof in no way hindered the lord's sale.

Held, that the custom was proved, and that the defendants' sales, being comparatively small, were not in the circumstances a hindrance within the meaning of the restriction.—SITWELL v. WORRELL, Ch.D. Byrne, J.; 79 L. T. 86.

2. Customary obligation on tenant to keep in repair—Breach of obligation by tenant—Remedy of lord against executors of tenant.—An action was brought by the lord of a manor against the executors of a deceased tenant of a copyhold tenement for not keeping the tenement in proper repair. It was proved that by the custom of the manor the tenant was bound to keep the tenement in repair, and that the ordinary mode by which that obligation had been enforced against the tenant was by presentment, fine, and forfeiture. Upon the death of the tenant the premises were found to be dilapidated and out of repair, but there had been no presentment by the lord in respect of such dilapidations.

Held, that, although there had been no presentment, the lord could have maintained an action in respect of the dilapidations against the tenant in her lifetime upon the implied contract by the tenant to keep the premises in repair arising from her admittance, and that this right of action, being founded on contract, survived against the executors of the tenant.—BLACKMORE v. WHITE, Q.B.D., 448; [1899] 1 Q. B. 293; 68 L. J. Q. B. 180; 80 L. T. 79.

COPYRIGHT:—

Infringement — "Book" — "Sheet of music" — Perforated sheets for use in a mechanical musical instrument—Copyright Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 45), ss. 2, 15.—Rolls of perforated sheets were used as parts of a machine sold by the defendants for the production of musical sounds. It was possible, with considerable trouble, to read the notes denoted by the perforations.

Certain words (indicative of pace and expression) which were found in the sheets of music published by the plaintiffs were also printed on some of the defendants' rolls.

Held, that the Copyright Act, 1842, did not prevent the defendants from making or selling the rolls so far as they contained perforations, but that there ought to be an injunction to restrain them from adding the words taken from the plaintiffs' music sheets.—BOOSEY v. WHIGHT & CO., Ch.D. Stirling, J., 554; [1899] 1 Ch. 836; 68 L. J. Ch. 379; 80 L. T. 561.

CORPORATION:—

1. Bye-laws—Validity—Private ground used for betting—"Place of public resort"—Middlesborough

Improvement Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. xxx.), s. 25.—The Middlesborough Improvement Act, 1877, s. 25, empowers the corporation to make "such bye-laws as they may think fit for the prevention of betting . . . in the public streets . . . and other places of public resort within the borough."

The corporation made a bye-law that "any person who shall frequent and use any street . . . or other place of public resort within the borough . . . for the purpose of bookmaking or betting . . . shall be liable to a penalty."

The appellant used for the purpose of bookmaking an unenclosed piece of private ground within the borough, bounded by streets. Bookmakers and other persons habitually used the ground for betting, but without permission from the owner. The appellant and the other bookmakers conducted their business in an orderly manner, and caused no nuisance, annoyance, or obstruction. The appellant was convicted under the bye-law.

On a case stated,

Held, that the bye-law was within the power given by the Act, and was valid; that, as the ground was in fact habitually used by the public, it was a "place of public resort," within the meaning of the bye-law; and that the appellant was rightly convicted.—KITSON v. ASHE, Q.B.D.; [1899] 1 Q. B. 425; 68 L. J. Q. B. 286; 80 L. T. 323.

2. Corporate office—Resignation of office—Office when vacant—Outgoing alderman—Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), s. 36, sub-sections 1 and 2; s. 60, sub-section 3.—Resignation of his office by a borough alderman in the manner provided by section 36, sub-section 1, of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, will not render the office vacant until it is declared to be vacant by the borough council with the formalities prescribed by sub-section 2; and consequently an alderman who, in the course of rotation is about to go out of office under section 14, sub-sections 6 and 7, cannot by merely resigning his office before the ordinary day of election of aldermen, and in the absence of a declaration by the council that the office is vacant, get rid of his disqualification to vote at the election of aldermen under section 60, sub-section 3.—PEASE v. LOWDEN, Q.B.D.; [1899] 1 Q. B. 386; 68 L. J. Q. B. 239; 79 L. T. 672.

3. Costs — Borough fund — Licensing appeals — Appeal against refusal of licence—Payment of costs of chief constable—Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), s. 140, sub-sections 1-3; ss. 141-143, 190, 191; 5th Schedule, Part II., clause 5 (d), clause 12—Municipal Corporations (Borough Funds) Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 91), s. 2.—A municipal corporation cannot, where there is no surplus of the borough fund, legally pay thereout costs incurred by the chief constable in opposing by direction of the council appeals against the refusal of justices to renew the licences of publicans.

Quære, whether if there be a surplus it can legally be applied to payment of such costs.

The decision of the Court of Appeal, [1898] 1 Q. B. 604, affirmed.—TYNEMOUTH CORPORATION v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL, H.L.; [1899] A. C. 293; 68 L. J. Q. B. 752; 80 L. T. 633.

4. Elective auditor—Duties—Remuneration—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 245 and 246—Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), ss. 12, 25, 26, 27, 141, and 142.—An elective auditor of a municipal corporation is not entitled, independently of express agreement, to remuneration for auditing the accounts of the receipts and expenditure of the corporation in its municipal capacity. He is entitled to remuneration for auditing such accounts in its capacity as urban sanitary authority.

His duties are limited to verifying the receipts and expenditure as set out in the borough treasurer's accounts. He has no power to inquire into the propriety of any items, provided those items truly represent what the treasurer actually received or disbursed under and by the authority of the council.—THOMAS v. DEVONPORT CORPORATION, Q.B.D.; 79 L. T. 418.

5. Malicious prosecution — Action against — Liability.—An action for malicious prosecution will lie against a corporation.

Edwards v. Midland Railway Co., 6 Q. B. D. 287, followed.—CORNFORD v. CARLTON BANK (LIMITED), Q B.D.; [1899] 1 Q. B. 392; 68 L. J. Q. B. 196; 80 L. T. 121.

See also Election Law, 1, 2; Practice, 5.

COSTS.—See Administration, 9; Admiralty, 4; Company, 43; Corporation, 3; County Court, 3-5; Damages, 1, 2; Patent, 7; Practice, 1, 2, 6-11, 32, 38; Probate, 15; Public Authorities Protection Act, 1, 2, 4; Railway, 12; Solicitor, 3-8.

COUNTY COURT:—

1. Appeal—Question of law raised at trial—Request to make a note—Condition precedent to appeal —County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), s. 120 —Rules of Supreme Court, 1883, ord. 59, r. 8.—It is a condition precedent to the right of appeal to the High Court from the judgment of a county court judge, under the County Courts Act, 1888, s. 120, that the question of law relied in support of the appeal shall be raised at the trial, but a request to the judge to make a note is not a condition precedent, and therefore if the notes of the judge are not produced, the court has jurisdiction, under the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, ord. 59, r. 8, if satisfied that the question of law was raised at the trial, to hear the appeal upon other evidence, though a request to make a note has not been made.—WOHLGEMUTHE v. COSTE, Q.B.D.; [1899] 1 Q. B. 501; 68 L. J. Q. B. 373; 80 L. T. 529.

2. Costs—Action struck out for want of jurisdiction —Practice—County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), ss. 88, 89, 113, 114.—Where an action in a county court is struck out for want of jurisdiction under section 114 of the County Courts Act, 1888, the court may, if it shall think just, award costs against the defendant.—WATSON v. PETTS (No. 2), Q.B.D.; [1899] 1 Q. B. 430; 80 L. T. 21.

3. Costs—Remitted action—Judgment under order 14 for part of claim—Judgment in county court for residue—Scale of costs—County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), s. 65.—An action was commenced in the High Court for £73. On an application under order 14, an order was made by a master giving the plaintiff leave to sign judgment for £53, and giving the defendants leave to defend as to £20, and directing the action to be tried in a county court. In the county court the plaintiff recovered judgment for £20.

Held, that the plaintiff, having recovered in the action a sum exceeding £50, was entitled to have his costs taxed upon scale C.

Keeble v. Bennett, 42 W. R. 539, [1894] 2 Q. B. 329, approved.

Bailey v. Watson & Co., [1898] 2 Q. B. 270, 46 W. R. Dig. 40, overruled.—WHITE v. HEADLAND'S ELECTRIC STORAGE CO., C.A., 273; [1899] 1 Q. B. 507; 68 L. J. Q. B. 354; 80 L. T. 442.

4. Costs—Remitted action—Judgment in High Court for part of claim—Scale applicable in county court—County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), s. 65.—In an action of contract brought in the High Court upon an application for judgment under order 14, an order was made that the plaintiff be at liberty to sign final judgment for a sum of £27, part of the amount claimed, with costs to be taxed; that the defendants have leave to defend as to a sum of £2 odd, which was the residue of the claim then remaining in dispute, and that the action be tried in the county court under section 65 of the County Courts Act, 1888. The defendants paid the £27 and taxed costs, and afterwards the plaintiff lodged the writ and order in the county court. At the trial in the county court the plaintiff recovered the £2 odd, with costs.

Held, that he was entitled to a taxation of his costs on the lower scale in use in county courts where the sum recovered exceeds £2 but does not exceed £10, and not on the higher scale where the sum recovered exceeds £20 but does not exceed £50.

Keeble v. Bennett, [1894] 2 Q. B. 329, distinguished. —BAILEY v. WATSON & Co., Q.B.D.; [1898] 2 Q. B. 270.

5. Interpleader — Execution on goods of third person—Substantial grievance—Damages against high bailiff.—Damages are recoverable on an interpleader summons against a high bailiff of a county court for the seizure of the goods of third persons, the claimants, by way of execution on the premises of the debtor, where the claimants have suffered a substantial grievance, although the seizure was bonâ fide and there was no misconduct.—LONDON, CHATHAM AND DOVER RAILWAY CO. v. CABLE, Q.B.D.; 80 L. T. 119.

6. Practice—Notice of statutory defence—Statute of Limitations—County Court Rules, 1889, 1895, ord. 10, rr. 14, 14a, 18a—Form 95a.—In a county court action a notice of a defence under a statute of limitation, filed under ord. 10, r. 10, is sufficient if it complies with ord. 10, r. 14*a*, and Form 95*a*, and need not set forth the particular statute relied on nor the date from which it began to run. Ord. 10, r. 18*a*, does not apply to defences under statutes of limitation.—EATON v. TAPLEY, Q.B.D., 463; [1898] 1 Q. B. 953; 68 L. J. Q. B. 638; 80 L. T. 797.

7. Practice—Notice of statutory defence—Statute of Frauds, s. 17—Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 4—County Court Rules, 1889, 1892, 1895, ord. 10, r. 18a.—In an action on a contract for the sale of goods of the value of £10 the defence of the Statute of Frauds (as re-enacted by the Sale of Goods Act, 1893) is a "statutory defence" within the meaning of ord. 10, r. 18*a*, of the County Court Rules, 1889, and the defendant if he intends to rely on it must give notice of it under rule 10.—BRUTTON v. BRANSON, Q.B.D.; [1898] 2 Q. B. 219; 79 L. T. 247.

8. Trial with judge and jury—Order as to payment of costs varied by judge on subsequent application of unsuccessful party—Jurisdiction—Functus officio —Appeal—Prohibition.—Where a county court judge has made an order he is functus officio and has no jurisdiction to vary such order afterwards.

Where an order has been made in circumstances that would give a Divisional Court jurisdiction to issue a prohibition, the party aggrieved is not thereby deprived of his right to appeal against such an order to the Divisional Court in the ordinary way instead of applying for a prohibition.

Barker v. Palmer, 30 W. R. 59, 8 Q. B. D. 9, considered and followed.—SWEETLAND v. TURKISH CIGARETTE CO., Q.B.D., 511; 80 L. T. 472.

See also Admiralty, 1-3; Bankruptcy, 9; Married Woman, 3; Practice, 3, 15.

CRIMINAL LAW:—

1. Evidence—Admissibility—Prisoner's statement before the magistrate reaffirming evidence given by him on oath.—A prisoner charged with an offence under the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885, gave evidence on oath at the hearing before the magistrate, and afterwards, in response to the usual inquiry whether he wished to make any statement, said, "What I have already said is true." He was committed for trial.

Held, that his evidence given on oath before the magistrate was admissible as evidence against him on his trial.—REG. v. BIRD, NEEDES, EX PARTE, C.C.R., 112; [1898] 2 Q. B. 340; 79 L. T. 156.

2. Evidence—Misreception of evidence—Prisoners jointly indicted—Case stated on behalf of one prisoner only—Crown Cases Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 78), s. 2.—Where two prisoners jointly indicted have been convicted, and a question has been reserved for the consideration of the Court for Crown Cases Reserved on behalf of one of them, that court has power, under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 78, s. 2, if it shall be of opinion that the objection raised is valid and that it affects the conviction of both prisoners, to quash the conviction of the other prisoner as well as that of the prisoner on whose behalf the question has been reserved.—REG. v. SAUNDERS, C.C.R.; [1899] 1 Q. B. 490; 68 L. J. Q. B. 296; 80 L. T. 28.

3. Evidence—Procedure—Prisoner sole witness for defence—Right of prosecution to sum up—Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 36), ss. 1, 2, 3—Criminal Procedure Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 18), s. 2.—Where, on the trial of a person charged with a criminal offence, that person is the only witness for the defence, the right given by section 2 of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1865, to the counsel for the prosecution to sum up the evidence is not taken away by the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, but is postponed until after the person charged has given his evidence, and in such summing up counsel is entitled to comment upon the evidence given by the person charged as well as upon that given for the prosecution.—REG. v. GARDNER, C.C.R., 77; [1899] 1 Q. B. 150; 68 L. J. Q. B. 42; 79 L. T. 358.

4. False pretences—Evidence—Admissibility—Similar acts by defendant after offence charged—Right of defendant to give evidence before grand jury —Right of judge to comment on failure of defendant to give evidence—Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 36), s. 1.—The Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, does not entitle the person charged to give evidence for the defence before the grand jury, nor does it negative the right of the presiding judge to comment upon the failure of the person charged to give evidence at the trial.

On the trial of a person charged with obtaining goods by false pretences, it was proved that the prisoner caused an advertisement to be inserted in newspapers suggesting that he was carrying on a bonâ fide business, and required the goods for that business, and that the prosecutor supplied him with the goods on the faith of that advertisement. Evidence was admitted that, at intervals of one week and two months respectively after the transaction with the prosecutor, two other persons supplied the defendant with similar goods on the faith of the same advertisement, and were not paid for their goods.

Held, that the evidence was rightly admitted as tending to show that the defendant had no genuine business, but was carrying on a system of fraud.

Reg. v. Holt, 9 W. R. 74, 30 L. J. M. C. 11, distinguished.

Reg. v. Francis, 22 W. R. 663, L. R. 2 C. C. R. 128, followed.—REG. v. RHODES, C.C.R., 121; [1899] 1 Q. B. 77; 68 L. J. Q. B. 83; 79 L. T. 360.

5. Falsification of account—Collector of poor rate—Balance of account—Falsification of Accounts Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 24), s. 1.—A collector of poor rates whose duties included the keeping of the Overseers' Receipt and Payment Book, stated the account showing a balance to be due from the overseers to the inhabitants. This balance, which was correct as to the difference between receipts and expenditure, he stated as "balance in hand." He, however, was unable to produce this amount.

Held, that the words "in hand" did not make the entry false, the account being a correct record of receipts and expenditure, and that the collector could not therefore be convicted of falsification of accounts even if he had misappropriated the amount.—REG. v. WILLIAMS, C.C.R.; 79 L. T. 739.

6. Fugitive offender—Committal to await return—Power to admit to bail—Jurisdiction—Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 69).—Where a magistrate has made an order, under the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, committing to prison a person accused of having committed an offence, to which Part I. of the Act applies, in some part of Her Majesty's dominions, or within the jurisdiction of a Consular Court, to await his return to the place where the offence is alleged to have been committed, the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court has jurisdiction to admit the accused to bail until the time for his return.—REG. v. SPILSBURY, Q.B.D.; [1898] 2 Q. B. 615; 79 L. T. 211.

7. Larceny—Restitution and recovery of stolen property—Current coin of the realm—Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), s. 100—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 49), ss. 27 (3), 33 (1).—A current coin of the realm which has not been passed into circulation may be sold as a curiosity, and if such coin has been stolen from its owner by the vendor, and the latter is subsequently convicted of larceny, an order of restitution of the coin to the owner may be made against the purchaser under section 100 of the Larceny Act, 1861.

Semble, that, if the thief has dealt with the coin as current coin and has passed it into circulation, no order of restitution can be made against a bonâ fide receiver, notwithstanding that the coin may be able to be identified.

A. stole a five-pound gold piece, which had never passed into circulation, from B., who had kept it as a curiosity, and changed it with a dealer of curiosities for five sovereigns.

Held, that an order of restitution might be made under section 100 of the Larceny Act, 1861, against the purchaser.—MOSS v. HANCOCK, Q.B.D., 698; [1899] 2 Q. B. 111; 68 L. J. Q. B. 657; 80 L. T. 693.

8. Manslaughter—Infant child—Neglect to provide medical aid—Religious belief that medical aid is wrong—Wilful neglect—Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 41), s. 1.—Section 1 of the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1894, enacts that "If any person over the age of sixteen years, who has the custody, charge, or care of any child under the age of sixteen years, wilfully . . . neglects . . . such child . . . in a manner likely to cause such child unnecessary suffering or injury to its health . . . that person shall be guilty of a misdemeanour."

On the trial of an indictment for manslaughter it was proved that the prisoner was the father and had the custody of a child of the age of eight or nine months; that the child died of diarrhœa and pneumonia; that during its illness the prisoner, though aware of the gravity of its condition, had not provided it with any medical aid or medicine; that he had the means to do so; that he belonged to a sect called the "Peculiar People," who think it contrary to the teaching of the Bible to use medical aid or drugs for the sick; that the prisoner employed an experienced nurse, also a member of that sect, to nurse the child; that he was in other respects a kind father; and that the child's life would have been prolonged and probably saved if medical assistance had been procured. The prisoner was convicted.

Held, that there was evidence that the prisoner had "wilfully neglected" the child within the meaning of the above section, and that, death having ensued from such neglect, the prisoner was properly convicted of manslaughter.—REG. v. SENIOR, C.C.R., 367; [1899] 1 Q. B. 283; 68 L. J. Q. B. 175; 79 L. T. 562.

9. Obtaining property by false representations—Property obtained in England on false representations made in foreign country—Jurisdiction.—A person made false representations in Glasgow as to his credit and financial position. On the faith of these representations goods were supplied to him on credit at Gateshead, in the county of Durham. He was shortly afterwards made bankrupt. Upon these facts he was tried at Durham for the offences—under the Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62), ss. 11 (13) and 13 (1)—of having obtained the goods on credit by false representations within four months next before the presentation of a bankruptcy petition against him, and of having obtained credit for the goods under false pretences.

Held, that the offences were committed at Gateshead, and that the court had jurisdiction to try the prisoner.—REG. v. ELLIS, C.C.R., 188; [1899] 1 Q. B. 230; 68 L. J. Q. B. 103; 79 L. T. 532.

10. Vagrancy—Pretending to tell fortunes—Intent to deceive—Rogue and vagabond—Vagrancy Act, 1824 (5 Geo. 4, c. 83), s. 4.—By the Vagrancy Act, 1824, s. 4, "Every person pretending or professing to tell fortunes, or using any subtle craft, means, or device, by palmistry or otherwise, to deceive and impose on any of His Majesty's subjects," shall be deemed to be a rogue and vagabond, and be liable to penalties.

A person was convicted of being a rogue and vagabond, for that she did unlawfully pretend to tell fortunes. The information alleged that the defendant did pretend or profess to tell fortunes. The justices were satisfied on the evidence that the defendant had unlawfully pretended to tell fortunes to deceive and impose upon certain of Her Majesty's subjects.

On the argument of an order nisi for a certiorari to remove and quash the conviction,

Held, that, in order to justify a conviction under the statute, there must be an intent to deceive, but that the intent was implied in the words "pretending or professing," and therefore it was unnecessary that the intent should be specifically alleged, and the conviction was good.—REG. v. ENTWISTLE, EX PARTE JONES, Q.B.D.; [1899] 1 Q. B. 846; 68 L. J. Q. B. 580; 80 L. T. 656.

See also Gibraltar, Law of.

DAMAGES:—

1. Measure of—Contract for sale of coals to ship—Sub-contract by vendor with colliery owner—Costs of reasonably defending action by shipowner—Solicitor and client costs.—The plaintiff, a coal merchant, entered into a contract with a shipowner for the supply of bunker coals to ships over a certain period, and, in order to carry out this contract, the plaintiff entered into a contract with the defendants, who carried on business in the same place, for the supply of coals to the ships for the same period. The defendants having made default in the supply of coals, one of the ships was detained in dock, and the shipowner brought an action against the plaintiff to recover damages for the detention arising from the breach of contract. The plaintiff gave notice of the claim to the defendants, who repudiated liability. The plaintiff accordingly defended the action and paid a sum of money into court. At the trial it was held that the amount paid into court was sufficient to satisfy the shipowner's claim, and judgment was entered for the shipowner for the amount so paid into court, with costs up to the time of the payment into court, the plaintiff to have the costs of the action subsequent to that time. The plaintiff thereupon sued the defendants for breach of contract, claiming as damages (1) the sum recovered by the shipowner in the former action, (2) the costs paid to the shipowner, and (3) the difference between the plaintiff's costs of the action, taxed as between solicitor and client, and the party and party costs subsequent to the time of the payment into court which he had recovered from the shipowner.

Held, that, as the plaintiff had, in these circumstances, acted reasonably in defending the former action, he was entitled to recover, in addition to items (1) and (2), the difference between the solicitor and client costs of the action, taxed upon the footing that another person was going to pay them, and the party and party costs subsequent to the payment into court.

Hammond v. Bussey, 20 Q. B. D. 79, 36 W. R. Dig. 65, followed.

Baxendale v. London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Co., 23 W. R. 167, L. R. 10 Ex. 35, discussed.—AGIUS v. GREAT WESTERN COLLIERY CO. (LIMITED), C.A., 403; [1899] 1 Q. B. 413; 68 L. J. Q. B. 312; 80 L. T. 140.

2. Measure of—Implied warranty of fitness—Breach—Action against person to whom article was warranted—Damages against him—Costs—Costs of appeal—Liability of warrantor.—Upon the letting of an article for a certain purpose there is an implied warranty that in point of fact the article is reasonably fit for the purpose for which it was supplied.

V. & Co. hired some sacks from O. to unload a cargo of peas. While one sack was being hoisted out of the ship it gave way, and a labourer named B. was injured.

B. brought an action in the county court against V. & Co., and recovered £25 and costs.

V. & Co. appealed against this decision, but the appeal was dismissed with costs.

Held, that the sack was not reasonably fit for the purpose for which it was supplied, and that therefore, the action in the county court not having been unreasonably defended, V. & Co. could recover against O. the £25 damages, the costs they had to pay B., and their own costs in that court, on the authority of Mowbray v. Merryweather (73 L. T. Rep. 459), but that the costs of the appeal could not be recovered.—VOGAN v. OULTON, Q.B.D.; 79 L. T. 384.

See also Arbitration, 1; Bankruptcy, 10; Contract, 1, 8; Divorce, 1; Insurance, 5; Mortgage, 2; Ship, 13; Vendor and Purchaser, 7.

DEED of ARRANGEMENT:—

Deed for benefit of creditors generally—Registration—Validity—Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 57), ss. 4, 5, 19.—A debtor who was unable to pay his debts called a meeting of his creditors, at which he stated that his liabilities were about £5,500, of which about £3,800 was for money lent by relatives, and his assets about £900. It was arranged that the relatives should withdraw their claims, that the creditors should accept a composition of 5s. in the pound, and that one P., who was present, should be the trustee for the creditors. Three days later a deed was executed between the debtor and P. by which the debtor, in consideration of £50 paid to him by P., conveyed all his property to P. absolutely "and not as trustee" for the debtor or his creditors, and P. covenanted to pay in full all claims against the debtor which would have a preferential right in bankruptcy and to pay a composition of 5s. in the pound to the creditors on their debts not exceeding £1,800. This deed was not registered.

Held, that the deed was a deed made for the benefit of creditors generally within section 4 of the Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1887, and was void to all intents and purposes because it was not registered as required by the Act.—HEDGES v. PRESTON, C.A.; 80 L. T. 847.

DESIGN:—

Registration of design—Applicable for pattern—"New or original"—"Pattern"—Marking articles—Statutory requirements—"All proper steps"—Coffin plates—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), ss. 47, 51, 60—Designs Rules, 1890, r. 9.—The term "design" in section 60 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883, was not intended to be used in any technical sense as excluding anything that would ordinarily fall within it; and "pattern" as used in that section might include "shape" or "configuration" or "ornament."

The decision of the Court of Appeal, In re Rollason's Registered Design, [1898] 1 Ch. 237, affirmed.—HEATH & SONS (LIMITED) v. ROLLASON; H. L. [1898] A. C. 499; 79 L. T. 1.

DIVORCE:—

1. Damages—Co-respondent.—Loss of consortium is not the only ground on which damages ought to be assessed against a co-respondent: the mere fact therefore that a husband was separated from his wife at the time she was seduced is no answer to a claim for damages by the husband against the adulterer.—EVANS v. EVANS, P.D. & Ad.D.; 68 L. J. P. 70.

2. Desertion — Husband's refusal to discharge adulterous servant—Consequent separation by wife—Decree.—Upon a wife's petition for divorce on the grounds of desertion and adultery, it appeared that the respondent had refused to break off relations with and to discharge a servant with whom, when taxed, he admitted that he had committed adultery. The petitioner thereupon left the house, and, although overtures were subsequently made by the respondent for a resumption of cohabitation, the petitioner never returned home, owing to the persistent refusal of the respondent to discharge the servant in question.

Held, that the conduct of the husband constituted "desertion" within the meaning of the Divorce

Acts.—KOCH v. KOCH, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1899] P. 221; 68 L. J. P. 90.

3. Wife's petition—Cohabitation.—A husband may be guilty of desertion, though the husband and wife have never cohabited.—DE LAUBANQUE v. DE LAUBANQUE, P.D. & Ad.D.; 68 L. J. P. 20; 79 L. T. 708.

4. Evidence—Indian marriage—Certificate—Copy.—The court will accept as proof of a marriage in India a copy of the original marriage register furnished by the India Office.—WESTMACOTT v. WESTMACOTT, P.D. & Ad.D.; 68 L. J. P. 63; 80 L. T. 632.

5. Foreign law—Decree of foreign court competent to deal with the cause—Irregularity—Want of jurisdiction — Validity. — A decree pronounced by a foreign court competent to deal with the case must, if not contrary to natural justice, be treated in this country as valid until it is set aside, though the irregularities of the process by which it was obtained were such as by the local law to deprive the foreign court of jurisdiction. A decree of divorce pronounced by a Florida divorce court between persons whom it was competent to summon before it will, therefore, be received here as valid, even if it be the law of Florida that, the the summons having been issued only ten days (instead of ten clear days) before the return day, the court had no jurisdiction, and its decree is an absolute nullity.—PEMBERTON v. HUGHES, C.A., 354; [1899] 1 Ch. 781; 68 L. J. Ch. 281; 80 L. T. 369.

6. Maintenance of wife and children—Payment of capital sum without settlement—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), s. 32—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 61), s. 4.—Upon a dissolution of marriage at the suit of the wife, where the husband disappeared, and the only asset available was a sum of money standing in his name in a suit in the Chancery Division, the wife being entirely without means, the court, on a petition, ordered the balance (about £200), after payment of costs, to be paid to the wife (without any settlement) for the benefit of herself and children.

Morris v. Morris, 31 L. J. P. & M. 33, followed.—STANLEY v. STANLEY, P.D. & Ad.D., 272; [1898] P. 227; 68 L. J. P. 7; 79 L. T. 104.

7. Nullity—Alimony pendente lite after decree nisi.—Where it has been proved beyond question that a marriage sought to be set aside was bigamous, the court has discretion to at once relieve a petitioner from the obligation to pay alimony pendente lite between decree nisi and decree absolute.—CHILDERS v. CHILDERS, P.D. & Ad.D.; 68 L. J. P. 90.

8. Permanent maintenance—Substituted service—Petitioner's affidavit of ignorance as to respondent's whereabouts.—In an application for substituted service of a petition for permanent maintenance, the affidavit of the petitioner proving ignorance of the respondent's whereabouts is not essential.—SCHRAML v. SCHRAML, P.D. & Ad.D.; 68 L. J. P. 47; 80 L. T. 328.

9. Permanent maintenance—Variation of order—Practice—Appeal.—A wife obtained a dissolution of marriage and filed a petition for maintenance.

A large portion of the respondent's income was derived from a mortgage producing 5 per cent.

The registrar made his report and the court confirmed it on the basis of the respondent's income during the subsistence of this mortgage. Notice that the mortgage was to be paid off had now been given.

Application was now made to vary the order on the ground that after payment of the mortgage interest at the rate of 5 per cent. could not be obtained, and that under the circumstances the respondent would be deprived of an undue amount of income.

Held, that the point not having been taken or reserved at the hearing of the motion to confirm the registrar's report, the court had now no power to vary the order, and that, except by consent, no variation thereof could be obtained except by appeal.—SMITH v. SMITH, P.D. & Ad.D.; 79 L. T. 124.

10. Practice — Co-respondent — Assumed name — Service — Amendment of petition. — The husband petitioned for a divorce on the ground of his wife's adultery with a man who was unknown to the petitioner, but who was alleged to have cohabited with the respondent under a name known to the respondent. The petitioner, who was abroad, applied for leave to proceed without a co-respondent, or, alternatively, for substituted service on the unknown man under the name known to the petitioner.

Held, that substituted service by advertisement ought to be ordered, but that the petition might be amended without being resworn.—NICHOLAS v. NICHOLAS, P.D. & Ad.D.; 68 L. J. P. 66; 80 L. T. 422.

11. Practice—Irish divorce bill—Evidence taken in India.—Evidence taken in India on commission, and received and acted on by the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice in Ireland, admitted to be used on the second reading of an Irish divorce bill.—JONES' DIVORCE BILL, H.L.; [1899] A. C. 348.

12. Restitution of conjugal rights—Separation—Covenant.—A breach of covenant in a deed of mutual separation must be of a substantial and deliberate nature to prevent the party committing the breach setting up the deed as a defence to a suit for restitution of conjugal rights. — KUNSKI v. KUNSKI, P.D. & Ad.D.; 68 L. J. P. 18.

13. Variation of marriage settlements—Divorced wife—Power of appointment in favour of husband—Remainder to children in default of appointment—Settlement varied as though power of appointment exercised—Proportion of wife's income to be appropriated to husband and children—20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 45—22 & 23 Vict. c. 61, s. 5.—Under a marriage settlement a fund, the property of the wife, was settled on her for life with a power to appoint by will to the husband for life in case he survived her, and in default of appointment to the children of the marriage absolutely.

Held, that on the wife's divorce without exercising the power of appointment, the court had power to order that the income of the settled fund should be paid to the husband for his life after the wife's death, in spite of the fact that the children's interests might thereby be diminished, the ground of the decision being that the husband and the children ought to be placed in the same position, as nearly as circumstances would permit, as if the family life had not been broken up by the wife, and that, but for the wife's misconduct, she would in all probability have exercised the power of appointment in the husband's favour.—HARTOPP v. HARTOPP, P.D. & Ad.D.; 68 L. J. P. 33; 80 L. T. 297.

14. Variation of settlement—Allowance for husband—Settlement of one-third—Incumbrances on income of wife—Reversionary life interest of wife—Allowance to child of marriage—Continuance of, after attaining majority—Special circumstances—Practice—Divorce Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), ss. 32, 45.—In determining the settlement to be made out of the income of a person who is ordered to make a settlement under the Divorce Act, 1857, it must be ascertained what the person ordered to settle receives after keeping down all charges on the income.

In ordering a settlement to be made under section 45 of the Divorce Act, 1857, the court has jurisdiction to take into account any property to which a guilty wife is entitled in reversion, and it is proper so to do, having regard to the principle established by March v. March, 1 P. & D. 440, and Noel v. Noel, 10 P. D. 179, notwithstanding the decision of Butt, J., in Harrison v. Harrison, 12 P. D. 130.

Although, in principle, it is not desirable to make a child, even of a wife who has misconducted herself, independent of his parent, by ordering his allowance for maintenance and education, under section 45 of the Divorce Act, 1857, to continue after he has attained his majority, yet, under special circumstances, it is proper that the provision should not be made to cease on the happening of that event.—SAVARY v. SAVARY, C.A.; 79 L. T. 607.

15. Wife's petition—Answer alleging adultery, but claiming no relief—Co-respondent's intervention—20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 28—29 & 30 Vict. c. 32, s. 2.—To a wife's petition for dissolution of marriage, the husband filed an answer alleging his wife's adultery, but claiming no relief.

Held, that the man with whom adultery was said to have been committed had no right to intervene. —HARROP v. HARROP, P.D. & Ad.D.; 68 L. J. P. 58; 80 L. T. 171.

16. Wife's petition—Answer alleging wife's adultery with third party, and no claim for cross-relief—Co-respondent—Intervention—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), s. 28—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1866 (29 Vict. c. 32), s. 2.—If, on the presentation of a petition for divorce, a respondent merely puts in an answer to the petition asking that the petition shall be dismissed and no further relief, the intervention of a third party, whose name has been mentioned in the answer, is not permissible. He can only intervene, if the answer claims such further relief as would admit of the answer being treated as a cross-petition.

Harrop v. Harrop, [1899] P. 61, approved.—LOWE v. LOWE, C.A., 553; [1899] P. 204; 68 L. J. P. 60; 80 L. T. 575.

17. Wife's petition—Maintenance—Basis of calculation.—On an application for permanent maintenance by a wife who had obtained a decree nisi on the ground of her husband's cruelty and adultery, the registrar, treating the husband's property as producing 4 per cent. per annum, recommended that an annual sum should be secured to the wife on the husband's property, such sum amounting to one-third of the income thereof at 4 per cent.

The court varied the report by ordering that this sum should be secured on a third only of the husband's property, and that, as to the difference between this sum and the sum produced by such third invested in trust securities, the wife must be content with the husband's personal covenant.

On appeal,

Held, that this order was right, and that the appeal must therefore be dismissed.—SHORTHOUSE v. SHORTHOUSE, C.A.; 79 L. T. 366.

18. Wife's suit—Separation deed not pleaded—Cruelty before separation deed—Covenant not to sue—Undefended suit.—The court granted a wife a decree for dissolution of the marriage on the ground of her husband's cruelty and adultery, the cruelty being before the date of a separation deed, notwithstanding a covenant in the deed providing that no proceedings should be taken in respect of such misconduct, on the ground that the deed had not been pleaded.—DOWLING v. DOWLING, P.D. & Ad.D., 272; [1898] P. 228; 68 L. J. P. 8.

See also Bankruptcy, 10; Justices, 4, 5.

EASEMENT:—

Tramway agreement—Personal or real right—Removal of tramway.—Where a servitude, such as a right of way for a tramway, is claimed as having been granted by an instrument in writing subscribed by the proprietor of the land burdened, the fact that the dominant tenement has not been acquired at the date of the instrument cannot, after it has been actually acquired, prevent the servitude from becoming a legal accessory to the dominant tenement, provided the servitude was so used as to give reasonable notice of the burden to any person in whom the property of the land might subsequently become vested. And although the instrument granting the privilege was in terms which might appropriately be employed in the constitution of a personal obligation only, that is not conclusive against the constitution of a proper burden upon the land, if it be matter of reasonable inference from the terms of the document, or the circumstances of the case, that the constitution of a real servitude was what the parties contemplated.

An agreement between the proprietor of the estate of W., the feuars of part of that estate, and a railway company, provided for the use and construction by the railway company of a tramway through the lands of W., including the lands of the feuars, Held (Lord Morris dissenting), reversing the decision of the Court of Session, (1897) 24 R. 1148, that the privilege of working the tramway as long as it continued was intended to bind, and did bind, all singular successors of the feuars in their lands. —NORTH BRITISH RAILWAY CO. v. PARK YARD CO., H. L. (Sc.); [1898] A. C. 643.

See also Landlord and Tenant, 6; Water, 1.

ECCLESIASTICAL LAW:—

1. Burial—Disinterment—Faculty—Jurisdiction of Consistory Court—Burial Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 81), s. 25.—An ecclesiastical court has no power, in granting a faculty to disinter a body buried in consecrated ground, to cite the cemetery company to whom the ground belongs to appear before it for the purpose of making an order against such cemetery company that the body should be disinterred.

A faculty was granted by an ecclesiastical court to open a certain vault in consecrated ground and to open the lid of a coffin interred therein. In order to open the lid of the coffin it would be necessary to remove another coffin which contained a body.

Semble, that a licence of a secretary of state, pursuant to section 25 of the Burial Act, 1857, was required for such removal in addition to the faculty.—REG. v. TRISTRAM, Q.B.D., 639; [1898] 2 Q. B. 371; 80 L. T. 414.

2. Churchyard—Enlargement of existing churchyard—"Adjoining" land—Intervening highway—Consecration of Churchyards Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 133).—A plot of ground immediately opposite to, but separated by a highway from, an existing churchyard was proposed to be added to the churchyard under the Consecration of Churchyards Act, 1867, which contains provisions for the conveyance and consecration "of portions of ground adjoining and added to existing churchyards."

Held, that it was "adjoining" land within the meaning of the Act.—BATEMAN (BARONESS) AND PARKER'S CONTRACT, RE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 516; [1899] 1 Ch. 599; 68 L. J. Ch. 330; 80 L. T. 469.

3. Ecclesiastical Commissioners — Glebe lands—Contract for sale—Non-payment of purchase-money—Specific performance — Right to sue — Ecclesiastical Leasing Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 108), and 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 57).—By an agreement made in July, 1873, D., a vicar, agreed to sell to trustees of settled estates, with the consent of the tenant for life and also of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners and the patron of the living, certain glebe lands for the sum of £24,963. The Ecclesiastical Commissioners were parties to and executed the contract. The title was accepted, and the tenant for life went into possession. Interest on the unpaid purchase-money (which was more than an investment would have produced) was paid regularly to the vicar and his successors in office until 1896, when the Ecclesiastical Commissioners brought an action claiming specific performance of the contract, or damages, or, in the alternative, the enforcement of a vendor's lien.

Held, that the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, by virtue of their statutory powers, were bound to see that the purchase-money was paid and secured, and that, therefore, they had a good cause of action.—ECCLESIASTICAL COMMISSIONERS v. PINNEY, C.A., 136; [1899] 1 Ch. 99; 68 L. J. Ch. 30; 79 L. T. 604.

4. Faculty—Jurisdiction—Re-pewing of portion of new parish church originally appropriated to school children—Absence of power in Ordinary to authorize the creation of pew-rents—Position of parishioners subscribing to church expenses—Church Building Act, 1818 (58 Geo. 3, c. 45), ss. 75, 77, 84, 85—Church Building Act, 1822 (3 Geo. 4, c. 72), ss. 36, 37—Churchwardens.—The seats in a new parish church were in 1885 allotted by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners as follows: two pews for the vicar of the parish and his family; 315 sittings to be let to pew-renters; 222 sittings as free seats, and seventy-two sittings as seats for children, in the expectation that the population of the parish would in the main be composed of working men. This expectation was not realized, and in 1898 the vicar and churchwardens of the parish applied to the Ordinary to authorize by faculty the substitution of pews for adults in the place of the seventy-two sittings allotted as children's seats as above mentioned, and the letting of the substituted pews at pew-rents to be expended in church improvements and expenses.

Held, that the Ordinary had no jurisdiction to grant a faculty appropriating to other purposes seats allotted by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners as free seats or authorizing the letting of any seats to pew-renters, but that a faculty might be decreed in his discretion for the substitution of pews for adults in which the churchwardens might seat parishioners in the place of the seventy-two sittings for children; the allotment of such sittings having been made by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners without statutory authority.

Semble, the churchwardens of a church built under the Church Building Acts may, in seating the parishioners in seats in the church not appropriated to pew-renters or allotted as free seats by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, give a preference to applicants who voluntarily subscribe to a fund for church improvements and expenses.—VICAR OF ST. SAVIOUR, WESTGATE-ON-SEA v. PARISHIONERS OF SAME, HOUSEMAN INTERVENING, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1898] P. 217.

EDUCATION:—

1. Employment of child—Purposes of gain—Domestic work—Elementary Education Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 79), s. 47.—A child aged thirteen, who had not obtained the certificate mentioned in section 5, sub-section 2, of the Education Act, 1876, and who did not come within the exemption in section 9, was kept at home by her father and employed in household work, whereby the child's mother was enabled to go out to work and to earn a weekly wage.

Held, that the father had not employed his child in any labour for the purposes of gain within the meaning of section 47 of the Act, and was not liable to conviction under that section.—MATHER v. LAWRENCE, Q.B.D., 559; [1899] 1 Q. B. 1000; 68 L. J. Q. B. 714; 80 L. T. 600.

2. Refusal of child at voluntary school—Tender of child at such school—Non-attendance—Breach of bye-law—Reasonable excuse.—Under the bye-laws of the S. School Board, the parent of every child not less than five or more than thirteen years of age shall cause such child to attend school, unless there shall be a reasonable excuse for non-attendance.

The child of the appellant was ten years of age, and had up to May, 1898, attended at St. G. School, which was a voluntary and public elementary school, but had then been refused admission. The Education Department had confirmed the action of the managers in refusing admission. Since then the appellant had and still declined to send the child to any other school than St. G. School. He had had notice of the managers' refusal, and was informed by the S. School Board that he must send his child to another school, and the board had mentioned to him certain schools within two miles that would receive the child. On several occasions the appellant sent the child, between May and September, to the doors of St. G. School, but it was always refused admission.

Held, that the offering did not constitute an attendance, and that no reasonable excuse for the non-attendance had been proved.—JONES v. ROWLAND, Q.B.D.; 80 L. T. 630.

3. Teacher's remuneration—Superannuation fund—Management by board—Elementary Education Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 75), s. 35.—A school board established and managed a superannuation fund for the payment of allowances to their officers and teachers upon their superannuation. This fund was provided by annual deductions from the salaries of the officers and teachers, made in pursuance of contracts between them and the board.

Held, affirming the judgment of a Divisional Court, [1898] 1 Q. B. 4, that the officers and teachers could not recover back the amount of the deductions from their salaries, for (1) even if it was ultra vires for the board to pay the expenses of managing the fund out of the school rates, it was no part of the contract between the board and the officers and teachers that this should be done, and the making of the contract was therefore not ultra vires; (2) assuming that the board could not undertake the management of the fund, in the absence of power under the Elementary Education Acts to do so, the money having been applied to the purposes for which it was subscribed, and the subscribers having had the right to participate in the benefits of the fund, there had been no failure of consideration.—PHILLIPS v. LONDON SCHOOL BOARD; COCKERTON v. SAME, C.A.; [1898] 2 Q. B. 447; 79 L. T. 50.

ELECTION LAW:—

1. Municipal corporation—Nomination—Candidate—Right to petition—Disqualification existing at date of nomination—Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), ss. 77, 88.—The petitioner and the respondent were duly nominated as candidates for election to the office of councillor for a ward of a municipal borough. The petitioner was, at the time of his nomination, interested in a contract with the corporation of the borough. At the hearing of objections to nomination papers the respondent objected to the petitioner's nomination on the ground that his interest in such contract disqualified him (under section 12 (1) (c) of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882) for election. The mayor allowed the objection, and the respondent, being the only other candidate, was declared to be elected as on an uncontested election. On a petition being presented by the petitioner against the return of the respondent, it was admitted, on the authority of Pritchard v. Mayor, &c., of Bangor, 37 W. R. 103, 13 App. Cas. 241, that the mayor had no jurisdiction to entertain the objection, but it was contended that the petitioner, being disqualified at the date of the nomination, was not entitled as a candidate (within the meaning of sections 77 and 88 of the Act) to present a petition.

Held, that, although the petitioner was disqualified for nomination as well as for election, yet, having been nominated in proper form, he was a "candidate" and entitled to present the petition.

Monks v. Jackson, 1 C. P. D. 683, 25 W. R. Dig. 110, distinguished.—HARFORD v. LYNSKEY, Q.B.D. 653; [1899] 1 Q. B. 852; 68 L. J. Q. B. 599; 80 L. T. 417.

2. Municipal election — Illegal hiring — Relief—Practice—Municipal Elections (Corrupt Practices) Act, 1884, s. 20.—Where an application for relief from an illegal hiring is made under section 20 of the Municipal Elections Act, 1884, by several candidates, a joint affidavit of the facts upon which the application is based ought to be made by all the applicants.—ANDREWS, RE, Q.B.D.; 68 L. J. Q. B. 683.

3. Parliament—Illegal practice—Penalties—Return of election expenses—"Transmit," meaning of—Corrupt and Illegal Practices Prevention Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 61), s. 33, sub-sections 1, 5.—By section 33, sub-section 1, of the Corrupt and Illegal Practices Prevention Act, 1883, it is enacted that, within thirty-five days after the day on which a candidate returned at a parliamentary election is declared elected, the election agent "shall transmit to the returning officer a true return" respecting the election expenses. By sub-section 5 a candidate who has failed to comply with the requirements of section 33 is liable to a penalty for each day on which he sits or votes in the House of Commons.

The defendant was a candidate at a parliamentary election, and was declared elected on the 23rd of July. The thirty-five days expired on the 27th of August, on which day, at 10 p.m., the defendant, who was his own election agent, posted to the returning officer a return of his expenses. The return reached the returning officer in the ordinary course of post on the 29th of August. The return was incorrect in that it omitted one item of expenditure, as to which the defendant had not received an authorized excuse under section 34. The defendant sat and voted in the House of Commons on the 28th of August and on subsequent days.

Held, that the defendant, by posting the return on the 27th of August, had complied with the requirements of section 33, sub-section 1, as to transmission within thirty-five days, and that, although the return was incorrect, it was none the less a return within the meaning of section 33.—MACKINNON v. CLARK, C.A., 19; [1898] 2 Q. B. 251; 79 L. T. 83.

4. Registration—Parliament—Borough vote—Claim—Misdescription of qualifying property—Mistake—Amendment—Parliamentary Registration Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 26), s. 28, sub-sections 2, 13.—Sub-section 13 of section 28 of the Parliamentary Registration Act, 1878, applies only to the description of the legal character or nature of the qualification (i.e., the third column of the entry in a list or claim)—not to the description of the qualifying property (i.e., the fourth column).

In a claim, the third column (nature of the qualification) was "houses in succession," and the fourth column (description of the qualifying property) was "202, Gordon-road and 31, Monk-street." The claim having been objected to, it was proved that the claimant had in fact occupied in immediate succession during the qualifying period, 202, Gordon-road and 33 (not 31), Monk-street; and that 31, Monk-street (which was in fact occupied by another person) had been inserted in the claim by mistake instead of No. 33. The revising barrister amended the claim by altering "31," Monk-street to "33," Monk-street in the fourth column.

Held, that the revising barrister had power to make the amendment, as he did not thereby "change the description of the qualification" within the meaning of those words in sub-section 13 of section 28.—KITCHEN v. JOHNSON, Q.B.D., 110; [1899] 1 Q. B. 95; 68 L. J. Q. B. 11; 79 L. T. 422.

5. Registration — Parliament — Borough vote — Duplicate entry—Notice of selection—Appeal—Parliamentary and Municipal Registration Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 26), s. 28, sub-section 14—Registration Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 18), s. 42.—Section 28, sub-section 14, of the Parliamentary and Municipal Registration Act, 1878, enacts that, "Where the name of any person appears to be entered more than once as a parliamentary voter on the lists of voters . . . any such person may, by notice in writing delivered to the revising barrister at the opening of his first revision court, select the entry to be retained for voting. . . ."

Held, that this power of selection did not exist where one of two entries was an entry appearing in the overseers' list of voters, and the other was only an entry appearing in the list of claims—even although the claim was, in the course of revision, allowed—because the duplicate entries must exist in the list of voters at the time when the notice of selection is required to be given—viz., at the opening of the first revision court.

Held, also, that no appeal lies from a decision of a revising barrister as to the validity or invalidity of a notice of selection of entry given by a voter.

Reg. v. The Revising Barrister of Liverpool, 43 W. R. 220, [1895] 1 Q. B. 155, followed—JONES v. MUNRO, Q.B.D., 109; [1899] 1 Q. B. 10.9; 68 L. J. Q. B. 28; 79 L. T. 500.

6. Registration—Parliament—Notice of objection—

Omission in body of notice of place of abode of person objected to—Validity—Parliamentary Registration Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 15), s. 18—Statute Law Revision Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 22)—Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), s. 76, sub-section 7—Registration Order, 1895, Schedule I., Form 5 (a).—Notwithstanding the repeal of section 18 of the Parliamentary Registration Act, 1885, an immaterial deviation—even though intentional—from any form prescribed in the Registration Order, 1895, will not of itself invalidate a claim or notice of objection; but if a claim or notice of objection fails in any substantial respect to give the information required to be given to the person who is to receive it, then it is invalid.

A notice of objection sent by post to a person whose name was entered on the register of ownership electors omitted to give (as prescribed in Form 5 (a), Schedule I., of the Registration Order, 1895), in the body of the notice itself, the place of abode, as described in the register, of the person objected to; but on the back of the notice of objection there was written, for postal purposes, the name of the person objected to and his place of abode as described in the register. The omission to give in the body of the notice the place of abode of the party objected to was intentional.

Held (reversing the revising barrister) that the notice of objection was not invalid on account of such omission.—LINFORTH v. BUTLER, Q.B.D., 141; [1899] 1 Q. B. 116; 68 L. J. Q. B. 3; 79 L. T. 498.

7. Registration—Parliament—Notice of objection—Place of abode of objector—Mistake—Amendment—Parliamentary and Municipal Registration Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 26), s. 28, sub-section 2—Registration Order, 1895, Schedule III., Form 1.—In signing a notice of objection to a name being retained on the occupier's list of voters in a borough, the objector, instead of stating his place of abode, as required by the Registration Order, 1895, gave the address of a shop within the borough, which was his qualifying property. His place of abode was outside the borough, and he thought he ought to give his address within the borough and not an address outside it. No one was in any way affected by the mistake.

Held, that the revising barrister had power to amend the mistake.

Judgment of the Queen's Bench Division (ante, p. 139) affirmed.—PRESCOTT v. LEE, C.A., 690; [1899] 2 Q. B. 273.

ELECTRIC LIGHT:—

Inspector—Fees and reasonable expenses—Electric Lighting Orders Confirmation (No. 15) Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. ccxxxix.), s. 14.—Section 47 of the Electric Lighting Orders Confirmation (No. 15) Act, 1890, provides that all fees and reasonable expenses of an inspector shall, in the absence of any agreement, be paid by the undertakers. There is a proviso by which such fees and expenses are chargeable to the consumer in the event of any default or negligence being shown against him.

Held, that the "fees and reasonable expenses" referred to in the first part of the section are limited to such fees and expenses as would be chargeable against the consumer under the proviso, and that, accordingly, the salary of the inspector, the expenses of an electrical laboratory, the wages of assistants, and the cost of the instruments, furniture, and fittings of the laboratory are not chargeable against the undertakers.—CRAWFORD v. CITY OF LONDON ELECTRIC LIGHTING CO., Q.B.D., 45.

ESTOPPEL:—

Res judicata—Probate—Practice—Heir-at-law party as one of next-of-kin only—Decision establishing will—Action of ejectment by heir-at-law alleging intestacy—Court of Probate Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 77), ss. 61, 62, 63.—In an action for establishing a will in the Probate Division to which the heir-at-law of the deceased is a party as one of the next-of-kin, it is not necessary also to cite him in his character of heir-at-law in order that he should be bound as to the real estate of the deceased by the decision of the court.

Held, therefore, that an heir-at-law who had been a party to a probate suit as one of the next-of-kin only, was bound by the decision of the court establishing the will, and was estopped from afterwards bringing an action of ejectment founded upon the alleged intestacy of the deceased.—BEARDSLEY v. BEARDSLEY, Q.B.D., 284; [1899] 1 Q. B. 746; 80 L. T. 51.

See also Company, 13; Landlord and Tenant, 20; Trover.

EXECUTOR:—

1. Action for testator's misrepresentations—Actio personalis moritur cum persona.—An action claiming unliquidated damages arising from the misrepresentations of a testator will not lie against his personal representatives, but only if that which it is sought to recover from his estate can be shown to be still the property of the plaintiff.—DUNCAN, RE, TERRY v. SWEETING, Ch.D. Romer, J., 379; [1899] 1 Ch. 387; 68 L. J. Ch. 253; 80 L. T. 322.

2. Retainer—Following assets—Retainer for debt of deceased without notice of debt of higher degree.—An executor who pays creditors without notice of the existence of a creditor of higher degree is not liable to account at the instance of that creditor for the sums so paid. Retainer of the amount of a debt out of a deceased person's estate by the executor is payment at law, and he is therefore not liable to refund if an enforceable debt of higher degree, of which he had no notice, should afterwards appear to be due.

Blake v. Gale, 34 W. R. 555, 32 Ch. D. 571, distinguished.—FLUDYER, RE, WINGFIELD v. ERSKINE, Ch.D. Romer, J., 5; [1898] 2 Ch. 562; 79 L. T. 298.

See also Administration, 4, 7; Assignment, 4; Limitation Statutes, 8.

FACTOR:—

Pledge—Documents of title—Foreign arrestment—Conflict of laws—Goods in Scotland—Factors Acts, 1889, 1890 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45, ss. 3, 9; 53 & 54 Vict. c. 40, s. 1).—Where goods are lodged in warehouses in Scotland a pledgee of the goods must, to make effective all real rights which depend on the constructive delivery of the goods, give notice of the pledge to the warehouse-keeper.

The Factors Act, 1889, extended to Scotland by the Factors (Scotland) Act, 1890, enacts—section 3: "A pledge of the documents of title to goods shall be deemed to be a pledge of the goods"; and section 1: "For the purposes of this Act" (sub-section 5) "the expression 'pledge' shall include any contract, pledging, or giving a lien or security on, goods, whether in consideration of an original advance or of any further or continuing advance or of any pecuniary liability." Section 9 prescribes that the effect of delivery or transfer of the documents of title of the goods under any pledge, &c., by a person who, having bought the goods, obtains, with the consent of the seller, possession of the goods or documents of title, shall have the same effect as if the person making the delivery or transfer were a mercantile agent in possession of the goods or documents of title with the consent of the owner.

Goods were stored by G., a domiciled Englishman, in a bonded warehouse in Glasgow, transferred into the name of G. as owner; and the warehouse-keeper issued to G. delivery orders showing that the goods were held to G.'s order "or assigns by indorsement hereon." G. obtained a loan from I., an English merchant, and delivered to him in England a letter of hypothecation bearing that he deposited a part of the goods with him in security, with power of sale, and G. indorsed and handed to I. the delivery warrants. I. did not intimate or give notice of the right he had acquired to the warehouse-keeper. R. and B., claiming as personal creditors of G., arrested the goods in the hands of the warehouse-keeper in order to found jurisdiction against G. in Scotland; and then raised an action against him in the Scottish court, upon dependence of which they again arrested the goods, claiming through the arrestment a preferable right thereto.

Held, affirming the decision of the majority of the whole Scottish judges, [1897] 24 R. 758, that the case was governed by the law of Scotland, and that the right of the pledgee, I., in the goods was defeated by the arrestment executed by R. and B., I. not having intimated his pledge to the warehouse-keeper.

Held, also, that section 3 of the Factors Act, 1889, was merely intended to define the full effect of the pledge of the documents of title made by a mercantile agent, and that it had no application to the case of the pledge of the documents of title by one in the positon of G., who was not a mercantile agent within the meaning of the Act; nor was G. a pledgor within section 9 of the same Act.—INGLIS v. ROBERTSON, H.L. (Sc.); [1898] A. C. 616; 79 L. T. 224.

See also Sale of Goods, 1.

FACTORY:—

Fencing machinery—Breach of statutory duty—Liability—Common employment—Factory and Workshop Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 16), ss. 5, 82, 87.—Where the proprietor of a factory fails to perform the duty imposed upon him by section 5 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878, to fence and maintain the fencing of dangerous machinery, an action to recover damages will lie at the suit of a person injured thereby, notwithstanding that the Act has imposed a penalty for the breach of the statutory duty.

The defence of common employment is no answer to such an action.—GROVES v. LORD WIMBORNE, C.A., 87; [1898] 2 Q. B. 402; 79 L. T. 284.

FINANCE ACTS.—See Inland Revenue, 2, 13.

FISHERY:—

Fisheries Committee—Purchase of vessel for use of fishery officer—Expenditure—Power to impose restrictions and conditions—Sea Fisheries Regulation Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 54), s. 6.—Where a sea fisheries district has been created by an order of the Board of Trade under the Sea Fisheries Regulation Act, 1888, and a joint committee has been constituted consisting of the representatives of several county councils and borough councils as well as other bodies, any one of the paying councils is not exempt from contributing to the expenses incurred by the committee in the purchase of a vessel for the use of their fishery officer unless the restrictions and conditions as to expenditure referred to in section 6 of the said Act are made, if not at the time of the original constitution of the committee, at least before any appointment by the committee of its fishery officer; and such restrictions and conditions cannot be imposed by one only of the contributing bodies, but must be agreed to by all.—REG. v. YORKSHIRE (NORTH RIDING) COUNTY COUNCIL, Q.B.D., 205; [1899] 1 Q. B. 201; 68 L. J. Q. B. 93; 79 L. T. 521.

See also Justices, 10.

FOREIGN ENLISTMENT ACT:—

1. Contract by English owners to sell ships to American Government—Contract to be void if United States became belligerents—Outbreak of war—Action to recover deposit—Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 90), s. 8 (4).—By section 8 (4) of the Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870, it is an offence for anyone to despatch, or cause or allow to be despatched, any ship with intent or knowledge, or having reasonable cause to believe, that the same shall or will be employed in the military or naval service of any foreign state at war with any friendly state.

The defendants on the 21st of April, 1898, contracted to sell to the plaintiffs, the United States Government, prior to the commencement of hostilities between that country and Spain, two steamships, "to be delivered as soon as possible."

The plaintiffs paid a deposit, which was subject to the following clause of the contract: "If from blockade, or any other cause arising from the United States becoming belligerents and preventing delivery of either of the said steamers, this contract is to be null and void, but the vendor is to retain the deposit as and for liquidated damages."

It was impossible for the defendants to have despatched the ships before the day (23rd of April) when the United States commenced hostilities with Spain; but the proclamation of neutrality by the British Government was not published until the 26th of April. In an action to recover the deposit,

Held, that the defendants' contention that they were "prevented" from making delivery by reason of the above-cited section of the Act of 1870, was a good defence to the action.—UNITED STATES OF AMERICA v. PELLY, Q.B.D., 332.

2. False representation—Right of action—Person induced by misrepresentation to commit crime—Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 90), s. 11.—Where a person is induced by the fraudulent misrepresentation of another to do an act which, in consequence of such misrepresentation, he believes to be neither illegal or immoral, but which is in fact a criminal offence, he has a right of action against the person so inducing him for damages sustained by him in consequence of his having done such act.—BURROWS v. RHODES, Q.B.D.; [1899] 1 Q. B. 816; 68 L. J. Q. B. 545; 80 L. T. 591.

FRAUDS, STATUTE of:—

1. Agreement for a lease—Sufficiency of memorandum—Time of commencement of term not stated—Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3), s. 4.—In order to satisfy the requirements of section 4 of the Statute of Frauds, the written memorandum of a contract for the grant of a lease must, either expressly or by reasonable inference, state the time at which the term is to commence.—HUMPHREY v. CONYBEARE, C.A.; 80 L. T. 40.

2. Contract—Enforceability by action—Contract not to be performed within the space of one year—Lease of chattel for three years.—The owner of a chattel agreed to let it out on hire for the term of three years at a quarterly rent,

Held, that the consideration for the hirer's promise was not capable of being performed within the space of one year, and that therefore the contract was within section 4 of the Statute of Frauds.—MILSOM v. STAFFORD, C.A.; 80 L. T. 590.

3. Part performance—Landlord and tenant—Verbal agreement for lease with existing tenant—Payment of increased rent.—Payment by the tenant and acceptance by the landlord of an increased rent in respect of premises hitherto held and occupied by the tenant as a yearly tenant, may be acts unequivocally and in their nature referable to an alleged new agreement for a lease for twenty-one years, and therefore such a part performance as takes the case out of the Statute of Frauds and allows parol evidence to be given of the alleged agreement.

Nunn v. Fabian, L. R. 1 Ch. App. 35, 14 W. R. Ch. Dig. 119, explained and followed.—MILLER & ALDWORTH v. SHARP, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 268; [1899] 1 Ch. 622; 68 L. J. Ch. 322; 80 L. T. 77.

See also County Court, 7; Sale of Foods, 2; Vendor and Purchaser, 3.

FRIENDLY SOCIETY:—

1. Moneys payable on death of member—Nomination of person to receive—Revocation of nomination—Moneys payable exceeding £100—Friendly Societies Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 60), s. 15, sub-section 3.—A member of a friendly society can, under section 15, sub-section 3, of the Friendly Societies Act, 1875, nominate a person to receive a sum not exceeding £100 payable by the society on his death, even though the total sum payable by the society on his death exceeds £100. Such a nomination can only be revoked in the manner prescribed in the section, and cannot be revoked by will.—BENNETT v. SLATER, C.A., 82; [1899] 1 Q. B. 45; 68 L. J. Q. B. 45; 79 L. T. 324.

2. Policy—Assignment by deed—Validity—Nomination—Death of nominee during lifetime of nominator—Claim by executor—Friendly Societies Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 60), s. 15, sub-section 3.—G. effected a policy on her life for £100 with the defendant friendly society, and assigned all her interest under the same by deed to one J. C., who paid the premiums to the society as they became due. The society refused to treat the assignment as valid, and G. thereupon duly filled up a nomination form and nominated the same J. C. as the person to receive the policy-moneys at her death,

J. C. predeceased G., and the premiums were, during the life of G., paid by C. as the executor of J. C., under the belief that the policy-moneys would become payable under the deed to the estate of the deceased. In an action by C. to recover the policy-moneys upon G.'s death,

Held, that, although a policy granted under the Friendly Societies Acts was not assignable by deed, and therefore that C. could not recover as assignee, yet that he was entitled to the policy-moneys as the executor of the person who had been duly nominated by the assured, since a nomination under section 15, sub-section 3, of the Friendly Societies Act, 1875, if unrevoked, created a vested interest in the nominee.—CADDICK v. HIGHTON, Q.B.D., 668; 68 L. J. Q. B. 281; 80 L. T. 527.

GAMING:—

1. Betting—Criminal law—Sweepstakes on a horse-race—Betting Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 119), ss. 1, 3.—The defendant received subscriptions from a number of persons on the understanding that the money so received, after payment of the actual expenses of management, was to be distributed in certain shares or prizes of different amounts among such of the subscribers as should draw (at a drawing in which all the subscribers were to take part) a ticket bearing a number corresponding with the number attached to the name of a horse in a list of horses entered for a race called "The Derby Sweepstakes," the drawer of the winning horse receiving the largest share or prize.

Held, that the defendant could not be convicted of an offence under section 1 or section 3 of the Betting Act, 1853.

Semble, that the transaction was an illegal lottery.—REG. v. HOBBS, C.C.R., 79; [1898] 2 Q. B. 647; 79 L. T. 160.

2. Betting—Horse-racing—Cheque given in payment of bets—Holder for value with notice—Illegal consideration—9 Anne, c. 14, s. 1—6 & 7 Will 4, c. 41, s. 1.—A cheque was drawn by the defendant in payment of bets lost by him to the payee upon horse-races, and was indorsed for value by the payee to the plaintiff, who had notice of the consideration for which it was drawn.

Held, that the cheque must be deemed to have been drawn upon an illegal consideration, and that the plaintiff, who had notice thereof, could not recover upon it.—WOOLF v. HAMILTON, C.A., 70; [1898] 2 Q. B. 337; 79 L. T. 49.

3. Betting—"Place" used for betting—Betting Houses Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 119), s. 1.—On a certain part of the ground upon which a race meeting was being held a bookmaker erected a structure consisting of four legs or supports made of bamboo fastened together. On the top there was a board on which from time to time the bookmaker wrote the odds offered against the different horses, and, lower down, a canvas screen or banner some distance off the grounnd, bearing the bookmaker's name. Throughout the day the bookmaker stood upon a box or stool close to the structure shouting the odds and betting with persons upon the ground.

Held, that the bookmaker was a person using a place for the purpose of betting with persons resorting thereto within the meaning of the Betting Houses Act, 1853, there being a sufficient localization of the business of betting at the spot where he stood.—BROWN v. PATCH, Q.B.D., 623; [1899] 1 Q. B. 892; 68 L. J. Q. B. 588; 80 L. T. 716.

4. Betting—Reserved enclosure on racecourse—"Using a place" for betting purposes—Betting Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 119), ss. 1, 2, 3.—The keeping an enclosure at a racecourse, to which bookmakers and others resort, and in which betting takes place, with the knowledge and without the interference of the owners of the racecourse, is not contrary to the provisions of the Betting Houses Act, 1853. What is prohibited is the opening, keeping, or using of a place for a betting business.

Hawke v. Dunn, 45 W. R. 359, [1897] 1 Q. B. 579, overruled.

Decision of the Court of Appeal, 46 W. R. 8, [1897] 2 Q. B. 242 (Lords Hobhouse and Davey dissenting), affirmed.—POWELL v. KEMPTON PARK RACECOURSE CO., H.L., 585; [1899] A. C. 143. 68 L. J. Ch. 392; 80 L. T. 538.

5. Betting-house or room—User—Public-house—Betting Houses Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 119)—Licensing Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 94), s. 17 (2).—A professional betting man went day by day, between the hours of 12 noon and 3 p.m., to a public-house. He generally sat in the part of the house known as the saloon, and there conducted the business of ready-money betting, receiving bets and stakes and paying the bets when won. The proprietor and licensee of the public-house was aware of and consented to what the betting man did, but the latter paid no rent. Besides the betting business the ordinary business of a public-house was carried on in the saloon. The betting man had no interest in the latter business, neither had the licensee of the public-house any interest in the betting business.

Held, that the betting man used the public-house for the purpose of betting with persons resorting thereto, and was therefore guilty of an offence against section 3 of the Betting Houses Act, 1853, and that the licensee was guilty of an offence against section 17 (2) of the Licensing Act, 1872.—BELTON v. BUSBY, Q.B.D., 636.

6. Purchase and sale of shares—Payment of differences—Balance due from broker—Purchase of shares from broker—Balance to be taken in payment—Breach of contract by not delivering—"Cover"—"Money deposited to abide the event"—Bankruptcy—Proof—Gaming Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 109), s. 18.—Gaming contracts between a stockbroker and his client, for differences on the sale and purchase of stocks and shares, resulted in a balance in favour of the client. It was agreed that the broker should sell certain stock to the client, which he would accept in payment of the balance due to him, and in pursuance of this agreement a contract note was forwarded by the broker. The stock was not delivered, and the client sought to prove in bankruptcy, against the estate of the broker, for damages for non-delivery of the stock.

Held, reversing the judgment of Wright, J., that, as the balance resulting from the gambling transactions could not have been recovered from the broker, there was no consideration for the promise to deliver the stock, and no proof could be admitted in respect of the non-delivery.

The client had deposited money with the broker as cover to secure him against loss on the gaming transactions which had resulted in a balance in favour of the client.

Held, affirming the judgment of Wright, J., that, the money deposited not having been used for the purpose for which it was deposited, proof in respect of the amount was admissible.—CRONMIRE, RE, WAUD, EX PARTE, C.A.; [1898] 2 Q. B. 383.

7. Stockbroker—Agreement by way of gaming or wagering—Sale and purchase of stocks and shares—Bargain for payment of "differences"—Higher price if stocks taken up—Gaming Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 109), s. 18.—Where contracts between a broker and his customer for the sale and purchase of stocks and shares contained provisions that the price should be one-eighth more if the stock was taken up, or one-eighth less if it was delivered,

Held (following Universal Stock Exchange v. Strachan, 44 W. R. 497, [1896] A. C. 166), that the existence of an option for the customer to demand delivery or payment in cash did not of itself prevent the court finding that the contract was really one for the payment of differences only.

And held, that the provisions as to price showed that the contract was for differences only, and that such an agreement was void as being "by way of gaming or wagering," within the meaning of section 18 of the Gaming Act, 1845.

Decision of Wright, J., reversed.—GIEVE, RE, THE TRUSTEE, EX PARTE, C.A., 441; [1899] 1 Q. B. 794; 68 L. J. Q. B. 509; 80 L. T. 438.

GAS.—See Nuisance.

GIBRALTAR, LAW of :—

Criminal jurisdiction and procedure — Supreme Court at Gibraltar—Morocco Consular Court—Trial at Gibraltar should be by jury.—The Consular Court of Morocco and the Supreme Court of Gibraltar having a concurrent jurisdiction in the matter of an offence charged against the appellant, he was arrested in London and ordered by the Queen's Bench Division to be tried before the Supreme Court at Gibraltar.

Held, that as an incident to that order he was entitled to be tried according to the procedure of that court, that is (see section 38 of the Gibraltar Order in Council), by a jury.—SPILSBURY v. REG., P.C.; [1899] A. C. 392; 68 L. J. P.C. 66; 80 L. T. 602.

GOODWILL.—See Inland Revenue, 26; Mortgage, 9; Partnership, 2.

GUARANTEE :—

Bond—Construction—Recital and condition.—The respondent, with others, gave a joint and several guarantee to the appellant bank, limited to £2,500, in respect of overdrafts by a customer. Subsequently he with others gave a joint and several bond reciting a desire for advances to the same customer over and above that amount, and securing payment of the balance of account current.

In an action brought both on the guarantee and bond, the former was held to be invalid; but

Held, that the condition of the bond, being plainly to secure repayment of all moneys advanced by the bank and not merely those in excess of the said £2,500, could not be controlled by any recital not plainly inconsistent therewith.—AUSTRALIAN JOINT STOCK BANK (LIMITED) v. BAILEY, P.C.; [1899] A. C. 396.

See also Limitation Statutes, 4.

HAWKER :—

Taking round oil—Previous request by customer to call—Sale of oil—Amount to be purchased fixed on each call—Hawkers Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 33), ss. 2, 3, 6.—By section 6 of the Hawkers Act, 1888, a penalty of £10 is imposed upon every person who without a licence does any act for which a licence is required, and by section 3 a licence is required to be taken out annually by every hawker.

By section 2 a hawker for the purposes of the Act is thus defined: "Hawker means any person who travels with a horse or other beast bearing or drawing burden, and goes from place to place or to other men's houses carrying to sell or exposing for sale any goods, wares, or merchandize to be afterwards delivered, and includes any person who travels by any means of locomotion to any place in which he does not usually reside or carry on business, and there sells or exposes for sale any goods, wares, or merchandize in or at any house, shop, room, booth, stall, or other place whatever hired or used by him for that purpose."

Held, that taking a cask of oil round in a cart to customers in pursuance of orders to call, when the quantity required was fixed by the customer at his house, was hawking within the statute, and required a licence.—O'DEA v. CROWHURST, Q.B.D.; 68 L. J. Q. B. 655; 80 L. T. 491.

HIGHWAY :—

1. Local government — Obstruction — Action for damages — Excess of statutory powers—Evidence —Loss of business at shop—Right of action.—A shopkeeper sued a local authority for damages caused by loss of business at his shop through the road which gave access to the shop being unnecessarily and negligently obstructed by them. Under an Act of Parliament the defendants were empowered to obstruct the road temporarily while making a new street.

Held, that there being no evidence before the court of any damage to the plaintiff arising out of any excess by the defendants of their statutory powers, the defendants were entitled to judgment.

Quære, whether, assuming a loss of business through such an excess, the injury to the plaintiff would have been actionable.—MARTIN v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, C.A.; 80 L. T. 866.

2. Rate—Exemption—Liability to repair ratione tenuræ—Order making highway a parish highway—Continuance of Exemption—Highway Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50), s. 33—Highway Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 61), s. 35.—Where, by an order of justices under section 35 of the Highway Act, 1862, a highway repairable ratione tenuræ is made a parish highway, and a sum is fixed to be paid to the highway board by the person previously liable to repair, "in full discharge of all claims thereafter in respect of the repair and maintenance of such highway," the exemption conferred upon such person by section 33 of the Highway Act, 1835, continues, and he is discharged not only from liability to repair ratione tenuræ, but also from liability to pay highway rates.

Judgment of Wills and Kennedy, JJ. (46 W. R. 582, [1898] 2 Q. B. 66), reversed. — NORTH-EASTERN RAILWAY CO. v. DALTON OVERSEERS, C.A., 581; [1899] 1 Q. B. 1026; 68 L. J. Q. B. 640; 80 L. T. 587.

See also Local Government, 6, 26; Metropolis, 8.

INCLOSURE:—

1. Owner of mines—Owners of surface—Right to sink pits—Buildings affixed to surface. — Where, under an Inclosure Act, full enjoyment of the minerals under the common inclosed is reserved to the owner of the soil, it must be held that the intention of the Legislature was to confer on the owner all powers which are reasonably necessary for him to win, work, and carry away the minerals. The owner of mines is, therefore, entitled to sink pits and erect buildings for the purpose of working the pits on any part of the inclosed common, though he is not justified in destroying or using existing buildings which are the property of the surface owners.

Bell v. Love, 10 Q. B. D. 547, 31 W. R. Dig. 33, 32 W. R. 725, 9 App. Cas. 286, considered.—HAYLES v. PEASE, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 370; [1899] 1 Ch. 567; 68 L. J. Ch. 222; 80 L. T. 220.

2. Turbary—Allotment for—Legal estate in land—Compensation to lord of manor—Inclosure Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 118), ss. 34, 73, 76.—An allotment of land made in pursuance of sections 34 and 73 of the Inclosure Act, 1845, to the churchwardens and overseers of a parish in trust to allow the occupiers of certain ancient cottages in the parish to get turf therefrom vests the legal estate in the land in the churchwardens and overseers.

Attorney-General v. Meyrick, [1893] A. C. 1, and Reg. v. Inclosure Commissioners, 23 L. T. 778, distinguished.—SIMCOE v. PETHICK, C.A.; [1898] 2 Q. B. 555; 79 L. T. 432.

INDUSTRIAL SOCIETY:—

Disputed claim—Arbitration—Failure of society to appoint arbitrator—Sole arbitrator—Plaint in county court—Arbitration Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 49), s. 6 (b)—Industrial and Provident Societies Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 39), s. 49 (1) (5).—J., a member of an industrial society, nominated his daughter to receive his interest in the society, and died on the 19th of May, 1898, without having revoked the nomination. Both his widow and the daughter claimed the amount standing to his credit in the books of the society. On the 20th of September the daughter wrote a letter to the society nominating an arbitrator, and asking the society to name an arbitrator to act on their behalf in accordance with one of their rules. The society took no notice of this application, and on the 19th of October the daughter gave notice that the arbitrator named in her former letter had been appointed by her as sole arbitrator under the Arbitration Act, 1889, s. 6 (b). The society replied that they would refuse to be bound by the decision of an arbitrator so appointed. On the 1st of November the sole arbitrator gave an ex parte award in favour of the daughter. On the 17th of November a plaint was taken out by the daughter in the county court under the Industrial and Provident Societies Act, 1893, s. 49, and the judge enforced the award in favour of the daughter. The society appealed, on the ground that the Arbitration Act, 1889, could not apply, as section 6 (b) of that Act was inconsistent with section 49 (5) of the Provident and Industrial Societies Act, 1893.

Held, that it was not necessary to decide whether the Arbitration Act, 1889, was or was not applicable, as the plaint in the county court—the forty days mentioned in section 49 (5) of the Industrial and Provident Societies Act, 1893, having elapsed—might be regarded as an application under that sub-section.—JESSOP v. HUDDERSFIELD INDUSTRIAL SOCIETY, Q.B.D.; 80 L. T. 598.

INFANT:—

1. Contract—Apprenticeship deed—Contract not for benefit of infant—Employers and Workmen Act, 1875.—By a deed of apprenticeship of an infant it was provided that the apprentice should serve for a term of years, excepting the usual holidays and days on which the master's business should be at a standstill through accident beyond the control of the master, and that during the said term, excepting and subject as aforesaid, the master should pay the apprentice wages for her services.

Held, that the provision that the master should not be liable to pay wages to the apprentice during the excepted period was not so disadvantageous to her as to render the apprenticeship deed incapable of being enforced against her under the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875.

Corn v. Matthews, [1893] 1 Q. B. 310, distinguished.—GREEN v. THOMPSON, Q.B.D.; [1899] 2 Q. B. 1; 68 L. J. Q. B. 719; 80 L. T. 691.

2. Direction to mother to maintain, educate, and bring up—Immoral home—Adultery of mother—Control of court.—A testator bequeathed the residue of his estate to his trustees upon trust to pay the income to his wife during her widowhood, "she maintaining, educating, and bringing up" unmarried infant sons and unmarried daughters.

The widow, while duly maintaining and educating the infant children, lived in adultery with a married man in the home which she provided for them.

Held, that the widow was not properly performing the obligation imposed upon her, and that, in the circumstances, the court had power to administer the fund.—G. (No. 2), RE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J. 491; [1899] 1 Ch. 719; 68 L. J. Ch. 374; 80 L. T. 470.

3. Guardianship—Mother sole surviving guardian—Re-marriage of mother—Appointment of additional guardian — Discretion of court — Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886 (49 & 50 Vict. c. 27), s. 2.—By his will X. appointed his wife (during her widowhood) and his own father guardians of his infant son during his minority, and directed that, on the death of either of them, the survivor should be sole guardian. X. and his wife were both Protestants.

X. died in 1886, and his father in 1890. In 1896 the widow married again, her second husband being a Roman Catholic, whilst she remained a Protestant, and the infant son was being brought up as a Protestant. In 1897 the infant's paternal grandmother, as his next friend, took out a summons asking that an uncle of the infant (the husband of a sister of X.) might be appointed to act jointly with the mother as guardian of the infant.

Held (dismissing the summons), that the mother of an infant had entirely new rights conferred upon her under the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886; she became statutory guardian under the Act, whether she was appointed testamentary guardian by her husband or not.

The court has power, in its discretion, to remove a guardian or to appoint another guardian to act jointly with the statutory guardian; but the court will not interfere except on good grounds shown to be clearly for the benefit of the infant.—X., RE, X. v. Y., C.A., 345; [1899] 1 Ch. 526; 68 L. J. Ch. 265; 80 L. T. 311.

4. Marriage articles—Covenant to settle after-acquired property—Married woman—Repudiation—Reasonable time—Austrian law—Post-nuptial settlement—Rectification.—Marriage articles entered into by the intending wife (an Irish woman), the intending husband (an Austrian), the father of the lady, and English trustees, drawn up in English form, but executed in Switzerland, will be treated as governed by English law as regards property in this country.

Marriage articles of the above kind cannot be revoked by a post-nuptial document executed by the husband and wife in conformity with the law of Austria, where both parties were domiciled, although the document was by that law valid and effective.

A covenant in marriage articles by the intending wife, then an infant, to settle after-acquired property is as against her voidable, not void, and binds her after the marriage, unless repudiated within a reasonable time after coming of age.

Cooper v. Cooper, L. R. 13 App. Cas. 88, 36 W. R. Dig. 98, explained.

To repudiate such a covenant upon becoming entitled to property many years after coming of age is not repudiating within a reasonable time.

Smith v. Lucas, 30 W. R. 451, L R. 18 Ch. D. 531, considered.

Semble, that repudiation of such a covenant must be made once for all.—VIDITZ v. O'HAGAN, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 571; 80 L. T. 794.

See also Practice, 25.

INJUNCTION:—

1. Building—Pulling down—Mandatory injunction, form of—Practice.—An injunction the effect of which is to require the performance of a certain act, such as the pulling down and removal of buildings, should now be made in a direct mandatory form, and not in the indirect form hitherto in use.—JACKSON v. NORMANBY BRICK CO., C.A.; [1899] 1 Ch. 438; 68 L. J. Ch. 407; 80 L. T. 482.

2. Jurisdiction—Land outside jurisdiction—Plaintiffs and defendants within jurisdiction—Breach of implied covenant for quiet enjoyment.—In July, 1896, the plaintiffs entered into an agreement with the defendants under which the sole and exclusive right to work certain lands situate in the island of Milos and belonging to the defendants was granted to the plaintiffs for a period of five years; the agreement also contained a provision for a renewal of the period for three further periods of five years each. The right conferred by this agreement was expressed to be granted for the purpose of enabling the plaintiffs to get and work manganese, and they were to pay by quarterly payments certain royalties therefor, and a minimum royalty was fixed. Clause 6 of the agreement provided that in the event of any royalties being in arrear for three months or a breach of any of the provisions of the agreement the defendants might determine the licence and re-enter the premises.

On the 17th of May, 1898, a further agreement was made modifying the first agreement and providing for the payment of the royalties half yearly on the 8th of April and the 8th of October in each year.

A dispute having arisen between the original grantors of the lands and the defendants, and the former having requested the plaintiffs to pay the royalties to them instead of to the defendants, the plaintiffs on the 7th of October declined to pay to the defendants the royalties due on the 8th of October, and offered to refer the question to arbitration. On the 12th of October the defendants took forcible possession of the lands and remained in possession of the same. On the 18th of October the plaintiffs tendered to the defendants the money due, but the tender was refused.

On the 2nd of November the plaintiffs instituted this action and now moved for an injunction to restrain the defendants from taking or keeping possession of the lands in question and of the machinery and stock of manganese in or about the premises. The registered offices of the plaintiffs and defendants respectively were situate in London.

Held, that if there was jurisdiction to grant the injunction sought for, such jurisdiction ought to be exercised with great caution, and that as the defendants were in actual possession of the lands they ought not to be disturbed and that the motion must be refused.—BLACK POINT SYNDICATE v. EASTERN CONCESSIONS, Ch.D. Stirling, J.; 79 L. T. 658.

See also Administration, 1; Contract, 3, 5; Libel, 4; Light; Metropolis, 11, 16, 17; Nuisance; Railway, 4, 6; Restraint of Trade, 2; Trade-mark, 4.

INLAND REVENUE:—

1. Bodies corporate and unincorporate—Exemption from duty—"Property appropriated and applied for the promotion of science"—Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 51), s. 11, sub-section 3.—By section 11 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1885, duty is imposed upon the annual value, income, or profits of all property belonging to, or vested in, any body corporate or unincorporate, subject to exemption from duty in the case of "property which, or the income or profits whereof, shall be legally appropriated and applied . . . for the promotion of education, science, or the fine arts."

The College of Surgeons was a body corporate with two main objects—namely, the promotion of the science of surgery, and the promotion and encouragement of the practice of surgery, including examinations to qualify for such practice. The property of the college consisted, among other things, of general offices, an examination hall, and a library; but there had been no appropriation of this property by conveyance, declaration of trust, or otherwise, to the first-named of the above objects as distinguished from the second. The fees received in respect of the examinations constituted a large part of the income of the college. The college had no school of instruction or training for persons seeking admission to the college. The above property having been assessed to the annual duty imposed by section 11 of the Act of 1885,

Held, that as the college had two main objects, only such of its property as was legally appropriated and applied to the first-named object, as distinguished from the second, was exempt from duty within section 11, sub-section 3, of the Act, and that as none of the property in question was legally appropriated thereto the exemption did not apply.

The words "legally appropriated" mean appropriated so as to create a legal obligation upon the part of the administrators of the property to apply it in a particular manner.

Judgment of the Divisional Court (46 W. R. 538) affirmed.—ROYAL COLLEGE OF SURGEONS OF ENGLAND, RE, C.A., 452; [1899] 1 Q. B. 871; 68 L. J. Q. B. 613; 80 L. T. 611.

2. Estate duty—Gift inter vivos—Settlement—Whether possession assumed to entire exclusion of settlor—Reservation of interest to settlor—Power of revocation—Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 12), s. 38, sub-section 2 (a) (c)—Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 7), s. 11—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), s. 2, sub-section 1 (c).—By a deed, dated 1885, G. transferred certain estates, including a mansion-house of which he was the owner, to the appellant, his nephew, subject, as regards property other than the mansion-house, to an annual rent-charge in favour of G. for life and subject also to the mansion-house being enjoyed as theretofore by G. By the same deed the appellant entered into several covenants relating to the estate, amongst which was one to pay the debts of G. out of the estate; and a power of revoking the deed and reassuming the property in the estate was reserved to G. upon the breach of certain of the said covenants by the appellant.

G. died before the happening of any of the events upon which the power of revocation was exercisable, but after the Finance Act of 1894 had come into effect. The annual value of the estate at the death of G. was considerably in excess of the rent-charge reserved.

Held (affirming the judgment of the Divisional Court, 46 W. R. 251), that, at the death of G., all the property was liable to estate duty under section 1 of the Finance Act of 1894. It was property which must be deemed to have passed on the death of G. within section 38, sub-section 2, of the Act of 1881, as amended by section 11, sub-section 1, of the Act of 1889 and section 2, sub-section 1 (c), of the Finance Act, 1894.

Per Vaughan Williams, L J.—That there was a sufficient interest and power of revocation reserved in the property so as to bring it within section 11, sub-section 1, of the Act of 1889, for the appellant had not assumed bonâ fide possession and enjoyment "to the entire exclusion of the donor," G.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. GREY (EARL), C.A., 37; [1898] 2 Q. B. 534; 79 L. T. 235.

3. Estate duty—Jointure payable "without any deduction whatever, except income tax"—Incidence of duty on jointures—Assessment of duty—Capital value of jointure—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), s. 2, sub-section 1 (b); s. 4; s. 7, sub-section 7 (b); s. 8, sub-section 4; s. 9, sub-sections 1, 5, 6, 7; s. 14, sub-section 1.—For the purposes of the Finance Act, 1894, a jointress who is entitled to her jointure "free from any deduction whatever, except income tax," is not liable to bear any burden in respect of estate duty. A jointress who is not so entitled must be charged with estate duty upon so much of the estate as is represented by the jointure, but is entitled to throw the duty so charged upon the whole estate, she keeping down the interest on the duty during her life. The better way to ascertain the capital value of the jointure is to assess it at a sum equivalent to the capitalized value of the jointure at the same number of years' purchase as the estate as a whole is capitalized for the purposes of duty, rather than to adopt the actuarial value of the jointure.—PARKER-JERVIS, RE. SALT v. LOCKER, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 147; [1898] 2 Ch. 643; 79 L. T. 403.

4. Estate duty—Jointure—"Free from all taxes and deductions except property tax and legacy or succession duty"—Assessment of duty—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), s. 14, sub-section 1.—A testator, who died in October, 1857, by his will, dated in September, 1856, empowered any tenant for life to charge on the estates thereby settled a jointure, not exceeding £3,000 a year, for his widow "free from all taxes and deductions except property tax and legacy or succession duty."

Held, that this was an "express provision to the contrary" within the meaning of section 14, sub-section 1, of the Finance Act, 1894, the testator's intention clearly being that the jointure should be paid to the widow of the tenant for life free from all taxes and deductions except those specified by him.—FITZHARDINGE (LORD), RE. FITZHARDINGE v. JENKINSON, C.A.; 80 L. T. 376.

5. Estate duty—Property passing on death—Mortgage created by tenant for life and remainderman—Annuity charged on estates in favour of remainderman during life of tenant for life—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), ss. 1, 2, 7.—The tenant for life and the remainderman in tail of certain property duly barred the entail, reserving to themselves a joint power of appointment over the fee. They subsequently joined in mortgaging the fee simple to secure £230,000, part of which was applied for the benefit of the tenant for life, and the rest was paid to, or for the benefit of, the tenant in tail. A resettlement was afterwards executed, whereby the property was charged with an annuity of £3,000 for the tenant in tail during the life of the then life tenant, who died in 1895.

Held, that what passed on the death of the tenant for life was the equity of redemption, and, in determining its value, the £230,000 should be deducted, but not the capitalized value of the annuity, which ceased to be payable.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (46 W. R. 222, [1898] 1 Q. B. 355) reversed on the main contention.—COWLEY v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, H.L., 525; [1889] A. C. 198; 68 L. J. Q. B. 435; 80 L. T. 361.

6. Estate duty—Property passing on death—Settlement—Surrender of life estate to remainderman—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), ss. 1, 2 (sub-section 1 (b)), 5, 7 (sub-section 7).—A tenant for life (who died in 1896), more than twelve months before her death, surrendered her life interest in certain trust property, so as to merge her life estate in the immediate reversioner, who then became absolutely entitled.

Held, that, upon the death of the tenant for life, no property passed on her death within the meaning of section 2, sub-section 1 (b), of the Finance Act, 1894, and estate duty was not payable.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (46 W. R. 435, [1898] 2 Q. B. 147) affirmed.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL

v. BEECH, H.L., 257; [1899] A. C. 53; 68 L. J. Q. B. 130; 79 L. T. 565.

7. Estate duty — Property passing on death — Surrender of life interest to remainderman—Death of tenant for life within twelve months—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30) s. 2, sub-section 1 (c); s. 7, sub-section 7.—Where a tenant for life of settled property has released the life interest in favour of the remainderman and dies within twelve months of such release, estate duty is payable by the remainderman on the principal value of the property under section 2, sub-section 1 (c) and section 7, sub-section 7, of the Finance Act, 1894.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. DE PREVILLE, Q.B.D.; 2 Q. B. 238; 68 L. J. Q. B. 832.

8. Estate duty — Residuary legatee — Title of originating summons—Practice—Costs—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), ss. 6 (2) (4), 8 (4), 9 (1), 14 (1)—R. S. C., ord. 55, r. 9 (c).—Estate duty payable on death of tenant for life to be borne rateably by the shares into which the estate became divisible and by the residuary devisee.—POWER, RE, POWER v. HOWELL, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 183.

9. Estate duty—Reversionary interest—Settlement—Disposition of property during settlement—Finance Act, 1894, s. 2, sub-section 1 (b); s. 5, sub-section 2.—The owner of an absolute reversionary interest in settled personal property, who during the lifetime of the tenant for life settles his reversionary interest, reserving a life interest to himself, is a person who was, "during the continuance of the settlement, competent to dispose of" the property within the meaning of section 5, sub-section 2, of the Finance Act, 1894, and therefore upon his death estate duty is payable upon the value of his interest, notwithstanding that estate duty has previously been paid upon it at the death of the original tenant for life.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. HAY, Q.B.D.; [1898] 2 Q. B. 245; 68 L. J. Q. B. 557; 80 L. T. 712.

10. Estate duty—Settled property—Fund charged with specific sum—Residue—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), s. 14, sub-section 1.—A settlor assigned a policy of assurance for £5,000 on his own life to the trustees of his marriage settlement upon trust to raise out of the policy-moneys the sum of £4,000, to be held on the trusts therein mentioned, and upon further trust as to the residue of such moneys for the settlor's executors. The policy had been sold, and the proceeds of sale were now represented by a fund in court. The settlor died in 1898.

Held, that sub-section 1 of section 14 of the Finance Act, 1894, was intended as a protection to the person paying the estate duty, not as a provision for the incidence of that duty; and that the estate duty on the fund must be borne by the part remaining after payment of the £4,000.—WADE v. WADE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 43; [1898] 2 Ch. 276.

11. Estate duty—Settlement estate duty—Bequest of annuity — Succession — Settled Land Act, 1882, s. 2, sub-section 1—Finance Act, 1894, s. 5, sub-section 1; s. 22, sub-section 1.—Testatrix bequeathed an annuity to A. and directed that a portion of her estate should be set aside therefor, and subject thereto she bequeathed said portion to B.

Held, that the portion so set aside was property "standing limited . . . by way of succession" within the meaning of section 2, sub-section 1, of the Settled Land Act, 1882, and that settlement estate duty was consequently payable in respect of it.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. OWEN, Q.B.D.; [1899] 2 Q. B. 253.

12. Estate duty—Settlement estate duty—Portions for children—Succession—Finance Act, 1894, s. 5, sub-section 1; s. 22, sub-section 1.—Testator bequeathed his residuary estate to trustees on trust to pay the income to his wife for life, and after her death to pay an annuity to each of his four daughters for life, and after the death of each daughter to raise certain specified sums in trust for the children of such daughter who should attain twenty-one, or being females, should marry under that age.

Held, that this amounted to a limitation in favour of testator's grandchildren to take effect upon the death of each daughter, and that there was a succession in respect of such portions, and that settlement estate duty was payable in respect of them. — ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. COULSON, Q.B.D.; [1899] 2 Q. B. 253; 68 L. J. Q. B. 779.

13. Estate duty—Settlement estate duty—Incidence—Property settled by instrument outside will—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), ss. 2, 4, 5, 6, 8—Finance Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 28), s. 19.—Where property given by the will of a testator is settled, not by the will itself, but by an instrument outside the will, settlement estate duty must be borne, not by the testator's general residue, but by the settled property.—MARYON-WILSON, RE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 635.

14. Income tax—Annual profits or gains—English company—Business carried on abroad through foreign company—Income Tax Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 35), s. 100, Schedule D, 5th case—Income Tax Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 34), s. 2, Schedule D.—An English company formed under the Companies Acts and registered in London had power by its memorandum of association to acquire the whole or part of the capital stock of an American incorporated association, then carrying on a brewing business in the State of Missouri, in the United States, and to allow the legal estate and interest in any business or property acquired by the company to be vested in and carried on by any American company upon trust for, or as agents or nominees of, the English company. The English company acquired the whole of the share capital of the American association except fourteen shares. The brewing operations were carried on in the State of Missouri exclusively, and under the immediate management of the directors of the American association, and the breweries and other property were vested in that association, and the officers and employees were appointed by the American directors. At the end of each financial year copies of the balance-sheet and profit and loss account of the American association were sent to the English company, and, after considering them, the directors of that company informed the American association as to what dividend they thought ought to be declared, and the American association habitually declared a dividend at the rate mentioned. In the reports and accounts of the English company the breweries business and profits were treated as being the property and under the control of the English company, and the directors of the American association were referred to as "the board of management in St. Louis." The accounts of the breweries were audited annually by an English accountant sent for the purpose by the English company. The amount of the dividend on the shares held by the English company was transmitted to England for distribution amongst the shareholders.

Held, that the brewing business was in substance the business of the English company, and that they were liable to be assessed to income tax under section 2, Schedule D, of the Income Tax Act, 1853, in respect of the annual profits or gains arising from that business.—ST. LOUIS BREWERIES v. APTHORPE, Q.B.D., 334; 79 L. T. 551.

15. Income tax—Company registered in England—Business carried on and profits made abroad—Profits partly transmitted to England—Power of control in England—Liability to income tax on whole profits—Income Tax Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 34), s. 2, Schedule D.—An English company, registered under the Companies Acts, and having its registered office in London, was formed for the purpose of acquiring the shares in an American brewery company, and for the purpose of carrying on a brewery business. The vendors of the American company sold to the English company all the shares, except three, in the the American company, and all the personal property of the American company was transferred to the English company. In order to avoid any difficulties with regard to the American laws of real property, the American company was kept on foot. The English company found the capital for carrying on the brewery business, which was wholly carried on in America. All the profits were earned in America. The directors of the English company had the entire right of control of the affairs of the American company, and of the staff and business in America, with full power to appoint or dismiss any of the managers or officials of the business in America. In fact, the directors of the English company delegated these powers to the managers of the brewery in America, who were also the directors of the American company, and appointed them managers of the business in America. A portion of the profits earned was transmitted to England for the expenses incurred in England and for distribution amongst the English shareholders. The rest of the profits remained in America, and were distributed among American shareholders.

Held, that the business was in fact partly carried on in England, and therefore the English company was liable to pay income tax upon the whole of the profits earned by the business, and not merely upon that part of the profits which was transmitted to England.

The San Paulo Brazilian Railway Co. (Limited) v. Carter, 73 L. T. Rep. 538, [1896] A. C. 31, followed.—APTHORPE v. SCHOENHOFEN BREWING CO., C.A.; 80 L. T. 395.

16. Income tax—Deduction of tax from interest or annuities—Income Tax Act, 1842, Schedules A and D—Inland Revenue Act, 1888, s. 24, sub-section 3.—A county council had deducted income tax under section 24, sub-section 3, of the Inland Revenue Act, 1888, from the interest paid by them on their consolidated stock. The fund from which such interest was paid consisted partly of interest received by them on loans made to other local authorities and from which, in accordance with the section, income tax under Schedule D had been deducted before payment; and partly of the rent of lands on which income tax under Schedule A had been paid.

Held, that the county council were entitled to retain a portion of the income tax which they had deducted corresponding to the proportion in which interest on the consolidated stock had been paid out of moneys on which income tax under Schedule D had been already paid; but were not entitled to retain the proportion of the deducted income tax which corresponded to the proportion in which interest on the consolidated stock had been paid out of moneys charged with income tax under Schedule A.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, Q.B.D.; [1899] 2 Q. B. 226; 68 L. J. Q. B. 823; 80 L. T. 767.

17. Income tax—Deductions under Schedule D—5 per cent. on original cost—6 per cent. on diminishing value—Question of fact—Income Tax Act, 1843 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 35), s. 100, First Case, r. 3—Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 15), s. 12.—The appellant company claimed under section 12 of the Inland Revenue Act, 1878, to be allowed a deduction of £253,893 on the ground that the same was a just and reasonable allowance as representing the diminished value by reason of wear and tear during the year. They arrived at this figure as being 5 per cent. on the original cost of the ships in their fleet.

The commissioners found that the average duration of the service of ships in the fleet was seventeen years, though the average duration of life of the ships was twenty-eight years; and that an allowance at the rate of 6 per cent. on the diminished value of the fleet for the year of assessment, arrived at by taking the original cost of each vessel and writing it down year by year at the rate of 6 per cent. on the diminishing value, was a sufficient allowance to cover the diminished value by reason of wear and tear during the year, and they fixed the figure at £185,440.

The company appealed.

Held, that the commissioners had dealt with all that was properly before them, and that the questions were substantially questions of fact.—PENINSULAR AND ORIENTAL STEAM NAVIGATION CO. v. LEE, Q.B.D.; 79 L. T. 118.

18. Income tax—Life assurance company—Annual profits and gains—Mutual assurance—Returns of premium as "rebate or discount"—Income Tax Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 34), Schedule D.—A life assurance company by its charter limited the interest payable to the holders of its capital stock to 7 per cent., and the earnings and receipts of the company over and above this fixed dividend, and the losses and expenses on the year's trading were to be accumulated. The insurance business of the company was expressed to be conducted upon the mutual plan, and every five years each policy-holder was to be accredited with a share of the accumulated surplus to be applied by him either in the purchase of an additional amount of insurance payable at his death, or at his option to the purchase of an annuity in reduction of his future premiums. The amount of the surplus funds to be so divided at these quinquennial distributions was to be entirely a matter for the discretion of the directors of the company.

Held, that the accumulated funds of the company were not the property of the policy-holders, and that the returns from surplus did not pass to them by the constitution of the company, but were payments made them arising out of the "profits" earned by the company, and the money so to be divided had rightly been assessed to income tax under Schedule D.

Last v. London Assurance Co., 34 W. R. 233, 10 App. Cas. 438, followed; New York Insurance Co. v. Style, 14 App. Cas. 381, 38 W. R. Dig. 89, approved and distinguished.—EQUITABLE LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY OF THE UNITED STATES v. BISHOP, Q.B.D., 556; 68 L. J. Q. B. 772; 80 L. T. 728.

19. Income tax—Profits of trade—Deduction for depreciation of machinery or plant—Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 15), s. 12.—The Commissioners of Income Tax, when estimating the deductions to be allowed from the profits of a trade under section 12 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1878, "as representing the diminished value by reason of wear and tear during the year of any machinery or plant used for the purposes of the concern," are not bound to take an average of the depreciation during the three preceding years, but may adopt as their estimate the amount of the depreciation during the year immediately preceding that of assessment.—CUNARD STEAMSHIP CO. v. COULSON, Q.B.D.; [1899] 1 Q. B. 865; 68 L. J. Q. B. 554; 80 L. T. 326.

20. Income tax — Special Act — Salary payable without deduction or abatement for taxes—Right to deduct income tax—Income Tax Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 35), s. 102, Schedule E, rr. 1, 6—Special Act (10 Geo. 4, c. xv.), ss. 22, 26.—An officer of a charity was entitled under a special Act of Parliament to receive a salary of not less than £300, nor exceeding £500, without deduction or abatement for taxes. At the date of the special Act no income tax was payable.

Held, with regard to a person appointed to the office after the passing of the Income Tax Act, 1842, that the persons liable to pay the salary were bound to deduct the income tax therefrom.—LUND v. LIVERPOOL SCHOOL FOR INDIGENT BLIND, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 6; [1898] 2 Ch. 669; 79 L. T. 68.

21. Inhabited house duty—Artizans' dwellings—Separate dwelling — Exemption. — The owner of houses, originally built or adapted for artizans' dwellings and used for the sole purpose of separate dwellings, is entitled to exemption from inhabited house duty under section 26, sub-section 2, of the Inland Revenue Act, 1890, as amended by section 4 of the Inland Revenue Act, 1891, notwithstanding the existence of a common entrance and staircase, and that the inmates have the use of a common washhouse on certain days.—SEAMAN v. LEE, Q.B.D.; 68 L. J. Q. B. 593.

22. Inhabited house duty—Hall—Library—Liability to be assessed—48 Geo. 3, c. 55, Schedule B, r. 5—House Tax Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 36), s. 1.—The dining hall and offices of the Middle Temple, which are used and occupied during the daytime only, in which no one sleeps or resides, and which have no communication with any premises in which anyone sleeps or resides, are liable to inhabited house duty, as coming within the words "hall or office" in rule 5 of Schedule B of 48 Geo. 3, c. 55; but the library is not a "hall" within the meaning of that rule, and is not liable to inhabited house duty.—STYLES v. MIDDLE TEMPLE SOCIETY, Q.B.D., 383; 68 L. J. Q. B. 157; 79 L. T. 700.

23. Male servant—Steward of working men's club—Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 14), ss. 18, 19.—By section 18 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1869, there shall be paid for every male servant 15s. By sub-section 3 of section 19 "the term 'male servant' means and includes any male servant employed either wholly or partially in any of the following capacities; that is to say, . . . house steward . . . or in any capacity involving the duties of any of the above descriptions of servants, by whatever style the person acting in such capacity may be called."

The respondents, the committee of a working men's club, had power to discharge the steward, who had to be a member of the club, and was paid by the committee 38s. a week. He served at a bar at a window, but did not leave such bar to wait on the members, but passed what was ordered through the window.

Besides accounting for moneys he received, this was the only service rendered by him.

No licence had been taken out by the defendants in respect of such steward.

Held, that such steward was a "male servant" within the Act, and that the respondents should have taken out a licence in respect of him.—SOLOMON v. CROPPER, Q.B.D.; 79 L. T. 301.

24. Probate Duty — Testator foreign subject domiciled abroad—Company—Executor de son tort—Intermeddling with estate—Liability to pay probate duty—Penalties—55 Geo. 3, c. 184, s. 37—Crown Suits Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 104), s. 57—Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1881 (44 Vict. c. 12), s. 40.—Upon the death of a testator, a foreign subject domiciled in America, shares and debentures in an English company, of which he was the registered holder in the books of the company in London, passed by his will to his executors in America, according to the law of his domicil. At their request the company paid to them the dividends and interest payable upon the testator's shares and debentures and transferred into their names in the company's books in London two shares and a debenture. The executors to the knowledge of the company had not obtained and did not intend to obtain probate in England.

Held, that the company had made themselves executors de son tort; that they had "taken possession of and administered" part of the testator's estate (see 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, s. 37; 28 & 29 Vict. c. 104, s. 57), and were liable to penalties, and to deliver an account and pay such duty as would have been payable if probate had been obtained in England.

The decision of the Court of Appeal, [1898] 1 Q. B. 205, affirmed.

Semble by Lord Davey, that the company were persons who "ought to obtain probate or letters of administration" in England within the meaning of the Customs Act, 1881 (44 Vict. c. 12), s. 40 (although they were not entitled to do so), because under the Probate Act, 1857, s. 73, the court had power in its discretion to appoint them administrators.—NEW YORK BREWERIES CO. v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL, H.L.; [1899] A. C. 62; 68 L. J. Q. B. 135; 79 L. T. 568.

25. Stamp duty—Agreement in consideration of fixed annual payments — "Bond, contract, or instrument, being the only or principal or primary security"—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), First Schedule.—By an agreement in writing, not under seal, one S. R. agreed to pay a telephone company the sum of £12 per annum for the use of a telephone wire and apparatus which the company was to affix to his house. The rent was to be payable every year in advance, and either party might put an end to the agreement by giving the other party three months' notice.

Held, that this instrument was liable to an ad valorem duty under the head "Bond, Covenant, or Instrument of any kind whatsoever" in the first schedule to the Stamp Act, 1891, as being "the only or principal or primary security for any . . . sum or sums of money at stated periods for an indefinite period."

Jones v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 43 W. R. 318, [1895] 1 Q. B. 484, approved.—NATIONAL TELEPHONE CO. v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, C.A., 247; [1899] 1 Q. B. 250; 68 L. J. Q. B. 222; 79 L. T. 514.

26. Stamp duty—Conveyance on sale—Agreement for sale—Ad valorem duty—Leasehold interest in licensed house—Goodwill—"Legal or equitable transfer"—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39) s. 59, sub-section 1.—By an agreement under seal a vendor agreed to sell to the West London Syndicate (inter alia) the goodwill of a hotel proprietor and licensed victualler; the lease of the hotel and premises and the vendor's interest therein; all the household furniture, fixtures, fittings, and other effects (other than stock-in-trade); all cash in hand and at the bank to which the vendor was then entitled; and all the book and other debts due to the vendor in connection with the business. The consideration for the sale was the discharge by the syndicate of the debts and liabilities of the vendor then due in relation to the business, and the sum of £4,250, of which £1,462 16s. 3d. was the apportioned consideration for the furniture, stock-in-trade, and cash.

The amount of the debts and liabilities forming part of the consideration was found to be £1,335 8s. 4d., so that the purchase consideration amounted to £5,585 8s. 4d. It was agreed that the vendor should show a good title to the premises and assign the lease thereof and the goodwill of the business to the syndicate, and that, in the event of the landlords not consenting to the assignment of the lease, that the vendor would execute a declaration of trust in favour of the syndicate. The consent of the landlords was not obtained, and a declaration of trust was therefore executed and was stamped with the fixed duty of ten shillings.

Held, by A. L. Smith and Vaughan Williams, L.JJ., that there was not an agreement for the sale of an equitable interest in any property whatsoever within the meaning of section 59, sub-section 1, of the Stamp Act, 1891.

Held, by Rigby, L.J., that, though on the face of the agreement it was not for the sale of an equitable interest in property within that section, yet, looking at the facts of the case, it ought to be inferred that the agreement was only for the sale of an equitable interest.

Held, further by A. L. Smith and Rigby, L.JJ., that the goodwill was capable of being sold separately and independently of the leasehold premises, and that, in respect of the goodwill, the agreement was liable to an ad valorem duty, as such goodwill was property other than lands.

Held, by Vaughan Williams, L.J., dissenting, that the goodwill could not be separated from the leasehold premises, and that, consequently, the agreement was not liable to an ad valorem duty upon that part of the consideration apportioned to the sale of the goodwill and lease of the hotel.—WEST LONDON SYNDICATE v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, C.A., 125; [1898] 2 Q. B. 507; 79 L. T. 289.

27. Stamp duty—Conveyance on sale—Contract for sale of equitable interest—Reconstruction of company in course of winding up—Agreement for transfer to new company of shares in old company—Declaration of trust of shares in old company—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), ss. 54, 59 (1).—By an agreement under seal, made between all the shareholders in an unlimited company (which was in course of being voluntarily wound up) and a new limited company, it was agreed that the shareholders in the old company should "exchange" their shares in that company for certain numbers and amounts of stock and shares in the new company, and that the new company should also pay certain sums of cash to the shareholders. The agreement also provided that, upon the allotment to the shareholders of the old company of the shares and stock in the new company, the shareholders should "hold their respective shares in the old company in trust for the new company."

Held, that the agreement was a "conveyance on sale" of the shares in the old company within the meaning of section 54 of the Stamp Act, 1891, or a "contract for the sale of an equitable interest" in those shares within section 59 (1) of that Act, and was chargeable with ad valorem duty on the cash paid and the shares and stock allotted.

Dictum of Channell, J., in West London Syndicate v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, [1898] 1 Q. B. 226, at p. 240, 46 W. R. Dig. 74, approved.—CHESTERFIELD BREWERY CO. v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, Q.B.D., 320; [1899] 2 Q. B. 7; 68 L. J. Q. B. 204; 79 L. J. 559.

28. Stamp duty—Conveyance on sale—Consideration—Conveyance of property subject to the payment of money—Assignment of leaseholds—Rent—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), ss. 56, 57; Schedule I.—On a conveyance on sale of leasehold property subject to the rent reserved by the original lease, or (in the case of such a conveyance of a part only of the demised property) subject to an apportioned part of the rent so reserved, such rent is not a part of the consideration in respect whereof the conveyance is chargeable with ad valorem duty under section 57 of the Stamp Act, 1891.—SWAYNE v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, Q.B.D., 300; [1899] 1 Q. B. 335; 68 L. J. Q. B. 234; 80 L. T. 56.

29. Stamp duty—Debenture—Right to redeem debenture on paying a premium—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 86, Schedule I.—A limited company issued a series of debentures of £100 each, and each debenture stated that the company would, at certain specified dates, pay to the registered holder the sum of £100, with interest at £5 10s. per cent., and one of the conditions indorsed on the debentures was that the company might, after the 1st of July, 1900, on giving six months' notice to the registered holder, redeem any debenture at £103, before the time fixed for payment. The debentures were marketable securities not transferable by delivery within the meaning of Schedule I. of the Stamp Act, 1891.

Held, that each debenture was a security for £103, and not for £100 only, and ought, therefore, to be stamped as a mortgage for £103, as required by Schedule I. of the Stamp Act, 1891.

In a second case—The Knights Deep (Limited) (No. 2) (Appellants) v. The Commissioners of Inland Revenue (Respondents)—where the conditions of the debenture were in all respects the same as in the previous case, except that the debenture was payable to "bearer," the court held that the same principle applied.—KNIGHTS DEEP (LIMITED) v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, Q.B.D., 415; [1899] 1 Q. B. 345; 68 L. J. Q. B. 125; 79 L. T. 704.

30. Stamp duty—Foreign security issued in the United Kingdom—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 82, sub-section 1 (6) (i.).—The bond of an American railway company, payable to bearer, contained a clause on the face of the bond: "This bond shall not be valid for any purposes unless authenticated by the certificate hereon indorsed of the trustee. . . ." This instrument had been executed in the United States and delivered to a trust company, which was to act as trustee; but the certificate was unsigned, and the instrument was transmitted in that state to London, where the certificate was signed as required, and the bond issued to the holders.

Held, that the bond was a marketable security both made and issued in the United Kingdom within the meaning of section 82, sub-section 1 (6) (i.), of the Stamp Act, 1891.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (48 W. R. 98, [1898] 1 Q. B. 78) affirmed.—REVELSTOKE v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS (BARING v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS), H.L., 210; [1898] A. C. 565; 79 L. T. 227.

31. Stamp duty—Mortgage—Covenant—Agreement under seal to execute mortgage when required—Stamp Act, 1881 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 86, Schedule I.—By an instrument under seal a company agreed, in consideration of a sum of money then advanced to them by a building society, to execute, whenever called upon by the society, a mortgage or charge of the company's interest in certain lands in such form as the society should request, to secure the repayment of the sum so advanced and interest; and, by the same instrument, the company agreed to pay interest on the sum advanced until repayment, and appointed a person receiver of the rents and profits of the lands so long as any money remained due to the society, such receiver not to take possession until default had been made in payment after demand of the principal and interest.

Held, that the instrument was a "mortgage" or a "covenant" within the meaning of the Stamp Act, 1891, and was chargeable with ad valorem duty under the head "Mortgage, Bond, Debenture, Covenant," in the first schedule to that Act.—UNITED REALIZATION CO. v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, Q.B.D., 381; [1899] 1 Q. B. 361; 68 L. J. Q. B. 218; 79 L. T. 556.

32. Stamp duty—Mortgage—Security for the repayment of money to be thereafter lent or paid—Additional or substituted security—Trust deed for securing debenture stock—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 86, sub-section 1; s. 88, sub-section 1; Schedule.—A trust deed of 1897 for securing irredeemable 3½ per cent. debenture stock of a company provided as follows: That the issue of the stock should in the first instance be limited to £300,000; that a further issue might be made of £540,000, making altogether £840,000; that such further issue should only be made for the purpose of redeeming or paying off an already existing 4 per cent. debenture stock secured by a trust deed of 1892; and that the 4 per cent. debenture stock to be redeemed or paid off should be transferred to the trustees of the deed of 1897.

Held, first, that the deed of 1897 was a security for the repayment of money to be thereafter paid within the meaning of section 86, sub-section 1, of the Stamp Act, 1891, and that, by virtue of section 88, sub-section 1, it was chargeable with duty on the total amount of £840,000; secondly, that it was chargeable (under the heading Mortgage, Bond, Debenture, Covenant) with ad valorem duty at the rate of 2s. 6d. per cent., as being a principal or primary security, and not merely with ad valorem duty at the rate of 6d. per cent. as being an additional or substituted security.—CITY OF LONDON BREWERY CO. v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, C.A., 216; [1899) 1 Q. B. 121; 62 L. J. Q. B. 62; 79 L. T. 648.

33. Stamp duty—Policy of insurance against accident—Employers' liability policy—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 98.—A policy of insurance by which an insurance company agrees to pay for and on behalf of the assured such sums as the assured shall become liable to pay in respect of personal injury caused in his business to workmen in his employment is not a "policy of insurance against accident" within the meaning of section 48 of, and the schedule to, the Stamp Act, 1891, but requires to be stamped, if under seal, as a deed, and if under hand only, as an agreement.—LANCASHIRE INSURANCE CO. v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS; VULCAN BOILER AND GENERAL INSURANCE CO. v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, Q.B.D., 396; [1899] 1 Q. B. 353; 68 L. J. Q. B. 143; 79 L. T. 731.

34. Stamp duty—Receipts—Penalties—Entries of sums in book—Payment of sums—Entries initialled by person receiving money—Liability of entries to stamp duty as receipts—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), ss. 101, 103.—A bank, which was a limited company carrying on a moneylending business, engaged a solicitor under an agreement which made him an officer of the bank, for the purpose of carrying on the legal business of the bank and collecting debts due from customers. When the solicitor recovered sums of money for the bank he wrote down the amount in a book kept by him for that purpose, and he then took the money, with the book, to the bank and handed the amount over to one of the officers of the bank, who, in the margin opposite the amount paid, generally wrote the word "Received," with the amount and the date, and sometimes simply put his initials with the date, and in one case wrote the word "Entered," with the amount and initials.

Held, that these entries were all receipts within the meaning of section 101 of the Stamp Act, 1891; that there was no distinction in the form of the receipts, and that all the entries in respect of £2 or upwards required to be stamped as receipts; and that the bank were liable in penalties, under section 103, for the act of its officers in not stamping them.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. CARLTON BANK, Q.B.D., 650; [1899] 2 Q. B. 158; 66 L. J. Q. B. 788.

35. Stamp duty—Receipt—Scrip certificate—Instalment.—A receipt upon a duly stamped scrip certificate for a sum of stock acknowledging an instalment due thereon, is within the exemption 11 under the title "receipt" in the first schedule to the Stamp Act, 1891, and is not liable to stamp duty.—LONDON AND WESTMINSTER BANK v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, Q.B.D.; 68 L. J. Q. B. 787.

36. Stamp duty—Sale of business—Goodwill—"Property locally situate out of the United Kingdom."—The parties to an agreement in writing were M., N., W., a syndicate, and a company. The agreement recited that M. carried on business in the United Kingdom, and that N. had acquired the right to purchase the business on trust for W.; that N. with the sanction of W. had agreed to make over that right to the syndicate; and it was provided by the agreement that M. by the direction of N., W., and the syndicate, should sell to the company the goodwill and premises of the business.

The agreement was executed by the syndicate and the company in England, but by the other parties out of the United Kingdom.

Held, that the agreement was "made in England" within section 59 of the Stamp Act, 1891; that the "goodwill" was "property," but not "property locally situate out of the United Kingdom," and that the agreement was chargeable with ad valorem duty in respect of the value of the goodwill.—MULLER v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, Q.B.D.; 68 L. J. Q. B. 797.

37. Succession duty—Alienation—New succession—Succession Duty Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 51), ss. 2, 15, 18.—Under the provisions of the will of the second Baron Wolverton, who died in 1887, the whole of his residuary estate, subject to the widow's life interest, was held in trust for the person who might, at the time of the widow's death, answer the description of the testator's right heir at common law. At the testator's death his nieces became his co-heiresses, and the appellant, a nephew, succeeded to the title.

Under a deed of arrangement, dated the 31st of December, 1888, the co-heiresses under this will and the appellant assigned their contingent interests, and the widow her life interest, in the testator's residuary estate to trustees upon trust to pay thereout, upon Lady Wolverton's decease, an annuity of £15,000 to the appellant, and certain accumulations and payments were also provided for.

The testator's widow died on the 4th of January, 1894. the co-heiresses surviving her, when the Commissioners of Inland Revenue received legacy duty at the rate of 3 per cent. on the whole of the testator's residuary estate. In addition the commissioners claimed succession duty upon the annuity of £15,000 at 6½ per cent. from the appellant as upon a succession coming to the appellant from the testator's widow or from the co-heiresses, or from both.

Held, that no new succession was created in the annuity of £15,000 to which the appellant became entitled, and that he was not liable to duty.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (45 W. R. 236, [1897] 1 Q. B. 231) reversed.—WOLVERTON (LORD) v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL, H.L., 97; [1898] A. C. 535; 79 L. T. 58.

38. Succession duty—Partnership between father and son—Death of father—Sale—Succession Duty Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 51).—The father of the appellant, who had carried on a business for a long time, entered into partnership with his son, the appellant, for a term of years. The son brought no capital into the business, but, by the deed of partnership, it was agreed that one-third of the capital was to be deemed to be the son's, and that the profits were to be divided accordingly. It was also agreed that, if the partnership continued for the stipulated term, or was terminated by any other cause than the death of one partner, the son's share of the capital was to be one-half; and, if the father died during the term, the son was to have the whole business and pay £10,000 to the father's executors; and, if the son died during the term, the father was to have back the whole business and pay £15,000 to the son's executors. The father died during the term, and the Crown claimed succession duty from the son.

Held (affirming the judgment of the court below), that the partnership deed was of the nature of a family arrangement, and not a sale of the business to the son upon the footing of a commercial transaction, and that the duty was payable.—BROWN v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL, H.L.; 79 L. T. 572.

See also Bankruptcy, 17.

INSURANCE:—

1. Burglary and housebreaking—"Actual forcible and violent entry"—Entry by opening unlocked door—Breaking open inner door of shop-front.—A policy of insurance on a jeweller's stock-in-trade recited that the assured was desirous of effecting an insurance against "loss or damage by burglary and housebreaking as hereinafter defined," and in its operative part it insured him against loss of the property therein described "by theft following upon actual forcible and violent entry upon the premises wherein the same is herein stated to be situate." In the proposal for the insurance the assured stated that the premises were a shop, warehouse, and dwelling, and that they were protected by wood shutters and iron bars, and iron plates inside. The policy contained a condition that the assured should take all due precautions for the safety of the property insured as if the same were not insured as regards, inter alia, securing all doors, windows, and other means of entrance. During the temporary absence of the porter, who was taking down the shop shutters in the morning, the front door being shut, but neither locked nor bolted, a thief opened the door by turning the handle and entered the shop, and, having forcibly wrenched an iron plate and padlock off an inner door of the shop-front, stole therefrom part of the insured jewellery.

Held, that the loss was not covered by the policy.

Decision of Wills and Kennedy, JJ. (46 W. R. 557, [1898] 2 Q. B. 136), reversed.—GEORGE AND GOLDSMITHS, &c., BURGLARY INSURANCE ASSOCIATION, RE, C.A., 474; [1899] 1 Q. B. 595; 68 L. J. Q. B. 365; 80 L. T. 248.

2. Deposit—Bank—Liquidation—Reconstruction—Second liquidation—Purchase of assets by new company—"Final dividend on liquidation."—Plaintiff insured certain sums deposited in the M. Bank with the defendants who undertook to pay him interest on such deposits should default be made by the bank "until the principal was paid by the bank and (or) the undertakers; and the principal sums, less any portion of the principal previously received from the bank when the final dividend in bankruptcy or liquidation is declared." A few days after the policy was entered into the M. Bank went into liquidation. It was reconstructed, and subsequently again went into liquidation. Under this second liquidation dividends to the extent of 5s. 7d. in the pound were paid to the plaintiff. The last of such dividends did not purport to be a final dividend, but practically the assets were exhausted, and what remained had been taken over by a new company for realisation. This new company offered shares to the plaintiff in payment of the balance of his deposits which he in accordance with the provisions of the insurance policy rejected. The plaintiff then sued the defendants for payment of the balance of the deposits. The defendants contended that they were not liable to repay until the final dividend was paid on liquidation of the M. Bank, and that the last paid dividend was not final, and the liquidation was not yet completed.

Held, that they were liable. — MURDOCK v. HEATH, Q.B.D.; 80 L. T. 50.

3. Guarantee of solvency — Doctrine of concealment — Uberrima fides. — The doctrine as to the concealment of material facts applies to all contracts of insurance, and not merely to marine, fire, and life insurances.

Per Romer, L.J.—Where a contract may with equal propriety be called a contract of insurance or a contract of guarantee, the question whether it is a contract requiring uberrima fides depends upon its substantial character and how it came to be effected. —SEATON v. HEATH; SEATON v. BURNAND, C.A., 487; [1899] 1 Q. B. 782; 68 L. J. Q. B. 631; 80 L. T. 579.

4. Marine—Arms and ammunition shipped to foreign country in time of peace—Capture—Alleged prohibition of foreign country against importation of such goods—Alleged concealment of fact material for calculating risk—Alleged illegal venture—Validity of policy.—The plaintiffs insured with the defendants arms and ammunitions for delivery at certain ports in the Persian Gulf, under a policy which covered

"capture at sea." The goods were seized and confiscated by an English man-of-war, acting, it was alleged, on behalf of the Persian Government, under an edict passed in 1881 (but which had never been enforced so long as the duty demanded for import of such goods was paid) prohibiting the importation of arms and ammunition in Persia.

Held, that the plaintiffs could recover on the policy, because there had been in fact no wilful concealment on their part from the underwriters of the risk of seizure; for, if they knew of the edict, they had no reason to suppose that it would be enforced so long as the duty payable was forthcoming. Nor was the policy void, as being on goods shipped for an illegal venture, for the importation of such goods into Persia was neither contrary to the law of Persia as that law was in practice administered, nor illegal by the law of the country of the assured, England being at the time in amity with Persia.—FRACIS v. SEA INSURANCE CO., Q.B.D., 119; 79 L. T. 28.

5. Marine—Collision—Loss by detention during repairs—Damages—Remoteness—Construction of policy.—Barges were insured against loss or damage, which the insured should sustain, or become liable to others for, by reason of the collision of the barges with any other vessel. The barges having been damaged by collision, the insured claimed damages for loss in consequence of detention of the barges during repairs.

Held, that, in order to be recoverable, the loss must be proximately caused by the perils insured against, and that the damages claimed were too remote, and could not be recovered under the policy.—SHELBOURNE & CO. v. LAW INVESTMENT AND INSURANCE CORPORATION (LIMITED), Q.B.D.; [1898] 2 Q. B. 626; 79 L. T. 278.

6. Marine—Lump chartered freight—Cesser clause—Charterers' liability to cease on cargo being loaded—Lien for bill of lading freight—Absence of lien for chartered freight—Loss of goods by perils of the sea—Bill of lading freight payable less than chartered freight.—By a charter-party a ship was chartered for a voyage at the lump freight of £3,000 payable on delivery of the cargo. The master was to sign bills of lading at any rate of freight the charterers might require, but not under chartered rates, or difference to be settled in cash on signing bills of lading; the charterers' liability to cease on shipment of the cargo provided it was worth the freight, dead freight, and demurrage on arrival at the port of discharge, but the vessel to have a lien thereon for the recovery of all freight, dead freight, and demurrage. The charterers loaded a full cargo under bills of lading which made the goods comprised in each bill of lading deliverable to the consignee thereof on payment of the bill of lading freight. The shipowners effected a policy against perils of the sea on the chartered freight. During the voyage part of the cargo was lost by a peril of the sea, and on the ship's arrival at the port of discharge the bills of lading freights payable to the shipowners upon that part of the cargo which arrived was less by £645 than the chartered freight, though the cargo which arrived was worth the chartered freight. In an action by the shipowners upon the policy to recover the £645 as being a loss of chartered freight by a peril of the sea,

Held, that the loss was not caused by a peril of the sea, but by the master not having signed bills of lading giving the shipowners a lien upon the goods comprised in each bill of lading for the whole chartered freight.—BRANKELOW STEAMSHIP CO. v. CANTON INSURANCE OFFICE (LIMITED), C.A., 611; [1899] 2 Q. B. 186; 68 L. J. Q. B. 811.

7. Marine—Policy—Valued policy—Constructive total loss.—Where a ship has been sunk in deep water, the underwriters cannot escape liability as for a total constructive loss by gratuitously intervening and taking upon themselves, between the date of notice of abandonment and the time when legal proceedings are commenced under the policy, the expenses of raising the insured vessel and saving her from being a constructive total loss. And such a gratuitous expenditure will not relieve the underwriters from their contractual liability.

The test whether a ship has become a constructive total loss is the same in English as in Scottish law, although these laws may differ in regard to the date at which the test ought to be applied. In considering whether a constructive total loss has occurred, the question is whether a shipowner of ordinary prudence and uninsured would have gone to the expense of raising a sunken ship and repairing her.

A ship insured under a valued policy was struck by a squall and sunk in harbour. The underwriters received notice of abandonment from the insured; but before action brought they, by a large expenditure of their own, raised the ship and claimed that, as the ship could at the date of the action have been repaired by the expenditure of less money than her total value, the loss was not a total but a partial one.

Held, reversing the decision of the Second Division of the Court of Session, [1897] 24 R. 893, that the underwriters could not change a constructive total loss into a partial loss by intervening and raising the ship at their own expense.—"BLAIRMORE" STEAMSHIP CO. v. MACREDIE, H.L. (Sc.); [1898] A. C. 593; 79 L. T. 217.

8. Marine—Policy on ship—Cargo rendered worthless by sea peril—Cost of discharging cargo—Liability of underwriters on ship.—A ship, while insured by a time policy on hull and machinery against perils of the sea and all other perils which might come to her hurt, detriment, or damage, was injured by collision. She was carrying a cargo of cotton seed, which was so damaged by sea water and mud in consequence of the collision that it became rotten and worthless, and the consignees refused to accept it.

Held, that the shipowners were not entitled to recover from their underwriters the cost of discharging the worthless cargo at the port of destination.

Judgment of Bigham, J. (46 W. R. 490, [1898] 1 Q. B. 821), affirmed.—FIELD STEAMSHIP CO. v. BURR, C.A., 341; [1899] 1 Q. B. 579; 68 L. J. Q. B. 426; 80 L. T. 445.

9. Marine — Reinsurance — Lapse of original policies—New policy—Alteration of risk—Liability under policy of reinsurance.—An underwriter who had subscribed two time policies on a ship valued therein at £5,600 effected a reinsurance by a time policy which was expressed to be a policy on the same ship, "being a reinsurance of policy or policies, and subject to the same terms, conditions, and clauses as original policy or policies, and to pay as may be paid thereon." The first of the original policies having expired, the second original policy was cancelled, and the underwriter subscribed a new time policy on the same ship, which was valued therein at £5,000.

Held, that risk undertaken by the new policy was not covered by the reinsurance.

Judgment of Kennedy, J. (46 W. R. 380, [1898] 1 Q. B. 739), reversed.—LOWER RHINE, &c., INSURANCE CORPORATION v. SEDGWICK, C.A., 261; [1899] 1 Q. B. 179; 68 L. J. Q. B. 186; 80 L. T. 6.

10. Marine—Steamers "sailing on or after the 1st of March"—"Sailing," what constitutes—Attachment of risk.—The plaintiff company were reinsured on flour in steamers "sailing on or after the 1st of March." A steamer completed her loading alongside a wharf in a river about 10 p.m. on the 29th of February. The steamer was then moved a short distance out into mid-stream, where she anchored till 8 a.m. on the 1st of March, when she proceeded down the river on her voyage. By leaving the wharf on the previous evening the steamer was placed in a more advantageous position for making a start, but the master's sole intention in moving the steamer was to prevent the crew from leaving the steamer during the night. The steamer and her cargo having become a total loss,

Held, that the steamer sailed on the 1st of March, and not on the 29th of February, and that the loss was covered by the policy.—SEA INSURANCE CO. v. BLOGG, C.A., 71; [1898] 2 Q. B. 398.

INTEREST.—See Company, 4; Trustee, 1.

JERSEY, LAW of:—

Deed of settlement by wife's father—Rights of husband and wife in settled estate—Claim of husband's heir.—By the law of Jersey a conveyance of real estate by a husband to his wife, stante matrimonio, to the prejudice of his lawful heirs is invalid.

Where, by a deed of family arrangement, it appeared that a husband and his wife, separated quant aux biens, each took from her father (subject to a charge of an annuity in his favour) a conjoint interest in the settled lands during their joint lives, with the chance of the fee on survivorship,

Held, that the deed was in no sense a conveyance by the husband of any interest acquired by him thereunder; and that on his death before his wife his interest ceased and could not pass to his heirs.—BROOMER v. ARTHUR, P.C.; [1898] A. C. 777.

JUSTICES:—

1. Carriage licence—First offence—Second offence—7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 53, s. 78—42 & 43 Vict. c. 49, s. 4—32 & 33 Vict. c. 14, s. 27.—Section 4 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 49), as far as reduction of fines is concerned applies only to first offences. Fines for second and subsequent offences are regulated by 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 53, s. 78, under which such fines cannot be reduced below one-fourth of their full amount as imposed by statute.

To constitute a second offence under 32 & 33 Vict. c. 14, s. 27, it is not necessary to be convicted twice in the same year of keeping a carriage without having a licence for that year. A conviction in one year of keeping a carriage without a licence for that year following a conviction in a previous year for keeping a carriage without a licence for that year is a second conviction for the same offence. — PHILLIPS v. STEPHENS, Q.B.D.; 79 L. T. 280.

2. Jurisdiction — Wilful damage to property — "Fair and reasonable supposition" of right—Bona fides—The Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97), s. 52.—By section 52 of the Malicious Damage Act, 1861, "whosoever shall wilfully or maliciously commit any damage, injury, or spoil to or upon any real or personal property whatever either of a public or private nature," may be convicted before a justice of the peace, and imprisoned and fined, "provided that nothing herein contained shall extend to any case where the party acted under a fair and reasonable supposition that he had a right to do the act complained of," &c.

The appellants pulled down a hedge bounding Fernworthy Down, which was held in undivided shares by the respondents. They had done so on several previous occasions. Both of them lived in houses near the down, and under leases granted by the predecessors of one of the respondents. They had committed the acts complained of in pursuance of a supposed right of pasture on the down which they contended was a common, and, although for many years they had attempted to carry out their supposed rights, they had always been disputed. There was no mention in any of the leases of any grant.

The justices were of opinion that the rights that they claimed could not exist in law, and that their jurisdiction was not ousted, and they convicted the appellants.

Held, that the conviction was right, as there was no fair and reasonable claim of right.

White v. Feast, 26 L. T. Rep. 611, followed.—BROOKS v. HAMLYN, Q.B.D.; 79 L. T. 734.

3. Lunacy—Court of summary jurisdiction—Power to state case—Order to seize money in lunatic's name in savings bank—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 43), s. 35—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 49), s. 54—Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 5), s. 299.—Justices acting under section 299 of the Lunacy Act are not a court of summary jurisdiction, and have therefore no power to state a case.

An order under that section can be made to seize money standing in the lunatic's name in the Post Office Savings Bank.—BETHEL, RE, Q.B.D.; 80 L. T. 492.

4. Married woman—Desertion.—A husband and wife married in 1890, parted by mutual agreement in 1892, in order to find work, they being domestic servants. The husband obtained work, and made his wife an allowance up to 1897. In 1899 he wrote to her: "I am not going to have any more to do with you as man and wife." Upon a summons by the wife under the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1895,

Held, that the husband had deserted the wife.—HUXTABLE v. HUXTABLE, P.D. & Ad.D.; 68 L. J. P. 83.

5. Married Women (Summary Jurisdiction) Act, 1895—Appeal—R. S. C., ord. 59, rr. 4a and 7.—B. and his wife resided at W. On various occasions the wife left B. and went to her father at P. For some time husband and wife lived apart, and the husband gave the wife an allowance, but no definite agreement for separation was arrived at. The wife took out a summons at W. against B. for desertion under section 4 of the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895. The summons was dismissed. The wife subsequently returned to the husband's house, and the husband after several days' absence informed her that he was giving up the house and she must find a home for herself. The wife's furniture was removed from the house on the 14th of May. The wife went to P., and took out a similar summons there against B.

Held, that the magistrates were justified in deciding that the facts constituted desertion by B.

Held also, that desertion being a continuing offence, and the wife having been driven to P. by B.'s acts, the magistrates at P. had jurisdiction to make an order against B. The order of the magistrates contained no finding that B. had been guilty of desertion.

Held, that though the order was irregular, the court had power to make a fresh order under ord. 59, rr. 4a and 7, and that a fresh order ought to be made in the terms of the order appealed against.—BROWN v. BROWN, P.D. & Ad.D.; 79 L. T. 102.

6. Poor law—Maintenance—Sum due under maintenance order—Recoverable as a civil debt—Poor Relief Act, 1601 (43 Eliz. c. 2), s. 6—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 49), ss. 6, 35.—Money due under an order of justices made upon a person for the maintenance of his father under 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 6, is recoverable before a court of summary jurisdiction as a civil debt and not as a penalty; and an order of justices for the payment of the money so due cannot be enforced by imprisonment in default of distress, unless it be proved that the person in default has since the date of the latter order had the means to pay the sum in respect of which he has made default — GAMBLE, RE, Q.B.D.; [1889] 1 Q. B. 305; 68 L. J. Q. B. 195; 79 L. T. 642.

7. Public health—Infectious disease—Removal order—Public Health Act, 1874 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 124.—The validity of an order for removal to hospital of a person suffering from a dangerous infectious disorder, made ex parte by a single justice under section 124 of the Public Health Act, 1875, cannot be inquired into upon the hearing of a summons for obstructing the execution of the order.—REG. v. DAVEY, Q.B.D.; [1899] 2 Q. B. 301; 68 L. J. Q. B. 675; 80 L. T. 798.

8. Public health — Infectious disorder — Proper lodging or accommodation—Removal order—Public Health Act, 1875, s. 124.—Where it was proved that a person suffering from a dangerous infectious disorder had proper lodging and accommodation so far as he himself was concerned at his father's house, but that he could not be properly isolated there, and that there was danger of infection to the other inmates,

Held, that there was evidence that he was "without proper lodging and accommodation" within section 124 of the Public Health Act, 1875, and that the justices had jurisdiction to order his removal to a hospital.—WARWICK v. GRAHAM, Q.B.D.; [1899] 2 Q. B. 191; 80 L. T. 773.

9. Public health—Summons under Public Health (Buildings in Streets) Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 52), s. 3 — No previous notice — Second summons — Res judicata.—An urban district council served a summons on J. under section 3 of the Public Health (Buildings in Streets) Act, 1888. No previous notice had been given to J. by the urban authority as required by the section, and the stipendiary magistrate dismissed the summons upon the ground that it was defective in that no offence to which a penalty was attached was set out. Notice was then served on J., and a second summons taken out, under which the magistrate convicted. J. appealed upon the plea that, as the first summons has been dismissed, the matter was res judicata.

Held, that, as the matter had not been decided at all on the first summons, it was not res judicata, and that, therefore, the magistrate was entitled to convict.—JENKINS v. MERTHYR TYDVIL COUNCIL, Q.B.D.; 80 L. T. 600.

10. Summary proceedings—Commencement of proceedings—Limitation of time—Salmon Fisheries Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 71), s. 62—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848 (Jervis' Act) (11 & 12 Vict. c. 43), s. 11.—Section 62 of the Salmon Fisheries Act, 1873, enacts that all penalties imposed by the Salmon Fisheries Acts "may be recovered within six months after the commission of the offence before two justices" in manner directed by the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848.

Section 11 of the latter Act provides that, where no time is specially limited for making a complaint or laying an information on the Act relating to each particular case, the complaint shall be made and the information laid within six months from when the matter arose.

Held, that section 11 of Jervis' Act applied to proceedings for the recovery of a penalty under section 62 of the Salmon Fisheries Act, 1873.—MORRIS v. DUNCAN, Q.B.D., 96; [1899] 1 Q. B. 4; 68 L. J. Q. B. 49; 79 L. T. 379.

See also Adulteration, 2; Bankruptcy, 9; Licensing Law, 1-3, 5, 6, 10, 12; Local Government, 18, 21; Vaccination.

LANDLORD and TENANT:—

1. Agricultural holding—Compensation for improvements—Special bargain—Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 61), s. 57.—By an agreement between the tenant of a farm and his landlord it was agreed that the tenant should quit the farm on a day named within the space of two months, and that, in consideration thereof, the landlord should pay him reasonable compensation in respect of certain unexhausted improvements under four heads, one of them being a matter for compensation under the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883, the other three being outside the Act.

Held, that, notwithstanding anything contained in the Agricultural Holdings Act, such agreement was valid, and the tenant might maintain an action against the landlord to recover compensation thereunder.—NEWBY v. ECKERSLEY, C.A., 245; [1899] 1 Q. B. 465; 68 L. J. Q. B. 261; 80 L. T. 314.

2. Away-going crop—Deductions under lease—Deductions by custom of the country—Inconsistency.—The following proviso was in a lease made between the landlord and the tenants: "Provided, lastly, that on the determination of his tenancy the tenant shall, in the event of having duly performed the several stipulations and agreements hereinbefore contained and to be performed on his part, be entitled to have and take a following or away-going crop of corn not exceeding one-third of the arable land hereby demised, such crop to be taken from land summer fallowed or from which turnips or rape have been eaten, or from land sown in the regular course with seeds and depastured by sheep, and which said away-going crop shall be taken at a valuation to be ascertained by two disinterested persons, one to be named by the on-coming, the other by the off-going tenant or their umpire (in case they cannot agree), such umpire to be appointed by such valuers before proceeding upon such valuation, and the decision of such two arbitrators or of their umpire shall be final and binding on both parties. And it is further agreed that one-half of the value of such away-going crop shall be paid at Christmas next after the determination of this demise and the remaining half at Lady Day following; subject, nevertheless, to such deductions as the same may be liable to under any of the covenants and agreements hereinbefore contained on the part of the tenant, and which the landlord is hereby authorized to deduct accordingly, and also subject to such of the rents hereinbefore reserved as shall be due and owing, to the payment of which it shall be primarily liable, and for which rents the said landlord shall be entitled at any time to distrain the same away-going crop before or after severance as for rent in arrear."

The covenants thereinbefore referred to were inserted for the benefit of the landlord as to cultivation and repairs to buildings, and gave him in certain cases a right of lien on the valuation of the away-going crop in respect of his claim for damages against the tenant for breaches of covenant committed by him. There were no stipulations, however, as to the mode of ascertaining the value of such crop.

Held, that there was nothing to prevent the application of the custom of the country, and that the tenants were entitled to the away-going crop and manurial value of the straw, but that the landlord was entitled to deductions for standage, rateable proportion of the rates and taxes, and cost of labour.—CONSTABLE AND CRANSWICK'S ARBITRATION, RE, Q.B.D.; 80 L. T. 164.

3. Compensation for improvements—Counter-notice of claim by landlord—Arbitration—Award to landlord of amount in excess of tenant's claim—Enforcement of award—Agricultural Holdings (England) Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 61), ss. 6-9, 22—Arbitration Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 49), s. 12—An outgoing tenant of a farm gave due notice of intention to claim from the lessor compensation for improvements under the Agricultural Holdings (England) Act, 1883, and the lessor gave due notice of intention to counter-claim against the tenant for breaches of covenant. After the expiration of the time for giving notices of claim prescribed by the Act, both parties gave notices of further claims, some of which were in respect of matters not within the Act. Referees and an umpire having been appointed in pursuance of the Act, before the reference proceeded, an agreement in writing was made between the parties by which all matters in difference as stated in the claims and counter-claims were referred to the referees and umpire already appointed under the Act, and it was agreed that all the said matters shall be dealt with in one award only of the said referees or umpire. The referees disagreeing, the umpire made an award by which he found that a certain amount was due from the lessor to the tenant, and a larger amount was due from the tenant to the lessor, and awarded that the tenant should pay the balance to the lessor. The amount not being paid,

Held, that leave might be given to the lessor to enforce the award in the same manner as a judgment or order to the same effect under section 12 of the Arbitration Act, 1889.—LLOYD AND TOOTH, RE, C.A.; [1889] 1 Q. B. 559; 68 L. J. Q. B. 376; 80 L. T. 394.

4. Distress—Pound breach—Possession—Abandonment—11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 10.—To maintain an action for pound breach or rescue of goods distrained for rent it is not necessary, even as against the true owner thereof, that the plaintiff should retain actual possession of the goods.—JONES v. BEIRNSTEIN, Q.B.D. 239; [1899] 1 Q. B. 470; 68 L. J. Q. B. 270; 80 L. T. 157.

5. Distress—Pound breach—Treble damages—Proof of damage—2 Will & M. c. 5, s. 4.—An action for treble damages for pound breach or rescous of goods distrained for rent, under section 4 of 2 Will. & M. c. 5, is maintainable by the landlord without proof of any special damage suffered by him.—KEMP. v. CHRISTMAS, C.A.; 79 L. T. 233.

6. Easement—Right of way over passage—Signboard—Expenditure—Acquiescence.—Where a passage was not included in demised premises, but the lessee had a right of way over it to his shop, the lessor, who knew that the lessee was repairing the passage, and by his conduct had encouraged the lessee to spend money on the passage under the mistaken belief that he had a right to do so, and also allowed the lessee to put up a signboard before the execution of the lease, was held not to be entitled, after all the work had been completed, to set up his legal right to the passage, and compel the lessee to restore the passage to its original state, and to remove the signboard.—CIVIL SERVICE MUSICAL INSTRUMENT ASSOCIATION v. WHITEMAN, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 68 L. J. Ch. 484; 80 L. T. 685.

7. Lease—Assignment—Indemnity against breaches of covenant—Covenant to repair—Premises out of repair at date of assignment—Liability of assignee.—A lease, which contained a covenant by the lessee and his assigns to keep the houses comprised therein in repair, became vested in the defendants as the executors of the assignee of the lease. The houses were out of repair, and the defendants agreed to sell them to a purchaser for the residue of the term. On the same day the plaintiff, who was entitled to the reversion on the determination of the lease, served notice upon the defendants that the houses were out of repair, giving particulars of the breaches of covenant complained of. The defendants subsequently executed, as trustees, an assignment of the lease of the houses to the purchaser, who knew of their condition and of the service of the notice, and the purchaser covenanted that he would thenceforth pay the rent reserved by the lease, and observe and perform the lessees' covenants therein contained, and from the payment and performance thereof respectively would keep indemnified the defendants and the estate and effects of their testator. The houses not having been put into repair, the plaintiff brought an action against the defendants to recover damages for breaches of the covenant to repair specified in the notice, and the defendants served a third-party notice on the purchaser claiming indemnity from him under his covenant to indemnify.

Held, that the defendants were entitled to an indemnity from the assignee against their liability for the breaches of the covenant to repair.—GOOCH v. CLUTTERBUCK, C.A., 609; [1899] 2 Q. B. 148; 68 L. J. Q. B. 808.

8. Lease—Assignment—Sub-lease by way of mortgage—Original lessee compelled to pay rent—Right of original lessee to recover from sub-lessee of assignee.—The plaintiffs, being the lessees of premises, assigned their term to P., who sub-let the premises to the defendants for the residue of the term, except the last day, by way of mortgage. The mortgage contained a covenant on the part of the defendants that, if they entered into possession of the premises under their powers, and received the rents and profits, they would pay the rent reserved by the original lease. The defendants entered into possession, and P. became bankrupt. The defendants did not pay the rent reserved by the original lease, and the lessor compelled the plaintiffs to pay it.

Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover from the defendants the amount so paid for rent.

Moule v. Garrett, 18 W. R. 697, 20 Ibid. 416, L. R. 5 Ex. 132, 7 Ibid. 101, explained.—BONNER v. TOTTENHAM, &c., BUILDING SOCIETY, C.A., 161; [1899] 1 Q. B. 161; 68 L. J. Q. B. 114; 79 L. T. 611.

9. Lease — Construction — False demonstratio.—The defendants, who were the occupiers and owners for a term of years of two houses, Nos. 13 and 14.

Old Bond-street, by underlease demised to the plaintiff rooms on the second floor of Nos. 13 and 14, "together with free ingress and egress for the lessee, her servants and customers, through the staircase and passages of No. 13 to and from the demised rooms." There was a staircase in No. 14 leading to and from the said rooms, and not in No. 13, and no other way to which the above grant could apply. There was, however, a lift in No. 13, the use of which by the plaintiff was provided for by the deed.

Held, by Romer, J., that, the above grant containing a grant of a right of way over the staircase and passages leading to and from the demised rooms, the way granted was sufficiently certain for the court to reject the words "of No. 13," as being a falsa demonstratio, notwithstanding their position in the description of the way; and the deed must be construed as giving a right of way over the staircase in No. 14, that being the only access which could have been referred to by the grant.

Held, by the Court of Appeal, that as the rejection of the words "of No. 13" would not leave a description applicable to the staircase in No. 14, the doctrine of falsa demonstratio did not apply; but that it was the intention of the parties that the plaintiff should have access over the staircase in No. 14, and that the underlease should be rectified accordingly.

Decision of Romer, J., ante, p. 29, affirmed on this ground.—COWEN v. TRUEFITT, C.A., 661.

10. Lease—Construction—Lessee's covenants—Payment of "impositions and outgoings" charged on demised premises—"Fair share and proportion" of expenses paid by lessor in reparation or otherwise by virtue of any Act of Parliament—Factory and Workshop Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 75), s. 7.—A lease contained (inter alia) two covenants by the tenant, one was to pay "all rates and taxes, sewers rate, and main drainage rate, parish dues, and all other rates, taxes, and impositions and outgoings whatsoever," which might be in any wise imposed upon, or in respect of, the demised premises or upon the landlords in respect thereof by authority of Parliament or otherwise howsoever; the other was to pay a fair share and proportion of all costs and expenses which the lessors, in respect of being the owners of the demised premises, might, during the continuance of the term, be called upon to pay in or about "any reparation . . . or in or about any drainage or sewerage or otherwise by virtue of any Act or Acts of Parliament already made," or thereafter to be made. During the continuance of the term the landlords were compelled, under the Factory and Workshop Act, 1891, to spend money in making structural alterations on the demised premises. In an action by the landlord to recover from the tenant the whole of the amount so spent,

Held, that, upon the true construction of the two covenants the tenant was liable to pay, not the whole, but only a fair share and proportion of the amount so spent.—ARDING v. ECONOMIC PRINTING Co., C.A.; 79 L. T. 622.

11. Lease—Covenant against assignment—Assignments of lessee's whole estate for benefit of creditors—Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 14.—A tenant of leasehold property who executes a deed of assignment for the benefit of his creditors of all his property, and as to the leasehold property thereby covenants to stand possessed thereof in such manner as the creditors' trustee shall direct, commits a breach of a covenant against assignment contained in the lease, and the landlord is entitled to re-enter without giving the notice required by section 14 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881.—GENTLE v. FAULKNER, Q.B.D.; 68 L. J. Q. B. 848.

12. Lease—Covenant to bear charges—Charge upon landlord in respect of premises—Expenses of paving new street—Claim by district board—Payment by landlord—Right to recover from tenant—Metropolis Management Acts, 1855, 1862 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, ss. 105, 250; 25 & 26 Vict. c. 102, ss. 77, 96).—By a covenant in a lease of land in the metropolis the tenant was liable to bear, pay, and discharge, charges, duties, assessments, and impositions, charged, assessed, or imposed, upon the premises, or upon the landlord in respect thereof. The lease was determinable by six months' notice. The landlords gave notice to determine it, and contracted to sell the property. The district board of works gave notice to the landlords of apportionment of expenses of paving a new street, under the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, s. 77, fixing no date for payment. The landlords paid the amount claimed. The work was commenced after the notice to determine the lease had expired.

In an action by the landlords to recover under the covenant the amount paid by them to the district board,

Held, that the words of the covenant included the expenses of paving the new street, and that, when the district board gave notice to the landlords of the apportionment and charge, the charge became operative, and the landlords became liable to pay the amount, and were entitled to recover it from the tenant under the covenant;

Held, also, that the landlords were owners of the premises, within the meaning of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, s. 250, until the date fixed by the contract of sale for completion.

Thompson v. Lapworth, [1868] L. R. 3 C. P. 149, followed.—WIX v. RUTSON, Q.B.D.; [1899] 1 Q. B. 474; 68 L. J. Q. B. 298; 80 L. T. 168.

13. Lease—Forfeiture—Proviso for re-entry—"Act or thing whereby the premises become vested in another"—Sub-letting.—A lease of a public-house for twenty-seven years contained a proviso for re-entry "if the lessees or their assigns should do or suffer any other act, matter, or thing whereby or by reason or means whereof the demised premises, or any part thereof should either directly, or by operation of law, or otherwise howsoever indirectly become or be rendered liable to become vested, either for the whole or any part of the term thereby created, in any person other than the lessees." The lessees sub-let to a tenant from year to year.

Held, that the lessees had done an act whereby the demised premises became vested for part of the term in the sub-tenant, within the meaning of the proviso, and that a forfeiture had been incurred.—DYMOCK v. SHOWELL'S BREWERY Co., C.A.; 79 L. T. 329.

14. Lease—Forfeiture—Proviso for re-entry—Covenant against assigning or underletting—Liquidation of lessee company—Notice—Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 14—Conveyancing Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 13), s. 2, sub-section 2.—A lease granted by the plaintiffs' predecessors contained a covenant against assigning or underletting without the consent of the lessors, and also a proviso for re-entry if the lessees should commit any breach of covenant, or if (inter alia) the lessees, being a company, should enter into liquidation, whether compulsory or voluntary. The lease was, with the consent of the lessors, assigned to the defendants, who were an individual and a limited company. The defendant company went into liquidation, not in consequence of insolvency, but for the purpose of being reconstructed, and, having agreed to sell the lease to a new company, let the new company into possession pending the completion of the purchase, the new company undertaking to pay all rents, rates, and outgoings. Within a year of the liquidation the plaintiffs commenced an action to recover possession under the proviso for re-entry.

Held, (1) that the proviso for re-entry if the lessee company should enter into liquidation was a condition running with the land; (2) that the defendant company had entered into liquidation within the meaning of the proviso; (3) that, by virtue of section 2, sub-section 2, of the Conveyancing Act, 1892, notice under section 14 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, was necessary before the plaintiffs could enforce a forfeiture on the ground of the liquidation of the defendant company; and (4) that the letting the new company into possession did not constitute a breach of the covenant against assigning or underletting.—HORSEY ESTATE v. STEIGER, C.A., 644; [1899] 2 Q. B. 79; 79 L. T. 116.

15. Lease—Landlord's rates and taxes—Tramway—Covenant by tenant to keep free from all expenses whatever—Valuation of Lands (Scotland) Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 91), s. 6.—By section 6 of the Valuation of Lands (Scotland) Act, 1854, it is enacted that a tenant whose name has been entered in the valuation roll as proprietor "shall be entitled to relief from the actual proprietor thereof, and to deduction from the rent payable by him to such actual proprietor of such proportion of all assessments laid on upon the valuations of such lands and heritages made under this Act, and payable by such lessee as proprietor in the sense of this Act, as shall correspond to the rent payable by such lessee to such actual proprietor as compared with the amount of such valuation."

The Corporation of Glasgow agreed to borrow money and to construct certain tramways in Glasgow and lease the undertaking to the Glasgow Tramway Co. for twenty-three years. The company agreed to make various payments to the corporation, and then agreed as follows: "And the company shall also pay to the corporation the expenses of borrowing, management, &c., and this provision shall be so construed as to keep the corporation free from all expenses whatever in connection with the said tramways." The lease exceeding twenty-one years, the company, under the Valuation of Lands (Scotland) Act, 1854, s. 6, became primarily liable to pay, and did pay, during the whole term of the lease, "owner's assessments, rates, and taxes," amounting in the aggregate to over £14,000. During the currency of the lease the company intimated to the corporation that they had a claim in this respect, but did not make any deduction from the rent when paid. The company contended that the corporation ought to reimburse them these outgoings, or such other sum as might be ascertained to be the amount of owner's assessments, rates, and taxes paid by the company during the lease.

Held, reversing the decision of the First Division of the Court of Session, [1897] 24 R. 628, that the assessments, rates, and taxes, whether imperial or local, levied on the owner in respect of a tramway or other erection in solo, were an expense connected with the tramway or erection, and that the company were bound by their lease to relieve the corporation from these expenses, and were not entitled to claim reimbursement.—GLASGOW CORPORATION v. GLASGOW TRAMWAY AND OMNIBUS CO., H.L. (Sc.); [1898] A. C. 631.

16. Lease—Lessor owner of whole block—Covenant not to allow certain trade on adjoining premises—Meaning of "adjoining."—In a covenant by a lessor not to allow a certain trade to be carried on in the "adjoining premises," the word "adjoining" was confined to the two houses on either side of the demised premises, although the lessor was at the time of the lease the owner of a block of buildings of which these formed part only.—VALE v. MOORGATE-STREET, &c., BUILDINGS, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J.; 80 L. T. 487.

17. Lease—Option to purchase freehold—Equitable assignee—Waiver of notice of exercise of option.—Held, by Romer, J. (ante p. 93), that an equitable assignee of the legal owner of a lease is not an "assign" within the meaning of a covenant therein giving a right of pre-emption of the freehold to the lessee, his executors, administrators, or "assigns"; and, therefore, that the plaintiff, as such assignee, was not entitled in equity, as against the lessor or his assigns, to enforce such right of pre-emption.

Cox v. Bishop, 5 W. R. 437, 8 De G. M. & G. 815, followed.

Walsh v. Lonsdale, 31 W. R. 109, 21 Ch. D. 9, distinguished.

Held, on appeal, that, upon the facts, the defendant (an assignee of lessor) had waived his right to receive notice of the plaintiff's option to purchase the freehold, and, therefore, was precluded from taking the objection that the plaintiff was not entitled to exercise the right of pre-emption.

Decision of Romer, J. (ante, p. 93), reversed on this ground.—FRIARY v. SINGLETON, C.A., 662.

18. Premises let to tenants—Damage to tenant's goods by overflow from landlord's cistern—Employment of plumber—Negligence of plumber—Liability of landlord for damage.—The plaintiffs took from the defendant the ground floor of premises of which the defendant was the owner, and at the top of which the defendant had a cistern from which the premises were supplied with water. The water had been laid on when the plaintiffs became tenants, and the plaintiffs took their supply of water from the cistern. The plaintiffs discovered a leakage from the cistern, and gave the defendant notice of it, and requested him to remedy it. The defendant employed a competent plumber to remedy the defect; but, through the negligence of the plumber, the defect in the cistern was not remedied, the result being that the water overflowed, flooded the plaintiffs' rooms, and damaged their goods.

Held, that in the absence of negligence or wilfulness on the part of the defendant, the defendant was not responsible for the negligence of the plumber whom he had employed, and that he was therefore not liable to the plaintiffs.—BLAKE v. WOOLF, Q.B.D., 8; [1898] 2 Q. B. 426; 79 L. T. 188.

19. Rent—Agreement to take house for a year—Rent payable on certain dates—Apportionment Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 35), s. 2.—By the Apportionment Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 35), s. 2: "From and after the passing of this Act all rents, annuities, dividends, and other periodical payments in the nature of income (whether reserved or made payable under an instrument in writing or otherwise) shall, like interest on money lent, be considered as accruing from day to day and shall be apportionable in respect of time accordingly."

E. let to R. a house for a year, the rent to be paid in four instalments on fixed dates. The first two were paid, and, default being made with the third, E. took possession of the premises. In an action to recover the third instalment, Held, that under the contract there could be no apportionment, for this sum was to be paid on a fixed date, and E. was entitled to the sum on that date, it being then due.—ELLIS v. ROWBOTHAM, Q.B.D.; 80 L. T. 328.

20. Tenancy from year to year—Estoppel—Bankruptcy—Disclaimer—Mortgage—Rent.—A tenancy from year to year is created by estoppel between the mortgagee of an assignee of a lease disclaimed by the trustee in bankruptcy of the assignee, and the original lessor, where the mortgagee has entered into possession of the premises, and continued to pay quarterly the original rent reserved by the lease to the lessor.—JUMP v. PAYNE, Q.B.D.; 68 L. J. Q. B. 607.

21. Lease—Tenant occupies additional close belonging to landlord—No presumption.—H. demised an island to E. Subsequently E. occupied two other plots of H.'s land. These plots were situate on the mainland, and were something between half a mile and a mile from the island demised to E. They were inclosed land. There was no evidence that they were occupied by E. as an addition to his holding under H., and no rent was paid in respect of them. After more than twelve years had elapsed, when E.'s tenancy of the island had determined, H. brought an action against E.'s successor in title to obtain possession of the two plots. The county court judge held that there was a presumption that E. had occupied them as H.'s tenant, and in the absence of evidence to rebut this presumption H. was entitled to recover possession. On appeal, Held, that there was no such presumption.

Semble: The presumption that a tenant who occupies more land than is demised to him occupies it for the benefit of his landlord is confined to encroachment on waste.—HASTINGS (LORD) v. SADDLER, Q.B.D.; 79 L. T. 355.

22. Tenant at will—Determination of tenancy—Entry by landlord in order to repair—Real Property Limitation Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27), s. 7——Real Property Limitation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 57), s. 1.—Where a tenant at will remains in possession of a house rent-free for more than twelve years after the expiration of the first year of the tenancy, the fact that the landlord enters from time to time in order to effect repairs, if it is not against the will of the tenant, does not operate as a taking possession so as to determine the tenancy at will, and therefore the tenant acquires a statutory title to the house by virtue of section 7 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1833, and section 1 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874.

Per Channell, J.—After a final judgment has been delivered, but before it has been entered, new plaintiffs may be added by the judge under ord. 16, rr. 2, 11.—LYNES v. SNAITH, Q.B.D., 411; [1899] 1 Q. B. 486; 68 L. J. Q. B. 275; 80 L. T. 122.

23. Lease—Written document—Licence or lease—Construction.—The owners of a house and shop, in September, 1890, wrote a letter to the person who was then in occupation, in the following terms: "We hereby agree to let you keep peaceable possession of your present house and shop in Strand-lane for a term of ten years, on condition that you commit no nuisance, and pay us the sum of 9s. 3d. per week for rent thereof. You to pay local board rates and we to pay poor rates and water rates as hitherto."

Held, that there was a demise of the premises for a term of ten years.—DUXBURY v. SANDIFORD, C.A.; 80 L. T. 552.

See also Bankruptcy, 31; Frauds, Statute of, 3.

LAND TRANSFER ACTS.—See Probate, 2, 6.

LEASE.—See Landlord and Tenant, 7-17; Vendor and Purchaser, 7; Will, 21, 22.

LIBEL:—

1. Business—Disparagement of goods—Imputation of misconduct.—In an action of libel the statement of claim alleged that the defendants, who were manufacturers of typesetting machines, published of the plaintiffs, who were rival manufacturers, the following written words: "The Empire Typesetter in America. The Union Printer and American Craftsman, the most wide-awide and spirited of America trade journals, has recently contained several references to the Empire" (the plaintiffs') "composing machines, which were installed in the office of the New York Evening Sun with such a flourish of trumpets. From these paragraphs we gather that five machines altogether have been employed in this office, the first being introduced some time in the month of Feburary last, the other four commencing operations on the 9th of March last. So short-lived, however, does this installation appear to have been that we learn the machines were discontinued on Wednesday, the 29th of April, and now the Empire Co." (the plaintiffs) "is in receipt of notice to remove them altogether in the course of a few days. This will be a very serious blow for this machine." There was no allegation of special damage.

Held, that these words, besides being a disparagement of the plaintiffs' machines which would not be actionable without proof of special damage, were also, when taken in their natural and ordinary meaning, capable of being understood by men of ordinary intelligence as conveying an imputation upon the plaintiffs in the way of their trade, and the question of libel or no libel was therefore rightly left to the jury.—EMPIRE TYPESETTING MACHINE CO. OF NEW YORK v. LINOTYPE CO., C.A.; 79 L. T. 8.

2. Defamation—Absolute privilege—Lunacy proceedings—Petition for reception order—Judicial proceedings—Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 5), ss. 4, 5, 6, 9, 28.—Proceedings instituted by petition under the Lunacy Act, 1890, ss. 4 and 5, for a reception order are judicial proceedings, and therefore a defamatory statement made in the statement of particulars accompanying the petition is absolutely privileged.—HODSON v. PARE, C.A., 241; [1899] 1 Q. B. 455; 68 L. J. Q. B. 309; 80 L. T. 13.

3. Defamation—Trader—Disparagement of goods—Slander of goods—Comparison of plaintiff's goods with those of defendant—Cause of action—Rules of Supreme Court, ord. 25, rr. 2, 4.—H., a manufacturer of zinc paint, by his statement of claim alleged that the defendant W. was "falsely and maliciously" publishing in China and Japan copies of a report of experiments testing the zinc paints of H. and W., in which report the experimenter certified that W.'s paint had a slight advantage over H.'s, but that for all practical purposes they could be regarded as equal. The statement of claim went on to allege that the report, and each statement in it, was untrue, that H.'s paint was not equal or inferior, but superior to W.'s, and that H. had by reason of the premises been injured in his business and credit. W. applied to strike out the statement of claim as showing no reasonable cause of action. The master made an order for striking out the statement of claim unless within a limited time H. amended it by alleging special damage with full particulars. Kennedy, J., discharged this order.

Held, on appeal, that a statement by a trader that his own goods are superior to those of another trader, even if untrue and the cause of loss to the other trader, gives no cause for action; that the allegation that the statement was made maliciously could not convert a statement primâ facie lawful into one primâ facie unlawful; that the allegation and proof of special damage would not improve the plaintiff's case; and that judgment in the action must be entered for the defendant under ord. 25, r. 4.—HUBBUCK & SONS (LIMITED) v. WILKINSON, HEYWOOD, & CLARK (LIMITED), C.A.; [1899] 1 Q. B. 86; 68 L. J. Q. B. 34; 79 L. T. 429.

4. Defamation—Unauthorized use of a man's name—Injury to property, or in business or profession—Cause of action—Injunction.—A doctor, whose name has been used without his authority in an advertisement to puff the sale of a medicine, has no cause of action, either for damages or for an injunction, unless the publication is defamatory or injures him in his property, business, or profession.—DOCKRELL v. DOUGALL, C.A.; 80 L. T. 556.

LICENSING LAW:—

1. Justices—Jurisdiction—Police—Transfer—2 & 3 Vict. c. 82—County Police Act, 1839 (2 & 3 Vict. c. 93), s. 27—County Police Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 88), s. 2.—A transfer of a part of a county to another county by agreement between the justices of the two counties in pursuance of section 2 of the County Police Act, 1840, does not affect the jurisdiction to administer the licensing laws within the transferred district.—REG. v. WARWICKSHIRE JUSTICES; REG. v. WORCESTERSHIRE JUSTICES, C.A. 134; [1899] 1 Q. B. 59; 68 L. J. Q. B. 109; 79 L. T. 393.

2. Justices—Renewal—No objection served before date of general meeting—Objection taken by justices in court—Adjournment—Notice of objection—Notice by justices to attend—Sufficiency of notices—Licensing Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 94), s. 42.—The applicant for renewal of a licence attended on the day fixed for the general annual licensing meeting and applied for the renewal. No notice to attend, or notice of objection had been served upon the applicant prior to that day, but at the meeting an objection was taken by the justices themselves, who thereupon adjourned the case, and more than seven days before the date of the adjourned meeting a written notice to attend by the authority and on behalf of the justices, was served upon the applicant, and a written notice of objection was served by objectors stating the grounds of objection, which included the objection taken by the justices, but this notice of objection did not purport to be served by the authority of the justices.

The licensing justices heard the objections and refused to renew the licence.

Held, that it was competent for the licensing justices, under section 42, sub-section 2, of the Licensing Act, 1872, to raise an objection themselves at the licensing meeting and then adjourn the case; that the notices served were sufficient under the section, and that the justices had jurisdiction at the adjourned meeting to refuse the renewal.—BAXTER v. LECHE, Q.B.D.; 79 L. T. 138.

3. "Keeping open for sale" of liquors after closing hours—Doors closed and locked—Customers afterwards seen to leave the premises—Licensing Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 49), s. 9.—The respondent was summoned for "keeping open" his licensed premises after closing hour, contrary to section 9 of the Licensing Act, 1874. The evidence in support of the summons was that the house was duly closed and the doors locked at 11 p.m., but that two customers remained inside drinking until 1.30 a.m., when they were seen to leave the premises by the back door.

The justices dismissed the summons, on the authority of Tennant v. Cumberland, 7 W. R. 161, 1 E. & E. 401, 23 J. P. 51, and Jefferson v. Richardson, 35 J. P. 470.

Held, on appeal, that the justices were right, since the evidence did not prove that the house was "kept open" within the meaning of section 9.—JEFFERY v. WEAVER, Q.B.D. 638; 68 L. J. Q. B. 817.

4. Licence—Beer licence—"Real resident holder and occupier"—Beerhouse Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 61), s. 1.—By section 1 of the Beerhouse Act, 1840, "No licence to sell beer or cider by retail . . . shall be granted to any person who shall not be the real resident holder and occupier of the dwelling-house in which he shall apply to be licensed."

Held, that the fact that the applicant for a beer licence in respect of a dwelling-house is paid a salary by brewers, and has to pay over to them the profits made upon the sale of the beer, does not of itself in law prevent him from being the "real resident holder and occupier" of the house.—NIX v. NOTTINGHAM JUSTICES, C.A., 628; [1899] 2 Q. B. 294; 68 L. J. Q. B. 854.

5. Licence—Order for new licence on condition of surrendering other licence—Removal—Licensing Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 94), s. 50.—The appellant was the holder of an off-licence of a public-house, and duly applied for a renewal at the general annual licensing meeting, and this was granted. He also duly applied for and obtained a new licence of an adjoining house, on the condition of giving up the licence of which he had just obtained the renewal.

Held, that the justices had not exceeded their jurisdiction, as this was not a removal of a licence, and therefore section 50 of the Licensing Act, 1872, requiring notice to the owner of the premises, had no application.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (Reg. v. Thornton, Ex parte Lacon & Co., 46 W. R. 241, [1898] 1 Q. B. 334) reversed.—LACKBY v. LACON & CO. (LIMITED), H.L., 497; [1899] A. C. 222; 68 L. J. Q. B. 480; 80 L. T. 473.

6. Licence to sell beer—Certificate of residence and occupation — Jurisdiction of justices — Certiorari—Mandamus—Beerhouse Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 61), s. 1.—The licensing justices have no power to grant a certificate, under section 2 of the Beerhouse Act, 1840, for a licence to sell beer or cider by retail, unless the applicant sleeps upon the premises in respect of which he applies to be licensed.—REG. v. MANCHESTER JUSTICES, Q.B.D., 410; [1899] 1 Q. B. 571; 68 L. J. Q. B. 358; 80 L. T. 531.

7. Public entertainment — Singing and music — Pianoforte in hotel smoking-room—User by customers —Public Health Act Amendment Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 59), s. 51.—The appellant, who was the occupier of a fully-licensed inn, kept a pianoforte in the smoking-room of the inn. Pianoforte music and singing was frequently performed in the room, the performers being the ordinary customers of the inn giving their services gratuitously, and performing for the entertainment of their friends and the other customers of the inn then using the smoking-room.

No charge was made for admission to the room. The room was not licensed for public singing or music.

Held, that the room had not been "kept or used" for public singing or music within the meaning of section 51, sub-section 1, of the Public Health Act Amendment Act, 1890.—BREARLEY v. MORLEY, Q.B.D., 574; [1899] 2 Q. B. 121; 68 L. J. Q. B. 722; 80 L. T. 801.

8. Sale of beer—Sale at unlicensed place—Office opened for the receiving of orders—Orders transmitted to licensed place—Appropriation at licensed place—Offence—Excise Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 113), s. 37.—Brewers having a retail off-licence for the sale of beer in respect of premises in P.-street, Cardiff, occupied an office in M.-street, Cardiff, for which they held no licence and at which no beer was kept. This office was opened merely for the purpose of receiving orders, which were then sent on to the licensed premises in P.-street, where they were accepted or rejected. No orders were accepted and no payments were made at this office, and there was no appropriation of the beer there, but the orders were simply forwarded to the licensed premises, where, if the order were accepted, the beer was appropriated to the purchaser, and the beer so appropriated was afterwards delivered at the purchaser's residence, where payment was made.

Held, that what took place in the office in M.-street, where the orders were merely received and forwarded, was not a sale of the beer at that place within the meaning of section 37 of the Excise Act, 1860, and that the brewers could not be convicted under that section of selling the beer "at any other house or place than the house or place specified in their licence."

Per Channell, J.: To bring a case within the section it is not necessary that there should be an actual sale and the passing of the property in the liquor sold; it is sufficient if there be a binding executory contract for a sale to be carried out at a future time, though no property passes at the time. —STEPHENSON v. ROGERS, Q.B.D.; 80 L. T. 193.

9. Sale of intoxicating liquor without licence—Sale by innocent servant of unlicensed person—House of Commons—Exemption—Licensing Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 94), ss. 3, 72.—An attendant at a refreshment bar situate within the precincts of the House of Commons, acting under the orders of the Kitchen Committee of that House, whose servant he was, supplied a person (not a member of the House) with intoxicating liquor, and received the price on behalf of the Kitchen Committee.

Held, that he had not committed the offence under section 3 of the Licensing Act, 1872, of selling intoxicating liquor without being duly licensed.

Semble, the Houses of Parliament are not exempt from the provisions of the Licensing Act, 1872, so as to enable liquor legally to be sold there without a licence.—WILLIAMSON v. NORRIS, Q.B.D., 94; [1899] 1 Q. B. 7; 68 L. J. Q. B. 31; 79 L. T. 415.

10. Spirits—Sale of spirits without licence—Second conviction—Disqualification to hold licence—Application by owner to carry on business—Justices—Jurisdiction to entertain application—Licensing Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 94), s. 3—Licensing Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 49), s. 15.—A beerhouse-keeper was upon the same day twice convicted under section 3 of the Licensing Act, 1872, of selling spirits without a spirit licence, and upon such second conviction he was disqualified for two years from holding any licence, and by the operation of the section he also, upon such second conviction, forfeited his licence to sell beer. Upon an application being made after the second conviction by the owner of the premises under section 15 of the Licensing Act, 1874, for an authority to carry on the business until the next special sessions,

Held, that the justices had jurisdiction to entertain the application, although made after the second conviction, as the words "for the first time" in section 15 were to be construed as governing the latter part of the section as well as the former, and that the application could be made after the first conviction which caused a personal disqualification or a forfeiture of the licence, which, in the case of selling spirits without a spirit licence was the second conviction.—FLINN & SONS, EX PARTE, Q.B.D., 697; [1899] 2 Q. B. 154; 68 L. J. Q. B. 777.

11. Spirits—"Sending out, delivery, or removal" —Spirits over one gallon—Spirits Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 24) ss. 105, 107.—By section 105 of the Spirits Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 24): "Except as in this section provided, no spirits exceeding the quantity of one gallon of the same denomination at at a time for the same person may be sent out, delivered, or removed from any one place to another place unless accompanied by a permit." And by section 107 of the same Act: "If any person sends out, delivers, or removes, or receives any spirits required to be accompanied by a permit without a permit; . . . he shall, in addition to any other penalty or forfeiture, incur a fine of £500."

In 1897 one J. B. gave the respondent, who was licensed to sell beer only and had no spirit licence, an order, to forward to his brother, who had such a licence, for two gallons of rum.

The rum was delivered by a carman at the respondent's house and sent to J. B. by his potman.

The spirits were not accompanied by any permit or certificate.

Held, that the respondent was guilty of sending out, delivering, and removing spirits within the Act.—LEESE v. JENNINGS, Q.B.D.; 79 L. T. 300.

12. Transfer—Notice — Insufficiency—Mandamus —Alehouse Act, 1828, s. 14.—Upon an application for the transfer under section 14 of the Alehouse Act, 1828, of an existing licence to premises not heretofore licensed, the same notices must be given as are required by section 40 of the Licensing Act, 1872, in the case of an application for a new licence. Where the justices have granted such a transfer upon the supposition that the notices were in order, no mandamus lies to compel them to hear the application afresh by reason of its being subsequently discovered that the notices were not sufficient. — REG. v. NICHOLSON, Q.B.D.; 68 L. J. Q. B. 715.

13. Traveller—Sale during prohibited hours—Travelling in order to obtain refreshment—Licensing Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 94), s. 25—Licensing Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 49), s. 10—Sunday Closing (Wales) Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 61), s. 4.—A person cannot be convicted under section 25 of the Licensing Act, 1872, of falsely representing himself to be a traveller and obtaining intoxicating liquor at a railway station refreshment room during the hours when licensed premises are closed if, at the time he obtains the drink, he has taken a ticket and intends to travel by railroad, and does so travel, even though he only took such ticket and travelled so as to be able to obtain such drink.—WILLIAMS v. MACDONALD, Q.B.D., 701; [1899] 2 Q. B. 308; 68 L. J. Q. B. 678; 80 L. T. 758.

See also Gaming, 5.

LIGHT:—

Ancient light—Prescription—Greenhouse—"Building"—Injunction—Prescription Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71), s. 3.—A greenhouse is a "building" within section 3 of the Prescription Act (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71), and, therefore, if it has ancient lights, may be protected by injunction against interference with the access of light.

Harris v. De Pinna, 33 Ch. D.[238, considered.—CLIFFORD v. HOLT, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; [1899] 1 Ch. 698; 68 L. J. Ch. 332; 80 L. T. 48.

LIMITATION STATUTES:—

1. Concealed fraud—Submission to arbitration—Exclusion of statute.—In order to exclude the Statute of Limitations there must be not only fraud, but an intentional concealment of that fraud.

Dictum of Malins, V.C., in The Ecclesiastical Commissioners v. North-Eastern Railway Co. (36 L. T. 174) not followed.

By a submission to arbitration, after reciting that differences had arisen, the parties referred to the arbitrator (1) what encroachment, if any, had been made by one on the other; (2) how one party had been damaged, and what compensation was payable to the other.

Held, that this submission did not preclude the raising of the defence of the Statute of Limitations. —ASTLEY v. TYLDESLEY COAL CO., Q.B.D.; 68 L. J. Q. B. 252; 80 L. T. 116.

2. Conditional promise to pay—Sufficient acknowledgment.—In October, 1898, a debt then being statute-barred, A. wrote to M.: "You may be quite sure I shall do all I can, and as soon as I can, but it is not much use making promises without some pretty good prospect of keeping them."

On the 17th of November following he wrote to the plaintiff: "I had a letter from you four or five weeks ago, and wrote you in reply that I would do all in my power, but that it was useless for me to make promises I could not be fairly sure of keeping, and I really cannot say anything more definite."

Later, in answer to a demand from M.'s solicitors, he wrote asking for particulars, and concluded: "Legal proceedings . . . would only result in my losing my present employment and the small salary I am able to earn, which would still further delay the possibility of payment. I trust your client will agree to accept some comparatively reasonable amount, and if you can give me the option of repayment by instalments I shall be glad."

The required particulars were supplied by M.'s solicitors, and he was asked to state with what sum and in what manner he would settle the claim.

Held, that these letters did not constitute a promise to pay absolutely and unconditionally, and therefore did not amount to sufficient acknowledgment to take the debt out of the Statute of Limitations.—MOWBRAY v. APPLEBY, Q.B.D.; 80 L. T. 805.

3. Debt—Letter—Admission—Conditional or not.—The statement in a letter "I am really sorry to keep you so long waiting for your money, but I shall be taking some money next month, I think, without fail, and will then try and settle with you," is sufficient admission to take a debt out of the Statute of Limitations, and is not conditional.—PRYKE v. HILL, Q.B.D.; 79 L. T. 738.

4. Guarantee—Banking account—Principal advanced six years before action—Interest accrued within six years—Appropriation of payments on account.—The defendant gave a guarantee to the plaintiff bank, whereby, in consideration of the bank making advances to one of their customers, the defendant undertook to guarantee the payment of all moneys from time to time owing to the bank in account with the customer, with interest, commission, and other banking charges. The customer's account was made up every half-year, the amount which had become due for interest, commission, and banking charges during each half-year being added to the principal and carried forward to the next half-year. The bank made advances to the customer during four years. More than six years after the last advance, the bank brought an action on the guarantee. The customer had from time to time made payments on account down to a short time before action brought.

Held, that the bank's claim under the guarantee in respect of the advances was barred by the Statute of Limitations; but that they were entitled to recover in respect of interest, commission, and banking charges which had become due within six years before action.

Held, also, that the rule by which payments on account are appropriated to interest before principal did not apply to such a banking account as that in question.—PARR'S BANKING CO. v. YATES, C.A., 42; [1898] 2 Q. B. 460; 79 L. T. 321.

5. Mine—Trespass—Fraudulent working of mine—Concealed fraud—Account.—Where a colliery company wilfully and secretly took coal from an adjoining property, and the fact was not brought to light for many years afterwards, and no laches could be attributed to the adjoining owner in not discovering the existence of the wrongful workings,

Held, that the Statute of Limitations had no application, and that the adjoining owner was entitled to recover from the wrongdoers the value of the coal so wrongfully taken, and, in the case of a winding up, then to prove for that amount.—BULLI COAL MINING CO. v. OSBORNE, P.C., 345; [1899] A. C. 351; 68 L. J. P. C. 49; 80 L. T. 430.

6. Simple contract debt chargeable upon land—Trustee debtors—Retirement of one trustee—Payment of interest by co-debtor—Claim after six years—Limitation Act, 1623 (21 Jac. 1, c. 16), s. 3.—Mercantile Law Amendment Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 97), s. 14—Real Property Limitation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 57), s. 8.—Section 3 of 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, is not repealed by section 8 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874; the effect of the two Acts, read together, is that no action for a simple contract debt, whether chargeable on land or not, shall be brought after six years, and that no action for a specialty debt chargeable on land shall be brought after twelve years.

Sutton v. Sutton, 31 W. R. 569, 21 Ch. D. 511, distinguished.

Firth v. Slingsby, 58 L. T. Rep. 481, 36 W. R. Dig. 135, approved.

In 1882 the plaintiffs advanced money to the defendants, who were the three trustees of a will, the loan being secured by a transfer to the plaintiffs of mortgage securities belonging to the estate of the defendants' testator, but the defendants entered into no covenant to repay the loan. In 1883 L., one of the defendants, retired from the trusts of the will, and the other two trustees continued to pay interest on the loan until 1896.

In 1897 the plaintiffs brought an action against L. and the continuing trustees to recover the loan.

Held, that the action, being for a simple contract debt, although chargeable upon land, was barred as against L. by section 3 of 21 Jac. 1, c. 16—being brought more than six years after the accrual of the plaintiffs' right of action—and that section 14 of the Mercantile Law Amendment Act, 1856, provented the payment of interest by the continuing trustees operating against L.

Decision of Lord Russell of Killowen, C.J., ante, p. 13, [1898] 2 Q. B. 223, reversed.—BARNES v. GLENTON, C.A., 435; [1899] 1 Q. B. 885; 68 L. J. Q. B. 502; 80 L. T. 608.

7. Tenancy at will — Determination — Realty — Mortgage—Creation of fresh tenancy—Real Property Limitation Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27), ss. 2, 7. —A tenancy at will is determined by a legal mortgage of the premises by the owner, and knowledge of the mortgage by the tenant at will.

After the mortgage a new tenancy at will may be created between the parties so as to cause the Statute of Limitations, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, to begin to run.—JARMAN v. HALE, Q.B.D.; [1899] 1 Q. B. 994; 68 L. J. Q. B. 681.

8. Will—Charitable gift—Freeholds and leaseholds —Charitable Uses Act, 1735 (9 Geo. 2, c. 36)—Charge of annuities—No trust for payment—Executor—Possession by executor—Real Property Limitation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 57)—Executors Act, 1830 (11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 40)—Law of Property Amendment Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 38), s. 13.—The Royal Theatrical Fund Association is a charity.

Spiller v. Maude, 13 W. R. 69, 32 Ch. D. 158*n*, approved.

An executor is not regarded as an express trustee of residue undisposed of by the will.

A testator, who died in 1873, gave real and impure personal property to the trustees of the Royal General Theatrical Fund, charged with certain annuities, and appointed an executor, who entered into possession and received the income of the property on behalf of the trustees of the fund for nearly twenty years.

Held, that the claims of the heir and next-of-kin were barred.

Salter v. Cavanagh, 1 Dr. & Wal. 668, and Patrick v. Simpson, 24 Q. B. D. 128, 38 W. R. Dig. 113, distinguished.—LACY, RE, ROYAL THEATRICAL FUND ASSOCIATION v. KYDD, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 664; [1899] 2 Ch. 149; 68 L. J. Ch. 488; 80 L. T. 706.

See also Administration, 6; Company, 21; County Court, 6; Landlord and Tenant, 22; Mortgage, 4, 6, 11, 12; Poor Law, 1.

LIS PENDENS.—See Company, 36.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT:—

1. Boundaries—Alteration of union boundaries—Transfer of part of a parish—Adjustment of property, debts, and liabilities—Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), ss. 36, 68.—Where an alteration is made in the boundaries of two poor law unions by the transfer, by an order of the county council, under section 36, sub-section 6, of the Local Government Act, 1894, of part of a parish from one union to another, an adjustment of the property, debts, and liabilities can be claimed under section 68, as between the two unions, and not as between the union from which the transfer is made and the part of the parish so transferred.—ROCHDALE AND HASLINGDEN ARBITRATION, RE, C.A., 322; [1899] 1 Q. B. 540; 68 L. J. Q. B. 531; 80 L. T. 146.

2. Bye-law—Depositing offensive matter in a place —Truck of manure in goods yard—Liability of railway company.—Bye-law No. 2 of the respondent council was as follows:

"No person shall deposit, throw, or allow to run, lodge, or accumulate upon the surface of any street, square, court, highway, or place, or on any waste or unoccupied ground, or on any uncovered drain, ditch, watercourse, sink, pond, or other collection of water, or expose or cause to be exposed in any other manner whatever within the district any animal or vegetable matter, fish, offal, ordure, blood, bones, manure, shells, broken glass, china, or earthenware, dust, ashes, house refuse, waste, or runnings from any manufactory, or other offensive or noxious matter whatever."

The appellants received in their goods yard at H. H. a truck of manure which had been carried by them in the ordinary course of their business.

It arrived on the Sunday, and notice was at once given to the consignee, who proceeded to remove it on the Monday, and on being emptied it gave forth a very offensive smell.

The magistrates convicted the appellants of a breach of the bye-law.

Held, that the magistrates were wrong.—LONDON, BRIGHTON, AND SOUTH COAST RAILWAY CO. v. HAYWARD'S HEATH DISTRICT COUNCIL, Q.B.D.; 80 L. T. 266.

3. Bye-laws—No power to set aside—Buildings.—A local authority empowered to make bye-laws is bound by those bye-laws, and has no power to sanction building plans not in accordance with them. They have no dispensing power, and any purported approval of plans contravening such bye-laws is inoperative and invalid. The approval must be a lawful, and not a mere actual, approval.—YABBICOM v. KING, Q.B.D., 318; [1899] 1 Q. B. 444; 68 L. J. Q. B. 560; 80 L. T. 159.

4. County council — Costs of quarter sessions—Boroughs having population under 10,000—Salary of recorder and clerk of the peace—Salary of clerk to borough justices in petty sessions—12 & 13 Vict. c. 18, s. 1—Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), ss. 35, 38, 84.—Where a borough, with a population of less than 10,000, has a separate court of quarter sessions and a separate commission of the peace, the Local Government Act, 1888, has not transferred the obligation of paying the salaries of the recorder, of the clerk of the peace, and of the clerk to the borough justices in petty sessions, from the borough to the county council.

Ex parte Kent County Council and Borough of Sandwich, [1891] 1 Q. B. 389, 39 W. R. Dig. 114, and In re Herefordshire County Council, [1895] 1 Q. B. 43, 43 W. R. Dig. 101, overruled.—THETFORD CORPORATION v. NORFOLK COUNTY COUNCIL, C.A., 1; [1898] 2 Q. B. 468; 79 L. T. 315.

5. County council — Troops summoned to preserve the peace — Expenses of maintenance — Liability — Mandamus.—Troops were brought into a county, on the application of the county magistrates, for the purpose of suppressing riots, and preserving peace and order in the county. By agreement with the magistrates certain tradesmen supplied the troops with food and lodging while quartered in the county.

On an application for a mandamus to the county council to pay for the food and lodging supplied, Held, that no duty was imposed by law on those who administered the county funds to pay the expenses of the maintenance of the troops, and a mandamus could not be granted.—REG. v. GLAMORGAN COUNTY COUNCIL, MILLER, EX PARTE, Q.B.D.; [1899] 2 Q. B. 26.

6. Highway—Maintenance and repair—Sea wall—Esplanade—Works necessary for protection of road—Annual payment—Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), s. 11, sub-section 2.—A local authority under an obligation to keep up a road is chargeable with the cost of works necessary for the preservation of the road, even though they may not actually form part of it, such as a sea wall and groynes necessary to prevent a road running along the sea shore from being periodically injured by inroads of the sea.

The fact that a footpath along the top of such sea wall is, besides being part of the highway, used as a promenade or esplanade for the purposes of pleasure, does not affect the liability to repair.

The words "annual payment towards the costs of maintenance and repair" in section 11, sub-section 2, of the Local Government Act, 1888, mean a payment to be made annually in respect of the expenditure of the particular year, not a fixed sum to be arrived at by taking the average expenditure over a series of years.—SANDGATE COUNCIL v. KENT COUNTY COUNCIL, H.L.; 79 L. T. 425.

7. Lighting-up time for bicycles—"Sunset"—Greenwich mean time—Statutes (Definition of Time) Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 9), s. 1.—Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), s. 85.—By section 85 of the Local Government Act, 1888, bicycles and other similar machines are required to carry a light "during the period between one hour after sunset and one hour before sunrise."

By section 1 of the Statutes (Definition of Time) Act, 1880, whenever any expression of time occurs in any Act of Parliament, deed, or other legal instrument, the time referred to shall, unless it is otherwise specifically stated, be held in the case of Great Britain to be Greenwich mean time.—GORDON v. CANN, Q.B.D., 269; 68 L. J. Q. B. 434; 80 L. T. 20.

8. "New street"—Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 34), s. 63—Public Health Act, 1875, s. 157.—The decisions under section 157 of the Public Health Act, 1875, as to what is a new street apply in considering what constitutes a "new street" in section 63 of the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847.

Elements constituting a "street" considered.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. RUFFORD & Co., Ch.D. North, J., 405; [1899] 1 Ch. 537; 68 L. J. Ch. 179; 80 L. T. 17.

9. Overseers—Assistant overseer—Right to rate-books—Appointment—Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), s. 5, sub-section 1.—When the overseers of a parish have expressed their intention of collecting the rates themselves, but the parish council have by resolution appointed an assistant overseer, the court will grant a mandamus to the overseers to deliver to the assistant overseer the rate-books and all other books in their custody as overseers, for the purpose of enabling him to perform the duties of his office.

Semble, the appointment of overseers and assistant overseers under section 5, sub-section 1, of the Local Government Act, 1894, is complete by election by the parish council, and no document is required beyond a minute of the appointment.—REG. v. POWELL, WILLIAMS, EX PARTE, Q.B.D.; [1899] 1 Q. B. 396; 68 L. J. Q. B. 274; 80 L. T. 184.

10. Parish council—Right to sue—Main roads—Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), ss. 8, 11, 25.—A parish council cannot sue for an obstruction to a well situate on a main road, from which the inhabitants claim to take water, as main roads are vested in the district council under section 25 of the Local Government Act, 1894. and if the right is a public one, the Attorney-General must be joined as plaintiff.—STOKE PARISH COUNCIL v. PRICE, Ch.D. North, J., 663; 68 L. J. Ch. 447; 80 L. T. 643.

11. Parish councils—Parish meetings—Poor law rating—Appeal—Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), ss. 5 (1) (2) (a) (b), 6 (1) (c) (i), 19 (5) (6), 52 (5).—The L.C. & D. Railway Co. appealed to quarter sessions against the assessments for the poor rate made on their property in eleven parishes in the county of K. Seven of these parishes had parish councils, and the remaining four had parish meetings. When the appeal came before the justices, the respondents raised the point that the company had not served notice of appeal against the rate within proper time on the parish councils, and the justices refused to enter and respite the appeal with a view to proper notice being served. Nothing was said about the parishes which had parish meetings only. A rule nisi was then obtained for a mandamus calling on the justices to show cause why they should not enter and respite the appeal in order to enable notices to be properly served on the parish councils.

Held, that the parish councils should be served with notice, and that, as notices had not been served in proper time upon them, there was no appeal that could be entered and respited.

Held also that, as the rule nisi only mentioned parish councils, it was not necessary to decide whether parish meetings should be served with notice of appeal or not.—REG. v. KENT JUSTICES, Q.B.D.; 80 L. T. 622.

12. Public health—Deposit of plans of building described otherwise than as a dwelling-house—Subsequent deposit of revised plans for domestic conversion—Building used for the purposes of habitation—Prosecution—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 158, 159—Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 59), s. 33.—Plans of a new building were deposited with a sanitary authority in May, 1894, describing the building otherwise than as a dwelling-house, and were duly approved and passed. On the 28th of March, 1898, plans of alterations to the building described as "revised plans of proposed domestic conversion," were also deposited with the borough surveyor, but were never either approved or disapproved in writing by the sanitary authority. The proposed alterations were carried out before the 3rd of October, 1898. Between the 24th of October and the 8th of November the occupier's wife and child lived on the premises. On the 14th of December, 1898, the occupier was charged before the magistrates with wilfully using within the above-mentioned dates the premises for the purpose of habitation by a person other than a person placed therein to take care thereof and the family of such person, contrary to section 33 of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890. It was contended on behalf of the defendant that the alterations of the premises set out in the plans deposited on the 28th of March were for the conversion into dwelling-houses of buildings not originally constructed for human habitation within the meaning of section 159 of the Public Health Act, 1875; that the sanitary authority within one month should have signified in writing their approval or disapproval of the same pursuant to section 158 of that Act; and that the sanitary authority not having signified such approval or disapproval no proceedings could be taken against the defendant under section 33 of the Act of 1890. The magistrates upheld that contention, and dismissed the case.

Held, that section 33 of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890, had been contravened, and that the case must go back for a conviction.—FULFORD v. BLATCHFORD, Q.B.D.; 80 L. T. 627.

13. Public health — District council—Riparian owner—Water rights—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 51, 53, 327, 332.—The owner of a corn-mill sought to restrain a district council from interfering with the natural flow of the stream working his mill. The council owned land on one side of the lake from which the stream flowed, and proposed to construct a dam there so as to increase the storage of water to be supplied for their district, thereby diminishing the stream flowing down to the mill.

Held, that a riparian owner was entitled to an uninterrupted flow of water as in the past; Public Health Act, 1875, s. 332, did not enable the council to "injuriously affect" the plaintiff's right to an uninterrupted flow of water without his consent, nor was there a statutory power enabling them to interfere with the plaintiff's common law rights. Injunction granted.—ROBERTS v. GWYRFAI DISTRICT COUNCIL, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 376; [1899] 1 Ch. 583; 68 L. J. Ch. 233; 80 L. T. 107.

14. Public health—Nuisance—Liability of owner—Want of structual convenience—Sewer—Right to drain into—Obligation to provide—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 15, 21, 94.—The slop and scullery water of twelve houses owned by the appellants, but occupied separately by their tenants, flowed into a drain constructed for the purpose of carrying away the surface water from the street upon which the houses abutted. The slop and scullery water flowed thence into an open ditch, where a nuisance arose. No cesspool or other means of dealing with the drainage was provided upon the premises themselves, nor was there an available sewer constructed for the purpose of carrying away sewage. The appellants were summoned by the local authority under sections 94 and 95 of the Public Health Act, 1875, for non-compliance with a notice to abate the nuisance, and an order was made upon them by the justices before whom the summons was heard.

Held (Channell, J., dubitante), that the appellants were the proper persons to be proceeded against, since the nuisance arose from the "want of a structural convenience" within the meaning of the first proviso of section 94.

Held, also, that, though the surface water drain was a "sewer" within the meaning of section 4 of the Act, the appellants had no right, by virtue of section 21, to turn into it matter which it was not intended to receive, and that the obligation of the local authority under section 15 to provide sewers in their district was discretionary.—KINSON POTTERY (LIMITED) v. MAYOR, &c., OF POOLE, Q.B.D., 607; [1899] 2 Q. B. 41; 68 L. J. Q. B. 819.

15. Public health—Offences—Unsound meat—Condemnation by justice — Compensation to owner — Arbitration — Award — Jurisdiction of arbitrator—Costs and expenses—"Full compensation" — Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 116, 117, 308.—Meat was seized by an inspector of the local authority as unsound, and condemned by a justice under sections 116 and 117 of the Public Health Act, 1875. The owner of the meat was thereupon summoned for an offence under section 117, but the magistrates dismissed the summons upon an objection to its form, without inquiring into the merits. The owner of the meat claimed compensation, to be settled by arbitration, under section 308 for damage sustained by him by reason of the exercise by the local authority of the powers of the Act; and the arbitrator found that the meat was, at the time of its condemnation, sound and fit for the food of man, and he included in the damage sustained by the owner of the meat the loss of the carcase and the expenses of and incident to the seizure and in defending himself before the magistrates. In an action on the award the judge refused to admit evidence that the meat was unsound at the time it was condemned, and gave judgment for the amount claimed.

Held, that the question of the soundness of the meat at the time of its condemnation was a question of fact for the arbitrator to determine, and his finding could not be reviewed in the action.

Held, also, that the "full compensation" to which the owner of the meat was entitled would include the value of the meat and the expenses incurred by him in connection with the seizure and in defending himself before the magistrates.—WALSHAW v. MAYOR, &C., OF BRIGHOUSE, C.A., 600; [1899] 2 Q. B. 286; 68 L. J. Q. B. 828.

16. Public health—Privies—Cleansing by sanitary authority—Becoming a nuisance—Notice to owner to abate—Liability—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 42, 43, 94, 95, and 96.—The appellant was the owner of certain cottages which were built in 1888, and which he purchased in May, 1897.

Between the months of March and October, 1896, typhoid fever occurred in some of these cottages, which were fitted with double privy middens. During the time that elapsed between the time that the patients were attacked and the notification to the authorities, the excreta of the patients were put in the privy middens to the knowledge of the authorities, which authorities had undertaken the cleansing of these privy middens under section 42 of the Public Health Act, 1875.

Upon the notification of the disease the local authorities supplied covered pails, and superintended the disinfecting of the places infected by such excreta; but these measures failed to get rid of and destroy the typhoid germs, and would never do so, though they might have been destroyed when the excreta were first placed there. The presence of these germs constituted a nuisance, and the local authorities then caused a notice to be served upon the appellant, under section 94 of the Public Health Act, 1875, to abate this nuisance.

Upon non-compliance with this notice an order was made by the petty sessions requiring the appellant to comply with the notice.

Held, that the appellant was not liable under the Public Health Act to abate this nuisance, and the complaint therefore must be discharged.—BARNETT v. LASKEY, Q.B.D.; 68 L. J. Q. B. 55; 79 L. T. 408.

17. Public health — Privies—Power to require sufficient water-closet to be provided in place of a privy — Injunction — Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 35, 36, 268.—Section 36 of the Public Health Act, 1875 — which empowers a local authority to give notice requiring the owner of a house to provide a sufficient water-closet, earth-closet, or privy, and an ashpit, or either of them, and, in case of non-compliance, empowers the local authority to do the necessary works and recover the expenses—does authorize the local authority to order a sufficient water-closet to be provided in place of a privy, where the existing accommodation is insufficient.—NICHOLL v. EPPING URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 457; [1899] 1 Ch. 844; 68 L. J. Ch. 393; 80 L. T. 515.

18. Public health — Water - closets — Entry on premises—Order for—Justices—Jurisdiction—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 36, 305.—Where an application is made under section 305 of the Public Health Act, 1875, to a court of summary jurisdiction for an order authorizing a local authority to enter upon premises for the purpose of making a sufficient water-closet there in pursuance of the powers given by section 36, the court has no jurisdiction to entertain an objection by the owner of the premises that such entry is unnecessary because they are already provided with sufficient sanitary appliances.—ROBINSON v. SUNDERLAND CORPORATION, Q.B.D.; [1899] 1 Q. B. 751; 68 L. J. Q. B. 330; 80 L. T. 262.

19. Quarter sessions borough with population over 10,000—New county bridges—Liability for costs of—Special and general expenses of county—Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), ss. 6, 35 (1) (2). —A quarter sessions borough with a population over 10,000 is not liable under the Local Government Act, 1888, to contribute rateably to the costs incurred by the county in erecting, maintaining, or repairing new county bridges—i.e., county bridges taken over or newly erected since the passing of that Act.—BURY ST. EDMUNDS (MAYOR) v. WEST SUFFOLK COUNTY COUNCIL, Q.B.D., 16; [1898] 2 Q. B. 246.

20. Rating—Asylums board—Proportion between county and county boroughs—Assessable value—Rateable value—Principles of apportionment—Agricultural Rates Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 16).—An asylums board in estimating the apportionment of the total amount necessary to be raised for the purposes of an asylums fund by contributions from the county and the county boroughs respectively, must do so in proportion to the assessable values of the county and county boroughs as ascertained by the Agricultural Rates Act, 1896, and the regulations the Local Government Board issued under that Act; and not as formerly, in the proportion to the rateable value of the county and county boroughs as ascertained in accordance with section 33 (2) of the Local Government Act, 1888.—LANCASHIRE ASYLUMS BOARD v. MANCHESTER CORPORATION, Q.B.D., 361; [1899] 1 Q. B. 759; 68 L. J. Q. B. 320; 80 L. T. 533.

21. Rating—General district rates—"Land covered with water"—Reservoir—Assessment at one-fourth of the net annual value—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55) s. 211, sub-section 1 (b)—Practice—Appeal—"Criminal cause or matter"—Justices—Order for payment of general district rates—Case stated by justices—Civil debt—Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 47—Public Health Act, 1875, s. 256—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 49), ss. 6, 35.—The judgment of the Queen's Bench Division upon a case stated by justices on summary proceedings taken before them under section 256 of the Public Health Act, 1875, for the recovery of general district rates, is not a judgment in a criminal cause or matter within section 47 of the Judicature Act, 1873, inasmuch as such rates are, by sections 6 and 35 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, enforceable only as civil debts; and an appeal, therefore, lies to the Court of Appeal.

Seaman v. Burley, 45 W. R. 1, [1896] 2 Q. B. 344, distinguished.

A reservoir of a water company held to be "land covered with water" within the meaning of section 211 (1) (b) of the Public Health Act, 1875, and therefore assessable to general district rates at one-fourth of its annual value.

Reg. v. Birmingham Waterworks Co., 1 B. & S. 84, 9 W. R. C. L. Dig. 76, approved.—SOUTHWARK AND VAUXHALL WATER CO. v. HAMPTON DISTRICT COUNCIL, C.A., 177; [1899] 1 Q. B. 273; 68 L. J. Q. B. 207; 80 L. T. 1.

22. Rating—Improvement commissioners—Limit of rate imposed by local Act—Alteration of boundaries by Local Government Board—Extension of jurisdiction of commissioners under local Act—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55) s. 207.—By the Crediton Improvement Act, 1836, after defining the limits of the town of Crediton for the purposes of the Act, the commissioners appointed thereunder were authorized to levy an annual rate on the occupiers of dwelling-houses within the limits of the Act not exceeding 2s. 1d. in the pound, and all persons assessed under the Act were released from liability for the repairs of highways without the limits of the Act.

By the Public Health Act, 1872, the district within the local Act became an urban district, and the commissioners became the urban authority.

The expenses incurred by them in the execution of the Sanitary Acts were, at the time of the passing of the Public Health Act, 1875, payable out of rates in the nature of general district rates leviable by them throughout the whole of their district.

At the time of the passing of the Local Government Act, 1894, the parish of Crediton was partly within and partly without the urban district of Crediton, but by a Confirmation Order of the Local Government Board in 1894 the urban district was extended so as to include the part of the parish outside the former urban district, and it was provided that the district should be deemed to have been extended before the passing of the Act of 1894.

The appellant was the occupier of a dwelling-house within the limits of the improvement Act of 1836.

In 1896 the Crediton Urban District Council made a rate for the whole district, including the added area, headed the "Crediton Improvement Rate for the year ending Midsummer, 1897."

The rate exceeded the amount in the pound limited by the improvement Act. It was made to defray expenses to be incurred by the council under the Public Health Act, 1875, including the purposes for which rates were leviable under the improvement Act; and was for the repair of highways, both within the limits of the improvement Act and also in the added area.

Held, by Smith and Romer, L.JJ. (Williams, L.J., dissenting), reversing the decision of the Queen's Bench Division (78 L. T. 351), that the rate was a good one, and was rightly headed.—HILL v. CREDITON DISTRICT COUNCIL, C.A.; 80 L. T. 861.

23. Rating—Limit and exemption under local improvement Act—Limit removed by public Act—Effect on exemption—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 227.—By section 40 of the Bingley Improvement Act, 1867, the amount of the improvement rates that may be made by the commissioners without the consent of the ratepayers should not exceed 4s. in the pound, and with their consent 5s., provided that in respect of so much of any rate which might be made without the consent of the ratepayers as exceeded 2s. 6d. in the pound, or with their consent 3s. 6d., the occupier of any land used as a canal or towing-path for the same or as a railway, should be assessed in the proportion of one-fourth part only of the net amount of the annual value thereof.

By section 227 of the Public Health Act, 1875, it is enacted that any limit imposed on or in respect of any rate by any local Act of Parliament shall not apply to any rate required to be levied for the purpose of defraying any expenses incurred by an urban authority in the execution of this Act.

Held, that this did not affect the rights of canal and railway owners to be rated in respect of one-fourth of the annual value only.—BINGLEY DISTRICT COUNCIL v. MIDLAND RAILWAY CO., Q.B.D.; 80 L. T. 725.

24. Sewer constructed by landowner for his own profit—Vesting in local authority—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 13, sub-section 1.—By section 13 of the Public Health Act, 1875, "all existing and future sewers within the district of a local authority . . . except (1) sewers made by any person for his own profit . . . shall vest in and be under the control of such local authority."

Held, that a sewer constructed by quarry owners for the purpose of preventing surface water entering their quarry was not a sewer made by them for their profit.—SYKES & SON v. SOWERBY DISTRICT COUNCIL, Q.B.D., 560; [1899] 1 Q. B. 979; 68 L. J. Q. B. 652; 80 L. T. 392.

25. Sewers — Sanitary authority — Unauthorized connection of sewage drains—Private nuisance—Liability of sanitary authority—Form of injunction Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 21.—A householder has, under section 21 of the Public Health Act, 1875, an absolute right to connect his drains with the public sewers, and the local authority cannot legally prevent him.

Where householders have connected their sewage drains with the public sewers which, without any legal right so to do, discharge upon the land of a private owner, and thereby cause a nuisance to him, the local authority will not be restrained, at the suit of the owner, from "permitting," although they will be from "directing or authorizing" future connections of the kind complained of, to be made.

Ainley v. Kirkheaton Local Board, 60 L. J. Ch. 734, 40 W. R. Dig. 133, followed, in preference to Charles v. Finchley Local Board, 31 W. R. 717, L. R. 23 Ch. D. 867.—BROWN v. MAYOR, &c., OF DUNSTABLE, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 538; 68 L. J. Ch. 498; 80 L. T. 650.

26. Sewers—Vesting in local authority—Sewer made by landowner "for his own profit"—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 13, sub-sections 1, 15, 16, 17, 144—Highway Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50), ss. 67, 68.—The word "profit" in section 13, sub-section 1, of the Public Health Act, 1875, is not to be restricted to a direct money payment. Accordingly a sewer which is not made for ordinary drainage purposes, but to enable the land on which it is made to be occupied more profitably, or to avoid an expenditure which would otherwise have to be incurred in order that the occupation might be equally beneficial, is made for the "profit" of the owner within the meaning of the section, and does not vest in the local authority.

So held, in the case of a line of pipes laid down by the owner of a field adjoining a highway from a ditch bordering the highway to a disused gravel-pit in the field for the purpose of supplying water to the cattle fed in the field.

Minehead Local Board v. Luttrell, [1894] 2 Ch. 178, and Ferrand v. Hallas Land and Building Co., [1893] 2 Q. B. 135, followed and applied.

Held, also, that as on the authority of Croft v. Rickmansworth Highway Board, [1888] 39 Ch. D. 272, the pit did not form part of the drainage system vested in the local authority, they had no power under section 67 of the Highway Act, 1835, to discharge surface water from the road into the pit, and were not entitled to enter upon the field in order to keep open the existing drain, or to make any other for the same purpose.—CROYSDALE v. SUNBURY-ON-THAMES URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 46 W. R. 667; [1898] 2 Ch. 515; 79 L. T. 26.

27. Street—Plans, &c. — Amendment — Adjournment—Jurisdiction of justices—Private Street Works Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 57), ss. 6, 7, 8.—When justices are asked to amend the plans, &c., submitted under the Private Street Works Act, 1892, by a local authority, they have, under section 8, jurisdiction to do so without expressly amending the original resolution of the local authority, and also without directing further notices to be given to persons affected who have had notice of the original scheme and have not given notice of objection. An order made in such circumstances, declaring the local authority entitled to a charge on the property of such persons for their proportion of the expenses, is therefore valid.

Semble, though section 6 gives the justices a discretion in such cases as to adjourning and directing further notices to be served, it is desirable, in cases of importance, that an adjournment should take place, and that notice should be given to persons affected who are not before the court.

Decision of Stirling, J. (ante, p. 328), affirmed.—TWICKENHAM DISTRICT COUNCIL v. MUNTON, C.A., 660.

28. Transfer—Transfer of part of one county to another county — Adjustment of liabilities — Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), s. 62.—By an order made under the Local Government Act, 1888, part of the county of B. was transferred to the county of H. The portion so transferred contained no county bridges and no main roads.

Held, that the arbitrator appointed by the Local Government Board under section 62 had power to award to the county of B. a sum of money in respect of the loss to that county of an area which contributed to expenditure on bridges and main roads without involving the county in any corresponding outlay on its own account.—BUCKINGHAMSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL AND HERTFORDSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL, RE, Q.B.D.; 68 L. J. Q. B. 417; 80 L. T. 85.

29. Vestry — Qualification — Residence for twelve months—Temporary absence—Intention to return—Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73).—Temporary absence, with an intention and right to return, does not prevent a qualification for vestryman being obtained by residence during twelve months. — STANFORD v. WILLIAMS, Q.B.D.; 80 L. T. 490.

30. Water—Supply brought to reasonable distance from dwelling-house—Cost of communicating supply to house—Limit of cost—Liability of owner of house —Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 62 —Public Health (Water) Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 25, s. 3.—A rural sanitary authority brought a supply of water into a certain district and within a reasonable distance of a dwelling-house, and then required the owner of the house to make a communication of the supply to his house. The owner not complying, the local authority made the communication of the supply to the house at a cost exceeding the scale of charges which had been fixed by the Local Government Board under section 8 of the Public Health (Water) Act, 1878, for the compulsory supply of water within the district. The owner of the house having refused to pay to the authority in respect of the communication of the supply to his house more than the limit fixed by the Local Government Board,

Held, that the owner was bound to pay the whole of the cost, as the provisions of section 3 of the Public Health (Water) Act, 1878, applied only to the bringing of the supply to a reasonable distance from the house, but did not apply to the communication of the supply to the house, and that, as to the latter, there was no limit of cost.—WEST LANCASHIRE RURAL COUNCIL v. OGILVY, Q.B.D., 363; [1899] 1 Q. B. 377; 68 L. J. Q. B. 215; 80 L. T. 162.

See also Charity, 1; Highway, 1.

LOCKE-KING'S ACT:—

See Administration, 6; Mortgage, 9.

LONDON:—

See Metropolis, 1, 16.

LOTTERY:—

Prize competition—Prediction of number of births and deaths in London in a given week—Chance—Skill.—A newspaper proprietor advertised in his paper that a prize of £1,000 would be given to a person who correctly predicted the number of births (male and female) and deaths in London, as disclosed by the Registrar-General's returns, during the week in which the particular number of the paper was published. Each prediction had to be written on a voucher printed in the paper, and forwarded to the proprietor.

Held, that the competition was not a lottery.—HALL v. COX, C.A., 161; [1899] 1 Q. B. 198; 68 L. J. Q. B. 167; 79 L. T. 653.

LUNACY:—

1. Lunatic—Directing committee to accept a devise to lunatic upon condition of resettling other property—Jurisdiction of court—Benefit of lunatic—Pecuniary benefit—Statute Prerogativâ Regis (17 Edw. 2, stat. 1, c. 10)—Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 Vict. c. 5).—The court has jurisdiction to order that the committee of a lunatic shall accept a devise made to the lunatic upon condition of resettling certain other property, and shall execute the resettlement. This jurisdiction arises from the inherent authority of the court, and is not affected by the Statute Prerogativâ Regis or by the Lunacy Act, 1890.

The court, in exercising its jurisdiction, ought to be guided by a consideration of what is for the benefit of the lunatic, but, semble, is not bound to regard only his pecuniary benefit.—SEFTON (EARL), RE, Lun., 49; [1898] 2 Ch. 378.

2. Practice—Receiver—Order appointing—Person of unsound mind not so found—Person "lawfully detained"—Expiry of period of detention—Effect of—Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 5), s. 116, sub-section 1 (c).—An order made by a Master in Lunacy under section 116, sub-section 1 (c), appointing a receiver and manager of the property of a person of unsound mind not so found, who at the date of the order was "lawfully detained" under a reception order, does not necessarily come to an end when the reception order expires and the person to whom it refers ceases to be lawfully detained; but a further order of the court is required to discharge it, and the court will not make such order unless satisfied that the person in question is no longer subject to the delusions which may have led to the detention.—S——, RE, C.A.; [1898] 2 Ch. 392; 67 L. J. 453.

3. Property—Transfer of Consols—Form of order—Lunatic sole trustee—Stock—Vesting order—Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 5), s. 136, sub-sections 1, 4; ss. 137, 142.—A person of unsound mind not so found being sole trustee of a sum of Consols, the Judge in Lunacy, upon the application of A. B., made an order under the Acts of 1890 and 1891, that the right to call for a transfer of, and to transfer into his own name the Consols standing in the name of the lunatic, and to receive the dividends thereon, should vest in A. B., and that he should transfer the Consols into his own name to be held by him upon the trusts applicable thereto. The Bank of England refused to act upon an order in this form upon the ground that, under section 137 of the Lunacy Act of 1890, some proper officer of the bank should have been appointed to make the transfer.

Held, that the order made by the Judge in Lunacy was right, and that the bank must act upon it, and must allow the Consols to be transferred accordingly.

In re Gregson, [1893] 3 Ch. 233, approved.

Per Chitty, L.J.—The 137th section of the Lunacy Act, 1890, applies, so far as the 136th is concerned, only to sub-section 4 thereof.—G——, RE (No. 1), C.A.; [1898] 2 Ch. 324.

See also Justices, 3; Libel, 2; Trustee, 10.

MANDAMUS.—See Patent, 6.

MARRIED WOMAN:—

1. Policy under Married Women's Property Act, 1870—Appointment of trustees—Title of petition.—Where a husband effected a policy in favour of his wife under the provisions of the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, a petition for the appointment of trustees need not be entitled "In the Matter of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882."

In re Turnbull, 46 W. R. 3, [1897] 2 Ch. 415, and In re Adams' Policy Trusts, 31 W. R. 810, 23 Ch. D. 525, followed.—KUYPER'S POLICY TRUST, RE, Ch.D. North, J., 236; [1899] 1 Ch. 38; 68 L. J. Ch. 10; 79 L. T. 486.

2. Separate estate—Contract made during coverture—Liability after death of husband—Form of judgment—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), s. 1, sub-section 2.—A married woman entered into a contract before the passing of the Married Women's Property Act, 1893, and was sued upon it after the death of her husband.

Held, that the form of the judgment against her must limit the execution to such property as during her coverture was her separate property not subject to any restriction against anticipation.—SOFTLAW v. WELCH, C.A., 626.

3. Will—Assent of husband—Husband proving will—Practice of Probate Division.—Where a married woman, who had no power of disposition by will except with the assent of her husband, bequeathed all her property to her husband, subject to the payment of a legacy of £10,000, and appointed him sole executor,

Held, that, as probate of a married woman's will is now granted only in general terms, the husband did not by merely proving the will thereby assent to the dispositions it contained.

Held, also, on the construction of the will, that, whether or not the husband had assented, it did not dispose of the property, which would have gone to the husband if the testatrix had not made a will.

Decision of Stirling, J. (46 W. R. 439), affirmed.—ATKINSON, RE, WALLER v. ATKINSON, C.A., 469; [1899] 2 Ch. 1; 68 L. J. Ch. 404; 80 L. T. 505.

4. Will—General power—Appointment in discharge of debt—Erroneous statement of indebtedness—Administration—Assets—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), s. 4.—Where a married woman, having under a settlement a general power of appointment by will, made a will and directed her trustees to pay legacies, including one of £1,100 to D. in satisfaction of a debt due from testatrix to D., and subject thereto, the testatrix, in exercise of the power under the settlement, appointed a life interest in the trust funds to her husband; and where the testatrix's estate was insolvent, and the debt of £1,100 was not due from the testatrix to D., but from her husband to D., and the husband, after the wife's death, paid the debt of £1,100 to D.,

Held, (1) that, the debt of £1,100 being the husband's, the legacy of £1,100 was perfectly effective at date of testatrix's death, and payment of the debt by the husband did not make any difference; (2) that a valid appointment was made of the £1,100, and, by section 4 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, the other property not being sufficient to pay debts, that the legacy must go for that purpose.—HODGSON, RE, DARLEY v. HODGSON, Ch.D. North, J., 443; [1899] 1 Ch. 666; 68 L. J. Ch. 313; 80 L. T. 276.

See also Bankruptcy, 18; Justices, 4, 5; Practice, 32; Probate, 7-9.

MASTER and SERVANT—

1. Contract—Breach—Continuance of employment—Proceedings for damages—Waiver—Employers and Workmen Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 90).—On the hearing of a complaint under the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875, for damages for breach of contract by the appellants against the respondent a miner, it was admitted that the appellants had continued since the date of such breach to employ the respondent upon the terms of such contract.

Held, that that amounted to no waiver or release with regard to the claim for damages.—WYNNSTAY COLLERIES CO. v. EDWARDS, Q.B.D.; 79 L. T. 378.

2. Dismissal—Negligence.—The question whether a single act of forgetfulness on the part of a servant will justify his dismissal without notice depends upon the character of the act.

A workman having the charge of a valuable machine, through forgetfulness, caused damage to the machine to the extent of £30.

Held, that his employer was justified in dismissing him without notice.—BASTER v. LONDON AND COUNTY PRINTING CO., Q.B.D., 639; [1899] 1 Q. B. 901; 68 L. J. Q. B. 622; 80 L. T. 757.

3. Employment—Accident—Arbitration—Jurisdiction of county court judge—New trial—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 1, sub-section 3; Schedule II., ss. 2, 4—Workmen's Compensation Rules, 1898, rr. 1 (4), 24, 64.—A county court judge has no jurisdiction to grant a new trial in an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.—MOUNTAIN v. PARR, C.A., 353; [1899] 1 Q. B. 805; 68 L. J. Q. B. 447; 80 L. T. 342.

4 Employment — Accident — Building — Building exceeding thirty feet in height—Building being constructed or repaired by means of a scaffolding—Alteration of building—Scaffolding inside building—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s 7, sub-sections 1, 2.—In an application for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, it appeared that the employers had undertaken to strengthen the structure of a recently-built stable by the insertion of iron stays, the building being twenty-eight feet high measured to the top of the upright walls and thirty-six feet high measured to the top of the roof, and that the deceased workman, at the time of the accident, was standing on a temporary structure set up inside the building, consisting of three planks placed on two trestles, the planks being eight feet above the ground.

Held, that the stable was a building which exceeded thirty feet in height within the meaning of section 7 of the Act, but that it was not a building which was being either constructed or repaired by means of a scaffolding within the meaning of the section.—HODDINOTT v. NEWTON, &C. (LIMITED), C.A., 499; [1899] 1 Q. B. 1018; 68 L. J. Q. B. 495; 80 L. T. 558.

5. Employment — Accident — Building — Building over thirty feet in height—Building on which machinery is used—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7, sub-section 1.—According to the true construction of section 7, sub-section 1, of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, employment on a building on which machinery is used for the purpose of the construction, repair, or demolition thereof, is within the Act, although the building does not exceed thirty feet in height.—MELLOR v. TOMKINSON, C.A., 240; [1899] 1 Q. B. 374; 68 L. J. Q. B. 214; 79 L. T. 715.

6. Employment—Accident—"Building which exceeds thirty feet in height"—Building being constructed to exceed thirty feet in height—Building at time of accident not exceeding that height—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 1, sub-section 1; s. 7, sub-section 1.—By section 7, sub-section 1, of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, "This Act shall apply only to employment . . . on, in, or about any building which exceeds thirty feet in height, and is either being constructed or repaired by means of a scaffolding, or being demolished."

Held, that the Act does not apply to employment on a building in course of erection which, at the time of the accident, does not exceed thirty feet in height, but which, when completed, will exceed that height.—BILLINGS v. HOLLOWAY, C.A., 105; [1899] 1 Q. B. 70; 68 L. J. Q. B. 16; 79 L. T. 396.

7. Employment — Accident — Building being "repaired by means of a scaffolding"—Painting outside of house by means of ladders—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7, sub-section 1.—By section 7, sub-section 1, of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, the Act is to apply to employment on, in, or about any building exceeding thirty feet in height which is either being "constructed or repaired by means of a scaffolding."

Held, that painting the outside of a building by means of ladders, including the preparation of the surface for painting, is not "repairing" the building by means of a "scaffolding" within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 1, of the Act.—WOOD v. WALSH & SONS, C.A., 504; [1899] 1 Q. B. 1009; 68 L. J. Q. B. 492; 80 L. T. 345.

8. Employment — Accident — Compensation — "Average weekly earnings"—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), Sched. I., cl. 1 (b).—By Schedule I., clause 1 (b), of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, the compensation under the Act shall be, "(b) where total or partial incapacity for work results from the injury, a weekly payment during the incapacity after the second week not exceeding 50 per cent. of his average weekly earnings during the previous twelve months if he has been so long employed, but if not, then for any less period during which he has been in the employment of the same employer, such weekly payment not to exceed one pound."

A workman was injured by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment.

During the year preceding the accident the workman went out on strike, and his employment was thereupon terminated. After the strike was over he went back into the employment of the same employer under a new contract of employment, and remained there until the accident happened.

Held, that, in ascertaining the average weekly earnings for the purpose of assessing compensation, inasmuch as the employment before the strike was terminated, the period of employment subsequent to the strike could alone be considered.—JONES v. OCEAN COAL CO. (LIMITED), C.A., 484; [1899] 2 Q. B. 124; 60 L. J. Q. B. 731; 80 L. T. 582.

9. Employment—Accident—Compensation—Average weekly earnings—Break in employment—Period of actual employment—Claim to indemnity—Notice—Indemnity as between respondents—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), Schedule I. (1), (a), (i.)—Workmen's Compensation Rules, 1898, rr. 19-23.—A workman who was killed by an accident on the 27th of September, 1898, had been originally employed by his employers before the 27th of September, 1895, and from that date till March, 1896, he was earning wages of £2 10s. a week. There was then a break in his employment till February, 1897, when he commenced work again at wages of 30s. a week, and he continued to work at that rate of wages till his death.

Held, that, in calculating the amount of compensation to which his widow was entitled under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, Schedule I. (1), (a.), (i.), the period of work before the break ought not to be taken into account, and that the award ought to be for 156 times 30s.

Where the respondents in an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act are the undertakers and a person who has contracted with them, and the undertakers claim indemnity against the contractor, it is necessary, under rule 23 of the Workmen's Compensation Rules, 1898, to give notice of such claim in the same way as is required by rule 19 in the case where a claim to indemnity is sought against a third party.—APPLEBY v. HORSELEY CO. (LIMITED), C.A., 614; 80 L. T. 853.

10. Employment — Accident — Compensation — Average weekly earnings—"If he has been so long employed"—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), Schedule I. (1), (b).—The words "if he has been so long employed" in Schedule I. (1), (b), to the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, mean "if he has been so long employed by the same employer," and not "if he has been so long employed in the same grade of employment."—PRICE v. MARSDEN, C.A., 274; [1899] 1 Q. B. 493; 68 L. J. Q. B. 307; 80 L. T. 15.

11. Employment—Accident—Compensation—Weekly payment—Wages the same after as before the accident—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), Sched. I., cl. 2.—A workman, who lost his thumb in consequence of an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment, was received back after the accident into the employment of the same employer at the same rate of wages as before the accident, though he was not put at the same kind of work. The county court judge awarded him 2s. 6d. a week from the time when he resumed work after the accident.

Held, that, as the wages after the accident were the same as those before, there was no power at that time to award any weekly payment in respect of the period after the workman resumed work.—IRONS v. DAVIS & TIMMINS (LIMITED), C.A., 616; [1899] 2 Q. B. 330; 68 L. J. Q. B. 673; 80 L. T. 673.

12. Employment—Accident — Compensation—Disablement for two weeks from earning full wages—Payment of same wages after accident as before—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 1, sub-section 2 (a).—In an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, it appeared that the applicant was a foreman in the employment of the respondents, who were carpet manufacturers. His main work consisted in supervision, but he used also frequently to set up and adjust the machines. While adjusting a machine he received an injury to his thumb, which had to be amputated. He returned to his work the next day, but after the accident he was unable to set up or adjust the machines, and his work was confined to supervision. He received the same wages after the accident as before.

Held, that he was disabled for two weeks from "earning full wages at the work at which he was employed" within the meaning of section 1, sub-section 2 (a), of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

Held, also, that the proper course was to make a declaration of liability, and to adjourn the question of the amount and duration of compensation.—CHANDLER v. SMITH, C.A., 677.

13. Employment—Accident—Compensation—Dismissal of action under the Employers' Liability Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 42)—Subsequent proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37).—Where a workman has brought an action against his employer to recover damages independently of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, for personal injuries caused by accident, and the action is dismissed, the workman cannot subsequently take proceedings to recover compensation under the Act of 1897 in respect of the same injuries, the only remedy being to apply, under section 1, sub-section 4, of the Act of 1887, as soon as the previous action was dismissed, to the court in which the action was tried to assess compensation under the Act of 1897.—EDWARDS v. GODFREY, C.A., 551; [1899] 2 Q. B. 333; 68 L. J. Q. B. 666; 80 L. T. 672.

14. Employment — Accident — Compensation — Persons entitled—"Dependants"—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7, sub-section 2.—A boy who earned 8s. a week lived at home with his father and mother and five brothers and sisters. The father earned 25s. a week, and two sisters together earned 19s. a week. These earnings were all put together into a common fund.

Held, that there was evidence that the father and mother were "in part dependent" upon the earnings of the boy within section 7, sub-section 2, of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.—DAVIES v. MAIN COLLIERY CO., C.A.; 80 L. T. 674.

15. Accident—Compensation—"Serious and wilful misconduct"—Breach of rules of mine—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 1 (2) (c).—Breaches of the rules made under the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887, committed by a workman employed in a coal mine, do not necessarily amount to "serious and wilful misconduct" within the meaning of section 1 (2) (c) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.—RUMBOLL v. NUNNERY COLLIERY CO., C.A.; 80 L. T. 42.

16. Employment—Accident—Dependants—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7, sub-section 2; Sched. I., s. 1.—"Dependants" within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 2, and Schedule I., s. 1, of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, must have been wholly or in part dependent upon the earnings of the workman for the ordinary necessaries of life, having regard to the class and position in life of the parties.

The question whether the applicants in any case were dependants in this sense is a question of fact to be decided by the arbitrator.—SIMMONS v. WHITE, C.A., 513; [1899] 1 Q. B. 1005; 68 L. J. Q. B. 507; 80 L. T. 344.

17. Employment—Accident—"Factory"—Unloading ship by means of crane on quay—Injury to workman on ship—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), ss. 1, 7—Factory and Workshop Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 37), s. 23, sub-section 1.—A workman was employed by shipowners on board a ship to assist in unloading cases of cartridges by means of a crane on to a quay. The crane, which was standing on the quay, was worked by means of a chain, at the end of which was attached a basket. The workman placed the cases in the basket, and the basket and its contents were hoisted on to the quay. When one of the cases was being placed in the basket, it exploded and killed the workman. Upon a claim by his widow for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, Held, that the workman was killed by an accident arising out of, and in the course of, his employment in or about machinery used in the process of unloading on to a quay within the meaning of the Act; and that, therefore, the Act applied.—WOODHAM v. ATLANTIC TRANSPORT CO., C.A., 105; [1899] 1 Q. B. 15; 68 L. J. Q. B. 17; 79 L. T. 395.

18. Employment—Accident—Factory—Wharf—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7, sub-section 2—Factory and Workshop Act, 1878 (41 Vict. c. 16), s. 68—Factory and Workshop Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 37), ss. 18, 23.—A workman was killed by an accident which happened in a public street just outside his employers' wharf, while he was leading a horse and cart out of the wharf in the course of his employment. The wharf was a simple yard by the side of a canal, and no machinery of any kind was used on it.

Held, that the wharf was not a factory within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, for it did not come within the definition of "factory" in section 7, sub-section 2, as being a wharf to which any provision of the Factory Acts was applied by the Factory Act, 1895.

The provisions of section 18 of the Factory Act, 1895, with respect to accidents were not applied to it by section 23 of that Act, for no accident had occurred on the wharf; neither were the provisions of section 68 of the Factory Act, 1878, with respect to the powers of inspectors thereby applied to it.—HALL v. SNOWDON, HUBBARD, & CO. (No. 2), C.A., 486; [1899] 2 Q. B. 136; 68 L. J. Q. B. 645; 80 L. T. 554.

19. Employment—Accident—Employment on or in or about a factory—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7.—In an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, it was proved that the deceased was a carter in the employment of the defendants, who were the occupiers of a timber yard, and that he was accidentally killed while engaged in stowing timber on a cart belonging to the defendants, which was standing immediately outside the defendants' premises.

The county court judge held that the deceased was employed "on or in or about" a factory within section 7, sub-section 1, of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, and made an award in favour of the widow of the deceased.

Held, that the decision of the county court judge must be affirmed.—POWELL v. BROWN, C.A., 145; [1899] 1 Q. B. 157; 68 L. J. Q. B. 151; 79 L. T. 631.

20. Employment—Accident—Employment on or in or about a factory—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7, sub-section 1.—In an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, it was proved that the applicant sustained personal injury in the course of his employment as a carter whilst delivering sacks of flour a mile and a-half away from his employers' factory.

The county court judge held that the employment of the applicant at the time of the accident was not "on or in or about a factory" within section 7, sub-section 1, of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

Held, that the decision of the county court judge must be affirmed.

Powell v. Brown, ante, p. 145, [1899] 1 Q. B. 157, referred to.—LOWTH v. IBBOTSON, C.A., 506; [1899] 1 Q. B. 1003; 68 L. J. Q. B. 465; 80 L. T. 341.

21. Employment—Accident—Employment on, in, or about a factory—Dock—Employment on ship lying in dock—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7.—Employment on a ship lying in a dock is not employment on, in, or about the dock so as to come within the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.—FLOWERS v. CHAMBERS, C.A., 513; [1899] 2 Q. B. 142; 68 L. J. 648; 80 L. T. 834.

22. Employment—Accident arising out of and in the course of the employment—"Factory"—Factory and Workshop Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 37), s. 23—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), ss. 1, 7.—A workman, who was employed at a steam-engine in a shed temporarily used in connection with the construction of a building close to, was killed by an accident while so employed. In proceedings to assess compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, Held, that the shed was constituted a factory by section 23, sub-section 1 (b), of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895, for the purpose of applying thereto the powers of the Act with reference to dangerous machines, and that therefore, by virtue of section 7, sub-section 2, of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, the engine in the shed was itself a factory; and that, consequently, the deceased man was killed while employed "on or in or about a factory" within the meaning of section 7, and the employers were liable to pay compensation.—MCNICHOLAS v. DAWSON & SONS, C.A., 500; [1899] 1 Q. B. 773; 68 L. J. Q. B. 470; 80 L. T. 317.

23. Employment—Accident arising out of and in the course of employment—Questions of law—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 1, sub-section 1.—In an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, in respect of the death of a railway servant, who was killed in consequence of getting on to the foot-board of a train in motion to speak to a passenger, the county court judge found as facts that the deceased was, on the day of the accident, in the employment of the defendants, and that his day's duty was not finished at the time of the accident, but that he did not get on to the footboard for any object of the defendants, but only for his own pleasure.

Held, that, by section 1, sub-section 1, the Act only applied to accidents arising both out of the employment and in the course of the employment; and that, on the findings of the county court judge, the accident did not arise out of the employment of the deceased.

In cases under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, the Court of Appeal has jurisdiction to entertain questions of law only.—SMITH v. LANCASHIRE AND YORKSHIRE RAILWAY CO., C.A., 146; [1899] 1 Q. B. 141; 68 L. J. Q. B. 51; 79 L. T. 633.

24. Employment—Accident arising out of and in course of employment—Workman injured on his way to his work—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37) s. 1, sub-section 1.—In an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, it appeared that the workman was in the employment of a firm of contractors, who had contracted with a railway company for the construction of a siding. While he was walking to his work, the weather being foggy, he was run over by a train and killed on the main line, about seven minutes before the time for the commencement of work, and at a distance of about 150 yards from the place of work.

Held, by A. L. Smith and Vaughan Williams, L.JJ. (Romer, L.J., dissenting), that there was nothing to justify the county court judge in holding that the accident arose out of and in the course of the workman's employment.—HOLNESS v. MACKAY & DAVIES, C.A., 531; [1899] 2 Q. B. 319; 68 L. J. Q. B. 724; 80 L. T. 831.

25. Employment—Accident arising out of and in the course of the employment—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 1, sub-section 1.—In an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, it appeared that the workman, who was a fireman employed in a mine, while in the course of his employment saw a horse belonging to his employer running away, and tried to stop it, and in so doing was knocked over and killed.

Held, that this was a case of a servant, while in his master's employ, doing upon an emergency something outside the scope of what he was employed to do in the interests of his master, and as such was within section 1, sub-section 1, of the Workmen's Compensation Act.—REES v. THOMAS, C.A., 504; [1899] 1 Q. B. 1015; 68 L. J. Q. B. 539; 80 L. T. 578.

26. Employment—"Accident arising out of and in the course of the employment"—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 1, sub-section 1.—A workman was employed in pottery works to make the clay into balls, and to hand them to a woman who was at work at a machine moulding the clay. The workman had nothing to do with the machine, and was expressly told not to interfere with it. The workman, while the woman was temporarily absent from the machine, attempted to clean it, and his hand was caught in the machinery and injured.

Held, that the accident did not arise "out of and in the course of the employment" within section 1, sub-section 1, of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, and that, therefore, the employer was not liable to pay compensation.—LOWE v. PEARSON, C.A., 193; [1899] 1 Q. B. 261; 68 L. J. Q. B. 122; 79 L. T. 654.

27. Employment—Accident to workman—Employment "on or in or about engineering work"—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7.—A workman was employed on a steam dredger in a harbour, part of his duty being to take a barge filled with mud which had been dredged up, a mile and a-half out to sea and to deposit the mud there. The workman, while depositing the mud a mile and a-half out at sea, was injured.

Held, that (assuming that the work carried on in the steam dredger constituted "engineering work" within section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897), the workman was not injured "on or in or about" the main locality of the engineering work, and was not, therefore, entitled to compensation.

The words "engineering work" in section 7 indicate locality.—CHAMBERS v. WHITEHAVEN HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS, C.A., 533; [1899] 2 Q. B. 132; 68 L. J. Q. B. 740; 80 L. T. 586.

28. Employment—Accident—Negligence—Common law liability of master—Defect in plant—Servant's knowledge of danger—Risk voluntarily incurred.—A workman in the employment of the defendants was killed by a fall while descending in the course of his work, from an elevated tramway on the defendants' premises. In an action by his widow under Lord Campbell's Act, the jury found that the defendants did not exercise due care to have the tramway in a safe and proper condition so as to protect their servants working upon it against unnecessary risks; that it was dangerous to descend from the tramway without the means of a ladder; that the deceased had the same means of knowing that it was dangerous as the defendants had; that he did know that it was dangerous; and that he had not been guilty of contributory negligence; and they assessed damages.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment.—WILLIAMS v. BIRMINGHAM BATTERY CO., C.A., 680; [1899] 2 Q. B. 338.

29. Railway company—Scheme of compensation—Death from accident in course of duty—Disobedience—Accident while coming on duty.—The Great Eastern Railway under statutory powers established an accident allowance fund. By the rules to regulate the fund it was provided: "The allowances to be paid . . . shall be as follows: . . . In case of the death of an insurer from any accident in the discharge of duties in the company's service . . . there shall be paid to the representative of the of the insurer . . . £130."

The action was brought by the widow of a workman under the following circumstances:

Before commencing work it was, according to the rule of the company, required of every workman to procure from an office at the works a ticket or cheque, which was to be delivered back at the end the day's work, and which operated as a voucher, and showed what wages he was to receive. This office could be approached by two footpaths, and workmen were expressly forbidden to cross the lines of rails. The deceased, on his way to get the ticket before he began his work, crossed the rails, and was knocked down by an engine and killed.

Held, that the death did not result from an accident in the discharge of duties in the company's service, and that the plaintiff could not recover.—VICKERY v. GREAT EASTERN RAILWAY CO., Q.B.D.; 79 L. T. 121.

30. Servant hired from another person—Liability for the negligence of hired servant.—The defendant kept his carriage and horses at a livery stable, and hired a man from the keeper of the livery stable to drive them; the driver being selected by the keeper of the livery stable. One day, when the defendant was out driving, owing to the negligence of the driver, the horse bolted and ran into and did damage to the plaintiff's shop. The driver was one who had driven the defendant continuously for some time, and he wore the defendant's livery, but he had only driven the horse in the shafts at the time of the accident some two or three times.

Held, that there was evidence on which a jury could find that the driver was the servant of the defendant, so that the defendant was liable for his negligence.—JONES v. SCULLARD, Q.B.D., 303; [1898] 2 Q. B. 565; 79 L. T. 386.

31. "Workman" — Person employed in coal mine by contractor — Liability of mine-owner — Working "under a contract with an employer" — Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 58) —Employers and Workmen Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 90), s. 10—Employers' Liability Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 42), s. 8.—By section 8 of the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, the expression "workman" means any person to whom the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875, applies; and by section 10 of the Act of 1875 a "workman" means "any person who, being a labourer, . . . miner, or otherwise engaged in manual labour, . . . has entered into or works under a contract with an employer," whether the contract be express or implied.

By the special rules of a colliery made under section 51 of the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887, the manager of the mine was made responsible for the control, management, and direction of the mine, and was to appoint such competent persons as might be necessary for carrying out the provisions of the Act, and all persons employed in or about the mine were to obey his directions; and the chargeman in each shift was to have charge of the sinking operations.

E. entered into a contract with the owners of the colliery to sink a shaft in their coal mine. By the contract E. (who was therein called the contractor) was to provide such sinkers, &c., as might be necessary for the execution of the work, and was to be paid a certain sum per fathom sunk. E. employed and paid the sinkers, he himself acting as "chargeman" in charge of the sinking operations. One of the sinkers, while engaged upon the work, was killed by a block of wood falling upon him, and his administratrix brought an action against the colliery owners under the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, to recover damages for his death.

Held, that E. was an independent contractor; that the deceased was not a "workman" who had entered into or worked under a contract with the colliery owners as his employers within the meaning of section 10 of the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875; and that therefore the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, did not apply.

Held, also, that the control given by the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887, and by the special rules of the mine, to the manager over all persons in the mine, did not make E. and the sinkers employed by him "workmen" in the employment of the colliery owners within the meaning of section 10 of the Act of 1875.—MARROW v. FLIMBY AND BROUGHTON MOOR COAL AND FIRE BRICK CO., C.A.; [1898] 2 Q. B. 588; 79 L. T. 397.

See also Contract, 5; Practice, 1.

MEDICAL PRACTITIONER:—

Licentiate of the Society of Apothecaries—Title of physician—Wilfully and falsely taking and using the same—Conviction by justices—Medical Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 90), s. 40—Medical Act, 1886 (49 & 50 Vict. c. 41), s. 6.—A licentiate of the Society of Apothecaries of London registered since the coming into operation of the Medical Act, 1886, and therefore, by section 6 of that Act, entitled to practise medicine, surgery, and midwifery, is not entitled to describe himself as a physician.—HUNTER v. CLARE, Q.B.D., 394; [1899] 1 Q. B. 635; 68 L. J. Q. B. 278; 80 L. T. 197.

MERSEY DOCKS:—

"Town dues"—Upper Mersey Dues Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. cxxv.).—By section 17 of the Upper Mersey Dues Act, 1860, the right to collect "town dues" was transferred from the Mersey Docks and Harbour Board to a separate body of trustees in respect of all goods "carried or conveyed upon, over, or along any part of the Upper Mersey," as therein defined.

Held, that the section applied to goods carried over any part of the Upper Mersey in the ordinary course of a voyage, not only to goods landed at some port in the Upper Mersey.—MERSEY DOCKS BOARD v. HUNTER, H.L.; 80 L. T. 96.

METROPOLIS:—

1. London — Building — Approaches—Public-house —Partly used as dwelling-house—London Building Act, 1894, s. 74, sub-section 2.—A fully-licensed public-house is not a building "used in part for purposes of trade or manufacture and in part as a dwelling-house," within section 74, sub-section 2, of the London Building Act, 1894, so that the means of approach to the part used as a dwelling-house need not be constructed of fireproof materials as required by that section.—CARRITT v. GODSON, Q.B.D.; [1899] 2 Q. B. 193; 68 L. J. Q. B. 799; 80 L. T. 771.

2. London—Building—Building owner—Party wall —Notice—Sufficiency—London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. ccxiii.), s. 90.—A party-wall notice, given by a building owner to an adjoining owner under section 90 of the London Building Act, 1894, ought to be so clear and intelligible as to enable the adjoining owner to see what counter-notice he should give under the provisions of the Act.—HOBBS, HART, & CO. v. GROVER, C.A.; [1899] 1 Ch. 11; 62 L. J. Ch. 84; 79 L. T. 454.

3. London—Buildings—Commencing to form or lay out a street—London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. ccxiii.), s. 8.—The owner of a building estate, having erected a row of houses adjoining a street, sold a piece of land on the same side of the street to the respondent, who commenced to erect a row of houses in a line with the first row and fronting the street. A space of forty-feet, the statutory width of a street for carriage traffic, was left between the two rows of houses. In the house adjoining the space the respondent put a doorway and windows looking on to the space, and the sole means of access for carriages to the stables at the back of the premises was across the space. The respondent had no control over the space, which remained the property of the owner of the building estate. The space was marked in the building plan of the estate as "proposed street," but before the respondent erected his houses it had not been laid out as a street.

Held, that the respondent did not commence to form or lay out a street within the meaning of section 8 of the London Building Act, 1894.—LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. DIXON, Q.B.D., 521; [1899] 1 Q. B. 496; 98 L. J. Q. B. 526; 80 L. T. 232.

4. London — Building — Dangerous structures — Erection of shores and hoarding—Disturbance of pavement—Duty to restore pavement after hoarding removed—London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. ccxiii.), ss. 106, 107.—Where the London County Council, acting under the powers conferred on them by Part IX. of the London Building Act, 1894, have, for the purpose of securing a dangerous structure, erected shores and a hoarding, and have taken up portions of the pavement to allow of the shores and the uprights of the hoarding being fixed in the ground, the duty of replacing the pavement after the shores and hoarding have been removed lies upon the owner of the premises and not upon the county council.—CRISP v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, Q.B.D.; [1899] 1 Q. B. 720; 68 L. J. Q. B. 499; 80 L. T. 654.

5. London—Building—Wooden structure—Exemption—Structure used in connection with traffic by railway company—London Building Act, 1894, s. 86. —The appellants, coal merchants, were in the habit of having coal consigned to them by railway to London, where it was delivered at a wharf in the coalyard of the railway company. By leave of the railway company the appellants erected there a small wooden structure, which they used as a coal office. The use of this office by the appellants was a matter of convenience to the railway company, as it facilitated the clearing of the coal-trucks from the company's sidings.

Held, that the structure in question was "used in connection with the traffic of the railway company" within the meaning of section 86 of the London Building Act, 1894, and that the sanction of the London County Council to its erection was not required under section 84.—ELLIOTT v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, Q.B.D.; [1899] 2 Q. B. 277; 68 L. J. Q. B. 837.

6. London County Council (Improvement) Act, 1897, s. 43, Part III.—Construction.—In considering what property is liable to an improvement charge under the London County Council (Improvement) Act, 1897, s. 43, Part III., it is sufficient if part of the property held as a whole abuts on the street to which the improvement applies.—OXFORD MUSIC HALL v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, Ch.D. North, J., 297; [1898] 2 Ch. 491; 79 L. T. 22.

7. Management — County council — Bye-law — Gaming—Betting—Repugnancy between bye-law and statute—Metropolitan Streets Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 134), s. 23—Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, s. 23 —A bye-law made by the London County Council prohibiting under a penalty any person from frequenting and using any street or other public place for the purpose of bookmaking, betting, or wagering, is a reasonable bye-law, and one that can properly be made under section 23 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, for the good rule and government of the district; and there is no inconsistency or repugnancy between the bye-law and the statutory provision contained in section 23 of the Metropolitan Streets Act, 1867, which says that "any three or more persons assembled together in any part of a street within the Metropolis for the purpose of betting shall be deemed to be obstructing the street," and shall be liable to a penalty.—WHITE v. MORLEY, Q.B.D., 583; [1899] 2 Q. B. 34; 68 L. J. Q. B. 902; 80 L. T. 761.

8. Management—Highway—Lowering surface of road—Water company—Water pipes left insufficiently covered—Duty of local authority—Injunction—Damages—Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), s. 98.—A local authority which, in exercise of the powers conferred by section 98 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, lowers the surface of a road so as to leave pipes belonging to a water company insufficiently covered, is not bound to alter the position of the pipes so as to secure to them adequate protection.—SOUTHWARK AND VAUXHALL WATER CO. v. WANDSWORTH BOARD OF WORKS, C.A., 107; [1898] 2 Ch. 603; 79 L. T. 132.

9. Management—New building—Drainage—Building for the use of volunteers—Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), s. 75.—The appellants served a summons under section 75 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, upon the respondent, a builder, alleging that he had neglected to comply with their order that the lowest floor of a building in course of construction to be used as an armoury, storehouse, and drill hall by the 2nd Volunteer Battalion of Royal Fusiliers, and vested in their commanding officer, should be kept at such a level as would allow it to be drained into the public sewers.

The magistrate dismissed the summons on the ground that the premises were exempted from the provisions of the Act as being property vested in a servant of the Crown to be used exclusively for Crown purposes.

Held, on appeal, that the building was not exempt because it was intended for volunteer purposes, and that the matter must be remitted to the magistrate.—ST. MARGARET'S AND ST. JOHN'S VESTRIES v. HOSKINS, Q.B.D., 649; 68 L. J. Q. B. 840.

10. Management—Paving expenses—New street—Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), s. 105.—The word "street" in the expression "new street" in section 105 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, is used in its popular sense —viz., of a road having buildings erected on the adjoining land.

Judgment of the Queen's Bench Division (ante, p. 9) affirmed.—ALLEN v. FULHAM VESTRY, C.A., 428; [1899] 1 Q. B. 681; 68 L. J. Q. B. 450; 80 L. T. 253.

11. Management — Sewer — Drain — Injunction.—The plaintiffs, the Vestry of St. M. L., in the county of L., brought an action against the Urban District Council of H., which is outside the county of L. for an injunction to restrain the defendants from permitting their drains and sewers to be connected with the plaintiffs' sewer; also an injunction to prevent any future connection.

Held, that the court had no jurisdiction to compel the defendants to do their duty; further, if the court were by injunction to compel the defendants to disconnect their drains and sewers from the plaintiffs' sewer, it would create a public nuisance. Action dismissed with costs.—ST. MARY, ISLINGTON, VESTRY v. HORNSEY LOCAL BOARD, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 80 L. T. 746.

12. Management — Sewer — Drain — Liability to repair—Drainage by combined operation—Deviation from plan sanctioned—Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), s. 250.—A plan for draining a group of houses by a combined operation was sanctioned by the vestry. The course of one of the pipes indicated in the plan, which drained more than one of the houses, was in the laying of it altered so as to run within a few feet of the course indicated in the plan.

Held, that the pipe was a drain and not a sewer within the meaning of section 250 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, the number of houses draining into it not being added to or interfered with by the deviation from the plan sanctioned.—GREATER LONDON PROPERTY CO. (LIMITED) v. FOOT, Q.B.D., 541; [1899] 1 Q. B. 972; 68 L. J. Q. B. 628; 80 L. T. 390.

13. Management—Streets—Costermonger—Exposing for sale on carriage-way—Metropolitan Police Act, 1839 (2 & 3 Vict. c. 47), s. 60, sub-section 7—Metropolitan Streets Act Amendment Act, 1867 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 5), s. 1—Police Regulations of the 28th of December, 1869.—By section 60, sub-section 7, of

2 & 3 Vict. c. 47, "Every person who shall expose anything for sale . . . upon or so as to hang over any carriage-way or footway . . . so as to cause annoyance or obstruction in any thoroughfare within the Metropolitan police district, shall be liable to a penalty of not more than forty shillings."

By regulation 6 of the Police Regulations dated the 28th of December, 1869, and made under the Metropolitan Streets Act Amendment Act, 1867, it is provided that costermongers and others and their barrows are thereby made liable to be removed from any street and public way in which they cause an obstruction to the traffic, or where they are an annoyance to the inhabitants.

Held, that section 60 and the above regulation do not cover the same ground, and that section 60 was not impliedly repealed by the regulations, nor was the penalty provided for by the said section superseded by them.—WANDSWORTH BOARD OF WORKS v. PRETTY, Q.B.D., 256; [1899] 1 Q. B. 1; 68 L. J. Q. B. 193.

14. Management—Street—Costermonger — Obstruction—Police.—Where a costermonger causes an annoyance or obstruction within section 60, subsection 7, of the Metropolitan Police Act, 1839, a private person aggrieved by such annoyance or obstruction may take out a summons to recover the penalty imposed by that section.—REG. v. FRANCIS, WALTON, EX PARTE, Q.B.D.; 68 L. J. Q. B. 609.

15. Management — Street — Permanent paving of party by local authority—"New street"—Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), ss. 98 and 105—Metropolis Management Amendment Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 102), s. 112.—The fact that the local authority have, under section 98 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, permanently paved and channelled the footway before a number of houses fronting a country road will not estop them afterwards when that country road has, by having houses built continuously, and nearly continuously on both sides of it, become a new street, from exercising the powers given by secton 105 of that Act by directing the footways on both sides to be permanently paved and channelled, and apportioning the estimated cost among the frontagers, including among these the owners of the houses before which the footpath was previously paved and channelled under section 98.

"New street" within section 112 of the Metropolis Management Amendment Act, 1862, explained.—CROSSE v. WANDSWORTH BOARD OF WORKS, Q.B.D.; 79 L. T. 351.

16. Management — Street — Subsoil — Extent of ownership—Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), s. 96—Illegal breaking up of street—Mandatory injunction.—Held, that the decision of the House of Lords in Tunbridge Wells Corporation v. Baird, [1896] A. C. 434, as to the extent to which the soil of a street is vested in a local authority, under section 149 of the Public Health Act, 1875, applies to the similar vesting in a local authority under section 96 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, so that the soil of a street is vested in a vestry under section 96 only so far "as is necessary for the control, protection, and maintenance of the street as a highway for public use."

An electric lighting company had illegally broken up the surface of a street within the district of a vestry in the metropolis, and placed their pipes and wires at a depth of about two feet below the surface.

Held, that the vestry were not by virtue of section 96 the owners of the soil of the street at that depth, and that, although the company had acted illegally in breaking up the street, the vestry could not maintain an action for a mandatory injunction to compel the company to remove their pipes and wires, there being no continuing trespass upon or interference with any right of the vestry.

Decision of Jeune, P., reversed.—ST. MARY, BATTERSEA (VESTRY OF) v. COUNTY OF LONDON AND BRUSH PROVINCIAL ELECTRIC LIGHTING CO., C.A.; [1899] 1 Ch. 474; 68 L. J. Ch. 238; 80 L. T. 31.

17. Management—Streets—Widening—Compulsory purchase—Corporation—Power of corporation to take part of house—Injunction—Owner—Right of owner to retain part not required—Michael Angelo Taylor's Act (57 Geo. 3, c. xxix.), ss. 80, 82.—Where the Corporation of the City of London bonâ fide adjudged that part of a house obstructed and prevented the widening of a street, and served a notice on the owner to purchase and compulsorily acquire, under sections 80 and 82 of Michael Angelo Taylor's Act, the whole of the house,

Held, that, as the corporation failed to show that the part of the house remaining after they had taken as much as was absolutely required for the widening of the street would be useless to the owner, the owner was entitled to retain that part; and injunction granted restraining the corporation from acting on the notice to take the whole.

Gordon v. The Vestry of St. Mary Abbotts, Kensington, 38 SOLICITORS' JOURNAL, 580, [1894] 2 Q. B. 742, considered and explained.—ALDIS v. CITY OF LONDON CORPORATION, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 514; [1899] 2 Ch. 169; 80 L. T. 683.

18. Management — Street — Widening — Land—Houses—Severance—Right of pre-emption—Michael Angelo Taylor's Act, 1817 (57 Geo. 3, c. xxix.), ss. 80, 96.—A local authority, on the 27th of January, 1899, requiring about 11ft. from two houses for the purpose of widening a street, agreed to sell such portions of the houses as were not required to the owner of warehouses on the opposite side of the street.

On the 15th of February, 1899, the local authority, by resolution, made an adjudication, and, on the 16th of February, gave the owner of the two houses notice to treat.

The owner brought this action against the local authority.

Held, that the defendants, at the time they gave notice to treat, having a purchaser ready, and not having given the plaintiff the option of purchasing the portions of his houses not required for the widening of the street, the adjudication of the 15th of February, 1899, was wrong, and ultra vires, and there must be a perpetual injunction to restrain the defendants from proceeding on their notice to treat dated the 16th of February, 1899.—FEARNLEY v. LIMEHOUSE BOARD OF WORKS, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 68 L. J. Ch. 344; 80 L. T. 351.

19. Management—Trespass by vestry—Laying of new drain—Compensation—Damages—Consent of London County Council—Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), ss. 57, 59, 60, 69.—Where a metropolitan vestry acting on the reports of its officers had passed resolutions recorded on its minutes, and, in accordance with such resolutions, but without obtaining the leave of the county council, entered upon the plaintiff's premises and inserted a new system of drainage,

Held, that, on the proper construction of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, the vestry had committed a trespass, and had done an illegal act for which they were liable in damages; but, the plaintiff not having suffered injury, and having consented to the work, judgment was given for the vestry, the defendants, with costs.—LONG v. FULHAM VESTRY, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 56.

MIDDLESEX REGISTRY ACT.—See Bankruptcy, 27.

MINE:—

1. Letting down surface—Right to support—Power to work.—In the year 1865 Lady W., the plaintiff's predecessor in title, sold and conveyed to J. C. & Sons (Limited), at the price of £26,500, all the mines, veins, and seams of coal, iron, and other ores under certain hereditaments known as the S. Estate, containing 1,178 acres or thereabouts, together with full power to make, sink, and work all such pits, shafts, drifts, levels . . . and do all such other acts as might be deemed necessary or convenient for working, searching for, getting and raising the same and to do all other works and things which might be necessary or convenient for the purposes aforesaid, or any of them, doing as little damage as might be consistent with the due and proper carrying out of the said works. The deed contained a covenant by the company not to sink any shaft or drive any level which should or might weaken or damage any building on the vendor's lands, and to make satisfaction to be assessed as therein-mentioned for the spoil, or damage, or injury done to, in, and upon the said lands by the machinery for getting and raising the said coal, or by the sinking or working of any pit or shaft, or otherwise by virtue of or under the powers aforesaid.

The defendants in this action were lessees of J. C. & Sons (Limited). They were working on the long-wall system some of the deeper seams of coal under the S. Estate, and had caused some subsidence of the surface in places, but no substantial damage was proved.

The plaintiff brought this action for an injunction to restrain the defendants from working the coal so as to cause subsidence of the surface.

The defendants claimed a right to cause subsidence so long as they worked in a proper method. There was a conflict of evidence whether it was possible to work the coal at all without causing subsidence, but it was in effect admitted that it was not possible to do so at a profit.

Held, that the grant of the minerals did not expressly or by necessary implication give power to let down the surface, and the plaintiff was entitled to the injunction.—WESTMORELAND (EARL) v. NEW SHARLSTON COLLIERY CO., Ch.D. North, J.; 79 L. T. 716.

2. Reservation from grant—Red rock and coal, neither of immediate commercial value—Injunction.—The defendants were the lessees of certain lands under a lease dated the 30th of September, 1860, granted by the predecessor in title of the plaintiff, the lease containing the reservation, "except nevertheless and always reserved out of this demise all mines and minerals within or under the said land."

The defendants, in boring for water, had bored through a stratum of red rock and a layer of coal from six to eight inches in thickness, and the plaintiff moved for an injunction to restrain their so doing, on the ground that, although it was admitted that the red rock and coal could not be worked for profit at the present time, these substances were mines and minerals within the reservation.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the injunction on the principle laid down in Hext v. Gill, 20 W. R. 957, L. R. 7 Ch. App. 699, and explained in Earl of Jersey v. Guardians of the Poor of Neath Poor Law Union, 37 W. R. 388, 22 Q. B. D. 555, that the substances in question were such as had "a use and a value of their own independent of and separable from the rest of the soil."—JOHNSTONE v. CROMPTON & CO., Ch.D. Byrne, J., 604; [1899] 2 Ch. 190.

See also Inclosure, 1; Limitation Statutes, 5; Master and Servant, 15, 31.

MORTGAGE:—

1. Equitable mortgage by deposit of title deeds—Subsequent conveyance by mortgagor without notice—Non-investigation of mortgagor's title—Priority.—The plaintiff was an equitable mortgagee of five houses by deposit of the title deeds, accompanied by a written memorandum of deposit and undertaking by the mortgagor upon request of the plaintiff to execute a legal mortgage. The defendant was a subsequent purchaser for value from the mortgagor of three of the houses without actual notice of the prior charge, and at the time of her purchase she acquired the legal estate. She did not employ a solicitor, and personally took no part in the matter of the purchase, but left it to be carried out by a friend, who was formerly a solicitor's clerk, as her agent. No inquiry of any kind was made by the defendant or her agent as to the title of the vendor, and no abstract of title was called for or supplied. The agent stated that he made some inquiry as to the documents of title, and was told by the vendor that they related to other property as well as to the three houses, and he should not hand them over, but would enter into a covenant to produce them; but the judge was not satisfied that the agent's memory could be relied upon so far as he represented that he made a direct inquiry after the title deeds, and that the vendor replied that he had them. He did not ask and did not know what the documents of title were, and never asked to see them, and no document of any sort was produced before completion or handed over when the purchase-money was paid and the conveyance executed.

Held, that the defendant did not acquire a title to the three houses freed from the plaintiff's charge.—OLIVER v. HINTON, Ch.D. Romer, J.; 68 L. J. Ch. 94; 79 L. T. 729.

2. Fictitious security—Knowledge of third party—Duty to disclose—Liability for damages for deceit.—M. was fraudulently induced to advance money on mortgage to W. on the security of certain leases, which were subsequently proved to be fictitious. The leases had been previously mortgaged to C., who was paid off by M. when the latter advanced the money to W. At this date C. had become aware that the leases were fictitious, and that he had been defrauded by W., but he made no disclosure of this fact to M., and executed a reassignment to him of the so-called leasehold premises as if they had been genuine.

In an action by M. against W. and C., claiming damages against the latter for assisting in the fraud by which M. was induced to advance his money on the security of the fictitious leases, the personal security of W., who was now undergoing penal servitude, being valueless,

Held, that under the circumstances C. was liable to M. for the loss and damage so suffered by him, the amount to be ascertained by an inquiry in chambers.—MARNHAM v. WEAVER, Ch.D. Romer, J.; 80 L. T. 412.

3. Foreclosure — Parties — Debenture - holders —

"Floating security."—The trustees of a company, by its authority, gave a legal mortgage in fee of its land to the plaintiffs. Subsequently the company issued debentures to secure principal sums and interest which were thereby charged on all its undertaking and present and future property. It was also provided that the debentures were "all to rank pari passu in point of charge as a floating security on the property" thereby charged. The principal moneys thus charged were only to become payable in certain events, none of which had happened.

The plaintiffs commenced a foreclosure action to which they made not only the trustees and the company, but also all the debenture-holders defendants. At the trial it was objected on behalf of the debenture-holders that they were unnecessarily joined as parties.

Held, that the debenture-holders had an immediate equitable charge; that the working out of a foreclosure decree in their absence was not a dealing with its property by the company in the ordinary course of its business; and that they were properly made parties to the action.—WALLACE v. EVERSHED, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J.; [1899] 1 Ch. 891; 68 L. J. Ch. 415; 80 L. T. 523.

4. Limitations, Statutes of (21 Jac. 1, c. 16 and 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 42)—Statute-barred arrears of interest—Statute-barred debt—Mortgage of reversion—Mortgagee the tenant for life—Foreclosure and redemption action—Accounts between mortgagor and mortgagee.—A tenant for life, with the duty of keeping the property in repair, became mortgagee of the reversion. After her death her executors brought an action for foreclosure. The mortgagor counter-claimed for redemption and also for damages for non-repair, and he was held entitled to them. The tenant for life had lent him a sum of money greater than the amount of such damages, but this debt was statute-barred. There were arrears of interest owing under the mortgage deeds for more than six years.

Held, that the executors of the tenant for life could not treat the mortgagor as having been repaid his damages out of the statute-barred debt.

Held, also, that, in taking the accounts between mortgagor and mortgagees, all the arrears of interest must be brought in, and not merely those which had accrued within six years.—DINGLE v. COPPEN, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 279; [1899] 1 Ch. 726; 68 L. J. Ch. 337; 79 L. T. 693.

5. Loan on faith of promise to transfer mortgage—Misrepresentations to lender—Part payment of mortgage with money lent—Equitable mortgage by deed to lender—Right of lender to charge on other property comprised in first mortgage—Merger.—C., being entitled to two properties—namely, to No. 1 as trustee for his wife, and to No. 2 beneficially, with her consent mortgaged both to T. for £2,000. Afterwards C. asked M. to lend him £1,200 to pay off an existing mortgage on No. 1, and promised M. a transfer of the above mortgage, but did not disclose that No. 1 belonged to Mrs. C. or inform M. of the amount of, or the securities for, the first mortgage. M. advanced the £1,200, and C. applied £1,000 in paying to T. part of the £2,000 due to him. Later C. executed an equitable mortgage on No. 1 to M. to secure the £1,200.

Held, that, when M. advanced the £1,200 and the £1,000 was applied in payment to T., the charge on both the above properties to the extent of the £1,000 paid to T. was kept alive in equity in favour of M., but so as not to prejudice the rights of T. and Mrs. C.

Patten v. Bond, 37 W. R. 373, followed.

Held, also, that M. did not lose the benefit of such charge by taking the equitable mortgage executed by C. on No. 1, the charge thereby given not operating as a release or extinguishment of the prior charge, and there being no reason for presuming merger of the securities.

There is no merger at law, even of a lower in a higher security, if the remedy given by the latter is not co-extensive with that given by the former.—CHETWYND v. ALLEN, Ch.D. Romer, J., 200; [1899] 1 Ch. 353; 68 L. J. Ch. 160; 80 L. T. 110.

6. Personal property—Statutes of Limitations—Equitable mortgagee of shares in a limited company—Foreclosure—Statute-barred debt—21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 3—3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 34—37 & 38 Vict. c. 57.—One of two brothers (who had carried on business in partnership, and were entitled to shares in a limited company, the certificates of which were deposited with a bank to secure any overdraft on a current account) died in 1891, and the account was then closed, leaving a balance due to the bank. In 1898, no interest having in the meantime been paid and no acknowledgment of the debt given, the bank sued the surviving brother and the executor of the deceased brother to enforce their security; and, while the former defendant did not resist the claim, the latter objected that the debt was barred by analogy by the Statutes of Limitations.

Held, that the bank were entitled to the relief claimed, because there was no provision in any Statute of Limitations affecting the right of a mortgagee of personal property to enforce his security, and the mere fact that the personal claim could not be enforced did not deprive a mortgagee of his right to proceed against the property.—LONDON AND MIDLAND BANK v. MITCHELL, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 602; [1899] 2 Ch. 161.

7. Personalty—Covenant to make further advances—Further advances made by first mortgagee after notice of second mortgage—Priorities.—In 1895 W. W. mortgaged his interest in personal estate under a will to the plaintiff, but the plaintiff gave no notice of the mortgage to the trustees of the will until 1897. In 1896 W. W. mortgaged his interest to X. and Y. to secure a sum then advanced, and also further advances which X. and Y. covenanted to make. X. and Y. duly gave notice to the trustees of the will of this mortgage, but had no notice of the plaintiff's mortgage until the 15th of February, 1897. They made further advances pursuant to the covenant both before and after the 15th of February, 1897.

Held (reversing Kekewich, J., 46 W. R. 362), that the principle of Hopkinson v. Rolt, 9 W. R. 900, 9 H. L. Cas. 514, applied, notwithstanding that the further advances were made pursuant to a covenant, and that X. and Y. were entitled to priority over the plaintiff only in respect of such of the further advances as were made prior to the date when they received notice of the plaintiff's mortgage.—WEST v. WILLIAMS, C.A., 308; [1899] 1 Ch. 132; 68 L. J. Ch. 127; 79 L. T. 575.

8. Power of sale—Duty of mortgagee exercising—Purchase of mortgaged property by solicitor of mortgagee—Private contract—Validity of sale.—The executrix of a mortgagee, some months after his death, sold the property, which was reversionary, under the power of sale in the mortgage, to E., who had acted as solicitor for the mortgagee in regard to the mortgage and in regard to certain negotiations for selling the property and in proving the mortgagee's will. Notice of the sale was given to N., the owner of the equity of redemption. N. thereupon asserted that he was entitled to the property, but took no step until, more than nine years afterwards, the reversion fell into possession. He then brought an action against the executors of E. to redeem the mortgage and to have the property assigned to him on payment of what was due for principal, interest, and costs.

Held, that, the sale being bonâ fide and a sufficient price having been paid, there was no ground for saying the transaction was null and void, and, assuming that it was voidable, there was no ground of which the plaintiff could avail himself for avoiding it.

The rules for a mortgagee exercising his power of sale laid down in Farrar v. Farrars (Limited), 37 W. R. 196, 40 Ch. D. 395, and in Kennedy v. De Trafford, 45 W. R. 671, [1897] A. C. 180, considered and applied.—NUTT v. EASTON, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 430; [1899] 1 Ch. 873; 68 L J. Ch. 367; 80 L. T. 353.

9. Public-house — Goodwill — Locke - King's Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 113).—On a mortgage of a public-house the goodwill is not included unless expressly mentioned.—BENNETT, RE, CLARKE v. WHITE, Ch D. North, J., 406; [1899] 1 Ch. 316; 68 L. J. Ch. 104.

10. Real estate—Equitable sub-mortgage by deposit —Priority—Notice—Equitable sub-mortgagees of land. —An equitable sub-mortgage by deposit of the original mortgage deeds of real estate confers on the equitable sub-mortgagees an interest in the land mortgaged, and, consequently, the doctrine of obtaining priority by the giving of prior notice, does not apply in such case.

In re Richards, Humber v. Richards, 39 W. R. 186, 45 Ch. D. 589, considered and followed.—HOPKINS v. HEMSWORTH, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 26; [1898] 2 Ch. 347.

11. Realty and personalty—Indivisible security—Right to redeem realty barred—No right to redeem personalty—Real Property Limitation Acts, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27), s. 40; and 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 57), s. 8.—Where by a mortgage deed realty and a policy of insurance were conveyed and assigned respectively to the mortgagee as one indivisible security for the mortgage debt and subject to one and the same proviso for redemption, then, when the mortgagor's right to redeem the realty has been barred by the Statute of Limitations, his right to redeem the policy is also gone, because the security being one and indivisible, he cannot redeem part without redeeming the whole.

The Statutes of Limitations which refer to legal interests in realty, although applicable by analogy to equitable interests in realty, cannot be applied by analogy to property of an entirely different nature—viz., to personalty.—CHARTER v. WATSON, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 250; [1899] 1 Ch. 175; 68 L. J. Ch. 1; 79 L. T. 440.

12. Receiver—Appointment by mortgagee of receiver —Extent of agency—Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 24—Management of business—Payment of mortgagor's debts—Statute of Limitations.—A receiver appointed under the terms of a power in a mortgage deed which extends the powers conferred by the Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 24, to manage and carry on a business, is authorized to pay business debts of the mortgagor. This authority is not affected by the death of the mortgagor, and payment by the receiver of an instalment of a business debt contracted by the mortgagor operates as an acknowledgment of the whole debt by the executrix of the mortgagor, and prevents time running under the Statute of Limitations.

Decision of Byrne, J., ante, p. 174, affirmed.

Whether a receiver having no powers except those conferred on him by section 24 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, could pay off an unsecured debt, quære. —HALE, RE, LILLEY v. FOAD, C.A., 579; [1899] 2 Ch. 107; 68 L. J. Ch. 517; 80 L. T. 827.

13. Redemption—Collateral advantage — Covenant for payment of rents to mortgagee after time for payment of last instalment of principal—Notice to pay off —Tender after notice—Withdrawal of notice.—There is no rule that a mortgagee may not stipulate for a collateral advantage, so that such advantage be fair and reasonable, and so that it do not prevent redemption on payment of principal, interest, and costs.

A provision in a mortgage which has the effect of preventing redemption on payment of principal, interest, and costs, in accordance with the bargain for payment thereof, is invalid, and cannot enable the mortgagee to maintain any action, whether in equity or at law.

A covenant in a mortgage of leaseholds for years, that the mortgagor would, during the residue of the leasehold term, notwithstanding that all principal moneys and interest might have been paid, pay to the mortgagee one-third of the net profit rent, with provisions for continuing the relative positions of mortgagor and mortgagee, and for continuing the mortgage for the purpose of securing the one-third,

Held, to be void as operating to prevent redemption.

A mortgagee who had given the mortgagor notice to pay off the principal moneys and interest owing on the mortgage,

Held, not entitled to withdraw the notice without the consent of the mortgagor.—SANTLEY v. WILDE, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 297; [1899] 1 Ch. 747; 80 L. T. 154.

14. Redemption—Collateral advantage to mortgagee—Restrictive covenant—Injunction.—A mortgagor can always redeem on payment of principal, interest, and costs, and any bargain which is unconscionable will not be enforced; but a collateral agreement giving the mortgagee some collateral advantage, provided it is not unconscionable and does not clog the equity of redemption, is not invalid.

Jennings v. Ward, 2 Vern. 520, and In re Edwards' Estate, 11 Ir. Ch. Rep. 367, discussed and explained.

The defendant, being the owner of a public-house, mortgaged it to the plaintiff, with a proviso that the loan should continue for five years, and covenanted during the continuance of the security not to sell on the premises malt liquors other than those supplied by the plaintiff.

Held, that such a covenant was valid, and ought to be enforced by injunction.—BIGGS v. HODDINOTT, C.A., 84; [1898] 2 Ch. 307; 79 L. T. 201.

15. Redemption — Consolidation — Right of sole mortgagee to consolidate prior mortgage vested in him jointly with another.—The right to consolidate two mortgages arises when the title of the mortgagees in respect to each mortgage can be shown to be vested in one and the same hand, and this fact must be established to bring into operation the doctrine of consolidation; consequently, in the case of a mortgage of freehold hereditaments in which A. and another were mortgagees advancing money on a joint account, and a second mortgage of the same hereditaments and certain leasehold premises in which A. was sole mortgagee, although there is a possibility of the mortgages becoming vested in one and the same hand, namely, in A. upon his surviving his co-mortgagee, and notwithstanding the fact that A. could give a good receipt for the moneys secured on both mortgages, the doctrine of consolidation does not apply.—RILEY v. HALL, Ch.D. Stirling, J.; 79 L. T. 244.

16. Transfer—Notice to mortgagor—Omission to give—Negligence—Collusive sale by mortgagor and mortgagee—Satisfaction of mortgage.—The doctrine of Williams v. Sorrell, 4 Ves. 389, and Norrish v. Marshall, 5 Mad. 475, is not applicable as against a transferee of a mortgage where there has been collusion between mortgagor and mortgagee to pay the debt to the mortgagee.

W. having purchased and mortgaged to D., his vendor, certain land, built houses thereon and sold the houses to the plaintiff. Prior to the sale D. transferred the mortgage to the defendant. The conveyance to the plaintiff, to which both W. and D. were parties, recited (inter alia) that D., being seised for an unencumbered estate in fee simple in possession, agreed to sell to W. for £100, but that no conveyance had been executed, which recital was false to the knowledge of W. The purchase-money was paid to D., who retained a sum for principal, interest, and costs, but it was not shown to the satisfaction of the court how the sum was arrived at. The plaintiff had not actual notice of the defendant's security, and W. had not had notice of the transfer of the mortgage given him by the defendant, and denied knowledge of the transfer. D., who had been employed by the defendant to collect the interest on the defendant's mortgage, after paying interest on the mortgage for some years to the defendant, absconded, and nothing could be recovered from him.

Held, that, although payment-off of the mortgage debt to the mortgagee by a mortgagor after, but without notice of, a transfer must, in the absence of collusion, be allowed to the mortgagor as against the transferee, as settled by the above-named cases, this doctrine ought not to be extended to a case where the money which was said to have been paid in satisfaction of the mortgage was part of the purchase-money procured by a false recital in the conveyance to the purchaser to the effect that there was not and never had been any mortgage; that the case must be treated as one of collusion between W. and D. to obtain the purchase-money by means of false recitals; and therefore that the retention of part of the purchase-money by D. was not equivalent to payment-off of any part of the mortgage.—DIXON v. WINCH, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 620.

17. Undue influence—Presumption of—Parent and child—Absence of independent advice—Advance secured to father in embarrassed circumstances.—In 1878 a widower, who was living with his four daughters, two of whom had recently attained twenty-one years of age and two were minors, was in embarrassed circumstances. He had mortgaged the life interest to which he was entitled under a certain will, and, his affairs having become more involved, bankruptcy proceedings were threatened. The eldest of the daughters, then about twenty-two years old, became acquainted with the circumstances, and in order to save her father from being adjudicated a bankrupt she was induced to mortgage her reversionary interest under the same will for the purpose of raising some money to pay his debts. She had no independent legal advice in the transaction. The mortgage was prepared by her father's solicitors, one of the firm being also one of the mortgagees. The mortgage was prepared upon the father's instructions alone before the solicitors had any interview with the daughter. The same solicitors also acted for the mortgagees. In 1881 the daughter became of unsound mind, and had ever since remained in that condition.

Upon the direction of the Master in Lunacy an action was brought on behalf of the daughter against A., the survivor of the mortgagees, and her father to set aside the mortgage of her reversionary interest on the ground of undue influence. The father died after the commencement of the action.

Held (dissentiente Williams, L.J.), that the transaction was set in motion by the father and was carried out by his influence over his daughter; that A., the mortgagee, had notice of the true position of affairs at the time of the mortgage; that A. could not therefore be regarded as a lender for value without notice; and that consequently the deed must be set aside on the principle established by cases such as Archer v. Hudson, 7 Beav. 551, at p. 560, and Wright v. Vanderplank, 2 K. & J. 1, 8 De G. M. & G. 133.

Bainbrigge v. Browne, 18 Ch. D. 188, distinguished on the ground that there the lenders had independent solicitors and had no notice of the facts.—DE WITTE v. ADDISON, C.A.; 80 L. T. 207.

See also Bill of Sale, 1; Inland Revenue, 31, 32; Landlord and Tenant, 20; Limitation Statutes, 7; Practice, 19; Settlement, 5; Trustee, 9.

NATAL, LAW of:—

1. Dolus malus—Priority of unregistered transfer—Registered transfer set aside.—In a suit against the executor dative of a deceased registered owner of lands in Natal and his transferee to set aside the transfer, it appeared that the plaintiff had taken a transfer from the owner in his lifetime, paid the purchase-money, and received the title-deeds, but had omitted to complete registration, though he had placed a resident agent in possession and management. It also appeared that the defendants had obtained orders from the court for delivery of certified copies of such title-deeds as having been lost, and for sale by the executor dative by private contract, concealing the fact that the occupier of the lands held under an alleged lawful possession which might possibly be accompanied by possession of the title-deeds, and thereafter effected and registered their transfer.

Held, that this constituted dolus malus within the meaning of Roman-Dutch law; that the said transfer must be set aside; and that the plaintiff had a locus standi to maintain the suit.—CROWLY v. BERGTHEIL, P.C.; [1899] A. C. 374; 68 L. J. P. C. 81; 80 L. T. 428.

2. Practice—Appeal—Right of—Licensing officer—Jurisdiction of Supreme Court—Law 18 of 1897, ss. 5 and 6—Construction.—Under Natal Law 18 of 1897, ss. 5 and 6, an appeal lies to the town council alone from a decision of its licensing officer.

No appeal lies from the decision of the town council. A summons for a writ of review thereof by the Supreme Court issued under Law 39 of 1896, s. 8, cannot in appeal be treated as for a writ of certiorari contrary to the plain intention of the parties and of the court below.—VAUDA v. NEWCASTLE CORPORATION, P.C.; [1899] A. C. 246; 68 L. J. P. C. 39; 79 L. T. 600.

NEGLIGENCE:—

1. Injury causing death—Alien of British subject—Cause of action outside jurisdiction—Fatal Accidents Acts, 1846 and 1864 (9 & 10 Vict. c. 93; 27 & 28

Vict. c. 95).—The provisions of the Fatal Accidents Acts, 1846 and 1864, by which damages can be recovered for death caused by negligence, do not apply for the benefit of aliens abroad, and therefore the representative of an alien whose death has been caused by the negligence of a British subject, outside the jurisdiction of the court, cannot maintain an action to recover damages in respect of the death.—ADAM v. BRITISH AND FOREIGN STEAMSHIP CO., Q.B.D.; [1898] 2 Q. B. 430; 79 L. T. 31.

2. Principal and agent—Contractor—Dangerous work on highway—Liability of principal for negligence of contractor.—The defendants were engaged in laying down wires in tubes under the pavement of a street. After the wires were laid the connections between the tubes were made by a plumber under a contract with the defendants, whereby he agreed to do the work to the satisfaction of the foreman in charge at a fixed sum per connection, the plumber to supply the necessary men and materials. The soldering material used for making the connections was melted in an iron pot on the foot pavement, and it was necessary, for the purposes of the work, to obtain a flare from a benzoline lamp, which was done by applying heat to the lamp. To obtain the flare the plumber's man plunged the lamp into the molten solder (this being a usual, proper, and necessary operation with a lamp in good order), when, in consequence of the safety-valve being out of order, the lamp exploded, and molten solder flew up and injured the plaintiff, who was passing by. The evidence was conflicting as to whether one of the defendants' men was assisting the plumber's man in the work.

In an action in the county court to recover damages for the negligence of the plumber's man in plunging a defective lamp into the metal, the judge found that the defendants had in substance the control of and supervised the work which the plumber did; that the plumber was in the position of a servant; and that the defendants were liable.

Held, that the judgment of the county court judge must be affirmed, because there was evidence that the work was being jointly executed by the defendants and the plumber, and that, therefore, the defendants were liable for the negligence of the plumber's man; and, further, assuming that the plumber was an independant contractor, that the defendants were executing on a highway works likely to cause danger to the public unless precautions were taken, and were, therefore, liable for the negligence of the contractor's workman in the execution of the works, such negligence not being a casual or collateral act of negligence.

Decision of the Divisional Court (ante, p. 203, [1899] 1 Q. B. 221) reversed.—HOLLIDAY v. NATIONAL TELEPHONE CO., C.A., 658.

3. Principal and agent—Contractor—Paving road—Liability of local authority—Practice—Payment into court by one defendant—Verdict against both for smaller sum—Ord. 22, rr. 1, 6.—A district council employed a contractor to make up a road, which was being used by the public, under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875. In the course of the work the contractor negligently left a heap of earth unfenced and unlighted on the road, over which one of the public, while passing along the road at night, fell and was injured. In an action against the district council and the contractor to recover damages for the personal injuries so sustained, Held, that as the work which the contractor was employed to do would, unless precautions were taken, cause danger to the public passing along the road, an obligation was thrown upon the district council to see that the necessary precautions were taken, and they were therefore liable for the negligence of their contractor in not taking proper precautions, such negligence not being merely a casual or collateral act of negligence.

The defendants delivered separate defences, both denying liability. The contractor, with a denial of liability, paid £75 into court. The district council did not pay money into court, but pleaded that their co-defendant, while denying liability, had paid £75 into court, and that sum was sufficient to satisfy the plaintiff's claim. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff for £50.

Held, that as the district council had not paid money into court, the plaintiff was entitled to judgment against them; but, as the £50 had been recovered from their co-defendant, the judgment must be limited to costs.

Judgment of Bruce, J., [1898] 2 Q. B. 212, affirmed.—PENNY v. WIMBLEDON URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL, C.A., 565; [1899] 2 Q. B. 72; 68 L. J. Q. B. 704; 80 L. T. 615.

4. Ship—Charterer—Liability of, for defective condition of ship—Breach of duty.—The defendant chartered for a single voyage a vessel which was at the time at sea and in ballast. The charter-party declared that she was in every way fit for the service, and provided that she should be so maintained by the owners. On the afternoon of the 5th of April the vessel was put at the defendant's disposal in dock, and two hours afterwards the loading began, the defendant having contracted with a stevedore for the purpose who had engaged the plaintiff amongst others to carry out the work. Fifteen minutes later the plaintiff, in the course of his work, had to descend a ladder leading into the hold. It came adrift, and the plaintiff fell, sustaining injuries for which he sued the defendant.

Held, that the defendant was liable to the plaintiff, since it was his duty under the circumstances to make some inspection of the vessel before allowing the stevedore and his men to go on board her, and since the slightest inspection would have revealed the defective state of the ladder.—MARNEY v. SCOTT, Q.B.D., 666; [1899] 1 Q. B. 986; 68 L. J. Q. B. 736.

See also Landlord and Tenant, 18; Master and Servant, 2, 30; Mortgage, 16; Principal and Agent, 2.

NEWFOUNDLAND, LAW of:—

*Bank—Priority of Crown debts—*58 Vict. c. 3—Debts due to boards of education—Education Acts of 1892 and 1893.—Newfoundland Act 58 Vict. c. 3, passed for the winding-up and liquidation of a bank, provided that priority be given to all debts and claims due to the Crown or to the Government or revenues of the colony.

Held, that balances in the books of the bank to the credit of the various boards of education in the colony were not such debts and claims as aforesaid. It appeared that the boards were not constituted by the Education Acts of 1892 and 1893 mere agents of the Government, but had a discretionary power, independent of the Government, in expending such balances.—FOX v. NEWFOUNDLAND GOVERNMENT, P.C.; [1898] A. C. 667.

NEW SOUTH WALES, LAW of:—

1. Civil servant—Civil Service Act, 1884 (48 Vict. No. 24), ss. 10, 46—Abolition of office—Compensation.—Although New South Wales "Civil Service Act, 1884," deprives the Crown of its right to dismiss its civil servants summarily without following the procedure prescribed therein, yet it does not take away the right of the Crown to abolish a civil office.

Held, that the holder of an abolished office, unless entitled to a superannuation allowance under the Act of 1884, is not by the true construction of sections 10 and 46 entitled as for breach of contract to any other compensation. It is at the option of the Government whether he should be offered an equivalent office.—YOUNG v. WALLER, P.C.; [1898] A. C. 661.

2. Crown Lands Acts, 1884 (48 Vict. No. 18), s. 102; 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. No. 18), ss. 10, 11, 13—Application for additional conditional purchase—Respondent barred under one Act, in time under the other.—Under the Crown Lands Act, 1884, the land in suit was reserved for a public purpose by notification on the 4th of July, 1896.

On the 9th of January, 1897, the notification was revoked, and it was notified in the Gazette of that day that it was set apart for homestead selections under sections 10 and 13 of the Crown Lands Act of 1895.

Held, that the respondent's application on the 11th of February, 1897, to take the land as an additional conditional purchase, though within the forty days of grace prescribed by section 11 of the later Act, was nevertheless barred as having been made before the expiry of the sixty days' delay prescribed by section 102 of the Act of 1884.

Colles v. Minister of Lands, [1899] A. C. 90, followed.—MINISTER FOR LANDS v. HARRINGTON, P.C. [1899] A. C. 408; 68 L. J. P. C. 60; 80 L. T. 604.

3. Crown Lands Acts—Reference by Land Appeal Court to Supreme Court—Effect of decision.—In a suit by the respondent against the appellant to recover certain lands, it appeared that in an appeal to the Land Court to which the respondent and the Minister for Lands were parties, and of which the appellant had notice as a party interested, a reference was made to the Supreme Court, which decided that at the date of the appellant's application for them the lands were not Crown lands, and therefore not open for selection.

Held, that this decision was conclusive, and could not be reopened.—GARNSEY v. FLOOD, P.C.; [1898] A. C. 687.

4. Crown Lands Acts—Resumed area—Leasehold area—Leasehold area—Crown Lands Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. No. 18), ss. 5, 11.—Under section 5 of the Crown Lands Act, 1895, leasehold area becomes resumed area after notification to that effect in the Gazette. A grant to a tenant on the expiry of his lease of a preferential occupation licence in regard to his holding does not under the Crown Lands Acts change its character to that of a resumed area. Nor does a Gazette announcement of such licence operate as a notice that the area affected has been resumed.

Held, accordingly, that the appellant had no title to apply before notification under section 5 for a conditional lease of land held under a licence; and that section 11 of the same Act (which only saves existing rights) did not avail him.—COLLESS v. MINISTER FOR LANDS, P.C.; [1899] A. C. 90; 68 L. J. P. C. 9; 79 L. T. 505.

5. Income tax—Taxable income—Mortgages—Land and Income Tax Assessment Act, 1895 (59 Vict. No. 15), ss. 27, 28, sub-section 1—Construction.—Under the New South Wales Land and Income Tax Assessment Act, 1895, s. 27, the taxable amount of the respondent's income was limited to the amount of its income derived from mortgages; under section 28, sub-section 1, certain expenses incurred by the taxpayer "in the production of his income" were to be deducted.

Held, that by the true construction of the sub-section the respondent was entitled to deduct all expenses incurred in the production, not merely of its mortgage income, but of its income as a whole. —COMMISSIONERS OF TAXATION v. TEECE, P.C.; [1899] A. C. 254; 79 L. T. 601.

6. Practice—Appeal from interim injunction—Trespass—New South Wales Mining on Private Lands Act, 1894 (57 Vict. No. 32), ss. 8, 13—Gold lease application.—Appeals from interlocutory injunctions, of an essentially temporary kind, will not be encouraged.

Where an interim injunction had been granted restraining the appellant from trespassing or mining upon land covered by the private gold lease application of the respondent, who under section 8 of the New South Wales Mining on Private Lands Act, 1894, had obtained a miner's right and authority, and under section 13 had made application not yet granted at date of suit for a twenty years' lease,

Held, that the respondent, having a definite statutory right to apply for a lease, had a locus standi to apply for an injunction which should be maintained till discharged by the court.—RONDACE v. ZOBEL, P.C.; [1899] A. C. 258; 68 L. J. P. C. 47; 79 L. T. 602.

7. Probate duty paid under protest—Application for refund—Delay—Stamp Duties Acts of 1880 (44 Vict. No. 3) and 1886 (50 Vict. No. 10).—Where executors paid probate duty partly under mistake of law and partly with a reservation of their right to have the excess refunded without regard to delay, and it was subsequently decided in another case that no duty at all was payable as claimed,

Held, that an application made nine years later for a mandamus to state a case for the full court was not brought within a reasonable time and must be refused.—BROUGHTON v. COMMISSIONER OF STAMP DUTIES, P.C.; [1899] A. C. 251; 68 L. J. P. C. 36.

NEWSPAPER:—

Publication — Agreement not to "publish" — "Sporting" paper. — A newspaper is published when and where it is offered to the public, and may be published at more than one place at the same time. A newspaper which excludes racing and betting intelligence is not a "sporting paper" within the meaning of an agreement framed to protect the copyright of papers specially connected with horse-racing.—MCFARLANE v. HULTON & CO., Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 507; [1899] 1 Ch. 884; 68 L. J. Ch. 408; 80 L. T. 486.

NEW ZEALAND, LAW of:—

Poututu Jurisdiction Act, 1889 (53 Vict. No. 7)—Effect of proceedings in the Validation Court—Native Land Courts Acts, 1886 and 1888 (50 Vict. No. 24), ss. 75, 78; (52 Vict. No. 37), s. 24—Jurisdiction to rehear—Right of appeal.—The presumption is that a subsequent general enactment is not intended to interfere with a special enactment, unless the intention so to do is very clearly manifested.

Held, that current proceedings in the Native Land Court under a specially enabling Act called the New Zealand Poututu Jurisdiction Act, 1889, were not stayed by the commencement of proceedings in the Validation Court; notwithstanding the general provision contained in the Act establishing the latter court to the effect that commencement of proceedings therein shall operate as a stay of proceedings in any other court in respect of the same matters,

Held, also, that the jurisdiction to rehear—that is, to entertain an appeal—given by the Native Land Courts Acts of 1886 and 1888 is not confined to cases where the title to particular land has been the only question decided by the court of first instance; but extends to cases where the decision is embodied in the same decree with other matters not of an appealable nature.

Under the special Poututu Act orders as to title to land are also appealable in the same way; and held accordingly that the appellant was entitled thereunder to a rehearing of judgments concerning the title to Poututu lands, and that the Native Land Court had jurisdiction to grant such rehearing, proceedings therein not being stated by the respondents' commencement of proceedings in the Validation Court.—BARKER v. EDGER, P.C.; [1898] A. C. 748; 79 L. T. 151.

See also Charity, 5.

NUISANCE:—

Injunction — Gas company — Statutory powers— Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 15), s. 29—Gasworks Clauses Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 41), s. 9.—A gas company was authorized by its special Acts (which incorporated the Gasworks Clauses Acts, 1847 and 1871), to purchase certain land and to erect gasholders thereon; these Acts contained no provision for compensation to persons injuriously affected thereby.

Held, that the gas company was not thereby entitled to erect works in such a way as to interfere with the rights of the owner of the adjoining land to light and support.

Decision of North, J. (ante, p. 222), affirmed.—JORDESON v. SUTTON, &c., GAS CO., C.A.; 68 L. J. Ch. 457; 80 L. T. 815.

See also Local Government, 14, 16; Trade Union, 2.

NULLUM TEMPUS ACT:—

New South Wales—Construction of statute—Nullum Tempus Act (9 Geo. 3, c. 16).—The English Nullum Tempus Act is in force in the colony of New South Wales, and applies to land which has never been granted out or dealt with by the Crown.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL FOR NEW SOUTH WALES v. LOVE, P.C., 81; [1898] A. C. 679.

PARTITION:—

Practice—Judgment—Expenditure in improvements. —Minutes of judgment in a partition action directing an account and inquiry as to expenditure in permanent improvements.—WILLIAMS v. WILLIAMS, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 68 L. J. Ch. 528

PARTNERSHIP:—

1. Assets—Deposit of title-deeds by partner to secure partnership debt—Devise of real estate—Sufficiency of partnership assets to pay debts in full—Real Estate Charges (Locke-King's) Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 113), s. 1.—A testator who was a partner in a firm of shipbuilders had deposited at a bank the title-deeds of a real estate belonging to himself to secure the partnership overdraft. By his will he specifically devised the real estate. The partnership assets were, at the testator's death, sufficient to pay the firm's debts.

Held, affirming Romer, J. (46 W. R. 478), that the charge only extended to the debts of the partnership, and that, as the partnership assets were sufficient to pay these, no part thereof was a charge on the real estate of the testator comprised in the memorandum of charge.—RITSON, RE, RITSON v. RITSON, C.A., 213; [1899] 1 Ch. 128; 68 L. J. Ch. 77; 79 L. T. 455.

2. Sale of business to surviving partner—"Effects and securities"—Goodwill.—Co-partners carried on business under the style of L. & D. until 1876, when L. died. D. then entered into a partnership with M., under articles which, inter alia, provided that the business should be carried on under the old style of L. & D., and that in the event of the decease of either partner the survivor might purchase the whole business, and for such purpose a general account of the firm's property should be made, including all the "effects and securities," and the value thereof should be calculated as at the date of such decease.

Upon the death of D., the parties interested appointed the same person to be arbitrator and appraiser, and this person stated a special case to the court under section 19 of the Arbitration Act, 1889, for a decision as to whether he ought to include the goodwill of the firm in his valuation, and, if so, what was the proper footing on which to value it.

Held, that the goodwill ought to be included in the valuation, and that it ought to be valued on the footing that, if it were sold, the surviving partner would be at liberty to carry on a rival business, but would not have the right to solicit customers of the old firm, or carry on business under the style of the old firm.

The law with regard to the disposal of goodwill on the dissolution of a partnership, and as to surviving or continuing partner's right to set up a rival business, discussed and explained.—DAVID & MATTHEWS' ARBITRATION, RE, Ch.D. Romer, J., 313; [1899] 1 Ch. 378; 68 L. J. Ch. 185; 80 L. T. 75.

See also Bankruptcy, 25, 26; Practice, 25.

PATENT:—

1. Amendment—Pending action for infringement or proceeding for revocation—Disclaimer—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), ss. 18, 19, 20.—Where an action for infringement, or proceeding for the revocation, of a patent is pending, the patentee may not, under section 19 of the Patents, &c., Act of 1883, apply for leave to amend the patent by way of correction or explanation, except so far as such correction or explanation is incidental to a disclaimer strictly so called.—OWEN'S PATENT, RE, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 190; [1899] 1 Ch. 157; 68 L. J. Ch. 63; 79 L. T. 458.

2. Grant to two persons—Joint tenancy or tenancy in common—Survivorship—Agreement for sale—Covenant for validity—Joint or several—Death of one grantee.—The grant of letters patent for a new invention to two persons, their executors, administrators, and assigns, in ordinary form, makes them joint tenants, and, upon the death of one, the rights upon the letters patent, if not previously severed, belong wholly to the survivor, the rule that a grant to A. and B. makes them joint tenants not being merely a rule of tenure or real property law.

A provision in an agreement for the sale of letters patent granted to two persons that an assignment should be executed, and should contain a covenant by the vendors that the letters patent are valid, cannot be enforced against the representatives of one of the vendors who has died after the agreement and before assignment, nor will such representatives be liable for damages for breach of the agreement in this respect.—NATIONAL COMPANY OF ELECTRICITY DISTRIBUTION (LIMITED) v. GIBBS, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 518; 68 L. J. Ch. 503; 80 L. T. 524.

3. Infringement — Repairs — Agent of plaintiff causing infringement by requesting article to be made. —The sale of a patented article implies a licence to do simple repairs during the life of the article, but does not authorize a reconstruction of the article, making up precisely the combination which is the subject of the letters patent.

Position of defendant discussed when article is made at request of plaintiff's agent.

Kelly v. Batchelar, 10 Rep. Pat. Cas. 289, distinguished.—DUNLOP PNEUMATIC TYRE CO., v. NEAL, Ch.D. North, J., 632; [1899] 1 Ch. 807; 68 L. J. Ch. 378; 80 L. T. 746.

4. Infringement — Threat of legal proceedings— Injunction—Breach — Contempt of court — Costs — Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), s. 32.—C., trading as M. & Co., had been restrained by injunction—in an action brought by E. against M. & Co.—from publishing, either verbally or otherwise, any statement to the effect that an injunction had been granted against E. restraining him from infringing certain letters patent, and also from threatening E. or any of E.'s customers with any legal proceedings or liability in respect of the manufacture, sale, or purchase of a certain machine. After the order M. & Co. circulated amongst E.'s customers a pamphlet prepared by the A. B. Co., which stated in effect that M. & Co. were the special agents of the A. B. Co., who were the exclusive makers of the machine in question under the licence of the patentee, and who intended to prosecute all infringers of their patents.

On motion to commit C. to prison for contempt of court for a breach of the injunction, Romer, J., ordered C. to pay the costs of the motion. On appeal, Held, by Lindley, M.R., and Vaughan Williams, L.J. (dissentiente Chitty, L.J.), that the injunction was not so plainly worded to prohibit what C. had done, as to justify a judicial decision that a breach of the injunction had been committed.

Per Lindley, M.R.—The court will not strain the language of an injunction even to meet a case which would have been prohibited if foreseen.—ELLAM v. MARTYN, C.A., 212; 68 L. J. Ch. 123; 79 L. T. 510.

5. Licence — Agreement for sale — Assignment — Registration — Title — Priority — Notice — Equitable rights—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), ss. 23, 87.—By an agreement in writing W., the registered proprietor of a patent, agreed for value to assign it to the plaintiffs. Before that agreement had been registered W. granted a licence to use the patent to S., who forthwith registered the licence. S., before he took his licence, was informed by W. of the agreement with the plaintiffs, which W. stated to be no longer in force. Subsequently the plaintiffs registered their agreement and took an assignment, which they duly registered.

Held, affirming the decision of Kekewich, J. (46 W. R. 567), that under the proviso in section 87 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883, S., having had before he took his licence express notice of the plaintiffs' agreement, could not assert against them his legal title by prior registration, and that the licence was void as against the plaintiffs.—NEW IXION TYRE AND CYCLE CO. v. SPILSBURY, C.A.; [1898] 2 Ch. 484; 79 L. T. 229.

6. Opposition to grant—Right to be heard as opponent — Person having no interest — Application by comptroller to Attorney - General for directions— Mandamus to comptroller—Patents, &c., Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), ss. 11, 95—Patents, &c., Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 50), s. 4.—Opposition to the grant of a patent under section 11 of the Patents, &c., Act, 1883, on the ground that the invention has been patented in this country on an application of prior date, can only be made by a person having an interest in the earlier patent.

Where, on an application by the Comptroller of Patents to the Attorney-General for directions in a matter of doubt or difficulty under section 95 of the Patents, &c., Act, 1883, the Attorney-General directs that the comptroller shall not hear a particular person as an opponent to the granting of a patent, the court will not grant a mandamus to the comptroller to hear such person.—REG. v. COMPTROLLER-GENERAL OF PATENTS, C.A., 567; [1899] 1 Q. B. 909; 68 L. J. Q. B. 568; 80 L. T. 777.

7. Particulars of objections—Shorthand writer's transcript of evidence—Costs—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), s. 29, sub-section 6.—In patent actions the settled practice is that certificates under section 29, sub-section 6, of the Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883, are always granted so as to secure to the party delivering the particulars the costs of everything reasonably and properly inserted in them, although he may fail to prove the specific objection under which the detailed particulars may be ranged. —CASTNER-KELLNER ALKALI CO. (LIMITED) v. COMMERCIAL, &c. (LIMITED), C.A., 534; [1899] 1 Ch. 803; 68 L. J. Ch. 402; 80 L. T. 476.

8. Prolongation — Five years' prolongation — Inadequate remuneration.—Where an invention was of conspicuous merit, and it appeared that as regards its application to one of its purposes the patentee had received for an exclusive licence to use it certain shares in companies formed for that purpose, the value of which shares was largely dependent on the prolongation of the patent, and that with respect to its application to all other purposes the patentee, who had done his best to push his invention, had received nothing at all if the accounts were made up on the basis of a reasonable allowance to himself for his services in working his patents.

Held, that the patentee, who had fairly kept and presented his accounts, should be allowed a five years' prolongation.—PARSONS' PATENT, RE, P.C.; [1898] A. C. 673.

9. Prolongation—Petition for—Novelty consisting in the combination—Absence of unusual merit—Losses referable to want of business skill.—Where letters patent had been granted for "improvements in steam generators," and it was shown that the invention consisted of the combination of various parts, all or most of which were admittedly not new at the date of the letters patent; an extension was refused in the absence of evidence that the invention was of unusual merit.

Where patentees had incurred losses, these cannot be regarded as evidence of inadequate remuneration if attributable to unskilfulness in conducting their business.—THORNEYCROFT'S PATENT, RE, P.C.; [1899] A. C. 415; 68 L. J. P. C. 68.

10. Registration—Conviction—Persons practising prior to passing of Act—"Right acquired"—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), s. 101—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 50), ss. 1, 27—Register of Patent Agents Rules, 1889—Patent Rules, 1890, r. 81

—Register of Patent Agents Rules, 1891, r. 1.—Section 1 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1899, sub-section 1, enacts that no person shall be entitled to describe himself as a patent agent unless he is registered as a patent agent in pursuance of the Act. Section 27 provides that nothing in the Act shall affect the validity of any "right acquired" before the commencement of the Act.

Held, that a person who had been practising as a patent agent and describing himself as such prior to the passing of the Act is not protected by section 27 from the operation of section 1, nor from the liability to pay the fees imposed by the Register of Patent Agents Rules, 1889, made in pursuance of the Act.

Held also, that the Register of Patent Agents Rules, 1889, are in force, because, assuming they were repealed by rule 81 of the Patent Rules, 1890, they were re-enacted by rule 1 of the Register of Patent Agents Rules, 1891.—STAREY v. GRAHAM, Q.B.D., 392; [1899] 1 Q. B. 405; 68 L. J. Q. B. 257; 80 L. T. 185.

See also Design.

PETROLEUM ACTS:—

Definition of petroleum—Composition containing petroleum—Petroleum Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 105), s. 3.—The term "petroleum," as used in the Petroleum Acts, is not confined to petroleum, or oils or products of petroleum in their simple state, but extends to a composition containing petroleum as one of its ingredients. — LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. HOLZAPFELS CO., Q.B.D., 622.

POOR LAW:—

1. Pauper lunatic — Expenses of maintenance—Arrears—Statute of Limitations (21 Jac. 1, c. 16).—W., a lunatic not so found, was maintained by the guardians of the S. Union in a pauper lunatic asylum from 1882 until her death in 1898. In 1894 W. became entitled to a share of a fund, and in 1895 a person was appointed to exercise the powers of a committee of W., but the fund was not in fact paid into court to the credit of W. until after W.'s death.

In 1895 the guardians gave notice to the Master in Lunacy of their claim in respect of the past and future maintenance of W.

After the death of W. this action was commenced by the guardians against the administratrix of W., claiming arrears of maintenance.

Held, that the expenses of maintenance was a debt of the lunatic, and that arrears of maintenance could only be recovered in respect of six years prior to the commencement of the action.

Stedman v. Hart, 2 W. R. 462, Kay 607, discussed.

In re Newbegin's Estate, 36 W. R. 69, 36 Ch. D. 477, followed.—WATSON, RE, STAMFORD UNION v. BARTLETT, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 359; [1899] 1 Ch. 72; 68 L. J. Ch. 21; 79 L. T. 462.

2. Rating — Assessment—Rateable value—Licensed house—Competition of brewers—"Tied" houses—6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 96, s. 1.—In assessing a licensed public-house to the poor rate, the fact that there is a great competition amongst brewers in the district to obtain the tenancy of such houses in order to sub-let them as "tied" houses ought not to be excluded from consideration so far as it shows the existence of such a demand as would necessarily increase the rent at which the premises might reasonably be expected to let, whether to brewers or others, on a tenancy from year to year; but the gross estimated rental ought not to be fixed at the special sum, in excess of the annual value obtainable in the market, which a brewer might be willing to give on the consideration, personal to himself, that he could make large profits by sub-letting the house as a "tied" house. — BRADFORD-ON-AVON UNION ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE v. WHITE, Q.B.D.; [1898] 2 Q. B. 630.

3. Rating—Exemption of building used exclusively for education of poor—Institution to board and instruct children—Liverpool Corporation Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. clxxxi.), s. 36.—By the Liverpool Corporation Act, 1893, s. 36, it is provided that no person shall be rated to the general rate in respect of any building used for the education of the poor exclusively.

Held, that an institution for the reception of pauper children from the age of two to sixteen years, sent by poor law guardians and others, where they were received, clothed, maintained, instructed, and provided with medical attendance, was not a building used for the education of the poor exclusively.—HADFIELD v. LIVERPOOL (MAYOR), Q.B.D.; 80 L. T. 566.

4. Rating—Non-payment—Issue of distress warrant—Right of appeal.—No appeal lies from the order of a magistrate directing a distress warrant to issue for non-payment of poor rates.—REG. v. LONDON JUSTICES, Q.B.D., 316; [1899] 1 Q. B. 532; 68 L. J. Q. B. 383; 80 L. T. 286.

5. Rating—Public-house—Evidence of advantageous situation and business done—Parochial Assessment Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will 4, c. 96), s. 1.—On an appeal by the occupier against an assessment of a public-house to a poor rate, an arbitrator, to whom the case was referred, and whose award was to be published in the form of a special case, found that the rents actually paid for other public-houses in the district furnished no criterion of the rent which would be paid for the appellant's house. He rejected evidence, which the respondents desired to give, by cross-examination of the appellant, of the amount of the weekly takings, but he admitted evidence as to the largeness of the business actually done, and as to the advantageous situation of the house for carrying on business.

Held, affirming the judgment of the Divisional Court, that the ordinary method of arriving at a valuation by comparison with the market value of other public-houses not being available, the method of arriving at the valuation of this house adopted by the arbitrator was correct.

Dodds v. South Shields Union, [1895] 2 Q. B. 133, distinguished.—CARTWRIGHT v. SCULCOATES UNION, C.A.; [1899] 1 Q. B. 667; 68 L. J. Q. B. 455; 80 L. T. 667.

6. Rating — Waterworks — Works not directly earning a profit in parish—Capital value, interest on—Cost of construction.—The Corporation of Liverpool were empowered by Act of Parliament to construct a reservoir and other works in a parish in Wales for the purposes of the supply of water to Liverpool. The construction of the reservoir and works involved the submersion of the sites of the parish church, vicarage, and schools, and likewise the stopping up and diversion of certain roads. The Act required the corporation to provide sites for and erect a new church, vicarage, and schools in substitution for those which would be submerged, and to make certain new roads and bridges which were necessary for the purposes of the before-mentioned diversion. The corporation carried out the works in conformity with the Act, provided the requisite new church, vicarage, and schools, and made the necessary new roads and bridges. The corporation, having been rated to a poor rate in respect of the reservoir and works, appeal to the quarter sessions against the rate. The sessions decided that, in estimating the capital value of the reservoir and works for the purpose of arriving at the rateable value, the amounts expended by the corporation in providing the new church, vicarage, and schools, and making the new roads and bridges, ought to be included as being part of the capital cost of the works.

Held (reversing the judgment of a Divisional Court), that there was nothing wrong in point of law in the decision of the sessions, which must therefore be affirmed.—LIVERPOOL CORPORATION v. LLANFYLLIN UNION. C.A.; [1899] 2 Q. B. 14; 68 L. J. Q. B. 762; 80 L. T. 667.

7. Relief—Unauthorized purpose—Strike—Wilful refusal to work—"Sudden and urgent necessity"—Poor Law Acts, 1834 and 1844—Poor Law Audit Act, 1848, s. 4—Vagrancy Act, 1824 (5 Geo. 4, c. 83), s. 3.—On the 31st of March, 1898, a large number of colliers in South Wales went out on strike, in consequence of a disagreement with their employers, as to the rate of wages. On the 11th of April the men were invited to resume work at a slight advance on their former rate of wages, but the bulk of them declined the offer and remained out on strike.

On the 26th of April the guardians of the M. T. Union passed a resolution, in consequence of the large number of able-bodied men applying for relief, to establish labour yards throughout the union wherever required. The yards remained open till the 6th of August, and it was estimated that upwards of £20,000 had been spent out of the rates in relieving able-bodied colliers so refusing to work, an amount largely in excess of the normal sum expended in relief.

The guardians' statutory powers were defined by two orders of October, 1870, made under the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1834. By the order of the 1st of October, 1870, able-bodied persons and their families, if objects of relief, were to be relieved wholly in the workhouse, except under special circumstances mentioned in the order, such as sudden and urgent necessity; and by the supplemental order of the 29th of October, if the guardians should depart in any particular instance from the regulations and within fifteen days after such departure should report the same and the grounds thereof to the Poor Law Board (now represented by the Local Government Board), and the board should approve of such departure, then the relief granted in such particular instance should, if otherwise lawful, not be deemed to be unlawful or be subject to be disallowed.

The guardians by several reports had reported to the Local Government Board all the particular instances in which relief was being granted to the persons employed at the labour yards, and the grounds for granting such relief, and the board had approved of the granting of the relief in all but one of the reports, which was not yet approved.

In an action by certain ratepayers claiming a declaration that the guardians had exceeded their statutory powers,

Held, (1) that the guardians were bound to give relief in urgent cases, even though their urgency might have arisen from the wilful refusal of the men to work, the proper course for the guardians in case of wilful persistence in such refusal being to prosecute under the Vagrancy Act, 1824 (5 Geo. 4, c. 83), s. 3; (2) that, generally speaking, while the court had jurisdiction in a proper case in an action at the instance of ratepayers to restrain guardians from applying the poor rates for unauthorized purposes, it was not proper for ratepayers objecting to a poor rate as excessive to come to the court by way of appeal against it and ask for an injunction, instead of going before the auditors appointed by the Local Government Board, and appealing therefrom as provided by the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1844; (3) that, as in the special circumstances of this case it was not proved that the guardians had relieved a single case not of sudden and urgent necessity which they were bound to relieve, the plaintiffs were not entitled to any assistance by way of declaration or otherwise; and (4) that the guardians had not disregarded the regulations contained in the orders made under the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1834; that none of the relief given by them was not "otherwise lawful" within the meaning of the words of the orders; and that there was such "sudden and urgent necessity" within the meaning of the orders, as would justify relief being given out of the workhouse.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. MERTHYR TYDVIL GUARDIANS, Ch.D. Romer, J.; 80 L. T. 618.

8. Settlement—Divided Parishes Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 61), s. 35—Derivative settlement.—An illegitimate pauper child whose mother had a derivative settlement, and who has never gained a settlement of its own, takes its own birth settlement.

Decision of the Court of Appeal affirmed.—PLYMOUTH UNION v. AXMINSTER UNION, H.L., 33; [1898] A. C. 586; 79 L. T. 4.

See also Justices, 6.

POWER:—

1. Appointment—Exercise of power—One-third to son of donee of power—One-sixth to each of the two daughters—No appointment of the remaining two-sixths—Will—"Wish them to pass directly to my said two daughters"—Son not to share in "unappointed parts."—A testator bequeathed £15,000 to trustees upon trust for J. B. for her life, and on her death in trust for her three children, H. B., J. W., and A. W., in such shares as J. B. should by will or codicil appoint, and in default of appointment in trust for her three children equally as tenants in common.

J. B., by a codicil to her will, appointed two-sixths of the fund in trust to pay the income to her son H. B. until he should assign, charge, or otherwise dispose thereof; and on such event happening, then in trust during his life, and after his death for his children (if any) as therein mentioned, and if no children in trust to be equally divided between all her children and grandchildren then living per capita; and she appointed one-sixth in trust for her daughter J. W. as therein mentioned, and one-sixth in trust for her daughter A. W. as therein mentioned, and declared as follows: "I make no appointment of the other two-sixth parts of the said sum of £15,000, as I wish them to pass directly to my said two daughters, so as to give them an immediate vested and disposable interest therein, and I also declare that neither my son nor his children (if any) shall take any share or interest in the said unappointed parts of the said trust funds."

Held, that the last mentioned two-sixth parts of the funds went as unappointed among the three children of J. B.—JACK, RE. JACK v. JACK, Ch.D. Romer, J.; [1899] 1 Ch. 374; 68 L. J. Ch. 188; 80 L. T. 321.

2. Special power of appointment—Exercise by will—"Give, bequeath, and appoint"—Bequests to persons not objects of power.—In determining whether a testator has exercised by will a power of appointment, the court will look at the will to discover therefrom evidence of the testator's intention, and if it finds therein a general expression of intention to exercise the power, it will not infer a contrary intention from such circumstances as bequests to persons not objects of the power.

A testatrix had, under her father's will, a power of appointment in favour of her husband. By her will she bequeathed certain legacies out of "my separate estate or out of the estate and effects over which I have any disposing power," and gave, bequeathed, and appointed all the residue of her estate and effects to her husband.

Held, that the power was exercised.—MILNER, RE, MILNER v. BRAY, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 369; [1899] 1 Ch. 563; 68 L. J. Ch. 255; 80 L. T. 151.

See also Married Women, 4; Settlement, 1.

PRACTICE:—

1. Appeal—Costs—Security—Appeal under Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37)—Ord. 58, r. 15.—The ordinary rule of the court that the poverty of the appellant is a reason for ordering security to be given for the costs of the appeal, extends to appeals under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.—HALL v. SNOWDEN (No. 1), C.A., 322; [1899] 1 Q. B. 593; 68 L. J. Q. B. 363; 80 L. T. 256.

2. Appeal—Costs—Special leave to appeal.—Special leave to appeal may be given on terms that the appellants should be liable to pay the respondent's costs in any event.—MONTREAL GAS CO. v. CADIEUX, MONTREAL GAS CO., EX PARTE, P.C.; [1898] A. C. 718.

3. Appeal from chambers—Court of Appeal—Matters of practice and procedure—Prohibition to county court—Judicature Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 16), s. 1, sub-section 4.—Where a judge at chambers has made an order either granting or refusing an application for a writ of prohibition to a county court, the appeal from such order lies to the Divisional Court, and not direct to the Court of Appeal.—WATSON v. PETTS (No. 1), C.A., 68; [1899] 1 Q. B. 54; 68 L. J. Q. B. 249; 79 L. T. 330.

4. Appeal — Interlocutory order — Leave—Jurisdiction—Liverpool Court of Passage—Court of Appeal—Liverpool Court of Passage Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 37), ss. 6, 9, 10.—Under sections 6 and 10 of the Liverpool Court of Passage Act, 1893, the presiding judge has power to give leave to appeal to the Court of Appeal from an interlocutory order made by him; and that power is not cut down by section 9 of the same statute.—HUNTER v. JACOBSON, C.A.; 80 L. T. 641.

5. Attachment—Corporation—Order on Disobedience—Enforcement by attachment of director—Service of order—Rules of the Supreme Court, ord. 42, r. 31.—Obedience to an order made against a corporation will not be enforced, under rule 31 of order 42, by the attachment of a director of the corporation unless the order has been served personally upon the director.—MCKROWN v. JOINT STOCK INSTITUTE (LIMITED), Ch.D. North, J.; [1899] 1 Ch. 671; 68 L. J. Ch. 390; 80 L. T. 641.

6. Costs—Appeal for costs—Costs in discretion of judge—Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 49—Costs of examination as to debtor's means and of garnishee proceedings—Rules of Supreme Court, 1883, ord. 42, rr. 32, 34; 45, r. 9.—The plaintiff, having obtained judgment and being unable to obtain payment of his debt, obtained, under ord. 42, r. 32, an order to have the debtor examined as to his means. The debtor on his examination admitted having a retiring pension and a balance at his bankers. The plaintiff then obtained a garnishee order against the bankers, and by that means recovered part of his debt. He then applied for his costs of the examination proceedings and of the garnishee proceedings. The master refused to make any order, on the ground, as was stated by affidavit, that the practice in the Queen's Bench Division was to treat such proceedings as a luxury, the costs of which the plaintiff could not throw on the defendant. The plaintiff appealed; the judge in chambers dismissed the appeal, as was stated, on the same ground, and refused leave to appeal. The plaintiff applied to the Court of Appeal, who gave leave, and he then appealed against the order in chambers.

Held, that as by the express terms of the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 49, no appeal will lie from any order as to costs which are left to the discretion of the court except by leave of the judge making such order, and the costs in question were, by the terms of ord. 42, r. 34, and ord. 45, r. 9, in the discretion of the judge, the appeal must be dismissed, though the court stated their inability to understand the practice alleged to exist in the Queen's Bench Division that examination of a debtor as to his means, and proceedings to attach debts due to him, were luxuries the costs of which the debtor ought not to be called on to pay.—ADLINGTON v. CONYNGHAM, C.A.; [1898] 2 Q. B. 492; 79 L. T. 232.

7. Costs—Infant defendant—Injunction. — Where an order had been made against an infant defendant granting a perpetual injunction restraining him from carrying on his business under a style calculated to lead the public to believe that it was in any way connected with the similar business of the plaintiff,

Held, that the order in also ordering the defendant to pay the costs was good.—WOOLF v. WOOLF, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 181; [1899] 1 Ch. 343; 68 L. J. Ch. 82; 79 L. T. 725.

8. Costs—Judgment by consent—False statement—Action to set aside judgment.—Where a consent judgment wrongfully obtained by means of a false statement has been set aside, the party who has got it set aside is entitled to recover back the costs he has paid in the former action.—STURROCK v. LITTLEJOHN, Q.B.D.; 68 L. J. Q. B. 165.

9. Costs—Probate action—Trustee—Notice to cross-examine witnesses only—Ord. 21, r. 18.—Where a defendant in a probate action has given notice that he desires only to cross-examine the witnesses to a will, the court will, in deciding the question of costs if it pronounces for the will, give weight in case of doubt to the fact that the defendant is a trustee and protecting the interests of the cestuis que trust.—PERRY v. DIXON, P.D. & Ad.D.; 80 L. T. 297.

10. Costs—Taxation—Employment of two counsel—Trustee—Hostile attack—Severance of defence.—A hostile attack being made in a creditor's administration action against one of two trustees and defendants, the attacked trustee was allowed to appear separately, and, the attack having substantially failed, was given his costs as between solicitor and client. The plaintiff had employed two counsel.

Held, that the attacked trustee was to be allowed his costs of employment of two counsel.—MADDOCK, RE, BUTT v. WRIGHT, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 684.

11. Costs—Taxation—Objections—Carrying in—Right to dispense with—Ord. 65, r. 27, sub-rr. 39, 41.—In taxing a bill of costs in an action where judgment on a counterclaim had been given for the plaintiff with costs, the master disallowed the whole of the costs incurred by the plaintiff in meeting the counterclaim upon the merits and in detail.

The plaintiff took out a summons to discharge the certificate of the master on the ground of misconstruction of principle, without having previously carried in objections to the taxation.

Held, that there was nothing in this case to prevent the ordinary rule as to carrying in objections from applying.—CRASKE v. WADE, C.A.; 80 L. T. 380.

12. Discovery — Privilege — Use of privileged document in former action—Production—R. S. C., ord. 31, r. 1.—Documents in their original nature privileged are liable to production if such use has been made of them that they have become publici juris, but not otherwise.

Accounts which had been prepared by a witness's solicitors for purposes of litigation were, in the course of cross-examination of the witness before an examiner, handed to the witness and admitted to be correct, but were not read out in court. The same accounts were subsequently made an exhibit to an affidavit read on a summons before a judge in chambers to compromise the action. On an application in a subsequent action to produce the accounts and copies of the witness's depositions, Held, that the accounts had never been effectually made public, and that the use made of them did not amount to a waiver of privilege, but that the witness's depositions had become public property and must be produced accordingly.—GOLDSTONE v. WILLIAMS, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 91; [1899] 1 Ch. 47; 68 L. J. Ch. 24; 79 L. T. 373.

13. Evidence — Ancient document in support of ancient possession—Act of ownership—Declaration by deceased person against interest—Admission by tenant as to title.—In an action brought to determine the title of certain land, the plaintiff sought to put in evidence an ancient document, dated 7th of May, 1659, which was found in his muniment room. The document was signed by M., who was a tenant of a predecessor in title of the defendant, and was attested. It stated that J. (who was a predecessor in title of the plaintiff) had been persuaded to stop all proceedings of law that he then had against M. for wilfully bringing of his sheep and milking of his cows in J.'s freehold land therein specified (which land formed part of the land in dispute) without leave, for which wilful trespass M. bound himself to pay 16s. costs, and that he would for the future keep his own and all other people's sheep and cattle from trespassing on the said ground to the utmost of his power. Byrne, J., held, on the authority of Papendick v. Bridgwater, (1855) 5 E. & B. 166, that the document was not admissible, and he decided the action in favour of the defendant.

Held, by the Court of Appeal, that this was an ancient document coming from the proper custody, which showed that a person in possession of land was vindicating his possession by bringing an action of trespass. The document, though not an act of ownership itself, was evidence of an act of ownership. Upon that ground it was admissible against anybody, on the principle of Malcolmson v. O'Dea, (1862) 10 H. L. C. 593. This document was admitted not as being an admission by the tenant of want of title, in which case it would be open to the objection that it could not be used against the reversioner, and would fall within the principle of Papendick v. Bridgwater, (1855) 5 E. & B. 166, but as evidence of the acts of ownership stated therein.

Decision of Byrne, J., reversed upon the question of evidence.—BLANDY-JENKINS v. EARL OF DUNRAVEN, C.A.; [1899] 2 Ch. 121.

14. Evidence — Information and belief — Interlocutory application—Irremediable damage—Admissibility.—A. and B. moved in two separate actions against a company for the appointment of a receiver and manager. B.'s solicitor filed an affidavit founded on information derived from an interview between him and one J. with a view to throw discredit on A. and secure the conduct of the litigation for B. B.'s solicitor swore that the statements were true to the best of his information and belief.

A.'s counsel objected to the affidavit being read.

Held, that as no irremediable damage would be caused by not allowing the affidavit to be read, and as J. lived near at hand and was willing to be sworn, the objection would be allowed as to so much of the affidavit as the solicitor swore to the best of his information and belief J. had stated.—ANTHONY BIRRELL, &c., CO., RE, DOIG v. ANTHONY BIRRELL, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; [1899] 2 Ch. 50; 68 L. J. Ch. 444; 80 L. T. 688.

15. Execution — High Court judgment — County court—Payment by instalments—Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62), s. 5.—A creditor who has obtained a judgment in the High Court and afterwards obtained from the county court judge an order for payment of the debt by instalments cannot put in motion the High Court procedure and issue execution without going to the county court judge and getting the order made by him discharged.

Jones v. Jenner, 4 W. R. 651, 25 L. J. Ex. 319, approved.

In re Ives, Ex parte Addington, 34 W. R. 593, 16 Q. B. D. 665, overruled.—MONTGOMERY v. DE BULMES, C.A., 22; [1898] 2 Q. B. 420.

16. Garnishee order, action upon—Judgment—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 42, r. 24; ord. 45, rr. 1, 2, 7; Appendix K., Form 40.—Though a garnishor who has not received payment from the garnishee, a limited company, is not thereby entitled to petition for a winding up, he can bring an action under order 14 on the garnishee order, and obtain a judgment against the garnishee which may be made the foundation of winding-up proceedings.

In re Combined Weighing and Advertising Machine Co., 38 W. R. 67, 43 Ch. D. 99, discussed.—PRITCHETT v. ENGLISH AND COLONIAL SYNDICATE (LIMITED), C.A., 577; 68 L. J. Q. B. 801.

17. Interpleader — Stakeholder — Bailee estopped from setting up jus tertii—R. S. C., ord. 57.—A bailee who is estopped from setting up the jus tertii may nevertheless be entitled to relief by way of interpleader. — MERSEY DOCKS AND HARBOUR BOARD, EX PARTE, C.A., 306; [1899] 1 Q. B. 546; 68 L. J. Q. B. 540; 80 L. T. 143.

18. Liquidated damages—Bond—Condition not to commit breach of injunction—Enumeration of prohibited acts—Condition depending on one event—R. S. C., ord. 14, r. 1.—A bond was executed by the defendant for the payment of £100 to the plaintiff. The condition of the bond was that if the defendant should at all times thereafter, in obedience to a perpetual injunction granted by the High Court of Justice, refrain from trespassing on the plaintiff's lands therein mentioned, or the walls, gates, or fences thereof, or inclosing the same, and from pulling down or removing or otherwise injuring the same, or inciting others to commit any such trespasses, the obligation should be void. The defendant committed a breach of the injunction.

Held, that the condition of the bond depended on one event only—namely, a breach of the injunction, and that the sum secured by the bond was a liquidated sum, to the recovery of which the procedure of ord. 14, r. 1, was applicable.—STRICKLAND v. WILLIAMS, C.A.; [1899] 1 Q. B. 382; 68 L. J. Q. B. 241; 80 L. T. 4.

19. Mortgage—Foreclosure—Claim for accounts and inquiries, foreclosure or sale—Foreclosure judgment in chambers—Summons for directions—Ord. 15, rr. 1, 2—Ord. 30, rr. 1, 2, 3.—An order for accounts and inquiries, foreclosure or sale, if made without objection on the hearing of a summons for directions under ord. 30 cannot subsequently be set aside solely on the ground of want of jurisdiction.

Dyott v. Nevile, W. N. 1887, p. 35, considered and applied.

Decision of Romer, J., affirmed.

Per Romer, J.: The court has jurisdiction to make an order for foreclosure in chambers on a summons under ord. 15.

Smith v. Davies, 28 Ch. D. 650, followed.

Whether there is any jurisdiction to make the usual order for accounts and inquiries, foreclosure or sale, on the hearing of a summons for directions under ord. 30, quære.—HORTON v. BOSSON, C.A.; 80 L. T. 435.

20. Parties—Action against two joint debtors—Judgment by consent against one defendant—Continuance of action against the other—Merger—Pleading.—If in an action brought against two joint debtors one of the two submits to judgment, the claim against the other is merged in the judgment, and the plaintiff cannot obtain a second judgment against the remaining defendant.

The rule in King v. Hoare, 13 M. & W. 494 (as explained by Bowen, L.J., in In re Hodgson, 34 W. R. 127, 31 Ch. D. 177), applied.—MACLEOD v. POWER. Ch.D. Bryne, J., 74; [1898] 2 Ch. 295; 79 L. T. 67.

21. Parties—Joinder of defendants—Separate torts—Alternative claims—Negligently letting down house—Ord. 16, r. 7.—The plaintiffs claimed damages by reason of the defendants having negligently excavated the subsoil of the street adjoining the plaintiffs' premises, and so taken away the support thereof, thereby causing a part of the premises to subside. The defendants, in the statement of defence, denied that the injuries complained of were caused by their acts, and alleged that the injuries were caused by the negligence of a water company in leaving their water main insufficiently stopped. The plaintiffs thereupon applied to add the water company as defendants in the action.

Held, that the causes of action against the defendants and the water company were separate and distinct, and that therefore the water company could not be added as defendants.—THOMPSON v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, C.A., 433; [1899] 1 Q. B. 840; 68 L. J. 625; 80 L. T. 512.

22. Parties—Joinder of plaintiffs—Causes of action—R. S. C., ord. 16, r. 1.—Under ord. 16, r. 1, in its amended form now in force, persons may join as plaintiffs whose causes of action arise out of the same series of transactions, where a common question of law or fact arises.

Stroud v. Lawson, 46 W. R. 626, [1898] 2 Q. B. 44, considered.—OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITIES v. GILL, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 248; [1899] 1 Ch. 55; 68 L. J. Ch. 24; 79 L. T. 338.

23. Parties—Joinder of plaintiffs—Class actions—Common ground of relief—Rights in market—R. S. C., ord. 16, rr. 1, 9.—Where certain preferential rights are alleged to have been conferred by statute upon an indefinite class, who claim such rights not as members of the general public, but as a section of and adverse to the general public, then the members of such a statutory class possess a common interest and common rights, and some members of the class can properly bring an action on behalf of themselves and all other members of the class to maintain such statutory interest and rights.

The Attorney-General is a proper party to such an action, but only as representing the public as a whole, and not the statutory class.

A statutory preferential right was claimed in respect of three classes of stands at Covent Garden Market, and it was sought to combine the three claims in one action.

Held, that this was a mere matter of convenience, and that there was nothing in the law to make it necessary that there should be three actions, each confined to one class of stands.

Decision of Romer, J. (ante, p. 170) (Vaughan Williams, L.J., dissentiente), reversed.—ELLIS v. BEDFORD (DUKE), C.A., 385; [1899] 1 Ch. 494; 68 L. J. Ch. 289; 80 L. T. 332.

24. Parties—Joinder of plaintiffs—Common cause of action—R. S. C., ord. 16, r. 1—Company—Prospectus—Director—Liability—Director wilfully ignorant of contents of prospectus, but not repudiating it before action brought—Directors' Liability Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 64), s. 3.—The expression "The same transaction" in R. S. C., ord. 16, r. 1, does not necessarily imply a transaction taking place between two parties; and, where different persons have causes of action arising out of the same transaction, they may be joined as co-plaintiffs.

The expression "prospectus" in the Directors' Liability Act, 1890, means the prospectus on the faith of which shares or debentures are taken.

A person, who assumes the post of director of a company and is aware of the issue of a prospectus, does not escape from his liabilities under the Directors' Liability Act, 1890, by abstaining from making an inquiry as to its contents; he must give public notice of his repudiation of such prospectus, and it will not be sufficient for him repudiate it after action brought. DRINQBIER v. WOOD, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 252; [1899] 1 Ch. 393; 68 L. J. Ch. 181; 79 L. T. 548.

25. Partnership—Action against firm in firm's name—Form of defence—Death of partner after action—Defence by sole surviving partner—Ord. 48*a*, r. 5.—Two partners were sued in the name of their firm. After appearance and before defence delivered one of the partners died, and the surviving partner, R. C. Nesbitt, delivered a defence headed with the title of the action, followed by the words "Defence of the defendant R. C. Nesbitt."

Held, that the defence was wrong in form, as it was not a defence of the firm, but of the surviving partner in his individual capacity, in which capacity he was not sued.—ELLIS v. WADESON & MALLESON, C.A., 420; [1899] 1 Q. B. 714; 68 L. J. Q. B. 604; 80 L. T. 508.

26. Payment into court—Denial of liability—Acceptance by plaintiff—Counterclaim—Admission—R. S. C., ord. 22, rr. 1, 6, 7.—The object of payment into court, where all liability is denied, is to enable a defendant to deny a plaintiff's right to sue, yet to offer a sum as the price of peace and for the prevention of further litigation. Such an offer is not an admission of the plaintiff's title, and cannot be converted into such by the plaintiff accepting the sum paid in.

Decision of Stirling, J. (ante, p. 489), affirmed.—COOTE v. FORD, C.A., 548; [1899] 2 Ch. 93; 68 L. J. Ch. 508; 80 L. T. 697.

27. Payment into court—Trustee.—A trustee, in answer to a motion that he should pay into court money arising from the sale of shares forming part of the trust property, swore that he in good faith paid away the purchase-money in the belief that he was entitled thereto, and no part thereof was then in his hands.

Held, that as the terms of the affidavit did not show that the trustee had no control over the purchase-money, he must bring the sum into court.—BENSON, RE, ELLETSON v. PILLERS, Ch.D. North, J., 264; [1899] 1 Ch. 39; 68 L. J. Ch. 5; 79 L. T. 590.

28. Payment out of court—French subjects—Infants—French guardian's right to receive money—Discretion of court.—A French subject who, according to French law, is the legal guardian of his infant children (also French subjects), and is empowered by that law to receive and give legal discharges for all moneys coming to them during their minority, is not entitled as of right to payment out of court of a fund to which such infant children have become absolutely entitled.

The court, however, can, in its discretion, pay the fund out to him upon the production of satisfactory evidence that it will be applied for the benefit of the children.—CHATARD'S SETTLEMENT, RE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 515; [1899] 1 Ch. 712; 68 L. J. Ch. 350; 80 L. T. 645.

29. Receiver—Ejectment action—Disputed title—Defendant in receipt of rents—Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 25, sub-section 8.—The appointment of a receiver in an action pending to recover possession of land is discretionary on the part of the court, and on all such applications the surrounding circumstances must be considered. If on the evidence before the court it is satisfied that the plaintiff has shown a good title, and that the tenants are in jeopardy through the defendant being in possession, a receiver will be appointed.—JOHN v. JOHN, C.A., 52; [1898] 2 Ch. 573; 79 L. T. 362.

30. Receiver—Equitable execution—Charge on land—Reversion, sale of—"Actual delivery in execution"—Judgments Act (27 & 28 Vict. c. 112), s. 1.—The defendants in a probate action having been condemned in costs, the plaintiff obtained an order from the Probate Division for the appointment of a receiver of the rents and profits of real estate vested in remainder in the defendants. On an application in the Chancery Division by the plaintiff for a charge on and sale of such remainder,

Held, that no such charge or sale could be enforced, as the appointment of a receiver did not constitute an "actual delivery in execution" of the remainder within the meaning of section 1 of the Judgments Act, 1864.—HARRISON AND BOTTOMLEY, RE, C.A., 307; [1899] 1 Ch. 465; 68 L. J. Ch. 208; 80 L. T. 29.

31. Receiver—Equitable execution—Summons for appointment of receiver—Personal service—Ord. 67, r. 4, 5.—Where the defendant has not entered an appearance to the writ in the action, a summons for the appointment of a receiver cannot be served upon him by filing it at the Central Office under ord. 67, r. 4, but must be served personally, or an order obtained for substituted service.—TILLING v. BLYTHE, C.A., 273; [1899] 1 Q. B. 557; 68 L. J. Q. B. 86; 80 L. T. 44.

32. Receiver—Married woman—"Equitable execution"—Jurisdiction—Costs "payable out of married woman's separate estate, but not otherwise"—Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 25.—A married woman, in an action unsuccessfully brought by her, was condemned in costs, to be taxed and paid to the defendants "out of the plaintiff's separate estate, but not otherwise." The only separate estate to which the plaintiff was entitled was a reversionary share in some property left to her by her sister's will. The share having come into possession, Kekewich, J., on the application of the defendants, and before the certificate of the defendants' costs had been issued, appointed a receiver of the plaintiff's share.

Held, by the Court of Appeal, on the authority of Kearns v. Leaf, 12 W. R. 462, 1 Hem. & M. 681, that, apart from the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 25, there was jurisdiction in the court to appoint a receiver of the married woman's separate estate for the protection of the fund out of which the costs were directed to be paid.

Decision of Kekewich, J. (ante p. 138), affirmed.—CUMMINS v. PERKINS, C.A., 214; [1899] 1 Ch. 16; 68 L. J. Ch. 57; 79 L. T. 456.

33. Striking out statement of claim—Action to set aside judgment by default on ground of fraud—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 27, r. 15—Payment into court—Action for malicious presentation of bankruptcy petition—Allegation of special damage.—Notwithstanding the provisions of ord. 27, r. 15, which provides a short method of setting aside a judgment by default, an action to set aside such a judgment on the ground of fraud is still, subject to the discretion of the court as to costs, maintainable without leave. The court will not, therefore, strike out as frivolous the statement of claim in an action for that purpose, though it may order the plaintiff to pay into court the amount of the judgment impeached. Nor will the court strike out as frivolous a statement of claim in an action for damages in respect of bankruptcy proceedings maliciously taken, on the ground that it does not contain an allegation that the plaintiff has sustained special damage.—WYATT v. PALMER, C.A., 549; [1899] 2 Q. B. 106; 68 L. J. Ch. 86; 80 L. T. 639.

34. Summons for directions—Statement of claim—Judgment in default of defence—Ord. 27, r. 11——Ord. 30, rr. 1 (b) and 8.—K. commenced an action against C. for an injunction. C. appeared. K. having on motion obtained an interim injunction delivered a statement of claim to C. without taking out a summons for directions as required by ord. 30, r. 1 (b). C. failed to deliver a defence, and K. moved for judgment in default of defence, under ord. 27, r. 11. At the hearing of the motion C. contended that it should be dismissed as irregular, since it and the delivery of the statement of claim were steps in the action, and they were taken without first taking out a summons for directions.

Held that C. was not entitled to have the motion dismissed. K.'s procedure was irregular, but C.'s only remedies were to take out a summons to have the action dismissed under ord. 30, r. 8, or to move to have the notice of motion set aside as irregular.—KEMP v. COLMAN, Q.B.D.; 80 L. T. 54.

35. Trial—New trial—Appeal from county court—Plaintiff's evidence—Refusal of judge to withdraw case from jury—Defendant's evidence—Case then withdrawn from jury.—On the 14th of September, 1898, the son of G., the appellant, at 1.30 p.m. loaded twelve cows at M. D. station on a truck of the respondent company. The cows were consigned to C., another station twenty-five miles distant, and at the time of loading were in good condition. Appellant had on other occasions sent cattle from M. D. to C., and they had usually arrived by 8 p.m. On this occasion they did not arrive till after midnight, and were then found to be in a damaged and exhausted condition. G. then brought an action against the respondent company in the county court, on the ground that the injuries had been caused by the respondents' negligence. After evidence had been given in support of the plaintiff's case, counsel for the defence submitted that there was no evidence of negligence to go to the jury, but the judge held that a primâ facie case had been made out. Evidence was then given by the company to the effect that the delay in the arrival of the cattle was due solely to shunting operations to avoid passenger trains. The judge thereupon withdrew the case from the jury, and gave judgment for the company. G. appealed.

Held that, though the county court judge was wrong in withdrawing the case from the jury, and should have left it to them with a strong direction to find a verdict for the defendants, yet that it would be useless to send the case back for trial, as the only verdict that could be found on the evidence must be a verdict for the defendants.—GODDARD v. MIDLAND RAILWAY CO., Q.B.D.; 80 L. T. 624.

36. Trial — New trial — Verdict — Judgment — Damages.—Where a jury found (1) that the death of the plaintiff's wife had been accelerated, but not to any appreciable extent, by taking a dose of tartar emetic negligently supplied by the defendants; (2) that the plaintiff had suffered no damage thereby, but that his minor child had incurred damage to the extent of 1,000 dols.

Held, that the action must be dismissed, because the damages attributable to the defendants were on those findings (which could not properly be disturbed) inappreciable and irrecoverable.

The Court of Queen's Bench was in error in directing a new trial on the assumption that the findings as to damages are contradictory and illogical.—KERRY v. ENGLAND, P.C.; [1898] A. C. 742.

37. Trial—Notice of trial—Length of notice—Ten days before trial—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 36, rr. 14, 18; ord. 30, r. 2.—The court has jurisdiction to order a defendant, in any case in which it seems just, to take ten days' notice of trial, to expire on the day when the trial comes on.—BAXTER v. HOLDSWORTH, C.A., 179; [1899] 1 Q. B. 266; 68 L. J. Q. B. 154; 79 L. T. 434.

38. Trial with jury—Probate—Notice only to cross-examine witnesses—Costs—Ord. 21, r. 18.—Ord. 21, r. 18, has established a new and complete rule that a party opposing a will, who with his defence gives notice of intention only to cross-examine the witnesses produced in support of the will, is not to be liable to pay the costs of the other side unless the judge is of opinion that there was no reasonable cause for opposing the will, and the rule extends to cases heard before a jury asked for by the defendant.—DAVIES v. JONES, P.D. & Ad.D.; 68 L. J. P. 69; 80 L. T. 631.

39. Writ—Service—Service of writ out of jurisdiction —Contract "which, according to the terms thereof, ought to be performed within the jurisdiction"—Rules of Supreme Court, 1883, Ord. 11, r. 1 (e).—In order to allow service of a writ out of the jurisdiction under ord. 11, r. 1 (e), the contract for breach of which the action is brought must be one which, according to the terms thereof, must be performed within the jurisdiction. Leave cannot be given in a case where the contract may be performed either within or out of the jurisdiction.

Where the defendant abroad contracted to sell goods sent to him and remit the proceeds to England by bills, and he sold the goods and kept the proceeds,

Held, that since his contract could all be performed abroad, no writ could be issued here for service abroad, either for breach of contract or for money had and received.

The decision of the Court of Appeal reversed. —COMBER v. LEYLAND, H.L.; [1898] A. C. 524; 79 L. T. 180.

40. Writ—Service out of jurisdiction—Necessary and proper parties—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 11, r. 1 (g)—Insufficient disclosure of facts—Discretion of court.—This was an action brought against four persons for relief in respect of a breach of trust in improper investment of trust funds. The first three defendants were partners in a firm of solicitors practising in Calcutta; the fourth was the legal personal representative of the survivor of the two trustees who were alleged to be responsible for the breach of trust. He was resident in England, and had been duly served. An order had been made for service out of the jurisdiction upon the first three defendants upon affidavits which only stated that the money was in their hands when invested, and the investment was really made by them. The three defendants now moved to discharge the order. It appeared from the evidence on this motion that the defendant's firm had only acted as solicitors for the trustees, the business having been brought in and entirely conducted by a deceased member of the firm.

Held, that the order for service must be discharged, because (1) the affidavits on which the order was obtained did not sufficiently disclose the facts; (2) the first three defendants were not necessary or proper parties to the action; (3) the case was not one in which the court ought in the exercise of its discretion to order the case to be tried in England.—PLASKETT v. EDDIS, Ch.D. North, J.; 79 L. T. 136.

See also Administration, 8; Admiralty, 3; Assignment, 1, 2; Bankruptcy, 20, 21; Common; Company, 3, 11, 34, 35, 37; County Court, 1; Divorce, 9-11; Injunction, 1; Inland Revenue, 8; Justices, 5; Libel, 3; Local Government, 21; Married Woman, 2; Partition; Poor Law, 4.

PRINCIPAL and AGENT:—

1. Agreement by agent with third party to detriment of principal—Surreptitious dealing with other principal —Bribe accepted by agent—Avoidance of contract.—The defendant agreed to purchase a pair of horses from the plaintiff, provided they were passed as sound by a veterinary surgeon who was employed by the defendant to examine them. The horses were certified as sound by the veterinary surgeon, and the defendant sent a cheque for the price. The horses were delivered and found to be unsound, and thereupon they were returned and the cheque stopped. In the course of the trial of an action on the cheque it was elicited that the veterinary surgeon had accepted a bribe from the plaintiff.

Held, that it was immaterial to inquire what effect the bribe had on the mind of the defendant's agent, that the offer and acceptance invalidated the certificate, and that the plaintiff could not recover under the contract which depended on the validity of the certificate.—SHIPWAY v. BROADWOOD, C.A.; [1899] 1 Q. B. 369; 68 L. J. Q. B. 360; 80 L. T. 11.

2. Public body—Negligence—Making up road—

Dangerous work—Employment of contractor—Liability of public body.—Where a public body takes upon itself the making-up of a road, such work being of itself, unless carefully done, likely to be dangerous to the public, a duty is cast upon such public body to see that no dangerous obstructions are allowed to exist to passengers passing along the road. That duty cannot be evaded by employing a contractor to carry out the work.—HILL v. TOTTENHAM DISTRICT COUNCIL, Q.B.D.; 79 L. T. 495.

3. Ratification by principal—Contract by agent in name of principal, but for his own benefit.—Where an agent makes a contract purporting to sell goods in the name of a principal, but with the fraudulent intention of selling them on his own account and for his own benefit, it is competent for the principal to ratify and take the benefit of the contract as against the buyers.—TIEDEMANN AND LEDERMANN FRERES, RE, Q.B.D.; [1899] 2 Q. B. 66; 68 L. J. Q. B. 852.

See also Contract, 6; Negligence, 1, 2.

PRINCIPAL and SURETY:—

1. Bond—Rate collector—Discharge of sureties.—Sureties to a bond for the due performance of the duty of a rate collector will not be discharged from their obligation by reason of the obligees continuing such collector in their service where he has been guilty of irregular modes of accounting, but has been guilty of no dishonesty in the course of his service, and where such obligees have done all in their power to get such collector dismissed, the power to dismiss is not being vested in them.—CAXTON v. DEW, Q.B.D.; 68 L. J. Q. B. 380; 80 L. T. 325.

2. Co-sureties — Co-sureties constituted principal debtors—Giving time by one co-surety—Contribution.—The plaintiffs and the defendant gave a joint and several bond to secure the repayment of an advance made to a company upon a second mortgage, and by the bond it was agreed that the plaintiffs and defendant, as between themselves and the mortgagee, should be taken to be principal debtors, and that they should not, nor should either of them, be released by reason of time being given to the company, or by any forbearance, act, or omission of the mortgagee or his assigns. The company was subsequently wound up and a new company formed to take over the business, subject to the mortgages, and the plaintiffs, without the assent of the defendant, paid off the mortgage debt due under the bond to the mortgagee, who was pressing for payment, obtained a transfer of the second mortgage to themselves, the new company covenanting to pay to them the principal sum thereby secured, and entered into an agreement with the new company that the mortgage should not be enforced or the mortgage money called in for six months. The course adopted by the plaintiffs in dealing with the mortgage security was in the best interests of all concerned. In an action by the plaintiffs to recover from the defendant his proportion of the amount so paid by them under the bond,

Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover.—GREENWOOD v. FRANCIS, C.A., 230; [1899] 1 Q. B. 312; 68 L. J. Q. B. 228; 79 L. T. 624.

See also Trustee, 3.

PROBATE:—

1. Administration—Administrator de bonis non—Trustees—Grant to beneficiary limited to trust funds.—Where trust funds are standing in the name of a deceased trustee, a grant of letters of administration de bonis non, limited to the trust fund, may be made to a person entitled to the whole beneficial interest in the fund, though the deceased trustee has appointed an executor.—RATCLIFFE, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; 68 L. J. P. 47; 80 L. T. 170.

2. Administration — Administrator and receiver pendente lite—Citing heir-at-law—Land Transfer Act, 1897.—Where the deceased has died possessed of real and personal estate an administrator and receiver pendente lite will not be appointed without notice to the heir-at-law.—WIGGINS v. HUDSON, P.D. & Ad.D.; 80 L. T. 296.

3. Administration—Bond—Dispensing with sureties—Personal bond only allowed—Court of Probate Act, 1857, ss. 81, 82.—The administrator of an estate which consists of sums standing to the credit of an action in the Chancery Division may be allowed to give a personal bond for due administration without sureties for such sums as will be paid in that action to other beneficiaries directly, and only required to give a bond with sureties for the sum to which he is himself entitled.—LEACH, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; 80 L. T. 170.

4. Administration — Citation — Disappearance of son—Grant to grandson without citing son.—The deceased had three children, two of whom predeceased him. The third, a son, left England in 1872, and had not since been heard of. A grandson, a child of one of the deceased children, applied for letters of administration.

Held, that the grant prayed for might be made to the applicant without citing the son on the applicant swearing that he believed himself to be the sole next-of-kin.—CALLICOTT, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; 68 L. J. P. 67; 80 L. T. 421.

5. Administration — Creditor — Next-of-kin unknown—Form of grant.—The deceased, who had carried on a business during his lifetime, died intestate without ascertainable next-of-kin in England. On an application by a creditor for an immediate grant of letters of administration without citing the next-of-kin,

Held, that a grant ad colligenda bona might be made to the creditor with power to dispose of the property and business of the deceased.—BOLTON, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; 68 L. J. P. 63; 80 L. T. 631.

6. Administration—Intestacy—Bastard—Real and personal estate—Right of Crown—Land Transfer Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65), s. 1.—Where a person dies a widow (or bachelor) without issue, a bastard and intestate, entitled to real and personal estate, the grant of administration to the nominee of the Crown will be of the personal estate only, as before the Land Transfer Act, 1897. The Crown is not bound by that Act.—HARTLEY, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D., 287; [1899] P. 40; 68 L. J. P. 16.

7. Administration—Married woman—Deed of separation—Citation of husband.—A married woman executed a deed of separation, which provided that on her death her property should go as though her husband were already dead, and died while the deed was alleged to be still in operation, and while the husband was said to be largely indebted to the estate of the deceased for payments due under the deed.

Held, that letters of administration ought not to be granted to the deceased's next-of-kin without citing the husband, on the ground that he might dispute the deed.—MEGSON, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; 80 L. T. 295.

8. Administration — Married woman — Foreign domicil—Power of appointment — Will made in execution of power—Administration with will annexed

—Grant to appointee—Limited or general grant.—Upon an application for administration with the will annexed it appeared that the deceased was domiciled in France, her husband, who survived her, being a domiciled Frenchman. The applicant was the appointee in trust under the marriage settlement of the deceased, which, on the face of it, appeared to include all the property, and the ground of the application was that the will had not been executed in accordance with the law of the domicil of the deceased,

Held, that unless the husband of the deceased were to consent, a full grant ought not to be made; and that, in accordance with the practice, failing the husband's consent, the grant to the applicant, as appointee, should be limited to such property as the deceased had power to dispose of, and did dispose of, by the instrument executing the appointment.—IN GOODS OF TREFOND, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1899] P. 247; 68 L. J. P. 82.

9. Administration — Married woman — Limited administration—Will of married woman—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75)—Probate Rules of April, 1887.—Where, upon the death of a woman who had married before the commencement of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), it appeared that, before her marriage, she had acquired a mortgage debt, which her husband had not reduced into possessson, and had since her marriage made a will purporting to dispose of all her real and personal property, the court made a grant to her husband of administration to such of her property as she had no power to dispose of by will.—IN GOODS OF LEMAN, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1898] P. 215.

10. Administration — Passing over executor — Residence abroad — Probate Act, 1857, s. 73.—A testator appointed a sole executor. The executor, shortly before the testator's death, disappeared, and a warrant for his arrest had been issued, but his whereabouts was unknown.

Held, that, though residence abroad could not be presumed, the executor might be passed over without citation, and administration with the will annexed might be granted.—WRIGHT, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; 79 L. T. 473.

11. Administration—Renunciation and assignment by next-of-kin—Grant to assignee.—The deceased died intestate, leaving A. his sole next-of-kin. A. renounced her right to administration, and assigned her rights in the property of the deceased to B.

Held, that letters of administration might be granted to B.—QUILLIAM, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; 68 L. J. P. 17; 79 L. T. 472.

12. Administration—Son's death intestate—Disappearance of father—Citation.—Where one of two brothers died intestate and the father, who had survived the deceased, had disappeared, the court, on an application for a grant of letters of administration by the surviving brother, directed that the father should be cited.—HARPER, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; 68 L. J. P. 48; 80 L. T. 294.

13. Administration — Surety — Trustee in bankruptcy of next-of-kin.—Letters of administration may be granted to the trustee in bankruptcy of the next-of-kin without requiring sureties.—ASTBURY, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; 80 L. T. 296.

14. Administration—Will annexed—Foreign grant —Grant subject to order of foreign court—Renunciation by executor of foreign will.—Where administration with the will annexed has been granted abroad by a foreign court subject to such orders as may from time to time be made by that court, the court here need not before granting such administration to an attorney of the foreign administrator inquire whether orders have been made by the foreign court modifying or cancelling the foreign grant.

Where a testator domiciled abroad has disposed by his will of all his property without qualification as to its situa ion, and the executor of the will has renounced probate abroad, the court here may grant letters of administration with the will annexed to an administrator appointed by the foreign court without requiring express renunciation by the executor of probate in this country.—SCARR, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; 80 L. T. 296.

15. Practice—Costs—Proof in solemn form—Notice by defendants to cross-examine only—R. S. C., ord. 21, r. 18.—The court at the hearing of a probate suit being of opinion that the defendants—who were opposing a will and codicil, and had given notice under ord. 21, r. 18, that they merely insisted on the will being proved in solemn form of law, and that they only intended to cross-examine the witnesses produced in support of the will—had no reasonable ground for opposing the will, condemned the defendants to pay the costs of the plaintiffs who were propounding the documents.—SPICER v. SPICER, P.D. & Ad.D., 271; [1899] P. 38; 79 L. T. 707.

16. Practice—Several defendants—Right of two sets of counsel to be heard.—Where several defendants are opposing a will and have filed separate defences, but the defences are substantially the same, the court will not at the trial of the action hear more than one counsel on behalf of the defendants.—BAGSHAW v. PIMM, P.D. & Ad.D.; 80 L. T. 360.

17. Will—Codicil—Revocation—Revival.—A testatrix made a will dated the 31st of January, 1888. By a subsequent codicil dated the 1st of August, 1893, and headed, "Memorandum for my trustee A. W. G.," the sole surviving executor and trustee of the will, she disposed of the whole of her property without any specific appointment of an executor.

By another will made abroad she confirmed her will "made in England in or about the year 1889," and thereby disposed only of her property situate abroad, of which latter will she appointed another executor.

Held, that probate of all three documents might be granted to A. W. G. as executor, with liberty to the foreign executor to come in.—GREEN, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; 79 L. T. 738.

18. Will—Executor—Misdescription.—A testator, T. C., bequeathed his property to his wife, his son, and T. S. upon certain trusts, and appointed his wife, his son, and "the said T. C." executors of the will. The testator had no known relative or friend of the name of T. C.

Held, that probate of the will might be granted to the wife, the son, and T. S., with a blank in place of "C." in the clause appointing executors.—COOPER, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; 68 L. J. P. 65; 80 L. T. 632.

19. Will—Document referred to in will—Incorporation—Document ordered to be filed in registry.—A testator, after bequeathing certain shares in his residuary estate to his children, directed that advances made to them should be taken as part of their shares, that entries in a certain book should be the only and conclusive evidence of the advances, and that no child should be entitled to any share under the will until the advances were brought into hotchpot. The book contained entries made before and after the will.

Held, that the book need not be admitted to probate, but that it ought to be filed in the registry.—PEASE, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; 80 L. T. 295.

20. Will—Foreign will—Revoked codicil—Foreign grant—Probate of exemplification.—A testator died domiciled in India, leaving a will and two codicils, one of which had been revoked. The Indian court granted probate of the will and both codicils.

Held, that probate might be granted here of the exemplification probate granted in India, notwithstanding that it comprised a revoked codicil.—GURBOY, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; 80 L. T. 808.

21. Will—Non-appearance of cited legatees.—Where an action is brought to set aside a will, a grant of administration may be made to the next-of-kin after citation of, and failure to appear by, the legatees under the will.—QUICK, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; 68 L. J. P. 64; 80 L. T. 808.

22. Will—Obliteration—Words obliterated "apparent"—Wills Act (1 Vict. c. 26), s. 26.—A holograph will originally contained two devises and gift of a legacy to the testator's son "Daniel." The name had been obliterated in all three places, but when there was nothing to show, and the testator had written in the names of Daniel in one, and of another son Thomas in two other places,

The court, on the evidence of an expert that, with the aid of a magnifying glass, he could read the original name Daniel in all three places, on motion by consent of all parties interested, granted administration with the will annexed, with the original word "Daniel" substituted in all three places, on the ground that the original words were "apparent" within the meaning of section 26 of the Wills Act.—BRAZIER, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D., 272; [1899] P. 36; 68 L. J. P. 6; 79 L. T. 472.

23. Will—Seaman—29 Car. 2, c. 3, s. 23—1 Vict. c. 26, s. 11—"At sea"—Voyage not yet begun.—A letter containing testamentary dispositions written on a ship lying within a river, and before the ship has actually sailed, may be a valid will as made by a seaman at sea.—PATERSON, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; 79 L. T. 123.

24. Will in custody of foreign court—Notarial copy—Exemplification.—Even where a will is in the possession of a foreign court merely for purposes of custody and not for purposes of probate, the court here will not admit a notarial copy to probate, but will require the original will or a copy authenticated by the foreign court.—BROWN, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; 80 L. T. 360.

See also Administration, 8, 9; Estoppel; Married Woman, 3, 4; Practice, 9, 38.

PUBLIC AUTHORITIES PROTECTION ACT, 1893:—

1. Costs—Solicitor and client costs—Public authority—Action for injunction—Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 61), s. 1 (b).—Section 1 of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, gives a right to solicitor and client costs in actions for injunctions as well as in actions for damages; but it does not apply to interlocutory applications or to appeals.

The title of an Act of Parliament is now to be read as part of the Act.—FIELDING v. MORLEY CORPORATION, C.A., 295; [1899] 1 Ch. 1; 79 L. T. 231.

2. Costs — Taxation — Action against public authority—Judgment for defendants—Consent order—Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 61), s. 1, sub-section (b).—In an action against a county council for acts done by them in pursuance of the Local Government Act, 1894, an order was made in chambers by consent that the action be dismissed, and that the plaintiff should pay the defendants their taxed costs of the action.

Held, that the defendants had obtained judgment within the meaning of section 1, sub-section (b), of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, and that the costs must therefore be taxed as between solicitor and client.—SHAW v. HERTS COUNTY COUNCIL, C.A.; [1899] 2 Q. B. 282.

3. Limitation of action—Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 61), s. 1—Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76) s. 4.—A sanitary authority served notices, under the Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), s. 4, on the owner of premises, requiring him to do certain specified works in respect of what was supposed to be a drain. He complied with the notices, and incurred expense in doing the works. It was discovered that the supposed drain was a sewer, which the sanitary authority was liable to repair, and the executors of the owner brought an action against the sanitary authority to recover the amount of the expenses incurred, as money paid to the use, and at the request, of the defendants. The action was not commenced within six months after the expenses had been paid.

Held, that the action was brought for an act done in pursuance, or execution, or intended execution, of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, within the meaning of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, s. 1, and ought to have been brought within six months, and therefore the defendants were not liable.

Waterhouse v. Keen, 4 B. & C. 200, and Midland Railway Co. v. Withington Local Board, 11 Q. B. D. 788, followed.—CREE v. ST. PANCRAS VESTRY, Q.B.D.; [1899] 1 Q. B. 693; 68 L. J. Q. B. 389; 80 L. T. 388.

4. Limitation of action—Ship—Damages—Practice—Action against a harbour board—Limit of time for commencement of — Public duty — Costs — Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 61), s. 1.—The plaintiffs, owners of a barque, issued a writ, on the 14th of November, 1898, in an Admiralty action, against the defendants for damages sustained by the grounding of their vessel on the 13th of September, 1893, in the River Ribble within the port and harbour of Preston, through the alleged negligence of the defendants in inviting the vessel to come up when there was not sufficient water in the channel leading to the docks. Jeune, P., dismissed the action with costs to be taxed as between solicitor and client.

Held, affirming the decision of the President, that the defendants were acting in pursuance of their public duties, so that section 1 of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, applied, and as that statute, dealing with procedure only, was retrospective, the action was barred after the expiration of six months from the default complained of.—THE "YDUN," C.A.; [1899] P. 236.

PUBLIC HEALTH.—See Arbitration, 1; Corporation, 4; Justices, 7-9; Licensing Law, 7; Local Government, 12-18, 21-26, 31; Public Authorities Protection Act, 3.

QUEENSLAND, LAW of:—

Succession and Probate Duties Act, 1892 (56 Vict.

No. 13), s. 4—Succession defined—Movables locally situated in the colony—Domicil of the testator.

Held, that section 4 of the Queensland Succession and Probate Duties Act, 1892, defining a "succession" being the same as section 2 of the English Succession Duty Act of 1853, must be read in the sense affixed to the English Act by the English tribunals; and that it does not include movables locally situated in Queensland which belonged to a testator whose domicil was in Victoria.

Held, further, that the Amendment Act of 1895, s. 2, is not retrospective in its operation.—HARDING v. COMMISSIONERS OF STAMPS FOR QUEENSLAND, P.C.; [1898] A. C. 769; 79 L. T. 42.

RAILWAY:—

1. Borrowing powers—Unauthorized borrowing—Interest on debenture stock — Overdrawn banking account—Subrogation of lender to rights of creditors—Secured creditors.—A railway company having power to borrow money by the creation of three classes of debenture stock, A, B, and C, had exhausted its borrowing powers, and then applied to its bankers for a loan in order to pay the half-yearly interest then due on the debenture stocks. The bank made the requisite advance. Shortly afterwards a judgment creditor of the company petitioned for and obtained the appointment of a receiver. The A stock had priority over the B and C stock, and the B stock over the C stock.

It subsequently came to the knowledge of the bank that the income of the company in the receiver's hands was sufficient to pay the next half-year's interest on the A stock and part of the interest on the B stock.

Held, affirming Romer, J. (ante, p. 172), on the application of the bank, that the bank was not entitled to be repaid in priority to the B. stockholders, even to the extent of the interest on the A stock paid out of the bank's money.

If a lender advances money to a company which has exhausted its borrowing powers, he is only entitled to have that portion of the advance actually expended in payments of debts of the company treated as a valid advance.

No right of subrogation to the securities or priorities of creditors paid off out of moneys borrowed in excess of borrowing powers can be justified in principle.—WREXHAM, &c., RAILWAY Co., RE, C.A., 464; [1899] 1 Ch. 440; 68 L. J. Ch. 270; 80 L. T. 130.

2. Carriage of goods—"Owner's risk"—Breach of contract—Damages—Liability.—A railway company contracted with M. to carry certain goods to Jersey, viâ the Great Western Railway. Instead of doing so they carried them viâ the London & South-Western Railway, and in consequence there was delay, and M. suffered damage and loss. The contract was for carriage at owner's risk. In the contract was a clause relieving the company from all liability for loss, damage, misdelivery, delay, or detention, except where such arose from the wilful misconduct of the company.

Held, that, as the company had not carried out the terms of the contract, the above clause did not apply, and the company were liable.—MALLET v. GREAT EASTERN RAILWAY Co., Q.B.D., 334; [1899] 1 Q. B. 309; 68 L. J. Q. B. 256; 80 L. T. 53.

3. Compensation—Lease of land—Yearly rent—Subsequent compulsory acquisition—Basis of value.—By an indenture dated the 29th of May, 1839, the predecessor in title of the plaintiff grant to certain lessees, whose interest is now vested in the defendants certain lands for a railway for twenty-one years at a yearly rent of £144 5s.

The land in question now forms part of the N. E. R. Co.'s system, and the rent has always been duly paid since the expiration of the lease.

On the 3rd of October, 1890, the defendants served upon the plaintiff a notice to treat, and an arbitration took place under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845. The umpire in making his award considered the yearly rent of £144 5s. as a basis upon which to calculate the value of the lands.

Held, that he was entitled to do so.—ELDON (EARL) v. N. E. RAILWAY Co., Q.B.D.; 80 L. T. 723.

4. Compensation—Purchase by railway company of reversion on lease—Covenant running with land—Covenant for quiet enjoyment—Injunction—Damages—Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), s. 6.—In 1893 an Act was passed enabling the plaintiff company to take compulsorily (inter alia) the property to which this action related. In 1894 the owner of the property let it to the defendant for a term of years by a lease containing the usual covenant for quiet enjoyment. In 1895 the company purchased the reversion of the property, subject to the lease. After this the company proceeded with their works, and in so doing caused structural injury to the defendant's house; they also for some time rendered the access to his premises less convenient, by erecting hoardings which blocked up half the thoroughfare along the street in which his house stood, and by taking a great number of carts along that street. They also for three or four days incumbered a passage along which he had a right of way so that he could not use it. It was not alleged that the company had exceeded their statutory powers or exercised them negligently. The company sued the defendant for rent, and he counterclaimed for damages for breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment.

Held, that the covenant for quiet enjoyment was in force and was binding on the company, and that they were liable to make compensation for any breach of it, but that no action would lie against them for any breach of it committed in the reasonable and careful exercise of their statutory powers, the only remedy of the tenant for such breaches being under the compensation clauses of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and that the counterclaim, therefore, had been properly dismissed.

Though structural injury to a house by the lessor is a breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment, no temporary inconvenience caused by the lessor, but not affecting the title or possession of the tenant, is a breach of the covenant.

Decision of Byrne, J., affirmed.—MANCHESTER, SHEFFIELD, AND LINCOLNSHIRE RAILWAY Co. v. ANDERSON, C.A.; [1898] 2 Ch. 394.

5. Fence—Owner and occupier of adjoining land—Adjoining highway—Licensee of owner of soil—Railway Clauses Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), s. 18.—A railway company whose premises adjoin a public highway is not bound to fence against cattle straying upon the highway and not merely passing and repassing along it, even although the cattle are upon the highway by permission of the owner of the soil.—LUSCOMBE v. GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY Co., Q.B.D.; [1899] 2 Q. B. 313; 68 L. J. Q. B. 711.

6. Level crossings—Speed of trains—Public body—Infringement of statute—Information by Attorney-General—Injunction—Evidence of injury—Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20),

s. 48.—Upon an information filed by the Attorney-General to restrain a public body from exercising statutory powers in such a manner as to infringe an Act of Parliament, it is not necessary to prove that injury to the public will result from the acts complained of.

By the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, s. 48, "Where the railway crosses any turnpike road on a level adjoining to a station, all trains on the railway shall be made to slacken their speed before arriving at such turnpike road, and shall not cross the same at any greater rate of speed than four miles an hour." A railway company had power, by a statute incorporating this clause, to cross a road, to which the clause applied, on the level. They constantly drove their trains over the level crossing at a speed exceeding four miles an hour.

On an information, filed by the Attorney-General, on the relation of the county council in whom the road was vested, for an injunction to restrain the company from allowing their trains to cross the level crossing at a speed greater than four miles an hour,

Held, that as the information was filed to enforce the express terms of an Act of Parliament, an injunction must be granted, although there was no evidence of any injury to the public.

Attorney-General v. Great Western Railway, L. R. 7 Ch. 767; Attorney-General v. Cockermouth Local Board, L. R. 18 Eq. 172; and Attorney-General v. Shrewsbury (Kingsland) Bridge Co., 21 Ch. D. 752, approved and followed.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY CO., Q.B.D.; [1899] 1 Q. B. 72; 68 L. J. Q. B. 4; 79 L. T. 412.

7. Line crossing highway—Liability of company to repair bridge and approaches—Power to construct level crossing—Diversion of road—Bangor and Carnarvon Railway Act, 1851 (14 Vict. c. 21), s. 22—Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), ss. 16, 46.—A railway company, empowered by their private Act to carry a certain old road across their line on a level, built a bridge across their line at a spot where no highway had previously been, and 347 yards distant from the place where the line crossed the old road. Upon land given by the owners the company made approaches to the bridge, connecting it with the roads lying on either side of the line. The old road was at the same time thrown into the adjoining fields, and the traffic which formerly had passed along the old road thenceforth passed over the bridge and its approaches. The company repaired the bridge from time to time, but did not repair the approaches. On one occasion an adjoining landowner repaired the approaches, under an agreement with the highway authority. The highway authority applied to justices under the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, for an order under section 46 directing the railway company to maintain the bridge and its approaches.

Held, that there being no evidence of any constructional necessity, which alone would justify a diversion of the old road under section 16 of the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, the bridge and its approaches had not been made under section 46, and therefore the railway company were not bound to maintain them under that section.—LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY CO. v. OGWEN COUNCIL, C.A.; 80 L. T. 401.

8. Minerals—Notice of intention to work—Compensation—Repeal of prior Act—Reservation of rights—Arbitration—Duty of company to take up award—Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), s. 35—Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), s. 78.—By a special Act a number of railway companies were dissolved and consolidated into a new company, and the Acts relating to the dissolved companies were repealed. The special Act incorporated the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, which was to apply to the new company as if the railways made under the repealed Acts had been made under the powers and provisions of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and as if that Act had been expressly made applicable to those railways, and as if those railways had been authorized to be made under the special Act. There was a proviso that the repeal should not prejudice or affect anything done under the repealed Acts, or, except as in the repealing Act specially provided, affect the rights of any persons, under the repealed Acts, to which but for the repeal they would have been entitled.

Owners of minerals, lying under and near a part of the railway which had belonged to one of the dissolved companies, gave notice of their desire to work those minerals. An arbitration was held under section 35 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, to assess the amount of compensation to be paid to the owners of the minerals. The company attended the arbitration under protest, and contended that, by virtue of the proviso in their Act, the assessment should be made under the Act of the dissolved company, and not under the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845. The arbitrator made his award, which the company refused to take up. On a rule for a mandamus to the company to take up the award,

Held (Collins, L.J., dissenting), that the effect of the special Act was to substitute the clauses relating to minerals of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, for those contained in the repealed Act, and that therefore the assessment was rightly made under the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and not under the repealed Act.

North-Eastern Railway v. Crosland, 32 L. J. Ch. 353, distinguished.

Held, also, by A. L. Smith, L.J., that the question whether the assessment of the amount of compensation to be paid to the owners of the minerals should have been made under the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, or under the repealed Act, could not be entertained upon showing cause against the rule nisi to the company to take up the award.

Held, by Collins, L.J., that it was an answer to an application for a mandamus that the umpire had assessed compensation under the wrong Act.—REG. v. LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY CO., C.A.; [1899] 1 Q. B. 921; 68 L. J. Q. B. 685; 80 L. T. 782.

9. Passenger—Luggage—"Ordinary luggage"—Bicycle.—A bicycle is not "ordinary luggage," within the meaning of a railway Act, by which every passenger travelling in a carriage of a certain class may take with him his ordinary luggage, not exceeding a certain weight, free of charge; and therefore a passenger by train, without luggage, is not entitled to take with him, free of charge, a bicycle, not packed up, and of less weight than the weight of luggage allowed to be carried free of charge by the class in which he is travelling.—BRITTEN v. GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY CO., Q.B.D.; [1899] 1 Q. B. 243; 68 L. J. Q. B. 75; 79 L. T. 640.

10. Passenger duty—Exemption—Extra charge for reserved carriage—Railway Passenger Duty Act, 1842, s. 2—Cheap Trains Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 34), s. 2.—By section 2 of the Railway Passenger Duty Act, 1842, a duty at the rate of 5 per cent. is made payable upon all sums received for the conveyance of passengers upon any railway. By section 2 of the Cheap Trains Act, 1883, fares not exceeding the rate of one penny a mile are exempt from duty.

A railway company whose third-class fares did not exceed a penny a mile, abolished all second-class carriages and fares, and in lieu thereof introduced a system whereby third-class passengers, after taking and paying for their tickets, could for an extra charge procure "supplementary reserve tickets" entitling them to travel in reserved third-class carriages not available for third-class passengers with ordinary tickets only.

Held, that the extra sums were paid in respect of extra accommodation incidental to the conveyance of the passengers, and that the Crown was entitled to duty thereon when the total sum paid exceeded a penny a mile.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. FURNESS RAILWAY CO., Q.B.D.; [1899] 2 Q. B. 267; 68 L. J. Q. B. 623; 80 L.T. 710.

11. Rates—Exemption—Land used as railway for public conveyance—Liverpool Corporation Act, 1893. s. 36 (ii.).—A railway company occupied land in Liverpool for a goods station. The premises consisted of a large covered shed open on one side, and on the other side with openings in the walls to admit of trucks. Inside the shed were a number of railway lines, with sidings and platforms for the loading of trucks: these lines were used for the conveyance of goods sent by the public to and from the premises. The premises were connected with the company's main line by a dock line belonging to the Mersey Docks Board, and by a tramway laid across a street by the company under a licence from the Liverpool Corporation.

Held, that the land used for the lines, sidings, and platforms inside the company's premises was "land used as a railway made under the powers of an Act of Parliament for public conveyance" within the meaning of section 36 of the Liverpool Corporation Act, 1893, and that the railway company were therefore only liable to be rated upon one-fourth of the net annual value thereof, under that section.—WILLIAMS v. LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY CO., Q B.D.; [1899] 2 Q. B. 197; 80 L. T. 803.

12. Receiver and manager — Costs of defending action—"Working expenses"—"Other proper outgoings"—Railway Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 127), s. 4.—The W., M., and C.'s Q. Railway Co. incurred costs in defending an action brought against it for large sums by the contractor for the line in respect of the balance of the contract price.

A receivership order had been made against the company after the action was commenced; and the plaintiff had obtained leave to continue the proceedings in the action. At the same time leave was given to the company to attend the proceedings, but no order was made as to its costs.

This was an application by the company that these costs might be paid to them at once by the receiver and manager of the railway out of the moneys received by him, upon the footing that the costs in question were "other proper outgoings" within the meaning of section 4 of the Railway Companies Act, 1867.

Held, that as the line could have been carried on just as well and effectually, although the company had not resisted the claim made in the action, however proper it might have been for them to do so, these costs were not "proper outgoings" within the meaning of section 4, and the application failed.—WREXHAM, MOLD, &c., RAILWAY CO. (No. 2), Ch.D. Byrne, J.; 68 L. J. Ch. 115; 80 L. T. 649.

13. Traffic—Arbitration—Charges—Reasonableness—Midland Railway Order Confirmation Act, 1891, s. 5.—By section 5 of the Midland Railway Order Confirmation Act, 1891, the railway company were empowered to charge a reasonable sum for certain additional services rendered to a trader at his request or for his convenience, and "any difference" arising thereunder was to be determined by an arbitrator appointed by the Board of Trade.

Held, that all matters material and incidental to such a difference are within the competence of the arbitrator, whose decision is final.

London and North-Western Railway v. Donellan, [1898] 2 Q. B. 7, 46 W. R. Dig. 147, approved.

Decision of the Court of Appeal affirmed.—MIDLAND RAILWAY CO. v. LOSEBY, H.L., 656; [1899] A. C. 133; 68 L. J. Q. B. 326; 80 L. T. 93.

14. Traffic—Loss of market—Finding of the jury—No negligence—Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 31), s. 7.—Goods carried at various times by the defendant company for the plaintiffs arrived too late for market, and the plaintiffs suffered loss for which they sued. In answer to questions left to them by the judge, the jury found that the defendants accepted the goods with the knowledge that they were to be sold in particular markets, that the defendants lost those markets, but that they had not—except in one instance—been guilty of negligence. On these findings judgment was reserved for further consideration.

Two kinds of consignment notes had been used, one of which contained a notice that the defendants had two rates for the carriage of the goods thereinunder mentioned, "one the ordinary rate, when the company take the ordinary liability of a railway company; the other, a reduced rate, adopted when the sender agrees to relieve the company from all liability for loss, damage, misdelivery, delay, or detention, except upon proof that such loss, &c., arose from wilful misconduct on the part of the company's servants." The defendants admitted that, as a matter of fact, they had only one rate for the carriage of the class of goods consigned by the plaintiffs. Both kinds of consignment notes contained the following, among other, conditions: "The company will not be liable for any loss of market."

It was contended, on behalf of the plaintiffs, that the defendants came within section 7 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854, and that the condition was in the circumstances not just and reasonable; and on behalf of the defendants that, as the jury had found no negligence, the defendants were outside that section, and that the condition was good as a notice to the consignor.

Held, that, if section 7 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854, had been applicable, the condition would have been unreasonable, but that, as the jury had negatived negligence, the defendants were not within section 7, and that, at common law, the condition was good as a notice to the consignor.—DUCKHAM v. GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY CO., Q.B.D; 80 L. T. 774.

15. Traffic — Rates — Rebate — Goods received at private siding—Station accommodation and terminal services — Burden of proof — Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 54), s. 4.—On an application to the railway commissioners to determine a rebate upon rates under section 4 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1894, the applicants proved that they delivered goods to the respondent railway company at a siding which belonged to themselves and not to the railway company, and that they had been charged rates by the railway company; but they did not prove that the rates so charged included any charge for station accommodation or terminal services. Their case was that they had sufficiently raised a presumption that they had been charged for station accommodation and terminal services.

Held, by A. L. Smith and Rigby, L.JJ., that the application failed on the ground that the applicants had not satisfied the onus which lay upon them of making out the primâ facie case which they undertook to establish.

Held, by Vaughan Williams, L.J., that the application failed on the ground that it was clear that the rates charged did not include charges for station accommodation or terminal services; but, quære, whether the onus was upon the applicants to show that the railway company had charged for station accommodation or terminal services.—SALT UNION v. NORTH STAFFORDSHIRE RAILWAY CO., C.A., 4; [1898] 2 Q. B. 435; 79 L. T. 16.

16. Traffic—Sidings—Charge for use of—Arbitration—Jurisdiction—Condition precedent—Difference before action brought.—A railway Act confirming a Provisional Order, after empowering the railway company to charge a reasonable sum for certain services rendered to a trader, by way of addition to the tonnage rate, enacted that "any difference arising under this section shall be determined by an arbitrator to be appointed by the Board of Trade at the instance of either party." The company having sued the respondents for services under this section, the respondents objected to the jurisdiction of the court on the ground that the matter was one for the arbitrator to determine.

Held, that as there had been no difference existing between the parties before action brought the arbitrator had not and the court had jurisdiction.

The decision of the Court of Appeal, [1898] 2 Q. B. 7, reversed and the decision of Wright and Darling, JJ., restored upon the above ground.

Query whether the arbitrator can determine any matter except the reasonableness of the charges.—LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN AND GREAT WESTERN JOINT RAILWAY COS. v. BILLINGTON (LIMITED), H.L.; [1899] A. C. 79; 68 L. J. Q. B. 162; 79 L. T. 503.

See also Canada, Law of, 5; Contract, 7; Master and Servant, 29.

RECEIVER.—See Mortgage, 12; Practice, 29-32.

RENT:—

1. Rent-charge—Eviction from part of land—Apportionment of rent-charge—Distinction between grant and reservation of rent.—By a deed of feoffment made in 1840 A., in consideration of the rent thereinafter reserved, enfeoffed land to B. and his heirs, to the use that A. and his heirs should receive thereout the said rent, and subject to and charged as aforesaid, to the usual uses to bar dower in favour of B.; and, by the same deed, for the consideration aforesaid, B. granted to A. and his heirs the above-mentioned rent and covenanted to pay the same rent. Part of the land having been recently recovered by title paramount, a question arose whether the rent-charge ought to be apportioned or still continued to be payable in full.

Held, that, a rent-charge being reserved to A. on the face of the deed in priority to B.'s estate in fee, no effect could be given to B.'s grant to A. of the same rent.

Held, therefore, according to the distinction drawn in Co. Litt., p. 148*b*, between the grant of a rent and the reservation of a rent in respect of apportionment, that the above-mentioned rent, being a rent reserved, was apportionable.—HARTLEY v. MADDOCKS, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 573; [1899] 2 Ch. 199; 68 L. J. Ch. 496; 80 L. T. 755.

2. Way-leaves—Rent or sum in gross—Tenement—Statute 32 Hen. 8, c. 34—Railway company.—Way-leaves over land are an incorporeal hereditament and a tenement, and sums of money covenanted to be paid for such way-leaves granted for a term of years are not sums in gross, but are rents, the right to which follows the reversion after the term, under the statute 32 Hen. 8, c. 34.

This is the case even where some of such sums are payable to the lessor in respect of traffic passing over the lands of others and not over any part of his own.

Decision of Byrne, J. (ante, p. 59), affirmed.—HASTINGS (LORD) v. NORTH-EASTERN RAILWAY CO., C.A.; [1899] 1 Ch. 656; 68 L. J. Ch. 315; 80 L. T. 217.

See also Inland Revenue, 28; Landlord and Tenant, 19.

RES JUDICATA.—See Justices, 9.

REVENUE.—See Inland Revenue.

RESTRAINT of TRADE:—

1. Contract—Reasonableness—Limit of space—Limit of time—Injunction—Evidence of reasonableness inadmissible.—An agreement made in 1894 between the plaintiff, a hardware manufacturer at Dudley, and the defendant, a young man of twenty-four, on the defendant entering the plaintiff's service, contained a restrictive clause that the defendant would not, during his service or after the determination thereof, divulge to any person the secrets of the plaintiff or the mode of conducting his business, or any part thereof, or any information with regard to the same, or, after the determination of such service, work for or serve any other person or firm carrying on the same kind of business, or any part thereof, within a radius of twenty-five miles from the plaintiff's works at Dudley, without his consent. In 1897 the defendant left the plaintiff's service, and in 1899, without his consent, entered the service of a firm carrying on a business similar to that of the plaintiff about three miles from his works.

Held (affirming Stirling, J.), that the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction, since the restrictive clause was not void either as being unreasonable for the plaintiff's protection or as being unlimited in point of time, and so binding the defendant during his whole life.

In an action by a trader against his servant for breach of a contract restricting him from serving a rival trader, evidence from persons in the trade giving their views as to the reasonableness or unreasonableness of the contract is inadmissible, since the reasonableness of a contract depends on its true construction and legal effect, and is consequently a question for the court alone.—HAYNES v. DOMAN, C.A.; [1899] 2 Ch. 13; 68 L. J. Ch. 419.

2. Covenant—Validity—Reasonableness—Injunction.—B., being in the employ of the plaintiffs, who were wholesale and retail hay and straw merchants carrying on business in the United Kingdon and elsewhere, covenanted that he would not, "for the space of twelve months next after his leaving or being dismissed, carry on the business of hay and straw merchant, or enter into the service of, or act as agent for, any person or persons carrying on the business of hay and straw merchant in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, or in France, or in the kingdom of Belgium, or Holland, or in the Dominion of Canada."

B., having voluntarily left the plaintiff's employ, immediately entered the service of a rival hay and straw merchant in London.

Held, by the Court of Appeal (dissentiente Vaughan Williams, L.J.), that the restraint being reasonably required for the protection of the plaintiffs, having regard to the nature of their business, was not void, and that, therefore, B. must be restrained by injunction from committing a breach of his covenant. —UNDERWOOD v. BARKER, C.A., 347; [1899] 1 Ch. 300; 68 L. J. Ch. 201; 80 L. T. 306.

RIVER:—

Pollution—Stream—"Putrid solid matter"—Nuisance—Remedies—Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 75), ss. 2, 17, 20.—The defendant owned weaving sheds, worked by steam-power, on the bank of a stream, and he had for many years prior to the passing of the Act lawfully exercised the right of impounding and diverting water from the stream for the purposes of his business. Such water was diverted from the stream through a goit and impounded in the defendant's reservoir, and contained substances discharged into the stream from paper manufactories, not belonging to the defendant, higher up the river. Whilst the water was so impounded those substances sank to the bottom and became putrescent in the form of sludge. Part of the water, when thus cleared, was taken from the reservoir and used for condensing purposes. Once a week the reservoir was cleaned by opening sluice-gates into the river and allowing the water to flow through the reservoir and out into the stream, carrying with it the sludge deposited in the reservoir. The effluent water as it went into the stream through the sluice-gates contained 97·6 per cent. of water and 2·4 per cent. of solid water.

Held, that the solid matter, when it entered the stream from the reservoir, was "solid matter in suspension in water" within section 20, and therefore not "solid matter" within the meaning of section 2 of the Act;

Held, also, that, assuming that what was put into the stream was "solid matter" within the meaning of section 2, the defendant was protected by section 17, and therefore not liable to be proceeded against under the Act.—RIVER RIBBLE JOINT COMMITTEE v. HALLIWELL, Q.B.D.; [1899] 1 Q. B. 27; 68 L. J. Q. B. 20; 79 L. T. 626.

See also Local Government, 13.

SALE of GOODS:—

1. Documents of title—Buyer obtaining possession with consent of seller—Bill of exchange not accepted—Bill of lading indorsed to sub-purchaser—Title to goods—Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 25, sub-section 2—Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 2, sub-section 1.—The seller of copper forwarded to the buyer the bill of lading, under which the copper had been shipped, and a bill of exchange for the price for the buyer's acceptance. The buyer, when he received the document, was about to become bankrupt. He did not accept the bill of exchange, but indorsed the bill of lading to the plaintiffs, with whom he had previously entered into a contract for the sale of copper. The seller stopped the goods in transitu.

Held, that the buyer had obtained possession of the bill of lading with the consent of the seller within the meaning of section 25, sub-section 2, of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, and that the plaintiffs, who took the bill of lading in good faith and without notice, had a title to the goods which defeated the seller's right to stop the goods in transitu.

Judgment of Mathew, J., [1898] 2 Q. B. 61, 46 W. R. Dig. 149, reversed.—CAHN v. POCKETT'S, &c., STEAM PACKET CO. (LIMITED), C.A., 422; [1899] 1 Q. B. 643; 68 L. J. Q. B. 515; 80 L. T. 269.

2. Oral contract—Part payment—Agreement that seller should retain sum previously overpaid him—Statute of Frauds, s. 17—Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 4, sub-section 1.—Where one of the terms of an oral contract for the sale of goods of a greater value than £10 was that the seller should retain in part payment a sum which the buyer had by some mistake previously overpaid him,

Held, that there had been no part payment sufficient to satisfy section 4, sub-section 1, of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893.

Walker v. Nussey, 16 M. & W. 302, followed.—NORTON v. DAVISON, C.A., 275; [1899] 1 Q. B. 401; 68 L. J. Q. B. 265; 80 L. T. 139.

SETTLED LAND:—

1. Capital moneys—Money liable to be laid out in the purchase of land—Settled Land Act, 1882, s. 33.—By a marriage settlement lands were conveyed to trustees in trust for sale, with a power to invest the proceeds in government and other personal securities, and it was declared that it should be lawful for the trustees, with the consent of the husband and wife, who were successively tenants for life of the trust funds, to call in or sell any investments, and to invest the proceeds in the purchase of freehold hereditaments to be conveyed to them upon trust for sale, and to hold the proceeds upon the trusts of the settlement. The husband, who was tenant for life, desired to have some improvements made upon the land which remained unsold, and took out this summons asking for leave to submit a scheme of improvements under section 26 of the Settled Land Act, and for a declaration that the trustees had power under section 33 to sell investments which they held upon the trusts of the settlement and apply the proceeds in making the improvements.

Held, that the words "money which is liable to be laid out in the purchase of land" in section 33 of the Act do not mean which must be, but which may be so laid out, and that the trustees had power to raise money out of the investments in their hands for the improvements.—SOLTAU'S SETTLED ESTATES, RE, Ch.D. North, J.; 68 L. J. Ch. 39; 79 L. T. 335.

2. Heirlooms, sale of—Sanction of court—Discretion—Tenant for life in pecuniary difficulties caused by extravagance—Opposition of remaindermen—Jewel of unique character—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), s. 37.—The fact that a tenant for life has, by his own extravagance, brought himself into pecuniary difficulties, will not induce the court to relieve him by ordering a sale of heirlooms under the discretionary power conferred by section 37 of the Settled Land Act, 1882.

An application by the tenant for life for the sanction of the court to a contract by him for the sale of the Tavernier Blue (or Hope) Diamond refused.

The court ought, on such an application, to have regard to the wishes of persons entitled in remainder, and even to their sentimental preferences —as e.g., the wish to preserve in the family a celebrated jewel of a unique kind. It ought to consider what was the intention of the settlor, what are the wishes of the family generally, and what would be for the benefit of the estate as a whole.

Decision of Byrne, J. (ante, p. 536), affirmed.—HOPE, RE, DE CETTO v. HOPE, C.A., 641.

3. Mansion-house—Trust to allow widow to occupy castle and lands so long as she might wish to do so—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), ss. 2, 38, 58.—A mansion-house was vested in trustees for a term of 1,000 years upon trust to allow the plaintiff to occupy the same rent free so long as she might wish to continue to do so.

Held, that the plaintiff was tenant for life within the meaning of the Settled Land Act, 1882; but held, that the trustees of the term were not trustees for the purposes of the settled Land Act.—CARNE'S SETTLED ESTATES, RE, Ch.D. North, J., 352; [1899] 1 Ch. 324; 68 L. J. Ch. 120.

4. Pecuniary legacy—Gift over in event of sale of settled land—Invalidity—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), s. 51.—The widow of a settlor died in 1869 leaving a will bequeathing personal property to the person entitled to the ownership and enjoyment of the settled estate, with a gift over in the event of a sale of the settled real estate.

Held, that the gift over was inoperative if a sale was made under the Settled Land Acts.—SMITH, RE, GROSE-SMITH v. BRIDGES, Ch.D. North, J., 357; [1899] 1 Ch. 331; 80 L. T. 218.

5. Settlement — Succession — Ecclesiastical land — Land granted by bishop to grantee during tenure of office—Settled Land Act, 1882, s. 2.—The Settled Land Act, 1882, does not apply to ecclesiastical property.—BATH AND WELLS (BISHOP OF), RE; [1899] 2 Ch. 138; 68 L. J. Ch. 524.

6. Undivided share—Power of tenant for life to sell —Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), s. 2. sub-section 5, 10 (i.).—The Settled Land Act, 1882, enables the tenant for life of an undivided moiety of land to sell that moiety without the concurrence of the owner of the other undivided moiety.

In re Collinge's Settled Estates, 36 W. R. 264, 36 Ch. D. 516, overruled.—COOPER v. BELSEY, C.A., 443; [1899] 1 Ch. 639; 68 L. J. Ch. 258; 80 L. T. 69.

7. Vendor and purchaser—Settlement—Jointure and portions created by prior settlement—Resettlement—Compound settlement—Title—Power of tenant for life to convey free from jointure and portions—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), ss. 2 (1), 20, 50.—By deed dated the 15th of March, 1861, the O. Estate was settled to the use of C. F. M. for life, with remainder to the use of his first and other sons successively in tail male. By a settlement dated the 7th of August, 1865, in exercise of a power reserved to him by the previous deed, C. F. M., on his marriage, appointed a rent-charge to his wife, and portions to his younger children, both secured by terms of years. By a disentailing assurance of the 28th of January, 1889, the O. Estate was disentailed. By a settlement dated the 30th of January, 1889, C. F. M. and his son appointed the O. Estate to the use of C. F. M. for his life, with remainders over. The life estate was not expressed to be in restoration or continuation of any estate in C. F. M.

Held, that the settlement of the 30th of January, 1889, was not a settlement complete in itself, but, with the deeds of 1861, 1865, and 1889, formed a compound settlement within the meaning of the Settled Land Act, 1882; and that, therefore, C. F. M. could sell the O. Estate freed from the jointure and portions charged thereon.

In re Marquis of Ailesbury and Lord Iveagh, 41 W. R. 644, [1893] 2 Ch. 345, approved.—MUNDY AND ROPER'S CONTRACT, RE, C.A., 226; [1899] 1 Ch. 275; 68 L. J. Ch. 135; 79 L. T. 583.

8. Voluntary settlement—Tenant for life—Trustees —Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), ss. 2, 51.—By a voluntary settlement made in March, 1890, a certain house and manor together with other hereditaments were conveyed to J. to the use that M. might receive an annuity thereout, and, subject thereto, to the use of trustees for the term of 1,000 years upon the trusts therein declared with remainder to the use of J. his heirs and assigns. And it was thereby declared that the trustees should stand possessed of the premises comprised in the term of 1,000 years upon trust to allow M. to occupy the mansion-house, pleasure-grounds, gardens, stables, and six fields on the estate rent free so long as she might wish to continue to do so; and upon further trust out of the rents and profits of the premises, or by any other reasonable ways and means, to raise and pay succession duty, and also by mortgage of the premises, or out of the rents and profits, or by any other reasonable ways and means, to raise and pay the sums of £680, and by the ways and means aforesaid, at such time or times as the trustees should think fit, to raise £40,000 in satisfaction of a mortgage upon the premises. And the settlement contained a covenant to permit M., so long as she chose to reside in the house, to use the furniture, plate, and effects belonging thereto; and if, after her death, or after her ceasing to live there, J. should choose to live there, to permit him while living there to use the furniture, plate, and effects; provided that neither M. nor J. should be entitled to remove the same therefrom. M. entered into possession of the premises and still remained in possession thereof. Various differences arose as to the right of the parties under the provisions of the settlement, and the trustees brought an action against J. for the determination thereof.

On the hearing of the action the questions were raised whether M. was tenant for life under the Settled Land Acts, and whether the trustees of the settlement were trustees for the purposes of these Acts.

Held, that M. was tenant for life under the Settled Land Acts, but that the trustees were not trustees for the purposes of these Acts.—ST. DONATS SETTLED ESTATES, RE, Ch.D. North, J.; 79 L. T. 542.

See also Vendor and Purchaser, 4.

SETTLEMENT:—

1. Marriage settlement—After-acquired property—Covenant to settle — Power — General — Special — Exercise by will—"In pursuance of all powers and authorities in anywise enabling me thereto direct, limit, and appoint."—By a marriage settlement in 1859 real estate was settled for the benefit of S. R. and her husband W. R. for their lives and then for the children of S. as she should by deed or will appoint, and, in default, to them in equal shares, and if no such child then for such persons as S. should by deed or will appoint, and in default for S., her heirs and assigns. And in the settlement was a covenant by W. that after-acquired property of S. should be conveyed to the trustees to be held by them upon the trusts of the settlement. W. and S. R. married and had four children, one only of whom was now living. W. R. died in 1891. By her will made in that year S., "in pursuance of all powers and authorities in anywise enabling me thereto," directed, limited, and appointed her residuary estate as to a moiety for her son M. and his wife and children, and as to the other moiety to persons not objects of the special power. She died in 1898. During her coverture she had become entitled to certain real and personal estate which was never conveyed to the trustees of the settlement.

Held, (1) that the after-acquired property was not bound by the covenant in the settlement; (2) that there was not sufficient evidence to show an intention on the part of the testatrix to exercise her special power of appointment in favour of her son M. — RICKMAN, RE, STOKES v. RICKMAN, Ch.D. Stirling, J.; 80 L. T. 518.

2. Marriage settlement—Covenant to settle after-acquired property—Second settlement.—By an ante-nuptial settlement, dated the 15th of March, 1879, the wife covenanted to settle after-acquired property on trust for herself for life, with remainder to her children. By another settlement, dated the 7th of May, 1879, the wife covenanted to settle after-acquired property on herself for life, with remainder to the husband for life, and, after the death of the survivor, with remainder to such persons as the wife should appoint. The marriage was solemnized on the 10th of May, 1879.

Held (in the absence of evidence), that the covenant contained in the first deed was not revoked by the second deed.—GUNDRY, RE, MILLS v. MILLS, Ch.D. North, J., 137; [1898] 2 Ch. 504; 79 L. T. 438.

3. Marriage settlement—Illegal consideration—Marriage with sister of deceased wife.—On the 30th of April, 1873, a widower executed a deed, by which, in contemplation of a marriage which "had been agreed upon and was intended shortly to be solemnized" between himself and Clara Probyn, he conveyed real estate to trustees in fee, to the use of himself and his assigns during his life, with remainder to the use of Clara Probyn during her life, "provided she shall remain a widow and unmarried; and from and immediately after her decease or marriage, whichever event shall first happen," to such uses as the settlor should by deed or will appoint, and, in default of appointment, to the use of such person or persons as would be entitled thereto if the deed had not executed. Clara Probyn was in fact a sister of the settlor's deceased wife, though this was not stated in the deed. On the 5th of March, 1877, he went through the ceremony of marriage with her, and she afterwards lived with him as his wife. He died in November, 1891, intestate. He had not exercised the power of appointment by deed reserved to him by the settlement. During the life of his son and heir-at-law Clara Probyn received the rents of the property without objection on his part.

Held, that the trust for Clara Probyn was illegal and invalid, and that the property was held on trust for the son's administratrix, she being, under the Land Transfer Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65), his real representative.

Ayerst v. Jenkins, [1873] L. R. 16 Eq. 275, distinguished.—PHILLIPS v. PROBYN, Ch.D. North, J.; [1899] 1 Ch. 811; 68 L. J. Ch. 401; 80 L. T. 513.

4. Marriage settlement — Marriage with deceased husband's brother— Invalid marriage—Limitations after "solemnization of the intended marriage"—Construction.—A widow, being about to marry her deceased husband's brother, executed a settlement by which her real estate was conveyed to trustees to hold to her use in fee "until the intended marriage" and "from and after the solemnization of the said intended marriage" upon trust for her for life with remainder in fee to her younger son. She shortly afterwards went through the form of marriage with her deceased husband's brother, and subsequently died intestate.

Held, that the words "solemnization of marriage" could be construed only as meaning a valid marriage, and that extrinsic evidence was not admissible to show that this was not the intention of the parties; and that the heir-at-law was therefore entitled to the property.—NEALE v. NEALE, C.A.; 79 L. T. 629.

5. Tenant for life—Payment off of mortgage—Presumption.—Where a tenant for life of a settlement pays off out of his own moneys a mortgage on a reversionary interest, assigned to the trustees of the settlement subject to the mortgage, and takes a reconveyance which in effect makes the payment off of the mortgage enure for the benefit of the settlement, the court will make a declaration that, notwithstanding the form of reconveyance, the tenant for life is entitled to have the charge kept alive for his own benefit, and that the sum so paid off has priority over the settlement.—GIFFORD (LORD) v. FITZHARDINGE (LORD), Ch.D. North, J., 618; [1899] 2 Ch. 32; 68 L. J. Ch. 529.

See also Bankruptcy, 34; Infant, 4.

SHERIFF.—See Bankruptcy, 13, 14, 31, 32.

SHIP:—

1. Bill of lading—Exemption of shipowner from liability—"Defects latent on beginning voyage or otherwise."—A bill of lading contained, among other exceptions, one by which the shipowner was not to be liable for loss or damage arising from "defects latent on beginning voyage or otherwise" in hull, tackle, boilers, or machinery, or their appurtenances.

Held, affirming the judgment of Bigham, J., that the exception did not cover a defect which was obvious at the commencement of the voyage. —OWNERS OF CARGO ON BOARD STEAMSHIP WAIKATO v. NEW ZEALAND SHIPPING CO., C.A.; [1899] 1 Q. B. 56; 68 L. J. Q. B. 1; 79 L. T. 326.

2. Charter-party—Advance freight—Destruction of part of cargo before sailing—Liability to pay advance freight on cargo destroyed.—By a charter-party it was provided that the charterers should load the ship with a full and complete cargo such as would load the vessel to her water-marks, and that the freight, which was to be at a certain rate per ton on the quantity delivered to the consignees, should be due and paid as follows: "Two-thirds in cash three days after sailing, ship lost or not lost, and the balance on unloading and right delivery of the cargo"; and that, "in the event of the charterers not loading vessel to her marks, the freight shall be paid on the basis of 4,350 tons, which the owners guarantee to be vessel's capacity of cargo for the voyage."

A portion of the cargo which had been loaded on board was destroyed by fire—which was a peril mutually excepted—before the sailing of the ship, and the ship sailed with other cargo on board. Three days after the sailing of the ship the shipowners claimed, but the charterers refused to pay, two-thirds advance freight on the whole cargo, including the part destroyed.

Held, that the shipowners were not entitled to the two-thirds advance freight on the part of the cargo which had been destroyed, but that they were entitled to the advance on the basis of the 4,350 tons, less the part destroyed.—WEIR v. GIRVIN, Q.B.D., 365; [1899] 1 Q. B. 193; 68 L. J. Q. B. 170; 79 L. T. 596.

3. Charter-party—Berth for loading—Order by charterers—"To load always afloat"—Detention—Tides—Liability.—A charter-party provided that a ship was to proceed to a certain dock at M., or so near thereto as she could safely get, and there load, always afloat, as and where ordered by the charterers. The character of the harbour at M. was such (as both parties were aware) that it was impossible to load always afloat. The ship proceeded to the named dock, and was ordered by the charterers to a berth where she loaded part of her cargo, but, in consequence of falling tides, left the dock for the necessary interval, and then returned and completed her cargo.

Held, that the charterers were not liable for the detention of the ship.

By Lord Herschell.—The obligations and rights created by the charter-party must be construed with reference to the natural conditions of the particular harbour specified as the place of loading by the charter-party.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (46 W. R. 68, [1897] 2 Q. B. 485) affirmed.—CARLTON STEAMSHIP CO. v. CASTLE MAIL PACKETS CO., H.L., 65; [1898] A. C. 486.

4. Charter-party—Construction—"Working days of twenty-four hours"—Demurrage.—By a charter-party shipowners agreed to provide the charterers with ships for the carriage of 50,000 tons of iron ore during a period of twelve months. In the charter-party there was a clause as follows: "Charterers or their agents to be allowed 350 tons per working day of twenty-four hours, weather permitting (Sundays and holidays excepted), for loading and discharging . . . and to count from 6 a.m. of the day following the day when the steamer is reported, unless she be reported before noon, in which case time to count from notice of readiness . . . steamer to work at night if required, also on Sundays and holidays, such time not to count as lay days unless used."

Held (affirming the judgment of Bigham, J., dissentiente Rigby, L.J.), that the charterers were entitled to have twenty-four working hours to load or discharge each 350 tons.—RHYMNEY STEAMSHIP CO. v. IBERIAN IRON ORE CO., C.A.; 79 L. T. 240.

5. Charter-party—Colliery guarantee—Demurrage—Lay days—Exceptions—Colliery working days.—On the 16th of November, 1896, D. & Sons entered into a contract for the delivery to the U. S. C. of 25,000 tons of F. coal by instalments. In order to carry out the contract the U. S. C. on the 25th of January, 1898, chartered the S. to take delivery of the coal, and following that charter-party D. & Sons entered into a colliery guarantee with the U. S. C. containing the obligations of D. & Sons with regard to demurrage and lay days. The colliery guarantee was incorporated into the charter-party. On the 31st of January, 1898, the S. received a stemming note from D. & Sons. The lay days began to run on the 16th of March and expired on the 31st of March, and thereafter the captain daily sent demurrage notes to D. & Sons. On the 9th of April a strike took place at the colliery from which the coal was to be delivered. The ship continued to wait for her cargo, and no intimation was given by D. & Sons that they did not hope to give delivery within a reasonable time until the 24th of May. The shipowners, the S. S. C., then took steps to obtain another charter-party, which they succeeded in doing on the 13th of June, but at a lower freight, and on the 17th of June the ship got away. They claimed demurrage from the 31st of March up to the 17th of June.

Held, on the construction of the charter-party and the colliery guarantee incorporated therewith, that the shipowners, the S. S. C., were entitled as against the U. S. company, the charterers, to demurrage from the 13th of March to the 17th of June, for they were entitled to demurrage for every day which ordinarily would be "colliery working days," although in fact no work was done at the collieries owing to the strike; and further, they could also recover the difference between the freight obtained in the second charter-party and that in the original one.

Held, further, that the U. S. company could recover against D. & Sons what they had to pay the steamship company as damages for breach of the colliery guarantee.

There was a further claim by the U. S. company against D. & Sons for the non-delivery of the coals in conformity with the contract of November, 1896.

Held, that the U. S. company were entitled to damages on this head, and that the measure of such damages was the difference between the market price and the contract price when they should have been delivered, the date of such delivery, taking into consideration the charter-party and the colliery guarantee, being extended to the 24th of May.—SAXON STEAMSHIP CO. v. UNION STEAMSHIP CO.; UNION STEAMSHIP CO. v. DAVIS, Q.B.D.; 68 L. J. Q. B. 58; 79 L. T. 486.

6. Charter-party—To ship coal ordered by charterers—Vessel loaded subject to colliery guarantee—Strike at colliery—Refusal to accept guarantee—Breach of charter-party.—By a charter-party made on the 14th of January between the plaintiffs, the owners, and the defendants, the charterers, the Curzon was, after discharging her inward cargo at Liverpool, to proceed to Cardiff to such loading berth as the charterers should name, and there load a cargo of steam coal as ordered by the charterers which they bind themselves to ship except in the event of strike of shippers' pitmen. "The vessel to be loaded as customary, but subject in all respects to the colliery guarantee in working days as may be arranged. Any claim for demurrage in loading to be settled with the colliery direct, no liability attaching to the charterers in respect thereof."

On the 3rd of February the defendants bought a cargo of Hood's Merthyr Colliery coal for the Curzon.

On the 6th of April Hood's Colliery stopped owing to the strike, and on the 26th of April the defendants procured from the colliery the usual guarantee whereby they undertook to load in twenty days, subject to the usual exception as to strikes.

The ship's agents refused to accept this guarantee, as the colliery was on strike, and required to be furnished by a colliery that was working, 15 per cent. about not being on strike.

Held, that the defendants were not bound to furnish any other guarantee, and that the plaintiffs could not recover damages for a breach of the charter-party.—DOBELL v. GREEN, Q.B.D.; 80 L. T. 19.

7. Charter-party—Warranty of seaworthiness—Voyage divided into stages for coaling purposes.—Where, in a contract for sea carriage, the voyage is such that it is not reasonably possible for the steamer to carry, in addition to her cargo, sufficient coals to take her from her port of loading to her ultimate destination, and the voyage is therefore, for coaling purposes, divided into stages, there is an implied warranty that the vessel shall, at the commencement of each stage, be seaworthy so far as regards the supply of coal necessary for that stage.—"VORTIGERN," THE, C.A., 437; [1899] P. 140; 68 L J. P. 49; 80 L. T. 382.

8. Collision—Compulsory pilotage—Pilot alone in fault—Costs.—Where, in a collision action, the defendants, while denying that the collision was caused or contributed to by the negligence of themselves or their servants, pleaded that the negligence, if any (which was denied), was solely that of a compulsory pilot, the court having found that the collision was caused by the negligent navigation of the compulsory pilot alone, ordered the action to be dismissed with costs.—"BURMA," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.; 80 L. T. 808.

9. Collision—Compulsory pilotage—River Scheldt.—Although pilotage is compulsory in the River Scheldt, the charge of the ship is not surrendered to the pilot so as to free the shipowners from liability for collision caused by the pilot's negligence.—"PRINS HENDRIK," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.; 68 L. J. P. 86; 80 L. T. 838.

10. Collision—Compulsory pilotage—Vessel bound from abroad proceeding from one port in the United Kingdom to another to complete discharge—Coasting trade—Port in Europe north and east of Brest—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), s. 625, sub-sections 1, 4.—A steamship proceeding from one port in the United Kingdom to another port in the United Kingdom in the course of a voyage from a foreign port to both those ports is not a vessel engaged in the coasting trade, and is therefore not exempt from compulsory pilotage under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, s. 625, sub-section 1.

The word "Europe" in the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, s. 625, sub-sections 3, 4, is limited to the Continent of Europe, and therefore a vessel trading from Ipswich to Leith is not a vessel trading from a port in Europe north and east of Brest.—"GLANYSTWYTH," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.; 68 L. J. P. 37; 80 L. T. 204.

11. Collision—Damage—Collision caused by running foul of sunken barge—Negligence of owner of barge in not providing for proper lighting of wreck, where wreck not abandoned—Liability of owner of wreck if independent contractor employed to raise wreck for him.—The owner of a vessel sunk in the fairway of a navigable river who has not abandoned the wreck, but has agreed with an independent contractor to raise her for him, is answerable in damages for the loss sustained by the owners of another vessel running foul of the wreck without negligence, in consequence of the wreck being improperly lighted.—"SNARK," THE, P.D. & Ad.D., 398; [1899] P. 74; 68 L. J. P. 22; 80 L. T. 25.

12. Collision—Damage—Registrar and merchants—Vessel totally lost in collision—Loss of beneficial charter-party.—The owners of a vessel totally lost in consequence of a collision with another vessel when bound in ballast on a voyage to take in cargo under a charter-party already entered into can, if such other vessel is proved, in an action of damage instituted against her, to have been to blame for the collision, recover against her damages for the loss of any profits which, but for the collision, they would have gained by carrying out the charter-party.—"KATE," THE, P.D. & Ad.D., 669; 68 L. J. P. 41; 80 L. T. 423.

13. Collision — Lightship — Substitution of spare lightship—Demurrage—Hire—Deprivation of use of chattel—Public body—Right to recover—Measure of damages.—The lightship C., the property of the plaintiffs, the Mersey Docks and Harbour Board, was sunk in a collision with the defendants' steamship M. owing to the negligence of those in charge of The M.

The board maintains six lightships for the service of the port, four of which are kept at the stations in the Mersey and its approaches, the other two being kept in reserve. Upon the happening of the collision, one of the latter, The O., was substituted for The C. It was admitted by the board that The O. would have been unemployed during the period she was filling the place of The C. The board claimed a sum of money representing either demurrage of The C. during the time she was under repair in consequence of the collision, or, alternatively, hire of The O. during the time she was occupying the place of The C.

Held, by the Court of Appeal, that the case could not be distinguished from The Greta Holme, [1897] A. C. 596, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover substantial damages.

Where a person has been deprived of the use of a chattel by a wrongdoer, he is entitled to damages simply because of such deprivation.

The deprivation may also be the subject of special damage.—"MEDIANA," THE, C.A.; 68 L. J. P. 26; 80 L. T. 173.

14. Collision—Second anchor light—"At or near the stern"—Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, art. 11.—The plaintiffs' steamship, 455 feet long, with two masts, was at anchor at night in the River Elbe, athwart the channel, slowly swinging to the first of the flood with her starboard side up river. She had two anchor lights up, the one aft hanging inside the fore-shroud of the port main rigging, 120 feet from the stern.

The defendants' steamship coming down the river did not see the after light until too late to avoid a collision, and struck the plaintiffs' vessel on her starboard side between the forward and after lights. By article 11 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, the second light is to be carried "at or near the stern."

Held, affirming the decision of Bucknill, J., [1899] W. N. 53, that the plaintiffs' vessel was to blame, as the position of the light aft was a breach of the statutory rule, and the plaintiffs had failed to prove that the infringement could not possibly have contributed to the collision; but varying the decision by finding the defendants' vessel also to blame for defective look-out, as the position of the light was such that those in charge of her might have seen it sooner.—"GANNET," THE, C.A.; [1899] P. 230.

15. Collision—Steamship and sailing ship—Fog—Duty to slacken speed, or stop or reverse if necessary—Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, 1897—Arts. 16, 20, 22, and 23.—A steamship on a N. by W. ½ W. course, in a dense fog, the wind being about south, heard a single blast of a fog horn on her port bow, whereupon her engines were at once stopped. Shortly afterwards another blast of the fog horn was heard closer to and nearer on the bow, and her engines were then reversed full speed and her helm put hard aport, but a collision occurred.

Held, that the steamship was to blame for not reversing when she stopped her engines, since those on board of her ought to have known that the fog horn they heard came from a sailing vessel on the starboard tack not far off, and that with the wind where it was the sailing vessel must be on a course crossing that of the steamship from port to starboard, that it was the duty of the steamship under articles 20 and 22 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea to avoid passing ahead of the sailing vessel, and, to enable her to perform that duty, it was necessary under article 23 to reverse her engines.—"MERTHYR," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.; 79 L. T. 676.

16.—Collision—Thames—Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, art. 4 (a)—Vessel aground—Whether Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea apply in River Thames.—Plaintiffs' vessel, while proceeding up the Thames, took ground at Limehouse Reach about 3.20 p.m., and remained hard and fast. She sounded the four-blast signal prescribed by article 40 of the Thames Bye-laws to signify that she was out of command. Defendants' vessel, which was following her up the river, disregarded these signals and ran into her stern.

In an action by the plaintiffs to recover damages the defendants alleged that the plaintiffs' vessel had failed to carry two black balls as prescribed by article 4 (a) of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea in the case of vessels out of command.

Held, that, assuming without deciding that the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea applied to the River Thames, article 4 (a) of those regulations was not applicable, as it applied only to vessels not under command whilst afloat; and, further, even if that article did apply to vessels aground, the case was governed by article 40 of the Thames Bye-laws.—"CARLOTTA," THE, P.D. & Ad.D., 702; [1899] P. 223; 68 L. J. P. 87; 80 L. T. 664.

17. Contract of sale of cargo—Delivery to be "at any safe port"—Bills of lading—Delivery to be "at any safe port (Manchester excepted)"—Meaning of "port of Manchester"—Commercial practice—Legal definition—Manchester Ship Canal Act, 1885.—By section 3 of the Manchester Ship Canal Act, 1885, the port of Manchester is defined to include the whole of the Manchester Ship Canal above Eastham Locks, and the former port of Runcorn is abolished.

Nevertheless, on its being proved that in commercial matters it was customary for the words "port of Manchester" to be used as referring only to Manchester and the waters adjacent thereto, and to treat Runcorn Lay-bye, which is on the Manchester Ship Canal, but about twenty-four miles from Manchester, as a separate port,

Held, that in interpreting shipping documents these words were to be read in that sense, and not in their legal significance.

B., W., & Co. sold a cargo of grain by the ship V. to G. & Co., delivery to be given "at any safe port in the United Kingdom."

When the bills of lading arrived it was found that by them—as by the chapter-party—delivery was to be given "at any safe port in the United Kingdom (Manchester excepted)."

G. & Co. notified B., W., & Co. that they would not accept the documents with this variance.

B., W., & Co. then, by arrangement with the owner of The V., had the words "Manchester excepted" erased.

At the proper time the documents were presented to G. & Co. so altered, when they refused to accept them, on the ground that they had been altered without their consent or the consent of the master of The V.

On the dispute being referred to arbitration, the arbitrators found that for a vessel of The V.'s tonnage the Manchester Ship Canal above bridges was not a safe port; that Runcorn Lay-bye, the last dock below bridges, was a safe port; that under a charter-party to proceed to a safe port (Manchester excepted) the ship could be compelled to go to Runcorn Lay-bye, and that, though the port of Manchester was defined by section 3 of the Manchester Ship Canal Act, 1885, as including the whole ship canal, and the port of Runcorn was abolished as a separate port, yet the weight of evidence was that in commercial matters "port of Manchester" was used as meaning Manchester itself and the waters adjacent thereto, and Runcorn Lay-bye was treated as a separate port.

Held, on these findings, "Manchester excepted" here meant Manchester and the adjacent waters only excepted; that, so read, Manchester was not a safe port for The V., and that accordingly its insertion in the bills of lading was an immaterial variation in the contract of sale, and its erasure was also immaterial; and that, therefore, G. & Co. were bound to accept the documents.—GOODBODY AND BALFOUR'S ARBITRATION, RE, Q.B.D.; 80 L. T. 188.

18. Harbour authority — Collision — Damage — Efficient tugs.—The appellants were the port and harbour authority of Preston, and were entitled to make contracts for towage of vessels using that port. The respondent's ship, under the directions of the harbour authority, was towed up the river on the flood tide towards Preston, preceded by two other vessels, also in tow. These tugs were hired by the appellants. Owing to the delay of the foremost tug the respondent's ship grounded and received considerable damage.

Held, that the appellant corporation were liable for the damage caused.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (The Ratata, [1897] P. 118, 45 W. R. Dig. 118, 152) affirmed.—PRESTON (MAYOR) v. BIORNSTAD, "RATATA," THE, H.L., 156; [1898] A. C. 513.

19. Pilotage—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, ss. 603, 625 (4)—Merchant Shipping Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 61), s. 1.—The provisions of section 1 of the Merchant Shipping (Exemption from Pilotage) Act, 1897, abolishing exemptions from compulsory pilotage contained in 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, s. 59, and an Order in Council dated the 18th of February, 1854, do not abolish the exemptions from compulsory pilotage contained in section 625 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894.

A vessel bound from Norway or Sweden to this country is a vessel trading from a port in Europe north and east of Brest within the meaning of section 625 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, and is consequently, when not carrying passengers, exempt from compulsory pilotage.—"COLUMBIA," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.; 80 L. T. 203.

20. Salvage — Amount — Salving vessels specially equipped—Principles of assessment of award.—In reviewing an award for salvage made by the judge of the Admiralty Division and affirmed by the Court of Appeal this House will not interfere with the amount awarded unless it appears that the established principles have not been satisfactorily applied.

The decision of the Court of Appeal ([1898] P. 97) affirmed.—OWNERS OF "GLENGYLE," HER CARGO AND FREIGHT v. NEPTUNE SALVAGE CO.; "GLENGYLE," THE, H.L.; [1898] A. C. 519.

21. Salvage — Detention of salved property by receiver of wreck—"Salvage due under this Act"—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), ss. 544, 546, 552.—By section 552 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, "Where salvage is due to any person under this Act," the receiver shall, if the salvage is due in respect of services rendered in assisting any vessel, or in saving life therefrom, or in saving the cargo or apparel thereof, detain the vessel, or cargo, or apparel.

Held, that the words "salvage due under this Act" were not confined to cases where there was a claim for life salvage under sections 544 and 545 of the Act, or where the claim was for salvage services rendered to a wreck or vessel stranded or in distress on or near the coasts of the United Kingdom under section 546, but extended to all cases where salvage was recoverable under any of the provisions of the Act.

Judgment of Barnes, J. (ante, p. 62, [1898] P. 206), affirmed.—"FULHAM," THE, C.A., 598; [1899] P. 251; 68 L. J. P. 75.

22. Salvage—Discontinuous service—Agreement as to amount payable for services already completed—Authority of master.—Where a salvage service is discontinuous in character, the services being rendered on distinct occasions, with substantial intervals between, it is beyond the scope of a master's authority, when he has completed a portion of the service whereby rights to a salvage award have become vested in the owners of the vessel and her crew as well as himself, to agree to complete the services for a sum of money to cover as well the work already performed as that which remains to be done.—"INCHMAREE," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.; 68 L. J. P. 30; 80 L. T. 201.

23. Salvage—Failure to render material benefit—Engaged services—Failure to accomplish the service—Engagement to tow—Right to reward.—The steamship N. fell in with the steamship D. in the North Atlantic Ocean. The D., which was flying the signal "N C," engaged The N. to tow her. The weather was very bad.

The N. succeeded in making fast to The D., and towed her a short distance.

Shortly afterwards the tow rope parted, and The N., after standing by for some time, continued her course, and did not attempt to render further assistance.

The D. was subsequently salved by another steamship, The P.

Upon the owners, masters, and crew of The N. claiming salvage reward,

Held, that the action must be dismissed, upon the grounds that The N. had not rendered any material benefit to The D., and that she had not accomplished the services she was engaged to perform—namely, to tow; an engagement to tow is only fulfilled by the vessel engaged towing the other into a port of safety.—"DART," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.; 80 L. T. 23.

24. Seaman—Agreement with the crew—Foreign port where there is a British consular officer—Advance note for more than one month's wages—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), ss. 113-115, 124, 140.—When a seaman is engaged abroad before a British consular officer, as provided by section 124 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, the provisions enacted by section 140 relative to agreements with the crew and the restrictions as to advance notes do not apply.—RITCHIE v. LARSEN, Q.B.D., 413; [1899] 1 Q. B. 727; 68 L. J. Q. B. 335; 80 L. T. 259.

25. Seaman—Engagement of—Foreign ship—Civil debt—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), s. 111, sub-sections 1, 4; ss. 260, 261, 682, sub-section 2.—A person who, in an English port, engages or supplies a seaman to be entered on a ship in the United Kingdom without having a licence for the purpose from the Board of Trade, acts in contravention to section 111, sub-section 1, of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, and is liable to a fine under sub-section 4, notwithstanding that the ship for which the seaman is engaged or supplied is a foreign ship.

A fine recoverable under sub-section 4 is not a sum recoverable as a civil debt under section 682, sub-section 2, but is a fine inflicted as a punishment for an offence the proceedings in prosecuting which are those prescribed by section 681, sub-section 1 (b).—REG. v STEWART AND OLSEN, Q.B.D., 445; [1899] 1 Q. B. 964; 68 L. J. Q. B. 582; 80 L. T. 660.

26. Seaman—Termination of service abroad—"Passage home"—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), s. 186, sub-section 2 (c).—By section 186 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, where the service of any seaman belonging to any British ship terminates at any port out of her Majesty's dominions, the master shall, as one of several alternatives (by sub-sections 2 (c)) "provide him with a passage home."

Held, that a "passage home" means a passage to the port in her Majesty's dominions at which the seaman was originally shipped, or to some port in the United Kingdom agreed to by him.

Dicta in Edwards v. Steel, Young, & Co., 45 W. R. 689, [1897] 2 Q B. 327, followed.—PURVES v. "STRAITS OF DOVER" STEAMSHIP CO., C.A., 630; [1899] 2 Q. B. 217.

27. Seamen—Wages—Seaman engaged abroad—Advance of wages abroad by master—Right to deduct—8 Geo. 1, c. 24, s. 7—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), ss. 140, 163.—When a ship is in a foreign port, the master of the vessel can make a valid contract with a seaman whom he is there engaging for the homeward voyage for an advance to the seaman of any sum on account of his wages conditionally on his shipping. Such advance is not limited to one month's wages, and if the master pays the sum so advanced to the seaman, or to any person authorized by the seaman to receive it, he can at the end of the voyage deduct from the seaman's wages the whole sum advanced, as such advances are not prohibited by section 163 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, or otherwise.—ROWLANDS v. MILLER, Q.B.D., 687; [1899] 1 Q. B. 735; 68 L. J. Q. B. 338; 80 L. T. 290.

See also Admiralty, 1-6; Arbitration, 2; Master and Servant, 21; Negligence, 4; Public Authorities Protection Act, 4.

SOLICITOR:—

1. Auctioneer—Fees—Country solicitor—London agent—Action by auctioneer employed by country solicitor against London agent.—H. had been employed in a foreclosure action by D. & B., a country firm of solicitors, as auctioneer, and when the costs came to be taxed by the London agent S. he received a voucher from H. for his fees. S. thereupon took the money out of court after taxation, which included this item of H.'s fees. Before he received this money it came to his knowledge that H. had not been paid. In an action by H. against S. to recover these fees as money had and received,

Held, that there was no privity of contract between them, and the action therefore failed.—HANNAFORD v. SYMS, Q.B.D.; 79 L. T. 30.

2. Certificate—Suspension of solicitor—Application after suspension for certificate—Discretion of Incorporated Law Society to refuse—Solicitors Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 73), ss. 23, 24.—A solicitor was suspended from practice for professional misconduct, and during the period of suspension he became bankrupt. After the period of suspension had expired, he—being an undischarged bankrupt—applied, under section 23 of the Solicitors Act, 1843, to the registrar of the Incorporated Law Society for a certificate, but the registrar refused to grant the certificate upon the ground that the applicant was an undischarged bankrupt; the applicant thereupon applied under section 24 to the court for an order that the certificate should be granted.

Held, that the registrar was not bound under section 23 to issue a certificate, but had a discretion to refuse to issue the same, and that, upon application to the court under section 24, the court were not bound to make an order for the issuing of the certificate, but could make such order "as shall be just"; and that in this case the discretion of the registrar should not be interfered with.—SOLICITOR, A, RE, Q.B.D., 575; 80 L. T. 729.

3. Charging order—Property recovered or preserved—Solicitors Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 127), s. 28.—A testator devised his estate to his wife for life, and after her death to his two daughters, of whom one was legitimate and the other illegitimate. The daughters having opposed probate of the will, an action was commenced by the executor in which the will was upheld.

Held, that the solicitor of the executor was entitled to a charging order for his costs on the property devised, as being property preserved through his instrumentality.—TWEED, EX PARTE, C.A.; [1899] 2 Q. B. 167; 68 L. J. Q. B. 794.

4. Costs—Costs of inquiry before Incorporated Law Society—Jurisdiction—Judge at chambers—Solicitors Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 65), s. 13.—Where a solicitor has been exonerated from charges brought against him on an inquiry before the committee of the Incorporated Law Society, under section 13 of the Solicitors Act, 1888, an application by him for the costs of the inquiry must be made to the Divisional Court, and not to a judge at chambers.—DAVIDSON, RE, DAVIDSON, EX PARTE, Q.B.D.; [1899] 2 Q. B. 103; 68 L. J. Q. B. 836.

5. Costs—Taxation—Pauper client—Taxation of costs in House of Lords—Liability to costs as between solicitor and pauper client—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 16, rr. 22-31.—Where a solicitor had been retained by, and acted for, a successful pauper appellant (since deceased) in the House of Lords, but in accordance with the practice in the House of Lords as laid down in Johnson v. Lindsay, [1892] A. C. 110, the respondent in the House of Lords was not liable for party and party costs,

Held—on an application by the solicitor against the estate of his deceased client for taxation of the costs of the appeal to the House of Lords—that the solicitor was entitled to recover from the client's estate the ordinary costs which a solicitor is entitled to charge—viz., costs to be taxed as between solicitor and client.—RAPHAEL, RE, SALOMON, EX PARTE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 330; [1899] 1 Ch. 853; 68 L. J. Ch. 309; 80 L. T. 226.

6. Costs—Taxation—Purchase of land in register county—Scale fee—Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 44); General Order, r. 4; Schedule I., Part I.—The scale fee allowed to a purchaser's solicitor on a purchase of land, under the General Order to the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881, for "completing the conveyance" covers the expense, in the case of a register county, of registering a memorial of the conveyance.—GREY v. CURTICE. C.A., 294; [1899] 1 Ch. 121; 68 L. J. Ch. 60; 79 L. T. 713.

7. Costs—Taxation—Refusal to deliver bill of costs—Disclaimer of right to costs—Common order to tax.—A client obtained the common order for delivery of a bill of costs and taxation against his solicitor, who had received the loan of money from him. No bill was delivered, and the client moved for leave to issue a writ of attachment. The solicitor, in defence, said he made no claim for costs, and that such a claim, if made, was statute-barred.

Held, that, if the solicitor made a further affidavit that he had not been paid for work done, and refused to claim costs for such work and abandoned any right to receive costs therefor, no bill of costs could be demanded.—LANDOR, RE, Ch.D. North, J., 457; [1899] 1 Ch. 818; 68 L. J. Ch. 373; 80 L. T. 643.

8. Costs—Taxation—Scale fee—Negotiating loan—Mortgage of personalty—Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 44)—Schedule I. of General Order.—The scale fee chargeable by a "mortgagee's solicitor for negotiating loan" under Schedule I. to the General Order under the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881, is not limited to loans on mortgages of "freehold, copyhold, or leasehold property" exclusively, but extends also to loans on mortgages of any kind of personal property.—FURBER, RE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 184; [1898] 2 Ch. 538; 79 L. T. 266.

See also Bankruptcy, 4, 5, 8; Mortgage, 8; Pubic Authorities Protection Act, 1.

STAMP.—See Inland Revenue, 25-36.

STOCK EXCHANGE.—See Gaming, 6, 7.

THAMES:—

1. Landing stage—Authorized toll of sixpence for use of pier—"Every time of calling"—Illegal charges—Right to recover excess so paid—Thames Conservancy Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. clxxxvii.), ss. 68, 165.—By section 165 of the Thames Conservancy Act, 1894, the conservators are authorized to levy a toll of sixpence "for each and every time of call" on any vessel using any of their piers or landing stages to embark or discharge her passengers and goods.

The plaintiffs owned a pleasure steamer which ran day trips between the Old Swan Pier, London Bridge, and Hampton Court. The steamer was brought alongside the Old Swan Pier about three-quarters of an hour before the advertised starting time and remained there until she started, her officers meanwhile doing all they could to get persons to take tickets for the trip.

The conservators by resolution decided that the plaintiffs used the pier for a longer period daily than would be covered by a mere "call" at the pier by their vessel, for which the 6d. toll was payable, and they alleged their right to impose a terminal charge for this use of the pier by the plaintiffs of £2 a week. For a time this increased charge was paid.

Held, that, although the conservators might have a right to ask for special payment from a vessel using the pier other than for the purpose merely of embarking passengers or goods, that would be based on contract; but there was nothing in the Act which gave the defendants the right to levy more than the 6d. toll on a vessel merely because she was more than a few minutes alongside a pier embarking or discharging her passengers or goods; and that the extra charge already paid, being unauthorized, was paid without consideration, and could be recovered back.—"QUEEN OF THE RIVER" STEAMSHIP CO. v. THAMES CONSERVATORS, Q.B.D., 685.

2. Navigation—Watermen—Towing barges on river—Bye-law providing for licensed waterman on steamboat employed in towing barges—Validity—Watermen and Lightermen Amendment Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. cxxxiii.), s. 80.—Section 80 of the Watermen and Lightermen Amendment Act, 1859, gave power to the Company of Watermen and Lightermen of the River Thames to make bye-laws "for the government of the company, and for the government and regulation of lightermen and watermen, and for carrying into effect the purposes of the Act and the several powers and authorities thereby vested in the company."

Held, that a bye-law made under this section, requiring that "every steamboat navigated on the river in the towing of barges, vessels, and craft should have one licensed waterman on board such steamboat for the purpose of assisting in the management and navigation thereof" was ultra vires and invalid, as not coming within the scope of any of the purposes specified in the section.—KENNAIRD v. CORY, Q.B.D., 30; [1898] 2 Q. B. 578.

See also Ship, 16.

TOLLS:—

Prescriptive right—Extinguishment of old franchise by statute.—A municipal corporation having a prescriptive right to take certain customary tolls for the passage of carriages, cattle, &c., over a bridge belonging to them, obtained in 1734 a local Act which, after reciting their right to take the customary tolls, enacted that the said customary tolls should be and remain vested in them, and empowered them to take the said tolls, with a variation as to the exemption of freemen of the borough. In 1819 the corporation obtained another local Act which repealed the former Act, and empowered them to take down the old bridge and build a new one, and to take tolls which varied from the old tolls in amount and subject-matter. This Act was temporary, and had expired.

Held, that the prescriptive right to take tolls had been merged in and extinguished by the statutory right given in 1734, and neither had nor could have been revived by the later Act, and that the right to take tolls expired with the later Act.

The decision of the Court of Appeal ([1898] 1 Q. B. 186) affirmed.—WINDSOR (MAYOR) v. TAYLOR, H.L.; [1899] A. C. 41; 68 L. J. Q. B. 87; 79 L. T. 450.

TRADE-MARK:—

1. Passing off—Improper use of the words "trade-mark"—Misrepresentation—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), s. 105.—Where a name is put on goods, with the addition of the words "Trade-Mark," but the trade-mark has not been registered, it does not necessarily follow that there is a representation that the trade-mark has been registered, so as to disentitle the plaintiff to relief in a passing-off action.

Held, on the facts, that the plaintiffs were entitled to an interlocutory injunction to restrain the defendant from passing off his goods as or for those of the plaintiffs.

Lewis's v. Goodbody, 67 L. T. Rep. 194, 41 W. R. Dig. 250, distinguished.—SEN SEN v. BRITTEN, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 358; [1899] 1 Ch. 692; 68 L. J. Ch. 250; 80 L. T. 278.

2. Registration—"St. Raphael"—Geographical name—Descriptive name—Fancy word—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), ss. 64 (1) (c) (2), 74 (a).—The company had registered under the Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883, as their trade-mark a label upon which the words "St. Raphael" appeared several times. On the application by a rival company to have this mark removed from the register unless a disclaimer of the said words was entered,

Held, that, upon the evidence, the words were not "geographical words"; and that no disclaimer was required; and, further, that the words, being contained in a distinctive label, registered as a whole under the Act of 1883, need not be disclaimed under section 74, inasmuch as they formed a part of the label, and were not additions to it.—CLEMENT ET CIE.'S TRADE-MARK, RE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 407; 80 L. T. 230.

3. Registration—"Solio"—"Invented word"—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 5), s. 64, Patents, Designs and Trade-Marks Act, 1888 (51 & 22 Vict. c. 10), s. 10, sub-section 1 (d) (e).—The word "Solio" is an invented word, within the Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883, s. 64, as amended by section 10 of the Act of 1888, and may be registered as a trade-mark in respect of photographic paper. It does not indicate the character or quality of the goods.

Sub-section 1 (d) and (e) of section 10 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1888 (which is substituted for section 64 of the Act of 1883), are not to be read together, and therefore "an invented word" may be registered though it has reference to the character or quality of the goods.

In Re Farbenfabriken Application, 42 W. R. 408, [1894] 1 Ch. 645, overruled.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (45 W. R. Dig. 163) reversed.—EASTMAN PHOTOGRAPHIC MATERIALS CO. v. COMPTROLLER-GENERAL OF TRADE-MARKS, H.L., 152; [1898] A. C. 571; 79 L. T. 195.

4. Wrappers—Similarity—Endeavour to pass of—No deception probable—Injunction.—A. brought an action to restrain B. from passing off his soap as A.'s soap by using wrappers which were alleged to have been copied in many respects from A.'s wrappers, and to be calculated to deceive, but no actual deception was proved.

The court came to the conclusion that the draughtsman who designed B.'s wrapper had used A.'s wrapper when doing so, but that there was no probability of deception in the ordinary course of business.

Held, that, notwithstanding the copying of A.'s wrapper, he was not entitled to an injunction as B.'s wrapper was not calculated to deceive.

Judgment of Lord Macnaghten in Reddaway v. Banham, [1896] A. C. 219, distinguished.—LEVER v. BEDINGFIELD, C.A.; 80 L. T. 100.

TRADE NAME:—

1. Company—Similarity of name—Deception.—The Manchester Brewery Co. (Limited) had carried on business under that name for years. The appellants bought an old business called "The North Cheshire Brewery Co. (Limited)," and then (without intending to deceive) got themselves incorporated and registered under the name "The North Cheshire and Manchester Brewery Co. (Limited)."

Held, upon the evidence, that as a matter of fact the name of the appellant company was calculated to deceive, and that the appellants must therefore be restrained by injunction in the usual way.

The decision of the Court of Appeal, [1898] 1 Ch. 539, affirmed.—NORTH CHESHIRE AND MANCHESTER BREWERY CO. v. MANCHESTER BREWERY CO.

H.L.; [1899] A. C. 83; 68 L. J. Ch. 74; 79 L. T. 645.

2. Descriptive name—Interdict.—The appellants, an English company, claimed to have invented, or at least to have put upon the market, a fabric suitable for shirtings and underwear woven in a particular manner; and alleged that they had for the last ten years described this fabric in their advertisements as made in a certain way; and that they had marked it and invoiced it under the name of "cellular cloth" largely in England and, to some extent, in Scotland. The name had not been registered. The respondents were a wholesale firm in Edinburgh who sold cotton and woollen goods which they had recently described as "cellular."

Held, affirming the decision of the First Division of the Court of Session, [1898] 25 R. 1098, that the appellants were not entitled to relief on the grounds (1) that the word "cellular" was an ordinary English word which appropriately and conveniently described the cloth of which the goods sold by the respondents were manufactured; and (2) that the term had not been proved to have acquired a secondary or special meaning so as to denote only the goods of the appellants.

Reddaway v. Banham, [1896] A. C. 199, distinguished.—CELLULAR CLOTHING CO. v. MAXTON & MURRAY, H.L. (Sc.); [1899] A. C. 326; 68 L. J. P. C. 72; 80 L. T. 809.

TRADE UNION:—

1. Dissolution of union — Unexpended funds—Resulting trust—Principle of division of funds.—A trades union society registered under the Trade Union Acts passed a resolution to dissolve itself. The rules contained no provision for the application of the funds in the event of a dissolution. The Crown laid no claim to the funds as bonâ vacantia.

Held, that there was a resulting trust in favour of the existing members at the time of the dissolution in proportion to the amount contributed by each member to the funds of the society, and that, in taking the account, it was not necessary to pay any regard to payments for fines and forfeitures or for benefits received under the rules.—PRINTERS AND TRANSFERERS' PROTECTION SOCIETY, RE, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 619; [1899] 2 Ch. 184; 68 L. J. Ch. 537.

2. Strike—Picketing—"Watching and besetting"—Nuisance—Injunction—Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 86), ss. 3, 7.—To watch or beset a man's house with a view to compel him to do or not to do what it is lawful for him not to do or to do is wrongful and without lawful authority unless some reasonable justification for it is consistent with the evidence. Such conduct would support an action on the case for a nuisance at common law. Proof that the nuisance was "peaceably to persuade other people" would be no defence to such an action.

In section 7 of the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875, the words "such other person" must be read as "any other person."

Decision of Byrne, J. (46 W. R. 461). affirmed.—LYONS v. WILKINS, C.A., 291; [1899] 1 Ch 255; 68 L. J. Ch. 146; 79 L. T. 709.

3. Watching or besetting—"Place"—Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 86), s. 7.—Two members of a workmen's union met men who had been brought over from Ireland to replace workmen on strike at the landing-stage of the steamer, informed them on the strike, and paid their railway fares to places unaffected by the strike.

Held, that this was a watching or besetting of a place where workmen happened to be, within subsection 4 of section 7 of the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875, as there was nothing in the statute which necessarily implied any prolonged watching, nor was its operation limited to a place habitually frequented by the workmen; nor was this attending to a place merely to communicate information within the proviso at the end of section 7, inasmuch as the two members of the workmen's union attended to hold out inducements to the men to go elsewhere.—CHARNOCK v. COURT, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 633; [1899] 2 Ch. 35; 68 L. J. Ch. 550; 80 L. T. 564.

TRAMWAY:—

1. Purchase by local authority—Compulsory purchase under Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), s. 43—Purchase under earlier local Act—Contingency—Basis of valuation—The Southampton Corporation Tramways Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. cxxvi.), ss. 2, 3, 4.—By section 43 of the Tramways Act, 1870, it was provided that the local authority might after the expiration of twenty-one years from the passing of the Act, by notice in writing, require the company to sell to them their undertaking upon the terms of paying to them their then value (exclusive of any allowance for past and future profits of the undertaking or any compensation for compulsory sale or other consideration whatever) of the tramway and all lands, buildings, works, materials, and plant of the company. . . .

The S. Street Tramways were constructed in pursuance of their private Act in 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. cxxi.), and by that Act the provisions of section 43 of the Tramways Act, 1870, were incorporated.

By the Southampton Corporation Tramways Act, 1897, the corporation were to purchase the undertaking of the company, and in case of dispute the price was to be settled by arbitration under the provisions of the Lands Clauses Act.

And by section 2 of the same Act "'the undertaking of the company' means the undertaking, works, lands, easements, plant, fixed and movable, stock-in-trade, buildings, equipment, rights, powers, privileges, and authorities of the company, including the right to demand and take and recover tolls, rents, and charges."

Held, that in determining the price to be paid under the Act of 1897 the umpire should treat the undertaking of the company as defined by that Act as an undertaking which the company only enjoyed subject to the contingency of being compelled to part therewith under the terms of section 43 of the Tramways Act, 1870; and not as an undertaking which the company enjoyed free from all obligation to part therewith otherwise than under the terms of the Act of 1897 itself.—SOUTHAMPTON TRAMWAYS CO. v. SOUTHAMPTON CORPORATION, Q.B.D.; 80 L. T. 236.

2. Telephone company interfering with tramway—Consent of person liable to repair—Injunction—Telegraph Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 112), ss. 9, 13—Tramway Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), ss. 28, 32.—A telephone company, under licence from the Postmaster-General, was proceeding to lay wires under a tramway, and in so doing interfered with the tramway company. The telephone company had the consent of the road authority, but the tramway company asked for an injunction restraining the telephone company from doing any work without its previous consent, as the "person liable for the repair" of the street under section 13 of the Telegraph Act, 1863.

Held, that the tramway company was only brought within section 13 of the Telegraph Act, 1863 (if at all), by section 28 of the Tramway Act, 1870, and that section 32 of that Act prevented the powers of the road authority from being abridged so that the consent of the tramway company was not required.—BRISTOL TRAMWAYS CO. v. NATIONAL TELEPHONE CO., Ch.D. North, J.; 80 L. T. 836.

See also Easement; Landlord and Tenant, 15.

TRINIDAD, LAW of:—

Land forfeited to Crown—Waiver of forfeiture—Receipt of rates.—Where land has been forfeited to the Crown by regular legal process, the fact that rates have subsequently been demanded from, and paid by, persons found in occupation of the land without any title, will not be held to be a waiver of the forfeiture.—DE SILVA v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL OF TRINIDAD, P.C.; 79 L. T. 130.

TRUSTEE:—

1. Breach of trust—Accumulation clause—Wilful default—Compound interest—Rate of interest—Trustee and cestui que trust.—A testator bequeathed the proceeds of his residuary estate upon trust for his children, and directed the trustees to apply towards the maintenance of the infant children the whole or part of the income of their expectant shares, and to accumulate the residue of the income and the income thereof at compound interest.

Held, (1) that in a proper case it was competent for the court, upon the further consideration of an action, to charge trustees with interest, whether simple or compound, on balances retained in their hands, although no case of wilful default had been raised by the pleadings, and the question of interest was not referred to in the judgment; (2) that as the trustees had neglected to comply with the express trust for accumulation they were chargeable with compound interest upon the balances in their hands, but at the rate of 3 per cent. only, and that in ascertaining such balances trust funds improperly invested were to be treated as remaining in their hands.

Knott v. Cottee, 16 Beav. 77, followed, except as to the rate of interest.—BARCLAY, RE, BARCLAY v. ANDREW, Ch.D. Stirling, J.; [1899] 1 Ch. 674; 68 L. J. Ch. 383; 80 L. T. 702.

2. Breach of trust—Debt left outstanding—Liability—Ambiguous will—No application to court—"Acted honestly and reasonably"—Judicial Trustees Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 35), s. 3.—The executors and trustees of a will did not call in a debt belonging to their testator, and did not apply to the court for directions. It was doubtful, on the construction of the will, whether the testator had or had not directed them to "maintain" the debt, which was producing 5 per cent. in its existing condition; and they acted on the view that he had. Eventually part of the debt was lost.

Held, that the trustees had acted "honestly and reasonably," both in not calling in the debt, and (its amount being small) in not incurring the expense of an application to the court, and were therefore, under section 3 of the Judicial Trustees Act, 1896, entitled to be relieved from personal liability.—GRINDEY, RE, CLEWS v. GRINDEY, C.A., 53; [1898] 2 Ch. 593; 79 L. T. 105.

3. Breach of trust—Principal debtor—Surety—Indemnities—Release of debt.—Where the life tenant (a married woman) of the income from investments in a settled fund of £30,000, having a power of appointment by will over the capital and income of the same, requested the trustees to sell so much as would realize the sum of £10,000, which she was desirous of handing to her husband, himself one of the trustees; and where, all parties understanding that the said sale and payment were breaches of trust, the other trustee only consented on the life tenant and the co-trustee agreeing to enter into a covenant to indemnify him against all claims; and where the said sum was not repaid to the life tenant prior to her death nor to her estate since her death upon the demand of the other trustee.

Held, that the husband of the life tenant was the principal debtor to his wife's estate, and that she was surety.

Held, further, that, upon the true construction of the will of the life tenant, the £10,000 passed to the husband.—BAIRD, RE, BAIRD v. STAVELEY-HILL, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 277.

4. Breach of trust—Sale of leaseholds—No power of sale—Judicial Trustees Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 35) s. 3.—Where trustees of a settlement which did not contain a power of sale had, in the bonâ fide belief that they possessed such a power, advantageously sold leaseholds which formed part of the trust estate,

Held, that under section 3 of the Judicial Trustees Act, 1896, they were entitled to be relieved from personal liability to make good the diminution of income sustained by the tenant for life in consequence of the sale.

Decision of Kekewich, J. (46 W. R. 682), affirmed.—PERRINS v. BELLAMY, C.A., 417; [1899] 1 Ch. 797; 68 L.J. Ch. 397; 80 L. T. 478.

5. Investment—Loan to tenant for life upon personal credit without security—Liability of trustee.—Where the tenant for life under a voluntary settlement made by herself requested the trustees to exercise the power which by the settlement was given them of investing the fund upon personal credit without security, by advancing the moneys to herself upon such conditions.

Held, that the trustees were at liberty, in their discretion, to make the advance, being satisfied of the reasonable prospect of the moneys being recouped.

Keays v. Lane, 3 Ir. Rep. Eq. 1, 17 W. R. Ch. Dig. 168, discussed and distinguished.

Proposition in Lewin on Trusts (10th ed.), p. 335, controverted.—LAING, RE, LAING v. RADCLIFFE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 311; [1899] 1 Ch. 593; 68 L. J. Ch. 230; 80 L. T. 228.

6. Investment clause—Bond or debenture of "public company corporate, municipal, commercial, or otherwise"—Investment in bond of unincorporated body.—A power to invest trust moneys in "bonds, mortgage debentures, debenture stock, preference or other shares of any public company or body corporate, municipal, commercial, or otherwise," is confined to such investments in public companies and bodies duly incorporated.

A trustee invested trust funds subject to such a power in the bond or debenture of a body called "The Trustees for the Town and Harbour of Whitehaven," which at the time of investment were unincorporated.

Held, that the word "corporate" was attached to the word "body," so that the clause should read "any public company or body corporate, whether municipal, commercial, or otherwise," and consequently such on investment was a breach of trust.

As to whether the trustee might be relieved from liability under the Judicial Trustee Act, 1896, s. 3, quære.—WOOD v. MIDDLETON, Ch.D. Stirling, J.; 79 L. T. 155.

7. Judicial trustee—Appointment—Application by beneficiary—Sole executor—"Trustee"—Administration—"Trust"—Reversioner—Remuneration of trustee—Discretion of court—Judicial Trustees Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 35), s. 1, sub-sections 1, 2, 4.—A person interested in an estate is not entitled as of right to the appointment of a judicial trustee under the Judicial Trustees Act, 1896, but the appointment is, under section 1, sub-section 1, a matter entirely within the discretion of the court.

Thus where the reversioner under a will applied under the Act for the appointment of a judicial trustee to act either alone or jointly with the testator's widow, who was sole executrix and also tenant for life (there being no trustee appointed by the will), the court refused the application, as it was opposed to her wish and to the testator's manifest intention, which was that she should have the sole control of his estate, there being, moreover, no ground of complaint against her; nor was the fact that the applicant offered that the remuneration of the judicial trustee, when appointed, should come out of capital and not out of income held to justify the application.

Under section 1, sub-section 2, of the Act the administration of the property of a deceased person is a "trust" and the executor is a "trustee": so that, under sub-section 1, the court can, in a proper case, remove the executor and appoint a judicial trustee in his place, to whom, under sub-section 4, it can give directions as to the administration of the trust.—RATCLIFF, RE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; [1898] 2 Ch. 352.

8. Judicial trustee—Building society—Dissolution deed—Absconding trustee—Liability of the inactive co-trustee—Judicial Trustee Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 35), s. 3.—P., the active trustee of the two trustees of the dissolution deed of a building society, who had been required to give an account of moneys received and expended by them, had absconded. Where the cestuis que trustent asked, by summons, for the payment by the remaining trustee of the costs of the action which had ensued.

Held, that S., the remaining trustee, had acted dishonestly—within the meaning of section 3 of the Judicial Trustees Act, 1896—in permitting his co-trustee to manage the affairs without check or inquiry, and was therefore liable to pay all the costs of the action.—SECOND EAST DULWICH, &c., BUILDING SOCIETY, RE, MIALL v. PEARCE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 408; 68 L. J. Ch. 196; 79 L. T. 726.

9. Mortgage—Will—Real estate—Trust for sale—Postponement of sale—Improvements—Repairs.—A testator gave his real and residuary personal estate to trustees in trust for sale, with a power of postponement in the usual form, followed by a power (also in common form) during such postponement to manage and let the real estate and to make out of the income or capital of his real and personal estate any outlay they might consider necessary for renewals of leases, improvements, repairs, premiums on policies or otherwise for the benefit or in respect of his real or personal estate. The will contained no express power to raise money by mortgage or charge.

Held, that the trustees had power to raise money by mortgage or charge of the real estate for the purpose of repairing houses forming part of the real estate.—BELLINGER, RE, DURELL v. BELLINGER, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; [1898] 2 Ch. 534; 79 L. T. 54.

10. New trustees—Appointment—Vesting order—Trustee of unsound mind—Jurisdiction—Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), ss. 25-41—Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 5), s. 143.—Where the sole surviving trustee of a settlement is a person of unsound mind, not so found, and is within the jurisdiction, the Chancery Division of the High Court has, under the Trustee Act, 1893, jurisdiction to appoint new trustees, but has no jurisdiction to make a vesting order.—M., RE, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 267; [1899] 1 Ch. 79; 68 L. J. Ch. 86; 79 L. T. 459.

11. Notice—Assignment—Notice to trustees—Notice to new trustees—Priority.—An assignee who has given notice to all the trustees in existence at the time of his assignment is not bound to give notice to every new trustee, and is entitled to priority over a subsequent assignee who has taken his assignment after the death or retirement of all the original trustees and given notice to the new trustees.—WASDALE, RE, BRITTIN v. PARTRIDGE, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 169; [1899] 1 Ch. 163; 68 L. J. Ch. 117; 79 L. T. 520.

See also Company, 15; Contract, 9; Limitation Statutes, 6; Married Woman, 1; Practice, 27; Vendor and Purchaser, 4, 6.

TROVER:—

Conversion—Estoppel—Proximate cause of loss—N. pledged with the plaintiffs as security for an advance eighteen hogsheads of tobacco in the custody of defendants as warehousemen. He afterwards repaid the advance on one of the hogsheads, and presented to the plaintiffs for signature a delivery order on the defendants. The quantity was left blank in the order when the plaintiffs signed it, and N. afterwards filled in the blank with the words "eighteen hogsheads," and obtained delivery of them all from the defendants.

Held, that the plaintiffs were estopped as against the defendants from showing that the authority to deliver was limited to one hogshead only. N. also pledged with the plaintiffs two separate consignments of tobacco, and having paid off the advance on one consignment, presented to the plaintiffs a properly drawn delivery order in respect of it, which the plaintiffs signed. N. afterwards added the description of the other consignment, and thus obtained delivery of both from the defendants.

Held, that an action for conversion lay against the defendants, as the plaintiffs had not been guilty of any negligence which was the proximate cause of the wrongful delivery.

N. after fraudulently obtaining the tobacco as above stated, pledged it with a bank as security for an advance, and before the fraud was discovered repaid the advance and recovered possession of the tobacco.

Held, that no action of conversion lay at the suit of the plaintiffs against the bank, as N.'s dealing with the bank had been concluded before the plaintiffs discovered the fraud.—UNION CREDIT BANK v. MERSEY DOCKS BOARD, Q.B.D.; [1899] 2 Q. B. 205.

VACCINATION:—

Justices—Certificate of conscientious objection—Evidence—Certificate of the birth of the child—Vaccination Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 49), s. 2.—Justices have power to make a rule that they will not entertain an application for a certificate of conscientious objection under section 2 of the Vaccination Act, 1898, unless and until, where it is possible, a certificate of the birth of the child in respect of whom the application is made is produced to them.—REG. v. BUCKINGHAMSHIRE JUSTICES, Q.B.D., 315.

VENDOR and PURCHASER:—

1. Bankruptcy—Protected transaction—Notice of act of bankruptcy—Act of bankruptcy by vendor after contract and before date for completion—Payment after notice of act of bankruptcy—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 49.—The plaintiff entered into a contract to purchase a public-house, the purchase to be completed within four weeks, and paid a deposit. By the contract the deposit was to be forfeited in case of neglect or refusal on the part of the purchaser to perform his part of the contract, and to be returned in case of such neglect or refusal on the part of the vendor. Before the expiration of the four weeks the vendor committed an act of bankruptcy. The plaintiff thereupon gave notice refusing to complete the purchase and requiring the deposit to be returned. The vendor never in fact became bankrupt.

Held, that, as the plaintiff had at the date fixed for completion notice of an available act of bankruptcy, payment of the purchase-money to the vendor would not have been protected by section 49 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, in the event of the vendor's bankruptcy upon a petition presented within three months of the act of bankruptcy, and the vendor was not in a position to complete the purchase by executing a conveyance and giving a good receipt for the purchase-money; and that the plaintiff was accordingly entitled to the return of the deposit.—POWELL v. MARSHALL, PARKES, & Co., C.A., 419; [1899] 1 Q. B. 710; 68 L. J. Q. B. 477; 80 L. T. 509.

2. Condition—Sale of property subject to tenancies, and with condition for apportionment of outgoings—Unstamped agreement for yearly tenancy—Obligation of vendor to stamp it.—An agreement for the sale of freehold property provided that the property was sold subject to all tenancies, and also for apportionment of outgoings. Upon investigation of the title the purchaser discovered that an agreement with a yearly tenant of part of the property was unstamped and required the vendor to stamp it before completion of the purchase. The vendor refused, and commenced proceedings for specific performance against the purchaser.

Held, that the purchaser was entitled to have agreement stamped at the vendor's expense.—COLEMAN v. COLEMAN, Ch.D. North, J.; 79 L. T. 66.

3. Contract—Sale by auction—Offer by conditions of sale—Acceptance by highest bidder—Payment of deposit by cheque—Custom at auction—Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3), s. 4.—A vendor who offers property for sale by auction on the terms of printed conditions can be made liable to a member of the public who accepts the offer if those conditions be violated, and who, being the highest bidder, is not allowed to sign the written contract; and it is no defence to an action to enforce such a liability that there is no contract in writing signed by the vendors.

Under the usual condition of sale that the purchaser shall, immediately after the sale, pay the auctioneer a deposit of 10 per cent. and sign the subjoined agreement, cash must be paid.

There is no custom that a vendor is bound to accept the cheque of a person of good credit, much less that of a pauper.—JOHNSTON v. BOYES, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 517; [1899] 2 Ch. 73; 68 L. J. Ch. 425; 80 L. T. 488.

4. Contract—Trustees for purposes of Settled Land Act—Settled Land Act, 1882, s. 22.—Where, to the knowledge of a purchaser from a tenant for life selling in exercise of powers conferred on him by the Settled Land Acts, there are no trustees for the purposes of the Act, the purchaser cannot be compelled to pay the purchase-money into court or to accept the title, unless such trustees are appointed.—FISHER AND GRAZEBROOK'S CONTRACT, RE, Ch.D. Romer, J., 58; [1898] 2 Ch. 660; 79 L. T. 263.

5. Delay—Sale of reversion—Equitable interest.—S., in April, 1886, contracted to sell to K. the equitable reversion in a sum of Consols vested in trustees, the purchase to be completed on the 25th of June, when an assignment was to be executed containing a covenant by the purchaser to pay succession duty and indemnify the vendor and his estate against it. The purchaser was to pay a deposit; and if the purchase was not completed on the 25th of June, he was to pay interest on the balance of his purchase-money. The deposit was paid and the title investigated; when it appeared that the reversion was subject, along with other property, to heavy incumbrances which the vendor could not discharge, and from which the incumbrancers declined to release the reversion. In January, 1888, S. became bankrupt, and his property was sold, under which sale R. claimed title to the reversion. K.'s interest under the contract for sale became vested in B. In 1890 S. died. In 1895 the reversion fell into possession. No active step to enforce the contract for sale was taken till the 5th of March, 1896, when B. obtained leave to attend proceedings in an action in which the estate of S. was being administered. He then took out a summons claiming the Consols, upon which summons an order of the 11th of May, 1896, was made directing an inquiry who was entitled to them, with a provision that the applicant's claim was to be treated as if he had commenced an action for specific performance on the 5th of March, 1896. The master found that R. was entitled, and Stirling, J., affirmed his decision.

Held, that, although the interest to which the contract related was purely equitable, so that the complete property in it could pass without a formal conveyance, B. could only obtain relief on the ground of specific performance; that the proviso in the order of the 11th of May, 1896, was therefore right; that he was barred from relief by delay; and that the appeal ought to be dismissed.—LEVY v. STOGDON, C.A.; [1889] 1 Ch. 5; 68 L. J. Ch. 19; 79 L. T. 364.

6. Disclosure of trust—Mortgagees—Trustee—Devolution of trustees' title.—On a sale of freeholds a mortgage debt thereon was to be paid off. It was inadvertently disclosed that the mortgage money belonged to the mortgagees as trustees of a settlement, and that they were not the original trustees thereof. On a vendor and purchaser summons,

Held, that the vendor must trace the devolution of the title of the trustees from the date of the settlement, in order to enable the purchasers to get a good discharge for the payment of the mortgage money.—BLAIBERG AND ABRAHAMS' CONTRACT, RE, Ch.D., Kekewich, J., 634.

7. Lease—Contract—Insurance—Fire.—A., the lessor, contracted with B., the lessee, for the purchase of B.'s interest in certain premises. B. insured the premises for about half their value. Before the completion of the contract the premises were damaged by fire to about the amount insured, which sum was paid by the insurance company. A. brought his action for damages for breach of the covenant to insure in addition to the sum paid by the insurance company.

Held, that A. was not entitled to any sum by way of damages beyond the insurance money paid by the company.—NEWMAN v. MAXWELL, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 80 L. T. 681.

8. Lost title-deed—Secondary evidence, what required, and at what time.—Where a deed forming part of the vendor's title to land is lost, the purchaser can nevertheless be compelled to complete if he is furnished in proper time with satisfactory evidence of its contents and of its due execution.

Bryant v. Busk, 4 Russ. 1, and Moulton v. Edmonds, 8 W. R. 153, 1 De G. F. & J. 246, followed.

But evidence not produced till after the time for completion has expired, and the purchaser has properly issued a summons claiming a declaration that the vendor has not shown a good title, is too late; and evidence, in other respects satisfactory, which fails to prove the execution of one material deed by one necessary party, is insufficient.

Decision of Stirling, J., affirmed (Vaughan Williams, L.J., dubitante).—HALIFAX COMMERCIAL BANK AND WOODS' CONTRACT, RE, C.A., 194; 79 L. T. 536.

9. Restrictive covenant—Building land.—In 1886 certain land was sold and conveyed subject to a covenant to observe the following stipulation: "Except on lots marked 'tavern lots,' no hotel, tavern, public-house, beer-house, shop, or other building for the sale of wines, spirits, ale, or stout, or any spirituous, malt, or excisable liquor of any kind, shall be built upon any lot now offered for sale; and on no lot shall any manufacture be carried on unless with the consent of the vendor, who shall be at liberty to grant a licence for the same." In January, 1897, the lessees from the purchaser, of two of the lots, which were not marked "tavern lots," with full notice of the covenant, erected a restaurant on the lots. This restaurant was opened to the public on the 25th of March, 1897, but without any wine, spirit, or beer licence. In August, 1897, a licence to sell wines and spirits was obtained. Thereupon the vendor, together with the purchaser of another lot, on which it was intended to erect a public-house, brought an action against the lessees, and then moved for an interlocutory injunction to restrain them from using their restaurant for any of the purposes mentioned in the stipulation.

Held, that the true meaning of the covenant was that no hotel, tavern, &c., should "be" upon any lot except marked "tavern lot"; that it would not be possible to tell whether or not a house when it was in course of building was intended for a hotel, tavern, &c.; but that the user of the house would have to be looked to before declaring that the covenant had been infringed.

Held, therefore, that the plaintiffs were entitled to the injunction claimed.—WEBB v. FAGOTTI, C.A.; 79 L. T. 683.

10. Restrictive covenant—Construction—Injurious or offensive or disagreeable noise or nuisance—Carrying on school—Action for rescission of contract.—W. entered into negotiations with the defendant's agent for the purchase of a house for the purpose of carrying on a boys' school, and was induced to enter into a contract to purchase the house by his representing that there was no covenant which would interefere with W.'s carrying on his school there. W. subsequently discovered that the house was subject to a covenant which, after specially restraining certain trades or businesses from being carried on, provided that there should not be carried on upon the premises any trade or business or occupation whatsoever whereby (inter alia) any injurious or offensive or disagreeable noise or nuisance should or might be occasioned, caused, or made. He thereupon brought an action for rescission of the contract, and return of the deposit made by him, with interest.

Held, that the covenant was not limited to trades or businesses ejusdem generis as those specifically mentioned; that the carrying on of a boys' school would come within the prohibition of the covenant; that the agent's representation was as to a fact, and not a mere statement of law; and, therefore, that the plaintiff was entitled to succeed in his action.

Tod-Heatly v. Benham, 37 W. R. 38, 40 Ch. D. 80 followed.—WAUTON v. COPPARD, Ch.D. Romer, J., 72; [1899] 1 Ch. 92; 68 L. J. Ch. 8; 79 L. T. 467.

11. Sale of land by auction—Agreement to take a free conveyance—Misinterpretation by vendor, of contract—Refusal to deliver abstract of title—Wilful neglect or default.—On a sale of land by auction the particulars stated that "those purchasers who wished to avoid unnecessary expense and to accept conveyances prepared by the vendors' solicitors may have such conveyances free of expense (except stamp duty)," but the conditions of sale did not provide that purchasers who agreed to accept free conveyances should not be entitled to the delivery of abstracts of title or to investigate the title to the lots purchased by them. They however contained the usual provision requiring the purchaser to pay interest on his unpaid purchase-money in case of non-completion on the appointed day, if not caused by wilful neglect or default of the vendor.

A purchaser of several lots agreed in his contract to take a free conveyance, but requested delivery of an abstract to enable him to investigate the title, before completion. The vendors, however, refused to deliver the abstract until completion, on the ground that the purchaser by agreeing to accept a free conveyance had waived his right to delivery of an abstract and to investigate the title. Upon a summons under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, taken out by the purchaser,

Held, that the vendors were bound to deliver an abstract to the purchaser to enable him to investigate the title before completion, and that their refusal to do this, though owing to misinterpretation of the conditions of sale, constituted wilful neglect or default on their part, so as to free the purchaser from liability to pay interest on his unpaid purchase-money from the day fixed for completion. —PELLY AND JACOBS' CONTRACT, RE, Ch.D. North, J.; 80 L. T. 45.

12. Sale under order of court—Purchaser for value without notice—Equitable execution—Judgments Act, 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. 112)—Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 70.—No estate or interest will be bound by section 70 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, which estate or interest would not, apart from such section, have been bound by an order of court dealing with such estate or interest, having regard to the terms of such order and the proceedings in which and the circumstances under which it was made.—JONES v. BARNETT, Ch.D. Romer, J., 493; [1899] 1 Ch. 611; 68 L. J. Ch. 244; 80 L. T. 408.

13. Specific performance—Grant to uses subject to a proviso for re-entry to the heirs of grantor—Common law condition subsequent—Shifting use—Rule against perpetuities in reference to a common law condition—Application of the principles of the common law.—A proviso for re-entry for condition broken, following on a grant to uses, is a common law condition subsequent, and not a shifting use.

The rule against perpetuities applies to a common law condition for re-entry.

A title which for its validity depended on the application of the rule against perpetuities to a common law condition for re-entry was not forced on a purchaser, the point not formerly having been the subject of a judicial decision, and there being danger of litigation.—HOLLIS' HOSPITAL TRUSTEES AND HAGUE'S CONTRACT, RE, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 691.

14. Specific performance—Neglect of defendant to comply with judgment—Rescission of contract—Form of order.—In a vendor's action for specific performance, judgment has been recovered against the defendant in default of appearance, and an order made on further consideration that the defendant should pay the costs; that the usual account of rents, profits, interest, and costs should be taken, and on payment of the balance a conveyance should be executed to the defendant. The accounts had been taken into chambers, but not proceeded with.

The vendor now moved, upon evidence that the purchaser had no means and could not complete, for rescission of the contract and stay of all proceedings except for the recovery of costs.

Held, that the only order the court could make was that the contract be rescinded and all proceedings stayed, the defendant to pay the costs of this application.

Henty v. Schroder, 12 Ch. D. 666, explained and followed.—JEFFERY v. STEWART, Ch.D. North, J.; 80 L. T. 17.

15. Specific performance — Rescission — "Eligible for investment"—House used as brothel—Defect unknown to vendor.—If, at the time of the contract the vendor himself was not aware of any defect in the estate, the purchaser must take the estate with all its faults.

Where a house, described in particulars of sale as an eligible property for investment, was, after the sale, alleged by the purchaser to have been used by the tenant as a disorderly house at and some time before the date of the contract, but neither the vendors nor the purchaser knew of such user at the time of the sale,

Held, on the above principle, that that circumstance—assuming it to be true in fact—did not give any ground for rescission, or even constitute a defence to the vendors' action for specific performance of the contract.

The observations in Lucas v. James, 7 Hare 410, at p. 418, followed.—HOPE v. WALTER, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 479; [1899] 1 Ch. 879; 68 L. J. Ch. 359; 80 L. T. 355.

16. Title—Sewer under property—Conditions of sale—Error or omission discovered in particulars of sale—Compensation.—The conditions of sale relating to a dwelling-house and grounds, not sold for building purposes, provide (inter alia) that any error or omission which might be discovered in the particulars of sale affecting the nature of the property should not annul the sale, but should be a matter for compensation; and that the property was sold subject to all rights of way or other easements.

A deed of mutual covenants, subject to which also the property was sold, precluded any building on the property.

The purchaser discovered that there was a public sewer passing under the garden at the rear of, and some distance from, the house, and a manhole used for obtaining access to the sewer.

The vendor was entirely ignorant at the time of the sale of the existence of such sewer.

The sewer was vested in the local authority under the Public Health Act, 1875, and no buildings could be erected over it without the sanction of the local authority.

The purchaser objected to complete, on the ground that the vendor was unable to make a title to the property.

Held, that the circumstances did not justify the court in releasing the purchaser from his contract to take the property; that the existence of the sewer did not so alter the character of the piece of ground that the purchaser could say that he did not get what was intended to be sold; and that the case was a matter for compensation.—BREWER AND HANKINS' CONTRACT, RE, C.A.; 80 L. T. 127.

See also Ecclesiastical Law, 3; Settled Land, 7.

VICTORIA, LAW of:—

1. Company—Trustees' powers of investment—Deposits with banks—Companies Act, 1890 (54 Vict. No. 1074), s. 384.—Section 384 of the Victoria Companies Act, 1890, while authorizing the employment of bankers, does not on its true construction enlarge the powers of investment possessed by trustee companies in common with other trustees.

Held, that the appellant company was not authorized thereunder, or under its special Act, to invest trust moneys on deposit at interest with banks.—PERPETUAL EXECUTORS AND TRUSTEES ASSOCIATION OF AUSTRALIA v. SWAN, P.C.; [1898] A. C. 763; 79 L. T. 148.

2. Income Tax Act, 1895 (58 Vict. No. 1374), ss. 5, 7, sub-section 3—Construction—Trusts.

Held, that the appellant company, which carried on insurance business with strangers for gain to the company as a whole, but had not its principal office in Victoria, was by section 5 of the Victorian Income Tax Act, 1895, liable to income tax on the proceeds from money lent on the security of land in Victoria.

It could not claim exemption under section 7 (e), which exempts trusts and all associations not carrying on trade for purposes of gain to be divided amongst the members; for besides granting assurances to persons not its members, it trafficked in reversions, while "trusts" on its true construction means associations acting in or for Victoria.—ENGLAND v. WEBB, P.C.; [1898] A. C. 758; 79 L. T. 131.

3. Pension—Right to—Victoria Public Service Act, 1890 (54 Vict. No. 1133), ss. 3, 107—"Prosecutor for the Queen"—"Prosecuting barrister"—Construction.

Held, that the appellant was entitled under section 107 of the Public Service Act, 1890, to superannuation allowance by virtue of having held the office of "Prosecutor for the Queen" notwithstanding that he held during pleasure.

Held, further, that he was not excluded therefrom as a "prosecuting barrister" within the meaning of the excluding clause (section 3).

It appearing that the two classes of functionaries were totally distinct, there is no rule of construction to the effect that when one only is named the other is meant or included.—SMYTH v. REG., P.C.; [1898] A. C. 782; 79 L. T. 199.

WATER:—

1. Artificial watercourse—Alteration of natural state of things—Sluice-gate—Obligation of owner to repair—Easement—Right to take water granted to owner of adjoining land—Damage by flood.—Where the owner of land on the bank of a river, for the purpose of bringing water from the river to a mill which he erected, made a watercourse with a shuttle at the head of it to control the flow of the water from the river into the watercourse, and afterwards conveyed away a portion of his land adjoining, and his successor in title subsequently granted to the owner of the adjoining land so conveyed a right to use the water for the purposes of a mill belonging to him.

Held, that the existence of that right did not affect the obligation of the owner of the watercourse towards the owner of the adjoining land to keep the shuttle in repair so as to prevent flood water from the river getting into the watercourse and overflowing on to his land.

Pomfret v. Ricroft, 1 Wms. Saund. 321, discussed. —BUCKLEY & SONS (LIMITED) v. N. BUCKLEY & SONS, C.A.; [1898] 2 Q. B. 608.

2. House occupied by tenant—Water rate paid by owner—Pipe out of repair—Liability of owner—Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 93), s. 17.—In the case of a house of the annual value of less than £10, the owner is liable to pay the water rate instead of the occupier. Such an owner comes within the meaning of the words "any person supplied with water" in section 17 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863, and in a local Act, and was rightly convicted under the local Act, which made it an offence for any person supplied with water to wilfully or negligently do or suffer any act whereby the water supplied was wasted.—BROCK v. HARRISON, Q.B.D., 541; [1899] 1 Q. B. 958; 68 L. J. Q. B. 730; 80 L. T. 568.

See also Local Government, 30.

WEIGHTS and MEASURES:—

1. Sale of coal—Ticket or note—Seller's name—Weights and Measures Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 21), s. 21; Schedule III.—In the ticket or note required by section 21 of the Weights and Measures Act, 1889, to be delivered by the seller of coal to the purchaser, the name under which the seller trades may be inserted instead of his real name.—CAMERON v. TYLER, Q.B.D., 559; [1899] 2 Q. B. 94; 68 L. J. Q. B. 759; 80 L. T. 764.

2. Sale of coal—Weight ticket or note—Weights and Measures Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 21), s. 21.—Section 21, sub-section 1, of the Weights and Measures Act, 1889, enacts that, "where any quantity of coal exceeding two hundredweight is delivered by means of any vehicle to a purchaser, the seller of the coal shall therewith deliver or cause to be delivered . . . to the purchaser or his servant, before any of the coal is unloaded, a ticket or note according to the form in the third schedule to the Act . . ."

A penalty for non-compliance with the section is provided by sub-section 2.

Section 22, sub-section 1, enacts that, where such coal is conveyed for delivery in bulk, the seller shall cause the weight of the coal and the vehicle containing it to be previously ascertained by a weighing machine duly stamped, being on or near to the place from which the coal is brought.

A quantity of coal exceeding two hundredweight was conveyed for delivery on sale in bulk in a vehicle belonging to the seller. The coal and vehicle were weighed by the seller's servant and the purchaser's servant on a weighing machine on the purchaser's premises, and a ticket in the form given in the third schedule of the Act was filled in by the purchaser's servant at the request of the seller's servant.

Before delivery of the coal was accepted, or any part of it was unloaded, the ticket was delivered by the seller's servant to another servant of the purchaser.

Held, that the seller, having complied with the requirements of section 21, sub-section 1, was not liable to a penalty under sub-section 2.—EDWARD v. PURNALL, Q.B.D., 380; [1899] 1 Q. B. 449; 68 L. J. Q. B. 272; 79 L. T. 737.

WILL:—

1. Absolute gift—"Any money . . . that may be in my possession"—Reversionary interest in personalty—Construction of will.—Testatrix, who died in 1892, by her will dated in 1891, after making certain bequests of stock, declared as follows: "Any money not mentioned in the aforesaid bequests that may be in my possession at my death after the payment of my debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, I give absolutely" to P. She then made certain specific gifts of chattels. At her death she was entitled to a reversionary interest in personalty which fell into possession in 1897.

Held, that the reversionary interest passed under the bequest to P.—EGAN, RE, MILLS v. PENTON, Ch.D. Stirling, J.; [1899] 1 Ch. 688; 68 L. J. Ch. 307; 80 L. T. 153.

2. Advancement—Power of—Expectant or presumptive interests—Possibility of issue—Woman past usual age of child-bearing.—When property stands limited to A. if (and only if) B. should have a child, and B. is a childless woman above the usual age of child-bearing, the court will not treat A. as having no interest in the property.

Therefore, where property was given by will to certain persons if a childless woman of fifty-four should have children, a power of advancement to those persons in respect of their "expectant or presumptive shares" was exercisable by the trustees. —HOCKING, RE, MICHELL v. LOWE, C.A., 114; [1898] 2 Ch. 567; 79 L. T. 164.

3. Attesting witness taking benefit—Codicil—Republication—Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), s. 15.—The effect of a codicil to republish a will, and thus validate a gift under the will to a witness attesting such will, but not attesting the codicil, will not be rendered void by the attestation by such witness of a second codicil to such will, such witness being able to point to a proper instrument under which he takes the benefit, not attested by himself.—TROTTER, RE, TROTTER v. TROTTER, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 477; [1899] 1 Ch. 764; 68 L. J. Ch. 363; 80 L. T. 647.

4. Attestation—Evidence of execution—Denial by attesting witness—Testamentary capacity.—Case in which probate of a will which had been originally granted on the evidence of the two attesting witnesses was confirmed, notwithstanding that one of them retracted his evidence and in effect swore to the signatures of testator and witnesses having been forged, and the other witness was not called. In the circumstances, the later evidence of the one was held to be incredible, and the absence of the other to be satisfactorily explained.

Testamentary capacity is not disproved by evidence of the testator's merely eccentric acts and conduct.—PILKINGTON v. GRAY, P.C.; [1899] A. C. 401; 68 L. J. P. C. 63.

5. Children—Issue—Succession—Vesting.—A testator bequeathed to his three daughters, in equal shares, the life-rent of a sum of £36,000, to be invested within five years after his decease. Until the investment was made, he bequeathed to each daughter an annuity of £200. In the event of a daughter dying without leaving issue, her life-rent interest was to accresce to her surviving sister or sisters, whilst the capital of the share life-rented by her lapsed into residue. In the event of her leaving issue, the trustees were directed "to divide equally amongst the issue of each of my said daughters" one-third of the sum directed to be invested. Mrs. M., one of the daughters, died in March, 1895, leaving surviving two daughters. Mrs. M. had had also a son and a daughter, Mrs. H., who pre-deceased her childless, but died after the testator. The question was whether the representatives of the pre-deceasing issue were entitled to a share of the capital appointed to be divided amongst Mrs. M.'s issue.

Held, reversing the decision of the Second Division, [1896] 23 R. 598 (Lords Watson and Herschell dissenting), that all the children of Mrs. M. were entitled to share equally in the division of the fund in which their mother had a life-interest.—HICKLING v. FAIR, H.L. (Sc.); [1899] A. C. 15; 68 L. J. P. C. 12.

6. Condition—Gift on marriage with consent—Condition precedent—Alternative gift.—A condition of marriage with consent, attached to a gift of personal estate, is, as a general rule, void as far as the consent is concerned, even though it be a condition precedent. This rule, however, does not apply where there is a gift over or an alternative gift.

Accordingly, a testator, having given an annuity to his son for life, with an additional annuity in the event of his marriage with the consent of the trustees of the will,

Held, that the testator had provided for his son either way by means of an alternative gift, and that the condition, therefore, was good as falling within that class of exceptions to the general rule which was established in Gillet v. Wray, 1 P. Wms. 284.—NOURSE, RE, HAMPTON v. NOURSE, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 116; [1899] 1 Ch. 63; 68 L. J. Ch. 15; 79 L. T. 376.

7. Construction—Cross-remainders by implication—"Survivor or survivors," when to be construed "other or others."—A testator, after making certain provisions for his widow and children during their respective lives out of the income of his estate, continued his will as follows: "In case of the death of my son C. leaving children, then one-third . . . of such annual income to such children as hereinafter mentioned . . . and upon the death of my said son C. and my said daughters E. and S. A." he gave one-third part of his property to the children of C. in equal shares, and as to the two remaining one-third parts respectively to the children of E. and S. A. respectively in equal shares. "Provided nevertheless that in case of the death of any of my said children without leaving lawful issue the share . . . so given . . . to his or her issue shall go and be divided by and between the issue of the survivor or survivors of my said children in the same manner and proportions, and under the same trusts as hereinbefore given and bequeathed per stirpes." The testator died in 1865. E. died in 1879 leaving issue. The widow died in 1887. C. died in 1893 without issue.

Held, that, "upon the death of my said son C. and my said daughters E. and S. A." must be construed to mean upon the death of the survivor of them, and that the corpus was distributable, as to one-third among the children of E., and as to two-thirds among the children of S. A.; and that the word "survivor" must be read in its natural sense.—RUBBINS, RE, GILL v. WORRALL, C.A.; 79 L. T. 313.

8. Construction—Fee expectant on estate tail.—A testator, being seized in fee of certain lands, devised them to trustees upon certain trusts by which his only child took an estate tail; and he directed his trustees that, on the death of his child, the lands should be "legally conveyed and assured unto such heirs of my child or children in equal shares as they shall severally and respectively attain the age of twenty-one years or be married, and to their several and respective heirs and assigns for ever."

His only child married, and died leaving one son who attained the age of twenty-one years.

Held, that the remainder in fee simple expectant on the determination of the estate tail granted to the testator's child was disposed of by the will of testator.—FOXWELL v. VAN GRUTTEN, C.A.; 79 L. T. 617.

9. Construction—Forfeiture—"Do or suffer anything whereby income would become vested"—Garnishee order on income—Effect on life estate.—Under a will the income of a certain sum was to be paid to L. G. "during his life or until . . . he shall do or suffer anything whereby the said income, if payable to him absolutely, or any part thereof, would become vested in any other person."

Held, that no forfeiture resulted from a garnishee order absolute attaching dividends accrued due in the hands of the trustees.—SUTTON v. GOODRICH, Q.B.D.; 80 L. T. 765.

10. Construction—General words—"All other my real estate in the county of L."—Advowson in gross.

Held, on the construction of a will, that, under the circumstances of the above case, two advowsons in gross passed to one of the testator's sons under a gift of "all other my real estate in the county of L.," those words, though not apt words for the purpose, being such words as might pass the advowsons.

Crompton v. Jarratt, 33 W. R. 913, 30 Ch. D. 298, distinguished.—HODGSON, RE, TAYLOR v. HODGSON, Ch.D. Romer, J., 44; [1898] 2 Ch. 545; 79 L. T. 345.

11. Construction—Gift to a class—Gift to A. and the children of B. in equal shares—Death of A. before testator—Lapse.—A gift by will to a class properly so called (i.e., a number of persons indicated by a general description) and A., a named individual, in equal shares, is primâ facie, in legal contemplation, a gift to a class; so that, on the death of A. in the testator's lifetime, the whole of the property will be divisible amongst the other legatees.

Decision of North, J., reversed.—MOSS, RE, KINGSBURY v. WALTER, C.A., 642.

12. Construction—Gift to wife of testator's son—Second wife.—Where in a will a gift is made to the wife of a person married at the date of the will, in the absence of any context to show the contrary the wife in existence at that date is the person benefited.

A testator gave the income of a share of his residuary estate to his son for life, after his death to his wife for life, and after her decease to the children of his son living at the time of the son's death. The will also contained a clause that in the event of the son's bankruptcy the trustees should apply the income of the share thereinbefore directed to be invested for the said son and his family for the benefit of the said son, his wife, and children.

Held, that there was sufficient context to take the case out of the general rule, and that a second wife of the son could benefit under the gift.—DREW v. DREW, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 265; [1899] 1 Ch. 336; 68 L. J. Ch. 157; 79 L. T. 656.

13. Construction—Legacy to illegitimate children—Intention of mistaken testatrix—Domicil—Roman-Dutch law applicable in Demerara (British Guiana).—Effect given to the express intention of a testatrix to benefit a specified class of children, even where she was in error in believing that as a fact they had been legitimated by the Roman-Dutch law which legitimates children born out of wedlock when the parents are subsequently married by lawful ceremony.—PLANT, RE, GRIFFITH v. HILL, Ch.D. Kekewich J., 183.

14. Construction — Misdescription of legates — Extrinsic evidence—Former wills.—A testator by his will bequeathed legacies to such of the daughters of his late friend, I. S., as should survive the testator and be unmarried. The testator's friend, I. S., survived the testator, and had never been married. I. S. had five unmarried sisters, daughters of J. J. S., deceased.

Held, on the construction of the will and on the evidence of a previous will of the testator, which gave legacies to the daughters of J. J. S. by a correct description, that those daughters were entitled to the legacies.

Decision of Kekewich, J. (ante, p. 182), reversed. —WALLER, RE, WHITE v. SCOLES, C.A., 563; 68 L. J. Ch. 526; 80 L. T. 701.

15. Construction—Order of payment to beneficiaries —Pecuniary legacy—Devised of mortgaged land free from mortgage—Gift of residue—Real Estate Charges (Locke-King's) Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 113).—S., by his will, after giving four pecuniary legacies, made several specific devises freed and discharged from any mortgages there might be at the time of S.'s death on the respective properties devised; and S. declared that if he should sell any of certain houses comprised in certain of the said devises, his trustees should out of his residuary estate stand possessed of a sum equivalent to the proceeds of sale on similar trusts to those declared of the house. S. then gave to his trustees all other his real and personal estate upon trust to pay an annuity to each of his sons, and out of the balance of the income of his said residuary estate to pay off incumbrances upon his said estate, and after payment off thereof to assign his said residuary estate to his said sons equally. S. afterwards sold one of the houses for £9,800. S.'s estate proving insufficient for payment in full to the beneficiares under his will,

Held, (1) that the pecuniary legacies were charged on the entire residue, and had priority of all payments directed to be made out of the residue; (2) that the annuities were given to the sons in their capacity of residuary legatees, and were therefore not payable until the mortgage debts on the specifically devised realty and the sums representing houses sold were paid; (3) that the £9,800 was to be treated as an ordinary legacy made payable out of residue; (4) that as between the devisees of mortgaged realty and the pecuniary legatees, the rule in Lutkins v. Leigh, Cas. temp. Talb. 52, that the pecuniary legatee had priority over the devisee, must be applied, the testator having negatived the application of Locke-King's Act and the amending Acts.

Porcher v. Wilson, 14 W. R. 1011, followed.

Smith v. Smith, 10 Ir. Ch. Rep. 89, 461, not followed.—SMITH, RE, SMITH v. SMITH, Ch.D. Romer, J., 223; [1899] 1 Ch. 365; 68 L. J. Ch. 333; 80 L. T. 113.

16. Contract entered into by testator—Devise—Non-completion of contract at time of testator's death—Right of devisee.—Where a testator devised land by his will and entered into a contract for the building of cottages on such land, which contract was unfinished at the time of his death.

Held (following Cooper v. Jarman, 15 W. R. 142, L. R. 3 Eq. 98), that the devisee was entitled to have the contract completed at the cost of the estate.

But this principle does not apply to land already conveyed to devisee before testator's death.—DAY, RE, SPRAKE v. DAY, Ch.D. North. J., 238; [1898] 2 Ch. 510; 79 L. T. 436.

17. Devise—Fee simple conditional—Possibility of reverter—Wills Act, 1837 (1 Vict. c. 26), s. 3.—A possibility of reverter on failure of a fee simple conditional on the birth of male issue is within section 3 of the Wills Act, and is devisable.

Semble, that such a possibility of reverter is an estate.—PEMBERTON v. BARNES, Ch.D. North, J., 444; [1899] 1 Ch. 544; 68 L. J. Ch. 192; 80 L. T. 181.

18. Devise on death of life tenant without issue to right heirs—Females—Whether coparceners or joint-tenants—Inheritance Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 106), s. 3.—A testator who died in 1858 devised real estate upon trust to pay the rents and profits to his niece S. N. for life, and afterwards for her children on their attaining twenty-one years. And if there should be no such child, then to his right heirs for ever. S. N., who, together with three other ladies who were still living, were the testator's coheiresses, died in 1898 without issue. A summons having been taken out to ascertain whether these coheiresses succeeded as joint-tenants or coparceners.

Held, that, having regard to section 3 of the Inheritance Act, 1833, they took as devisees and not by descent. That coparceny was an incident of descent, and that there was nothing in the Act to show an intention to annex it to the estate of devisees. That accordingly the three surviving ladies took as joint tenants.—BAKER, RE, PURSEY v. HOLLOWAY, Ch.D. Stirling, J.; 79 L. T. 343.

19. Hotchpot clause—Covenant by testator—Settlement—Debt—Satisfaction.—The testator had covenanted with the trustees of the son's marriage settlement that his executors would pay to them £10,000, to be invested and held upon trust for the son for life, with remainder to the son's wife for life, with remainder as to the capital for the children of the marriage, and in case of there being no child (as in the event happened) the capital was to be held in trust for the testator absolutely. By his will the testator directed his executors and trustees to convert his whole estate into money, and to stand possessed of the clear residue in trust for his two children in equal shares. And the testator by his will declared that any sum given "to or with any child" on his or her marriage was to be taken in or towards satisfaction of the share of such child, and brought into hotchpot. The son died, leaving a widow and no issue.

Held that the testator's trustees must specifically appropriate and allot to the son's share under the will the testator's contingent reversionary interest in the £10,000, so as to effect an equal division between the son and the daughter.

Decision of the Court of Appeal, 45 W. R. 376. 1897] 1 Ch. 325, affirmed, but on different grounds. — WHEELER v. HUMPHREYS, H.L., 17; [1898] A. C. 506.

20. Issue—Simple gift over of legacy to issue—Other gifts over restricting "issue" to children—Canon of construction.—A testator bequeathed twelve distinct legacies, with gifts over to the issue of the legatee dying in his lifetime. In the case of eleven of the legacies the gifts over contained words restricting, either expressly or by the application of the principle of Sibley v. Perry, 7 Ves. 522, the class of issue to children. The word "issue" in the gift over of the remaining legacy was not qualified by any such restriction.

Held, that, in the gift over of the remaining legacy, the word "issue" must be construed in its wider sense, on the following grounds: (1) That there was no expression of a general intention to limit the word "issue" to mean children throughout the will; (2) that no manifest inconsistency would arise from construing the word "issue" in its wider sense; and (3) that the court was not bound by the canons of construction laid down in Ridgeway v. Munkittrick, 1 Dr. & War. 84, and Rhodes v. Rhodes, 8 W. R. 204, 27 Beav. 413.—BIRKS, RE, KENYON v. BIRKS, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 374; [1897] 1 Ch. 703; 68 L. J. Ch. 319; 80 L. T. 257.

21. Leaseholds — Mortgage — Interest — Rent — Covenants — Tenant for life — Remaindermen — Liability.—The tenant for life of a leasehold house bequeathed to him directly without the intervention of trustees, and then over, is, in the absence of further provision, liable to keep down the interest on a mortgage made by the testator on the house, and also to pay the rent reserved by, and perform the covenants contained in, the lease.

In re Courtier, Coles v. Courtier, 35 W. R. 85, 34 Ch. D. 136, ought to be construed as merely deciding that the tenant for life under a bequest of leasehold property is not liable for any breach of covenant or condition occurring prior to the date of the testator's death.

In re Redding, Thompson v. Redding, 45 W. R. 457, [1897] 1 Ch. 876; Kingham v. Kingham, [1897] 1 Ir. Rep. 170, 45 W. R. Dig. 180; and In re Betty, Betty v. The Attorney-General, [1899] 1 Ch. 821, followed.

In re Baring, Jeune v. Baring, 41 W. R. 87, [1893] 1 Ch. 61, and In re Tomlinson, Tomlinson v. Andrew, 46 W. R. 299, [1898] 1 Ch. 232, not followed.—GJERS, RE, COOPER v. GJERS, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 535; [1899] 2 Ch. 54; 68 L. J. Ch. 442; 80 L. T. 689.

22. Leasehold—Tenant for life—Repairs—Liability —Covenants—Insurance—Equitable tenant for life.—An equitable tenant for life of leaseholds under a will is bound, during the continuance of his interest, as between himself and his testator's estate, to perform the tenant's continuing obligations under the lease; but he is not liable for repairs necessary at the commencement of his interest, or in respect of breaches of covenant which had arisen before the testator's death.

In re Courtier, (1886) 34 Ch. D. 136, considered.

In re Tomlinson, [1898] 1 Ch. 232, differed from. —BETTY, RE, BETTY v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL, Ch.D. North, J.; [1899] 1 Ch. 821; 68 L. J. Ch. 435; 80 L. T. 675.

23. Perpetuity—Conditional devise—Direction to apply moneys in maintaining monument on part of devised real estate.—A testator by his will devised two freehold farms to his nephew on condition that he should set apart the rents and profits thereof for the term of five years "for the use and purpose of erecting on some portion" (suggesting a particular situation) a monument to the memory of John Locke, and at the expiration of the five years he directed that his nephew should enjoy three-fourths of the rents and profits, but should devote the balance or remaining one-fourth towards the maintenance and keeping in order of the monument.

Held, that the erection of the monument was not intended as a mode of enjoyment of the property by the devisee, and that the application of one-fourth of the rents and profits was intended to perpetuate the memory of John Locke, and, therefore, as to such one-fourth there was an intestacy.—JONES, RE, PARKER v. LETHBRIDGE, Ch.D. Stirling, J.; 79 L. T. 154.

24. Real estate—Charge of debts—Trustees—Devise of all testator's interest—Power to sell—Lord St. Leonard's Act (22 & 23 Vict. c. 35), s. 14.—Testator appointed his wife sole executrix, and after a direction to pay debts and legacies, devised and bequeathed the residue of his real and personal estate to trustees upon trust to permit his wife to receive the rents and profits during her life; then for his niece for life for her separate use; then upon trust to pay two legacies, and subject thereto for the children of the niece.

Held, that the real estate was charged with payment of debts and legacies, but that as the trustees took no legal estate therein during the life of the wife, there was no devise of all the testator's interest in the realty, and consequently the trustees could not sell the real estate by virtue of section 14 of Lord St. Leonard's Act.—ADAMS & PERRY'S CONTRACT, RE, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 326; [1899] 1 Ch. 554; 68 L. J. Ch. 259; 80 L. T. 149.

25. Relevancy—Capacity—Insane delusions.—In an action for reduction of a will the pursuers averred that the testator was "subject to insane delusions," and that "he believed that he had a special and imperative duty to further the cause of total abstinence and to oppose the Church of Rome by devoting his pecuniary resources to these objects, in consequence of commands which he conceived he had received from the Deity by direct communications on various occasions." That these insane delusions dominated his mind and overmastered his judgment to such an extent as to render him incapable of making reasonable and proper settlement of his means and estate, or of taking a rational view of the matters to be considered in making a will.

Held, reversing the decision of the First Division of the Court of Session, [1896] 23 R. 513 (Lord Davey dissenting), that a relevant case for trial was averred.—HOPE v. CAMPBELL, H.L. (Sc.); [1899] A. C. 1.

26. "Survivor" — Trust moneys — Gift of life interest to A.—After death of A. direction to pay and divide equally between two persons—"And if either of them shall be then dead for the survivor"—Death of both legatees before determination of life interest—Meaning of words "either" and "survivor."—A testatrix gave residuary trust moneys upon trust to pay the interest to her sister Thirza during her life, and after her death to pay and divide the said trust moneys equally between the testatrix's two sisters Frances and Sarah, share and share alike, "and if either of my said sisters shall be then dead . . . upon trust for the survivor of my said sisters absolutely."

Held (Rigby, L.J., dissentiente), that the period of distribution was not the death of Sarah, who died first, or of Frances, who was the survivor of the two legatees, but the death of Thirza, to whom the life interest was given; and that both Sarah and Frances being dead at that time there was then no survivor, and the clear original gift to Sarah and Frances as tenants in common was not divested.

The decision of North, J., affirmed.

White v. Baker, 2 D. F. & J. 55, distinguished. —PICKWORTH, RE, SNAITH v. PARKINSON, C.A.; [1899] 1 Ch. 642; 68 L. J. Ch. 324; 80 L. T. 212.

See also Charity, 2, 6; Limitation Statutes, 8; Married Woman, 3; Power, 1, 2; Probate, 17-24; Trustee, 9.

[THE END.]

Stanford Law Library
3 6105 063 511 625